

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

LRR

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL LIBRARY

NATIONAL REPORTER SYSTEM — STATE SERIES

THE ATLANTIC REPORTER

VOLUME 104
PERMANENT EDITION

COMPRISING ALL THE REPORTED DECISIONS OF THE

SUPREME COURTS OF MAINE, NEW HAMPSHIRE, VERMONT, RHODE ISLAND
CONNECTICUT, AND PENNSYLVANIA; COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS COURT OF CHANCERY, AND SUPREME AND PREROGATIVE COURTS OF NEW JERSEY; SUPREME COURT, COURT OF CHANCERY, SUPERIOR COURT, COURT OF GEN-ERAL SESSIONS, AND COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER OF DELAWARE AND COURT OF APPEALS OF MARYLAND

WITH KEY-NUMBER ANNOTATIONS

AUGUST 29 — DECEMBER 26, 1918

ST. PAUL
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1919

KF
125
A7

COPYRIGHT, 1918
BY WEST PUBLISHING COMPANY

COPYRIGHT, 1919
BY WEST PUBLISHING COMPANY
(104 ATL.)

JUDGES

OF THE COURTS REPORTED DURING THE PERIOD COVERED BY THIS VOLUME

CONNECTICUT—Supreme Court of Errors.SAMUEL O. PRENTICE, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

ALBERTO T. RORABACK.
GEORGE W. WHEELER.
JOHN K. BEACH.
MILTON A. SHUMWAY.

DELAWARE—Supreme Court.

CHARLES M. CURTIS, CHANCELLOR.
JAMES PENNEWILL, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

WILLIAM H. BOYCE.
HENRY C. CONRAD.
HERBERT L. RICE.
T. BAYARD HEISEL.

Court of Chancery.

CHARLES M. CURTIS, CHANCELLOR.

MAINE—Supreme Judicial Court.

LESLIE C. CORNISH, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

ALBERT M. SPEAR.
ARNO W. KING.¹
GEORGE E. BIRD.²
GEORGE M. HANSON.
WARREN C. PHILBROOK.
CHARLES J. DUNN.
JOHN A. MORRILL.
SCOTT WILSON.³
LUERE B. DEASY.⁴

MARYLAND—Court of Appeals.

A. HUNTER BOYD, CHIEF JUDGE.

ASSOCIATE JUDGES.

JOHN P. BRISCOE.
N. CHARLES BURKE.
WILLIAM H. THOMAS.
JOHN R. PATTISON.
HAMMOND UERNER.
HENRY STOCKBRIDGE.
ALBERT CONSTABLE.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Supreme Court.

FRANK N. PARSONS, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

REUBEN E. WALKER.
JOHN E. YOUNG.
ROBERT J. PEASLEE.
WILLIAM A. PLUMMER.

NEW JERSEY—Court of Errors and Appeals.

EDWIN ROBERT WALKER, CHANCELLOR.
WILLIAM S. GUMMERE, CHIEF JUSTICE.

JUSTICES.

CHARLES G. GARRISON.
FRANCIS J. SWAYZE.

NEW JERSEY—Court of Errors and Appeals (Cont'd).

JUSTICES (CONT'D).

THOMAS W. TRENCHARD.
CHARLES W. PARKER.
JAMES J. BERGEN.
JAMES F. MINTURN.
SAMUEL KALISCH.
CHARLES C. BLACK.

JUDGES.

JOHN J. WHITE.
HENRY S. TERHUNE.
ERNEST J. HEPPENHEIMER.
ROBERT WILLIAMS.
FRANK M. TAYLOR.
WALTER P. GARDNER.

Court of Chancery.

EDWIN ROBERT WALKER, CHANCELLOR.

VICE CHANCELLORS.

FREDERIC W. STEVENS.
EUGENE STEVENSON.
EDMUND B. LEAMING.
VIVIAN M. LEWIS.
JOHN H. BACKES.
JOHN GRIFFIN.
JOHN E. FOSTER.
MERRITT LANE.

Supreme Court.

WILLIAM S. GUMMERE, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

CHARLES G. GARRISON.
FRANCIS J. SWAYZE.
CHARLES W. PARKER.
THOMAS W. TRENCHARD.
JAMES F. MINTURN.
JAMES J. BERGEN.
SAMUEL KALISCH.
CHARLES C. BLACK.

Prerogative Court.

EDWIN ROBERT WALKER, ORDINARY.

VICE ORDINARIES.

FREDERIC W. STEVENS.
EUGENE STEVENSON.
EDMUND B. LEAMING.
VIVIAN M. LEWIS.
JOHN H. BACKES.
JOHN GRIFFIN.
JOHN E. FOSTER.
MERRITT LANE.

PENNSYLVANIA—Supreme Court.

J. HAY BROWN, CHIEF JUSTICE.

JUSTICES.

S. LESLIE MESTREZAT.⁵
WILLIAM P. POTTER.⁶
JOHN STEWART.
ROBERT MOSCHZISER.
ROBERT S. FRAZER.
EMORY A. WALLING.
ALEXANDER SIMPSON, JR.⁷
EDWARD J. FOX.⁸

¹Died July 21, 1918.²Resigned August 28, 1918.³Appointed August 7, 1918, to succeed Arno W. King.⁴Appointed September 25, 1918, to succeed George E. Bird.⁵Died April 23, 1918.⁶Died April 14, 1918.⁷Appointed May 20, 1918.⁸Appointed June 17, 1918.

RHODE ISLAND—Supreme Court.
C. FRANK PARKHURST, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.
WILLIAM H. SWEETLAND.
WALTER B. VINCENT.
DARIUS BAKER.
CHARLES F. STEARNS.

VERMONT—Supreme Court.
JOHN HENRY WATSON, CHIEF JUSTICE.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.
SENECA HASELTON.
GEORGE M. POWERS.
WILLIAM H. TAYLOR.
WILLARD W. MILES.

CASES REPORTED

	Page		Page
Abbott, Spencer Heater Co. v. (N. J.).....	91	Bianchi & Sons v. Montpelier & W. R. R. Co. (Vt.).....	144
Adams Exp. Co. v. White (Md.).....	110	Bickford, Batchelder v. (Me.).....	819
Ady v. Jenkins (Md.).....	178	Bishop & Lynes, Schray v. (Conn.).....	349
Agnesi, State v. (N. J. Sup.).....	299	Bixler, Swartz v. (Pa.).....	591
Ahrens v. Reading (Pa.).....	511	Blaisdell v. York (Me.).....	699
Alamanio, State v. (Del. Gen. Sess.).....	66	Blandin, Bradley v. (Vt.).....	11
Albright, G. P. Farmer Coal & Supply Co. v. (N. J. Ch.).....	224	Bliss v. Bliss (Md.).....	467
Albright v. Van Voorhis (N. J. Ch.).....	27	Blodgett, Wells v. (Vt.).....	146
Alcorn v. D. L. Ward Co. (Pa.).....	893	Bloede Co., Western Union Tel. Co. v. (Md.).....	368
Alderman, Ferry v. (Conn.).....	68	Board of Canvassers and Registration of City of Providence, Mercurio v. (R. I.)...	886
Alexander, Kamps v. (Md.).....	427	Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, Murphy v. (N. J.).....	304
Aluminum Co. of America, Hammond v. (Pa.).....	660	Board of Chosen Freeholders of Middlesex County, Buckalew v. (N. J.).....	308
American Colonization Soc. v. Latrobe, two cases (Md.).....	120	Board of Public Utility Com'rs, Atlantic Coast Electric R. Co. v. (N. J.).....	218
American Colonization Soc., State v., two cases (Md.).....	120	Boggs v. Dundalk Realty Co. (Md.).....	45
American Dist. Tel. Co., Fire Protection Development Co. v. (N. J.).....	442	Bomberger, Fulton Farmers' Ass'n v. (Pa.)	805
American Timber Co., Seacoast Real Estate Co. v. (N. J. Ch.).....	437	Bone v. Detroit Nat. Fire Ins. Co. (Pa.)..	742
Ancona Printing Co. v. Welsbach Co. (N. J.).....	132	Borough of Cambridge Springs, Wise v. (Pa.).....	863
Anderson v. Colwell (Conn.).....	242	Borough of St. Clair, Pottsville Union Traction Co. v. (Pa.).....	602
Apple v. Atlantic City (N. J. Sup.).....	89	Borough of West Berwick, Schlanger v. (Pa.).....	764
Archibald v. Order of United Commercial Travelers (Me.).....	792	Boston & M. R. R., Haywood v. (N. H.)..	402
Aroostook Valley R. Co., Briggs Hardware Co. v. (Me.).....	8	Boston & M. R. R., Pope v. (N. H.).....	403
Atlantic City, Apple v. (N. J. Sup.).....	89	Bourgeois v. Edwards (N. J. Ch.).....	447
Atlantic Coast Electric R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com'rs (N. J.).....	218	Bourgeois v. Miller (N. J. Ch.).....	383
Atwater v. Baskerville (N. J. Ch.).....	310	Bow v. Plummer (N. H.).....	35
Atwater v. Baskerville (N. J. Ch.).....	647	Bowers, In re (N. J. Ch.).....	196
Bailey v. Maine Cent. R. Co. (Me.).....	890	Bowers v. Bowers (N. J.).....	831
Bakalopoulos, Cordopatis v. (N. H.).....	786	Bowers v. Cook (Md.).....	420
Baker v. Baker (N. J.).....	785	Bowers' Estate, In re (Pa.).....	824
Baker, Saper v. (N. J.).....	26	Bowie v. Western Maryland R. & Terminal Co. (Md.).....	461
Balanzo, Commonwealth v. (Pa.).....	663	Boynton v. Remson (Md.).....	527
Baldwin, Gaines v. (Vt.).....	825	Bradford v. Fidelity Trust Co. (Del. Ch.)	777
Baldwin Locomotive Works, Smoker v. (Pa.).....	597	Bradford v. Mackenzie (Md.).....	368
Baltimore Car Foundry Co. v. Ruzicka (Md.).....	167	Bradley v. Blandin (Vt.).....	11
Baltimore Car Wheel Co. v. Clark (Md.)..	357	Braman, Dow & Co. v. Kennebec Gas & Fuel Co. (Me.).....	8
Baltimore, C. & A. R. Co., Evans v. (Md.)	112	Branson, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. (Md.)..	356
Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Branson (Md.)..	356	Brennan v. Jersey City (N. J. Sup.).....	90
Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State (Md.).....	465	Briggs Hardware Co. v. Aroostook Valley R. Co. (Me.).....	8
Barber, Greenhalch v. (R. I.).....	769	Brightlook Hospital Ass'n v. Garfield (Vt.)	99
Barnes, Morse Co. v. (Me.).....	625	Brocks Garage, Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. (N. J.).....	132
Barrett, Maynard v. (Pa.).....	612	Broderick v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.)....	689
Barrette v. Casualty Co. of America (N. H.)	126	Brooks, Page v. (N. H.).....	786
Bartley v. Lindabury (N. J. Ch.).....	333	Brown, In re (N. J. Ch.).....	649
Baskerville, Atwater v. (N. J. Ch.).....	310	Brown, Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. (Vt.)...	234
Baskerville, Atwater v. (N. J. Ch.).....	647	Brown v. Hobbs (Md.).....	283
Bas & Co. v. Wilton Woolen Co. (Me.)....	160	Brown v. Philbrick (N. H.).....	785
Bassett, City of Baltimore v. (Md.).....	39	Brown, Thomason Mach. Co. v. (N. J. Ch.)	129
Batchelder v. Bickford (Me.).....	819	Brown, Trapp v. (N. J. Sup.).....	302
Battin, In re (N. J. Ch.).....	434	Browne v. Hagen (N. J.).....	207
Baugh Chemical Co. of Baltimore County, Davison Chemical Co. of Baltimore County v. (Md.).....	404	Brundrett v. Rosoff (Conn.).....	67
Bean, Ladd v. (Me.).....	814	Brunetti v. Grandi (N. J. Ch.).....	139
Beckenbaugh, Appeal of (Pa.).....	676	Buckalew v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Middlesex County (N. J.).....	308
Bell v. Jacobs (Pa.).....	587	Buckner v. Cronhardt (Md.).....	169
Benedict v. Benedict (Pa.).....	581	Buckwald, State v. (Me.).....	520
Benoit v. Perkins (N. H.).....	254	Buell v. Williamsport Staple Co. (Pa.)....	572
Benton & F. St. R. Co., Thurston v. (Me.)	894	Burkentine v. State (Md.).....	368
Berman v. Langley (Me.).....	65	Buzzell, Charles Lawrence Co. v. (Me.)...	681
Berry v. O'Neill (N. J. Sup.).....	25	Byron, State v. (N. H.).....	401
Betz & Son, Winter v. (Pa.).....	59	Caffery v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.)	569

	Page		Page
Campbell, State v. (Conn.)	653	Commonwealth v. Sitler (Pa.)	604
Carbaugh v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.)	860	Commonwealth v. Snyder (Pa.)	494
Carlton, Petition of (N. H.)	246	Commonwealth v. Zalewski (Pa.)	683
Carter, Kernan v. (Md.)	530	Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Gross (Pa.)	684
Cartledge, Kreis v. (Pa.)	855	Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Co., McMullin v. (Pa.)	760
Casey v. Frank Jones Brewing Co. (N. H.)	454	Connecticut Quarries Co., Merlino v. (Conn.)	396
Castelberg v. Hamburgher (Md.)	473	Cook, Bowers v. (Md.)	420
Castelbaum v. Wolfson (N. J.)	84	Cook v. United Rys. & Electric Co. of Baltimore (Md.)	87
Castle v. Swift & Co. (Md.)	187	Cordopatis v. Bakalopoulos (N. H.)	786
Casualty Co. of America, Barrette v. (N. H.)	126	Corona Coal & Coke Co. v. Dickinson (Pa.)	741
Cazzulo v. Holscher (Pa.)	680	Corsino, Commonwealth v. (Pa.)	739
Central Vermont R. Co., Dodge Bros. v. (Vt.)	873	Coulter v. Line (Pa.)	867
Charles Bianchi & Sons v. Montpelier & W. R. Co. (Vt.)	144	Creaghan v. Baltimore (Md.)	180
Charles Lawrence Co. v. Buzzell (Me.)	631	Cronhardt, Buckner v. (Md.)	169
Chenoweth, Dunlap v. (N. J. Ch.)	822	Crosby Co., Shepherd v. (Me.)	623
Christ v. Dubosky (Pa.)	547	Cross v. Printing Corporation (N. J. Ch.)	727
Christopher v. Sisk (Md.)	355	Crouse, State v. (Me.)	525
Citizens' Electric Co. v. Lycoming-Edison Co. (Pa.)	573	Crowther v. White Mountain Freezer Co. (N. H.)	125
City Bank v. Rieker (Pa.)	804	Crucible Steel Co. of America v. Polack Tyre & Rubber Co. (N. J.)	824
City of Asbury Park, Doran v. (N. J.)	130	Culliton, McMichael v. (N. J. Sup.)	433
City of Baltimore v. Bassett (Md.)	39	Culver, In re (Del. Orph.)	784
City of Baltimore, Oreaghan v. (Md.)	180	Cumberland County Power & Light Co., Cobb v. (Me.)	844
City of Baltimore v. Gamble (Md.)	186	Cumberland County Power & Light Co., Dyer v. (Me.)	848
City of Baltimore v. Gamse & Bro. (Md.)	429	Gurran v. Holt (Me.)	579
City of Baltimore v. Gordon (Md.)	536	Curtis v. Nixon (Me.)	894
City of Baltimore v. Hutzler (Md.)	173	Cyr, Zanon v. (Me.)	639
City of Baltimore v. Machen (Md.)	175	Dantine, Commonwealth v. (Pa.)	672
City of Baltimore v. Mattern (Md.)	478	Davidson, Loeb v. (Pa.)	681
City of Baltimore, Northern Cent. R. Co. v. (Md.)	44	Davies' Estate, In re (Pa.)	675
City of Baltimore v. Poe (Md.)	360	Davis v. Edmondson (Pa.)	632
City of Baltimore, Seidl v. (Md.)	189	Davis v. Frantz (Del. Ch.)	779
City of Bangor v. Ridley (Me.)	230	Davis, Grippo v. (Conn.)	168
City of Bayonne, Watters v. (N. J. Ch.)	770	Davison Chemical Co. of Baltimore County v. Baugh Chemical Co. of Baltimore County (Md.)	404
City of Hagerstown v. Foltz (Md.)	267	De Haas v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.)	733
City of Hagerstown, Main v. (Md.)	410	De Haven, Worst v. (Pa.)	802
City of Hyattsville, Lyon v. (Md.)	610	Deigendesch, Ford v. (Pa.)	578
City of Philadelphia, Hoffman v. (Pa.)	674	Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., Indian v. (Pa.)	871
City of Philadelphia, Taylor v. (Pa.)	766	Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., James v. (N. J.)	828
City of Reading, Ahrens v. (Pa.)	511	Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of New Jersey v. (N. J. Ch.)	141
City of Waterbury, McEvoy v. (Conn.)	164	De Nardo v. Stephens-Jackson Co. (Pa.)	584
Clark, Baltimore Car Wheel Co. v. (Md.)	357	De Paris v. Wilmington Trust Co. (Del.)	691
Clark v. Lu v. (Me.)	891	Derrickson, Fox v. (Del. Super.)	155
Clark, New York Cent. Ry. v. (Vt.)	343	Desureault v. Maselly (Conn.)	347
Clark v. Painted Post Lumber Co. (N. J. Ch.)	728	Detroit Nat. Fire Ins. Co., Bone v. (Pa.)	742
Cleaver, Heldmyer v. (Del. Super.)	635	Deutsche Presbyterianische Kirche v. Trustees of Presbytery of Elizabeth (N. J. Ch.)	642
Clements, Globe Granite Co. v. (Vt.)	104	Devine v. Devine (N. J. Ch.)	370
Clothier v. Hoffman Co. (Pa.)	559	Dayette v. Dayette (Vt.)	252
Clough v. Wilton (N. H.)	453	Dick, Warruna v. (Pa.)	749
Cobb v. Cumberland County Power & Light Co. (Me.)	844	Dickey, Commonwealth v. (Pa.)	870
Cobb v. Morrison (N. H.)	829	Dickinson, Corona Coal & Coke Co. v. (Pa.)	741
Coburn, Knox v. (Me.)	789	Di Grazio v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.)	596
Cochecho Bottling Co., Eldredge Brewing Co. v. (N. H.)	453	Dinagan, State v. (N. H.)	32
Coffin v. Johnson (Me.)	369	Dirigo Mut. Fire Ins. Co., Maxwell v. (Me.)	812
Cohen, Lanning v. (N. J. Sup.)	87	Distilling Co. of America, U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co. v. (N. J.)	216
Cole v. Cole (N. J. Ch.)	830	D. L. Ward Co., Alcorn v. (Pa.)	893
Culwell, Anderson v. (Conn.)	242	Dr. D. P. Ordway Plaster Co., Tibbetts v. (Me.)	809
Comision Reguladora del Mercado de Henequen, Molina v. (N. J. Sup.)	450	Dodge, State v. (Me.)	5
Commercial Coal Mining Co., Shrader v. (Pa.)	151	Dodge Bros. v. Central Vermont R. Co. (Vt.)	873
Commissioners of Chestertown, Vannort v. (Md.)	113	Dodge's Will, In re (N. J. Prerog.)	646
Commissioners of Perryville, Taylor v. (Md.)	475	Dojan v. Schoen. (Pa.)	149
Commonwealth, Appeal of (Pa.)	493
Commonwealth, Appeal of (Pa.)	765
Commonwealth, Appeal of (Pa.)	866
Commonwealth v. Balanzo (Pa.)	683
Commonwealth v. Corsino (Pa.)	739
Commonwealth v. Dantine (Pa.)	672
Commonwealth v. Dickey (Pa.)	870
Commonwealth v. Gregory (Pa.)	562
Commonwealth v. Grove (Pa.)	732
Commonwealth v. Principatti (Pa.)	53
Commonwealth v. Puder (Pa.)	505
Commonwealth, Rowan v. (Pa.)	502

	Page		Page
Dolan v. Universal Fire Brick Co. (N. J. Ch.)	86	Freeholders of Hudson & Essex, United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. (N. J. Ch.)	98
Doran v. Asbury Park (N. J.)	180	Freile v. Rudiger (N. J. Ch.)	142
Dorrance v. Greene (R. I.)	12	Frick Coke Co., Oberly v. (Pa.)	864
Doyle v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. (Pa.)	576	Frick Coke Co., Walsky v. (Pa.)	798
Dranow v. Kolmar (N. J. Sup.)	650	Front & U. St. R. Co., State v. (Del. Gen. Sess.)	154
Driver v. Smith (N. J. Ch.)	717	Fulton Farmers' Ass'n v. Bomberger (Pa.)	805
Drummond v. Hughes (N. J.)	137	Funk, Grove v. (Md.)	868
Dubosky, Christ v. (Pa.)	547	F. W. Tunnell & Co., Harris Chemical Co. v. (Pa.)	898
Duffy, Appeal of (Pa.)	585
Dundalk Realty Co., Boggs v. (Md.)	45	Gaines v. Baldwin (Vt.)	825
Dunlap v. Chenoweth (N. J. Ch.)	822	Gamble, City of Baltimore v. (Md.)	188
Dupuy v. Johns (Pa.)	585	Gamse & Bro., City of Baltimore v. (Md.)	429
Duquesne Light Co., Klein-Logan Co. v. (Pa.)	763	Garfield, Brightlook Hospital Ass'n v. (Vt.)	99
Dyer v. Cumberland County Power & Light Co. (Me.)	848	Garfield, Newman v. (Vt.)	881
		Garland, McBride v. (N. J. Ch.)	435
Earle Co., Lifter v. (Pa.)	676	Gaskill v. Pittsburgh Life & Trust Co. (Pa.)	775
Eason, Overseer of Poor of Town of Montclair v. (N. J.)	291	Gayton v. Gayton (Me.)	369
Easton Transit Co., Laudenberger v. (Pa.)	588	Geoffroy v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (R. I.)	883
Eastman v. Eastman (Me.)	1	George, Hutchins v. (Vt.)	108
East Ridgelawn Cemetery Co. v. Frank (N. J. Ch.)	594	George, Miles v. (Pa.)	687
Edmondson, Davis v. (Pa.)	582	Gerard v. Lewiston, A. & W. St. Ry. (Me.)	66
Edwards, Bourgeois v. (N. J. Ch.)	447	G. H. Bass & Co. v. Wilton Woolen Co. (Me.)	160
Eldredge Brewing Co. v. Cochecho Bottling Co. (N. H.)	453	Gilbane v. Lent (R. I.)	77
Eline v. Western Maryland R. Co. (Pa.)	857	Gilbo & Swarts v. Merrill's Estate (Vt.)	10
Elk Natural Gas Co. v. Ridgway Light & Heat Co. (Pa.)	546	Gillard v. Manufacturers' Casualty Ins. Co. (N. J. Sup.)	709
Emerson v. Taylor (Md.)	538	Gillard v. Manufacturers' Casualty Ins. Co. (N. J. Sup.)	707
Emery, Longbottom v. (Pa.)	561	Globe Granite Co. v. Clements (Vt.)	104
Englander v. Osborne (Pa.)	614	Globe Ticket Co. v. International Ticket Co. (N. J. Ch.)	92
Erie R. Co., Gumaerd Lead & Zinc Co. v. (N. J.)	134	Goff v. Goff Electro-Pneumatic Brake Co. (N. J. Ch.)	198
Erie R. Co., Lennon v. (N. J.)	444	Goff Electro-Pneumatic Brake Co., Goff v. (N. J. Ch.)	193
Eva, Appeal of (Conn.)	238	Goodwin v. Nedjip (Me.)	519
Eva's Estate, In re (Conn.)	238	Gordon, City of Baltimore v. (Md.)	536
Evans v. Baltimore, C. & A. R. Co. (Md.)	112	Gowen, Appeal of (Pa.)	509
Eugster v. Eugster (N. J.)	135	G. P. Farmer Coal & Supply Co. v. Albright (N. J. Ch.)	224
E. W. Rothrock Co., Kennedy v. (Pa.)	746	Grandi, Brunetti v. (N. J. Ch.)	139
		Grand Trunk R. Co., Morrisette v. (Me.)	683
Farmer Coal & Supply Co. v. Albright (N. J. Ch.)	224	Grant v. Patrons' Androscooggin Mut. Fire Ins. Co. (Me.)	625
Fay v. Moore (Pa.)	686	Grassman, Nugent v. (N. J. Sup.)	30
Feick v. Hill Bread Co. (N. J.)	96	Graves, White v. (N. J. Ch.)	205
Felmgold v. Supovitz (Me.)	697	Greco, State v. (Del. Gen. Sess.)	687
Fennessy, Steinmetz v. (Pa.)	870	Greenberger v. Schwartz (Pa.)	573
Ferry v. Alderman (Conn.)	68	Greene, Dorrance v. (R. I.)	12
Ferry v. Wedge (Pa.)	671	Greenhalch v. Barber (R. I.)	769
Fidelity Trust Co., Bradford v. (Del. Ch.)	777	Gregory, Commonwealth v. (Pa.)	562
Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Brown (Vt.)	234	Grippio v. Davis (Conn.)	165
Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Brooks Garage (N. J.)	132	Gross, Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. (Pa.)	684
Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, State v. (Md.)	278	Grove, Commonwealth v. (Pa.)	782
Fifield v. Mayer (N. H.)	887	Grove v. Funk (Md.)	368
Fire Protection Development Co. v. American Dist. Tel. Co. (N. J.)	442	Gumaerd Lead & Zinc Co. v. Erie R. Co. (N. J.)	184
First Nat. Bank v. Rutter (N. J. Sup.)	138	Gurski v. Susquehanna Coal Co. (Pa.)	801
Fitzsimmons, State v. (Del. Gen. Sess.)	838	Guyer v. Snyder (Md.)	116
Flaherty v. Maine Motor Carriage Co. (Me.)	627
Fletcher v. Wilmington Steamboat Co. (Pa.)	60	Hagen, Browne v. (N. J.)	207
Foltz, City of Hagerstown v. (Md.)	267	Hager v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.)	599
Ford v. Deigendesch (Pa.)	573	Hah v. J. La Courciere Co. (Conn.)	348
Ford v. Hersey (Vt.)	875	Hamburger, Castelnberg v. (Md.)	473
Forrest v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. (Pa.)	663	Hamilton v. Pickett (Conn.)	162
Foss v. Foss (Me.)	633	Hammond v. Aluminum Co. of America (Pa.)	660
Fowler v. Westerhoff Bros. Co. (N. J. Ch.)	198	Harlow v. Weld (R. I.)	832
Fox v. Derricksen (Del. Super.)	155	Harris v. Moses (Me.)	708
Frank, East Ridgelawn Cemetery Co. v. (N. J. Ch.)	594	Harris Chemical Co. v. F. W. Tunnell & Co. (Pa.)	898
Frank Jones Brewing Co., Casey v. (N. H.)	454	Hartman, Appeal of (Pa.)	853
Franko v. William Schollhorn Co. (Conn.)	485	Hartnett Co. v. Poultry Fancier Pub. Co. (Pa.)	885
Frantz, Davis v. (Del. Ch.)	779

	Page		Page
Harvey v. Harvey (Me.).....	894	Jones, Stocksedale v. (Md.).....	416
Haswell v. Walker (Me.).....	810	Jones v. Wyomissing Club (Pa.).....	551
Haywood v. Boston & M. R. R. (N. H.)...	402	Jones Brewing Co., Casey v. (N. H.).....	454
H. C. Frick Coke Co., Oberly v. (Pa.)....	864	Jordan Co., New Haven Bank Nat. Bank-
H. C. Frick Coke Co., Walasky v. (Pa.)....	798	ing Ass'n v. (Conn.).....	392
Headley, Lacombe v. (N. J. Ch.).....	711	Joseph Wild & Son, Appeal of (Pa.).....	799
Hedenberg's Estate, In re (N. J. Frerog.)	221
Heldmyer v. Cleaver (Del. Super.).....	635	Kaats, State v. (Vt.).....	873
Hersey, Ford v. (Vt.).....	875	Kamps v. Alexander (Md.).....	427
Hicks v. Kerr (Md.).....	428	Kanawell v. Miller (Pa.).....	861
Hieston v. National City Bank (Md.)...	281	Kaufman v. Williams (N. J.).....	202
Higgins, Sweeney v. (Me.).....	791	Keller v. Lawson (Pa.).....	678
Hildebrand's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	806	Kelley, Ilsey v. (Me.).....	631
Hill, Somerville v. (Pa.).....	62	Kelley, Seavey v. (Me.).....	631
Hill Bread Co., Feick v. (N. J.).....	98	Kemp v. McNeill Cooperage Co. (Del.
Hilton v. Hilton (N. J.).....	375	Super.).....	639
Hobbs, Brown v. (Md.).....	253	Kempson v. Kempson (N. J.).....	86
Hobbs v. Hurley (Me.).....	815	Kennebec Gas & Fuel Co., Braman, Dow &
Hoboken Mfrs.' R. Co., Holzapfel v. (N.		Co. v. (Me.).....	3
J.).....	209	Kennedy v. E. W. Rothrock Co. (Pa.).....	746
Hoffman, Penniman v. (Pa.).....	892	Kensington Workingmen's Bldg. Ass'n, No.
Hoffman v. Philadelphia (Pa.).....	674	2, Ransley v. (Pa.).....	745
Hoffman Co., Clothier v. (Pa.).....	559	Kenyon v. Millard (Del. Ch.).....	778
Holden v. Loverin (N. H.).....	157	Kerk v. Peters (Pa.).....	549
Holdon v. Hustis (N. H.).....	127	Kernan v. Carter (Md.).....	530
Holland, State v. (Me.).....	159	Kerr, Hicks v. (Md.).....	426
Holman, In re (N. J. Sup.).....	212	Kerr, MacEvoy v. (Pa.).....	668
Holscher, Caszulo v. (Pa.).....	680	Kier v. Parks (N. H.).....	158
Holt, Curran v. (Me.).....	579	Killcourse, In re (Del. Gen. Sess.).....	837
Holzapfel v. Hoboken Mfrs.' R. Co. (N. J.)	209	Kingston v. Home Life Ins. Co. of Amer-
Home Life Ins. Co. of America, Kingston		ica (Del.).....	25
v. (Del.).....	25	Kirk & Son Co., Lohmuller v. (Md.).....	270
Horn & Hardart Baking Co., Lane v.		Klein-Logan Co. v. Duquesne Light Co.
(Pa.).....	615	(Pa.).....	763
Howard v. Randall (Md.).....	368	Klinge, Paulsen v. (N. J. Sup.).....	95
Hudson Cement & Supply Co. of Baltimore		Knapp, Naylor v. (N. J.).....	131
City, Turner v. (Md.).....	455	Knecht v. Knecht (Pa.).....	676
Hufnagle v. Wilkes-Barre R. Co. (Pa.)...	738	Knight's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	765
Hughes, Drummond v. (N. J.).....	137	Knox v. Coburn (Me.).....	789
Hull v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Md.)...	274	Kobylis v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.)
Hunt v. Snyder (Pa.).....	603	Kolmar, Dranow v. (N. J. Sup.).....	650
Hunter v. Mountfort (Me.).....	627	Kramer v. Sargent & Co. (Conn.).....	490
Huntington v. Supreme Commandery, Unit-		Krebs v. Rubsam (N. J. Sup.).....	83
ed Order of the Golden Cross of the		Kreis v. Cartledge (Pa.).....	855
World (Pa.).....	498	Kroshinski v. School Dist. of Borough of
Hurley, Hobbs v. (Me.).....	815	Dickson City (Pa.).....	572
Hustis, Holden v. (N. H.).....	127	Krug v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. of Hustis, Rockwell v. (N. H.).....	127	Baltimore (Md.).....	414
Hutchins v. George (Vt.).....	108	Kuhn v. Ligonier Valley R. Co. (Pa.).....	557
Hutzler, City of Baltimore v. (Md.).....	178	Ksiasek v. Ksiasek (N. J. Ch.).....	315
Hyatt Roller Bearing Co. v. Pennsylvania
R. Co. (N. J. Sup.).....	82	Lacombe v. Headley (N. J. Ch.).....	711
		La Courciere Co., Hall v. (Conn.).....	349
Iddins v. Iddins (Md.).....	368	Ladd v. Bean (Me.).....	814
Ilsey v. Kelley (Me.).....	631	Lamaster, Neikirk v. (Pa.).....	759
Imperial Woolen Co., McCauley v. (Pa.)...	617	Lambert v. Lambert (Me.).....	820
Indian v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (Pa.)	871	Lamphier, Olmstead v. (Conn.).....	488
Inhabitants of Town of Farmington, Preat		Lanahan v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co.
v. (Me.).....	521	of Baltimore (Md.).....	416
Inhabitants of York, Blaisdell v. (Me.)...	699	Lane v. Horn & Hardart Baking Co.
Inhabitants of York, Stewart v. (Me.)...	701	(Pa.).....	615
International Motor Co., Purcell v. (N.		Lang, Seaver v. (Vt.).....	877
J.).....	894	Langley, Berman v. (Me.).....	65
International Signal Co. v. Marconi Wire-		Lanning v. Cohen (N. J. Sup.).....	87
less Tel. Co. of America (N. J. Ch.)....	378	Larrow v. Martell (Vt.).....	826
International Ticket Co., Globe Ticket Co.		La Point v. Monadnock Paper Mill (N. H.)
v. (N. J. Ch.).....	92	Latrobe, American Colonization Soc. v., two cases (Md.).....	120
Jacobs, Bell v. (Pa.).....	587	Laudenberger v. Easton Transit Co. (Pa.)
James v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (N. J.)	328	Levole v. Wooldridge (N. H.).....	346
Janvrin v. Powers (N. H.).....	252	Lawrence v. Prosser (N. J. Ch.).....	772
Jefferson v. Stuckert (Del. Ch.).....	781	Lawrence Co. v. Buzzell (Me.).....	631
Jenkins, Ady v. (Md.).....	178	Lawson, Keller v. (Pa.).....	678
Jennings v. Mailey (Pa.).....	731	Le Clair v. White (Me.).....	516
Jerrard's Will, In re (Me.).....	351	Lehigh Valley R. Co., Messenger v. (Pa.)...	623
Jersey City, Brennan v. (N. J. Sup.).....	90	Lehigh Valley R. Co., Mooney v. (Pa.).....	624
J. La Courciere Co., Hall v. (Conn.)...	348	Leister, Neudecker v. (Md.).....	47
John F. Betz & Son, Winter v. (Pa.).....	59	Lennon v. Erie R. Co. (N. J.).....	444
Johns, Dupuy v. (Pa.).....	565	Lent, Gilbane v. (R. I.).....	77
Johnson, Coffin v. (Me.).....	369	Lentz's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	763
Johnson, State v. (N. J.).....	598	Lewiston, A. & W. St. Ry., Gerard v. (Me.)
Johnson, Winch v. (N. J.).....	81	Lewiston, A. & W. St. Ry., Rolfe v. (Me.)
Jones, Smith v. (N. J. Frerog.).....	380	Lewiston Buick Co. v. Nelke (Me.).....	627
		Lobby, Appeal of (Me.).....	351

	Page		Page
Liberty Trust Co., Sterling Leather Works v. (N. J.)	895	Miller, Bourgeois v. (N. J. Ch.)	383
Lifter v. Earle Co. (Pa.)	676	Miller, Kanawell v. (Pa.)	861
Ligonier Valley R. Co., Kuhn v. (Pa.)	557	Milligan v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.)	657
Lindabury, Bartley v. (N. J. Ch.)	333	Mindlin v. Saxony Spinning Co. (Pa.)	598
Lindsay, Wright v. (Vt.)	143	Molina v. Comision Reguladora del Mercado de Henequen (N. J. Sup.)	450
Line, Coulter v. (Pa.)	867	Monadnock Paper Mill, La Point v. (N. H.)	251
Loeb v. Davidson (Pa.)	681	Monahan, Mt. Savage George's Creek Coal Co. v. (Md.)	480
Lohmuller v. Samuel Kirk & Son Co. (Md.)	270	Montpelier & W. R. R. Co., Charles B. anchi & Sons v. (Vt.)	144
Longbottom v. Emery (Pa.)	561	Moody, Potter v. (N. H.)	889
Look v. Watson (Me.)	850	Mooney v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (Pa.)	624
Loverin, Holden v. (N. H.)	157	Moore, Fay v. (Pa.)	686
Luce, Clark v. (Me.)	891	Moran's Estate, In re (Pa.)	585
Lycoming-Edison Co., Citizens' Electric Co. v. (Pa.)	573	Morgan v. Stowe (Vt.)	339
Lyon v. Hyattsville (Md.)	610	Morrill v. Roberts (Me.)	818
McAdams, In re (N. J. Prerog.)	201	Morris, Rasst v. (Md.)	412
McAvoy, Webber v. (Me.)	513	Morris' Estate, In re (Pa.)	868
McBride v. Garland (N. J. Ch.)	435	Morrison, Cobb v. (N. H.)	829
McCauley v. Imperial Woolen Co. (Pa.)	617	Morrison v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.)	71
McComas v. Wiley (Md.)	52	Morrison v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.)	609
McDonald v. McNeil (Vt.)	337	Morrisette v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (Me.)	638
McDonald, State v. (Me.)	849	Morse Co. v. Barnes (Me.)	625
McElgot & Chenoweth Co. v. Nutley (N. J. Sup.)	648	Moses, Harris v. (Me.)	703
McElwee v. Mahlman (Me.)	705	Mountain Gas Co., V. & S. Bottle Co. v. (Pa.)	667
MacEvoy v. Kerr (Pa.)	668	Mt. Savage George's Creek Coal Co. v. Monahan (Md.)	480
McEvoy v. Waterbury (Conn.)	164	Mountfort, Hunter v. (Me.)	627
McGraw v. Merryman (Md.)	540	Murphy v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County (N. J.)	304
McGraw v. Union Trust & Deposit Co. (Md.)	286	Murphy v. Stubblefield (Md.)	259
Machen, City of Baltimore v. (Md.)	175	Murray Bros. Co., Smith v. (Me.)	369
Mackenzie, Bradford v. (Md.)	368	Mutual Distributing Co., Mausert v. (N. J.)	203
McMahon v. Riker (N. J. Sup.)	289	Nassali-Rocca, Appeal of (Pa.)	511
McMichael v. Culliton (N. J. Sup.)	433	National City Bank, Hieston v. (Md.)	281
McMullen v. Shepherd (Md.)	424	Naubuc Fire Dist., Williams Bros. Mfg. Co. v. (Conn.)	245
McMullin v. Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Co. (Pa.)	760	Naylor v. Knapp (N. J.)	131
McNeil, McDonald v. (Vt.)	337	Nedjip, Goodwin v. (Me.)	519
McNeill Cooperage Co., Kemp v. (Del. Super.)	639	Neikirk v. Lamaster (Pa.)	759
Mahlman, McElwee v. (Me.)	705	Nelke, Lewiston Buick Co. v. (Me.)	627
Main v. Hagerstown (Md.)	410	Nelke, Royal Ins. Co. v. (Me.)	628
Maine Cent. R. Co., Bailey v. (Me.)	890	Neudecker v. Leister (Md.)	47
Maine Motor Carriage Co., Flaherty v. (Me.)	627	Newark Lunch Room Co., Sullivan v. (N. J. Ch.)	222
Maley, Jennings v. (Pa.)	731	Newbold v. Newbold (Md.)	366
Manufacturers' Casualty Ins. Co., Gillard v. (N. J. Sup.)	709	New Haven Bank Nat. Banking Ass'n v. Jordan Co. (Conn.)	392
Manufacturers' Casualty Ins. Co., Gillard v. (N. J. Sup.)	707	Newman v. Garfield (Vt.)	881
Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, O'Neil v. (Conn.)	390	New York Cent. Ry. v. Clark (Vt.)	343
Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. of America, International Signal Co. v. (N. J. Ch.)	378	New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., Geoffroy v. (R. I.)	883
Marsh v. Marsh (N. J. Ch.)	373	Nixon, Curtis v. (Me.)	894
Martell, Larrow v. (Vt.)	826	Nolan's Estate, In re (Pa.)	575
Martin v. Southern Pennsylvania Traction Co. (Pa.)	897	Northern Cent. R. Co. v. Baltimore (Md.)	44
Martin's Will, In re (Vt.)	100	Northern Trust & Savings Co. of Lancaster, Wohlsen v. (Pa.)	869
Maselly, Dessureault v. (Conn.)	347	Northwestern Consol. Milling Co. v. Young (Pa.)	550
Maslowski's Estate, In re (Pa.)	675	Nugent v. Grassman (N. J. Sup.)	30
Mattern, City of Baltimore v. (Md.)	478	Nussenbaum, Sachs v. (Conn.)	393
Mausert v. Mutual Distributing Co. (N. J.)	203	Oberly v. H. C. Frick Coke Co. (Pa.)	864
Maxwell v. Dirigo Mut. Fire Ins. Co. (Me.)	812	O'Dunne v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore (Md.)	262
Maxwell's Estate, In re, two cases (Pa.)	501	Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co., Steitz v. (N. J. Ch.)	214
Mayer, Fifield v. (N. H.)	887	Old Forge Borough's Contested Election, In re (Pa.)	589
Maynard v. Barrett (Pa.)	612	Olmstead v. Lamphier (Conn.)	488
Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. of Baltimore, Krug v. (Md.)	414	O'Neil v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank (Conn.)	390
Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. of Baltimore, Lanahan v. (Md.)	416	O'Neill, Berry v. (N. J. Sup.)	25
Mercuro v. Board of Canvassers and Registration of City of Providence (R. I.)	886	Oppenheimer, Stevenson Co. v. (N. J. Sup.)	88
Merlino v. Connecticut Quarries Co. (Conn.)	396	Order of United Commercial Travelers, Archibald v. (Me.)	792
Merrill's Estate, Gilbo & Swartz v. (Vt.)	10	Ordway Plaster Co., Tibbetts v. (Me.)	806
Merryman, McGraw v. (Md.)	540	Osborne, Englander v. (Pa.)	614
Messinger v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. (Pa.)	623
Midland Realty Co., Rugg v. (Pa.)	685
Miles v. George (Pa.)	667
Millard, Kenyon v. (Del. Ch.)	778
Miller, Appeal of (Pa.)	62

	Page		Page
Overseer of Poor of Town of Montclair v. Eason (N. J.).....	291	Powers, Janvria v. (N. H.).....	252
Padgett, Shawmut Mining Co. v. (Md.)..	40	Prest v. Farmington (Me.).....	521
Page v. Brooks (N. H.)	786	Price v. Whelan (Pa.)	807
Page v. Portsmouth Hospital (N. H.)	845	Principatti, Commonwealth v. (Pa.).....	53
Painted Post Lumber Co., Clark v. (N. J. Ch.)	728	Printing Corporation, Cross v. (N. J. Ch.)	727
Parker v. New Boston (N. H.).....	345	Prosser, Lawrence v. (N. J. Ch.).....	772
Parke, Kier v. (N. H.)	158	Providence Gas Co., Public Utilities Commission v., two cases (R. I.).....	609
Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. Fire Ins. Co., Grant v. (Me.).....	625	Prudential Ins. Co. of America, Suravitz v. (Pa.).....	754
Paulson v. Klinge (N. J. Sup.).....	95	Public Service Commission, Pennsylvania Power Co. v. (Pa.).....	605
Peiffer's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	576	Public Utilities Commission v. Providence Gas Co., two cases (R. I.).....	609
Pembroke, Appeal of (Me.).....	630	Public Utilities Commission v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.).....	690
Penniman v. Hoffman (Pa.).....	892	Puder, Commonwealth v. (Pa.).....	505
Pennock, Appeal of (Pa.).....	868	Purcell v. International Motor Co. (N. J.)	894
Pennsylvania Co. for Insurance on Lives and Granting Annuities v. Riley (N. J. Ch.).....	225	Pusic v. Salak (Pa.).....	751
Pennsylvania Power Co. v. Public Service Commission (Pa.).....	605	Puterbaugh's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	601
Pennsylvania R. Co., De Haas v. (Pa.)...	733	Quinter v. Quinter (Pa.).....	580
Pennsylvania R. Co., Di Grazio v. (Pa.)...	596	Raby, Inc., v. Ward-Meehan Co. (Pa.).....	750
Pennsylvania R. Co., Hyatt Roller Bearing Co. v. (N. J. Sup.).....	82	Randall, Howard v. (Md.).....	368
Pennsylvania R. Co., Swank v. (N. J. Sup.)	26	Ransley v. Kensington Workingmen's Bldg. Ass'n, No. 2 (Pa.).....	745
Pennsylvania R. Co., Twersky v. (Pa.)....	63	Rasst v. Morris (Md.).....	412
Pennsylvania State Camp, Patriotic Order of Americans, Application of (Pa.).....	590	Raymond v. Sheldon's Estate (Vt.).....	108
Pennsylvania Water & Power Co., Vandersloot v. (Pa.).....	790	Reed v. Reed (Me.).....	227
Pension Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Whiteley (Pa.)	658	Reisler's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	555
Pension Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Whiteley (Pa.)	660	Remedial Loan Co. of Philadelphia, Wheeler v. (Pa.).....	508
People's Trust Co. of Lancaster, Appeal of (Pa.)	824	Remson, Boynton v. (Md.).....	527
Perkins, Benoit v. (N. H.).....	254	Rhode Island Co., Broderick v. (R. I.)...	689
Peters, Kerk v. (Pa.).....	549	Rhode Island Co., Morrison v. (R. I.)...	71
Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., Doyle v. (Pa.)	575	Rhode Island Co., Morrison v. (R. I.)...	609
Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., Forrest v. (Pa.)	663	Rhode Island Co., Public Utilities Commission v. (R. I.).....	600
Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., Shields v. (Pa.)	665	Rhode Island Co. v. Superior Court (R. I.)	634
Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., Wood v. (Pa.)	69	Richmond v. Bethlehem (N. H.).....	773
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Caffery v. (Pa.)	569	Ridgway Light & Heat Co., Elk Natural Gas Co. v. (Pa.).....	546
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Carbaugh v. (Pa.)	860	Ridley, City of Bangor v. (Me.).....	230
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Hager v. (Pa.)...	590	Rieker, City Bank v. (Pa.).....	804
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Hull v. (Md.)...	274	Riker, McMahon v. (N. J. Sup.).....	289
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Kobylis v. (Pa.)	595	Riley, Pennsylvania Co. for Insurance on Lives and Granting Annuities v. (N. J. Ch.).....	225
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Milligan v. (Pa.)	657	Roberts, Morrill v. (Me.).....	818
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Stidole v. (Pa.)	665	Robertson v. Wilmington & P. Traction Co. (Del. Super.).....	839
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Wanner v. (Pa.)	670	Robins, Appeal of (Pa.).....	604
Philadelphia & R. R. Co., Wingert v. (Pa.)	859	Robinson v. State (Conn.).....	491
Philbrick, Brown v. (N. H.).....	785	Rockwell v. Hustis (N. H.).....	127
Pickett, Hamilton v. (Conn.).....	162	Roebeling's Estate, In re (N. J. Prerog.)..	295
Pierce's Estate, In re (N. J. Prerog.).....	298	Rogers, Pope v. (Conn.).....	241
Pittsburgh Life & Trust Co., Gaskill v. (Pa.)	775	Rogers v. Rogers (N. J. Ch.).....	82
Pittsburgh, M. & W. R. Co., Traction Materials Co. v. (Pa.).....	552	Rolfe v. Lewiston, A. & W. St. Ry. (Me.)	65
Pittsburgh, M. & W. R. Co., Traction Materials Co. v. (Pa.).....	554	Rose v. Slough (N. J.).....	104
Plumly's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	670	Rosoff, Brundrett v. (Conn.).....	67
Plummer, Bow v. (N. H.).....	35	Ross v. Ross (N. J. Ch.).....	199
Pce v. Baltimore (Md.).....	360	Rothrock Co., Kennedy v. (Pa.).....	746
Polack Tyre & Rubber Co., Crucible Steel Co. of America v. (N. J.).....	324	Rowan v. Commonwealth (Pa.).....	502
Pope, Appeal of (Conn.).....	241	Royal Ins. Co. v. Nelke (Me.).....	626
Pope v. Rogers (Conn.).....	241	Rubeam, Krebs v. (N. J. Sup.).....	63
Pope v. Boston & M. R. R. (N. H.).....	403	Rudiger, Freile v. (N. J. Ch.).....	142
Portsmouth Hospital, Page v. (N. H.)....	845	Rudner, State v. (N. J. Sup.).....	320
Post, In re (N. J. Prerog.).....	652	Ruemeli v. Wilson (Pa.).....	687
Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of New Jersey v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (N. J. Ch.)...	141	Rugg v. Midland Realty Co. (Pa.).....	685
Potter v. Moody (N. H.).....	889	Runkle v. Smith (N. J. Ch.).....	211
Pottsville Union Traction Co. v. St. Clair (Pa.)	602	Rutter, First Nat. Bank v. (N. J. Sup.)...	138
Poultry Fancier Pub. Co., R. W. Hartnett Co. v. (Pa.).....	805	Ruzicka, Baltimore Car Foundry Co. v. (Md.).....	167
		R. W. Hartnett Co. v. Poultry Fancier Pub. Co. (Pa.).....	895
		Sachs v. Nussenbaum (Conn.).....	398
		Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, O'Dunne v. (Md.).....	262
		Salak, Pusic v. (Pa.).....	751
		Samaha, State v. (N. J. Sup.).....	305
		Samuel Kirk & Son Co., Lohmuller v. (Md.)	270

	Page		Page
Samuels, State v. (N. J. Sup.).....	322	State v. Greco (Del. Gen. Sess.).....	637
Saper v. Baker (N. J.).....	26	State v. Holland (Me.).....	159
Sargent & Co., Kramer v. (Conn.).....	490	State v. Johnson (N. J.).....	598
Saxony Spinning Co., Mindlin v. (Pa.).....	598	State v. Kaats (Vt.).....	878
Schlanger v. West Berwick (Pa.).....	764	State v. McDonald (Me.).....	849
Schoen, Dolan v. (Pa.).....	149	State, Robinson v. (Conn.).....	491
Schellhorn Co., Franko v. (Conn.).....	485	State v. Rudner (N. J. Sup.).....	320
School Dist. of Borough of Dickson City, Kroshinski v. (Pa.).....	572	State v. Samaha (N. J. Sup.).....	305
School Dist. of City of Connellsville, Sois- son v. (Pa.).....	592	State v. Samuels (N. J. Sup.).....	322
Schray v. Bishop & Lynes (Conn.).....	549	State v. Slorah (Me.).....	162
Schwartz, Greenberger v. (Pa.).....	573	State v. Taylor (N. J. Sup.).....	709
Scott, Case of (Me.).....	794	State v. Town Council of Town of West Warwick (R. I.).....	836
Scouton v. Stony Brook Lumber Co. (Pa.).....	548	State v. Wingert (Md.).....	117
Seacoast Real Estate Co. v. American Timber Co. (N. J. Ch.).....	437	State, Znak v. (Md.).....	264
Seaver v. Lang (Vt.).....	877	State, Board of Taxes and Assessment, West Shore R. Co. v. (N. J. Sup.).....	335
Seavey v. Kelley (Me.).....	631	Steinmetz v. Fennessey (Pa.).....	870
Seidl v. Baltimore (Md.).....	189	Steitz v. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. (N. J. Ch.).....	214
Seidman's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	799	Stephens-Jackson Co., De Nardo v. (Pa.).....	584
Shaffer's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	853	Sterling, Tull v. (Md.).....	191
Shawmut Mining Co. v. Padgett (Md.).....	40	Sterling Leather Works v. Liberty Trust Co. (N. J.).....	895
Sheldon's Estate, Raymond v. (Vt.).....	106	Stevenson Co. v. Oppenheimer (N. J. Sup.).....	83
Shepard v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (R. I.).....	18	Stewart v. York (Me.).....	701
Shepard v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (R. I.).....	635	Stidole v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.).....	668
Shepherd, McMullen v. (Md.).....	424	Stockdale v. Jones (Md.).....	416
Shepherd v. S. L. Crosby Co. (Me.).....	628	Stony Brook Lumber Co., Scouton v. (Pa.).....	548
Shields v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. (Pa.).....	665	Strout v. Strout (Me.).....	577
Shoemaker, Appeal of (Pa.).....	670	Stubblefield, Murphy v. (Md.).....	259
Shrader v. Commercial Coal Mining Co. (Pa.).....	151	Stuckert, Jefferson v. (Del. Ch.).....	781
Simonds, Tribune Ass'n v. (N. J. Ch.).....	386	Sullivan v. Newark Lunch Room Co. (N. J. Ch.).....	222
Siak, Christopher v. (Md.).....	855	Superior Court, Rhode Island Co. v. (R. I.).....	694
Sidler, Commonwealth v. (Pa.).....	604	Supovitz, Feingold v. (Me.).....	697
S. L. Crosby Co., Shepherd v. (Me.).....	628	Supreme Commandery, United Order of the Golden Cross of the World, Hunting- ton v. (Pa.).....	496
Slorah, State v. (Me.).....	162	Suravitz v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (Pa.).....	754
Slough, Rose v. (N. J.).....	194	Susquehanna Coal Co., Gurski v. (Pa.).....	801
Smith, Driver v. (N. J. Ch.).....	717	Swank v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (N. J. Sup.).....	26
Smith v. Jones (N. J. Prerog.).....	380	Swartz v. Bixler (Pa.).....	591
Smith v. Murray Bros. Co. (Me.).....	269	Sweeney v. Higgins (Me.).....	791
Smith, Runkle v. (N. J. Ch.).....	211	Swift & Co., Castle v. (Md.).....	187
Smith v. Somerset Traction Co. (Me.).....	783
Smith's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	492
Smith's Estate, In re (Pa.).....	493
Smoker v. Baldwin Locomotive Works (Pa.).....	597	Taroll, Appeal of (Pa.).....	589
Snyder, Commonwealth v. (Pa.).....	494	Taylor v. Commissioners of Perryville (Md.).....	475
Snyder, Guyer v. (Md.).....	116	Taylor, Emerson v. (Md.).....	538
Snyder, Hunt v. (Pa.).....	603	Taylor v. Philadelphia (Pa.).....	766
Soisson v. School Dist. of City of Connell- sville (Pa.).....	892	Taylor, State v. (N. J. Sup.).....	709
Somerset Traction Co., Smith v. (Me.).....	788	Taylor, United States Fidelity & Guar- anty Co. v. (Md.).....	171
Somerville v. Hill (Pa.).....	62	Thatcher v. Thatcher (Me.).....	515
Southern Pennsylvania Traction Co., Mar- tin v. (Pa.).....	397	Thomas, Zetterstrom v. (Conn.).....	287
Spencer Heater Co. v. Abbott (N. J.).....	91	Thomas Raby, Inc. v. Ward-Meehan Co. (Pa.).....	750
Spinney v. Seabrook (N. H.).....	248	Thomas & Thompson Co. of Baltimore City, Thompson v. (Md.).....	49
Sprague v. Town Council of Town of West Warwick (R. I.).....	834	Thompson v. Thomas & Thompson Co. of Baltimore City (Md.).....	49
Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Shepard v. (R. I.).....	18	Thomson Mach. Co. v. Brown (N. J. Ch.).....	129
Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Shepard v. (R. I.).....	635	Thorp, White v. (Vt.).....	9
State v. Agnesi (N. J. Sup.).....	290	Thurston v. Benton & F. St. R. Co. (Me.).....	894
State v. Alamanio (Del. Gen. Sess.).....	66	Tibbetts v. Dr. D. P. Ordway Plaster Co. (Me.).....	809
State v. American Colonization Soc., two cases (Md.).....	120	Town Council of Town of West Warwick, Sprague v. (R. I.).....	834
State, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. (Md.).....	465	Town Council of Town of West Warwick, State v. (R. I.).....	836
State v. Buckwald (Me.).....	520	Town of Bethlehem, Richmond v. (N. H.).....	773
State, Burkentine v. (Md.).....	368	Town of New Boston, Parker v. (N. H.).....	845
State v. Byron (N. H.).....	401	Town of Nutley, McEligot & Chenoweth Co. v. (N. J. Sup.).....	648
State v. Campbell (Conn.).....	653	Town of Seabrook, Spinney v. (N. H.).....	248
State v. Crouse (Me.).....	525	Town of West New York, West New York Imp. Co. v. (N. J.).....	611
State v. Dinagan (N. H.).....	33	Traction Materials Co. v. Pittsburgh, M. & W. R. Co. (Pa.).....	552
State v. Dodge (Me.).....	5
State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Mary- land (Md.).....	278
State v. Fitzsimmons (Del. Gen. Sess.).....	838
State v. Front & U. St. R. Co. (Del. Gen. Sess.).....	154

	Page		Page
Traction Materials Co. v. Pittsburgh, M. & W. R. Co. (Pa.)	554	Western Maryland R. & Terminal Co., Bowie v. (Md.)	461
Trapp v. Brown (N. J. Sup.)	302	Western Union Tel. Co. v. Victor G. Bloede Co. (Md.)	368
Tribune Ass'n v. Simonds (N. J. Ch.)	386	West New York Imp. Co. v. West New York (N. J.)	611
Trolicht-Duncker Carpet Co., Appeal of (Pa.)	799	West Shore R. Co. v. State Board of Taxes and Assessment (N. J. Sup.)	835
Trustees of Presbytery of Elizabeth, Deutsche Presbyterianische Kirche v. (N. J. Ch.)	642	Wheeler v. Remedial Loan Co. of Philadelphia (Pa.)	508
Tull v. Sterling (Md.)	191	Whelan, Price v. (Pa.)	807
Tunnell & Co., Harris Chemical Co. v. (Pa.)	396	White, Adams Exp. Co. v. (Md.)	110
Turner v. Hudson Cement & Supply Co. of Baltimore City (Md.)	455	White v. Graves (N. J. Ch.)	205
Turnure v. Turnure (N. J.)	293	White, Le Clair v. (Me.)	518
Twersky v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.)	68	White v. Thorp (Vt.)	9
Tyler, Appeal of (N. J. Prerog.)	298	Whiteley, Pension Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. (Pa.)	658
Union Trust & Deposit Co., McGraw v. (Md.)	286	Whiteley, Pension Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. (Pa.)	660
United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Freeholders of Hudson & Essex (N. J. Ch.)	98	White Mountain Freezer Co., Crowther v. (N. H.)	125
United Rys. & Electric Co. of Baltimore, Cook v. (Md.)	37	Wickersham's Estate, In re (Pa.)	509
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Appeal of (N. J. Prerog.)	645	Wickersham's Estate, In re (Pa.)	511
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Taylor (Md.)	171	Wild & Son, Appeal of (Pa.)	799
U. S. Industrial Alcohol Co. v. Distilling Co. of America (N. J.)	216	Wiley, McComas v. (Md.)	52
Universal Fire Brick Co., Dolan v. (N. J. Ch.)	86	Wilkes-Barre R. Co., Hufnagle v. (Pa.)	738
Vanderbilt's Estate, In re (N. J. Prerog.)	645	Williams, Kaufman v. (N. J.)	202
Vandersloot v. Pennsylvania Water & Power Co. (Pa.)	799	Williams Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Naubuc Fire Dist. (Conn.)	245
Vannort v. Commissioners of Chestertown (Md.)	113	William Schollhorn Co., Franko v. (Conn.)	485
Van Voorhis, Albright v. (N. J. Ch.)	27	Williamsport Staple Co., Buell v. (Pa.)	572
Verdon, Appeal of (N. J. Sup.)	317	Wilmington Steamboat Co., Fletcher v. (Pa.)	60
Victor G. Bloede Co., Western Union Tel. Co. v. (Md.)	368	Wilmington Trust Co., De Paris v. (Del.)	691
Village of Stowe, Morgan v. (Vt.)	339	Wilmington & P. Traction Co., Robertson v. (Del. Super.)	839
V. & S. Bottle Co. v. Mountain Gas Co. (Pa.)	667	Wilson, Ruemeli v. (Pa.)	667
Walker, Haswell v. (Me.)	810	Wilton, Clough v. (N. H.)	453
Walker v. Walker, two cases (Vt.)	828	Wilton Woolen Co., G. H. Bass & Co. v. (Me.)	180
Walsh v. Walsh (N. J.)	821	Winch v. Johnson (N. J.)	81
Walsky v. H. C. Frick Coke Co. (Pa.)	798	Wingert v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.)	859
Wanner v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.)	570	Wingert, State v. (Md.)	117
Ward Co., Alcorn v. (Pa.)	893	Wingert v. Wingert (Md.)	117
Ward-Meehan Co., Thomas Raby, Inc., v. (Pa.)	750	Winter v. John F. Betz & Son (Pa.)	59
Warren v. Warren (N. J.)	823	Wise v. Cambridge Springs (Pa.)	863
Warruna v. Dick (Pa.)	749	Wohlson v. Northern Trust & Savings Co. of Lancaster (Pa.)	869
Watson, Look v. (Me.)	850	Wohlson's Estate, In re (Pa.)	869
Watters v. Bayonne (N. J. Ch.)	770	Wolfe v. Wolfe (R. I.)	689
Webber v. McAvoy (Me.)	513	Wolfson, Castelbaum v. (N. J.)	84
Weber's Estate, In re (Pa.)	735	Wood v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. (Pa.)	69
Wedge, Ferry v. (Pa.)	671	Wood's Estate, In re (Pa.)	673
Weld, Harlow v. (R. I.)	832	Wooldridge v. Lavoie (N. H.)	346
Wells v. Blodgett (Vt.)	146	Worst v. De Haven (Pa.)	802
Welsbach Co., Ancona Printing Co. v. (N. J.)	182	Wright v. Lindsay (Vt.)	148
Westerhoff Bros. Co., Fowler v. (N. J. Ch.)	198	Wurth v. Wurth (N. J. Ch.)	644
Western Maryland R. Co., Eline v. (Pa.)	857	Wyomissing Club, Jones v. (Pa.)	551
		Young, Northwestern Consol. Milling Co. v. (Pa.)	550
		Zalewski, Commonwealth v. (Pa.)	683
		Zanoni v. Cyr (Me.)	629
		Zetterstrom v. Thomas (Conn.)	237
		Zink v. State (Md.)	264

THE ATLANTIC REPORTER VOLUME 104

(117 Me. 276)

EASTMAN v. EASTMAN et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. June 21, 1918.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶86—REMEDY AT LAW—DEVISE OF HOMESTEAD.

Specific performance of oral agreement to devise a homestead in return for services during testator's life is a subject for equity, and devisee is not required to seek redress at law.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶180—DEVISE OF HOMESTEAD—RETAINING PROPERTY DEVISED—RELIEF.

In a suit for specific performance of contract to devise a homestead and personal property, testator having willed the property to plaintiff for life only, with a bequest of the personalty, contention that, if a conveyance is to be made of realty, plaintiff must give up the personalty devised as a condition thereof is without merit, where such was the property contracted for, and plaintiff seeks no other.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶106(3)—DEVISE OF HOMESTEAD—NECESSARY PARTIES—CLAIMANTS BY REPRESENTATION.

In a suit for specific performance of an oral contract to devise a homestead descendants of testator, whose rights under the codicil are by representation, are not necessary parties, where those under whom they must claim are defendants.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶439—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT TO DEVISE—NECESSARY PARTIES.

The executors of a will are not necessary parties to a suit for specific performance of a contract to devise a homestead, where they are not charged with any duty involving the homestead.

5. WILLS ¶59—CONTRACT TO DEVISE HOMESTEAD—ADEQUATE CONSIDERATION.

A contract to devise a homestead to plaintiff in return for plaintiff's services until testator's death, and fully carried out by plaintiff during such period of more than nine years, was founded upon adequate consideration.

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶121(6)—DEVISE OF HOMESTEAD—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a decree against heirs for the specific performance of an oral contract to devise a homestead.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1006(7)—FINDINGS OF SINGLE JUSTICE—EQUITY HEARING.

The decree of a single justice upon matters of fact in an equity hearing will not be reversed, unless it clearly appears that the decree is erroneous.

Appeal from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, in Equity.

Bill by James Edward Eastman against George I. Eastman and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, KING, BIRD, HANSON, and MADIGAN, JJ.

Robert E. Randall, of Freeport, and William A. Connellan, of Portland, for appellants. Wheeler & Howe, of Brunswick, for appellee.

HANSON, J. This is a bill in equity, praying for the specific performance of an oral agreement made by James Eastman, father of the plaintiff, to devise his homestead farm in Brunswick to the plaintiff. The cause was heard by a single justice of this court, who sustained the bill. Final decree was made and filed, and the defendants appealed therefrom to the law court. The sitting justice found the following facts to be established:

"James Eastman, late of Brunswick in the county of Cumberland, died on the 10th day of June, A. D. 1915, seised and possessed of a certain homestead farm situated in said Brunswick. About nine or ten years before his death the said James Eastman entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, who was his eldest son, that if the plaintiff would remain with the said James Eastman during the remaining lifetime of the latter and assist him in the proper care, cultivation, and management of said farm, he would devise the said farm to the plaintiff, together with the stock, tools, and other goods and chattels thereon, so that the plaintiff would become the owner thereof in fee simple after the death of said James Eastman. Relying upon said agreement and in fulfillment thereof, the plaintiff remained with the said James Eastman continuously from the time said agreement was made until the death of said James Eastman, fully and faithfully performing all of the duties and obligations imposed upon him by the terms and conditions of said agreement.

"On the 7th day of December, A. D. 1911, the said James Eastman made and executed his last will and testament, whereby the said farm was devised in fee simple to the plaintiff, together with the personal property above mentioned.

"On the 19th day of December, A. D. 1914, the said James Eastman made and executed a codicil to his said last will and testament whereby the devise to the plaintiff of said farm was revoked, and the same was devised to the plaintiff for the term of his natural life only, and an estate in remainder in said farm was thereby devised to any of the children of James Eastman who might be living at the death of the plaintiff, with the provision that if any of said children should die prior to the death of the plaintiff, leaving descendants, the descendants of such child or children would take the share their parent would have taken if living, per stirpes. By the terms of said codicil the personal property above described was bequeathed to the plaintiff. Both the will and codicil have been duly proved and allowed in the probate court for said county of Cumberland.

"Upon the foregoing facts I find and rule that the plaintiff is entitled to receive and retain the personal property bequeathed to him by said will and codicil, and is also entitled to a specific performance of the agreement to devise the farm made by said James Eastman as aforesaid, and that the defendants should be required to convey to the plaintiff all of the right, title, and interest which they have acquired to said premises, the same being all of the real estate owned by the said James Eastman at the time of his decease in the county of Cumberland. A decree may be made and filed to carry out these findings and conclusions.

"Dated this 8th day of January, A. D. 1917."

And thereafter, on the 4th day of January, 1917, made and filed the final decree, which follows:

"This cause came on to be heard this day upon bill, answer, replication, and proofs, and was argued by counsel, and thereupon, upon consideration thereof, the plaintiff's bill is sustained, with costs, and it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed as follows, viz: That the defendants, George I. Eastman, Winnie Holbrook, Clara G. Soule, and Clarence E. Eastman, shall make, execute, acknowledge, and deliver to the plaintiff, James Edward Eastman, a quitclaim deed, with special covenants of warranty against the lawful claims or demands of all persons claiming by, through, or under them of the premises described in the plaintiff's bill, and being all of the real estate owned by James Eastman, the father of the parties to this cause, within 21 days from the date of this decree.

"Dated this 24th day of January, A. D. 1917."

The defendants in their answer invoke the statute of frauds, but waive the same in brief and argument. At the hearing no defense was offered, the appellants relying wholly upon technical objections raised on appeal and urged in their behalf. They contend that: (1) The plaintiff should be left to pursue his remedy in a court of law, as the circumstances connected with this case do not call for the exercise of equitable powers. (2) If any conveyance of the property should be made to the plaintiff, he must be required, as a condition thereof, to give up the bequest made to him under the will. (3) All parties concerned in the property covered by the finding of facts and decree are not parties to this action. (4) No evidence as to personal property that conditions named in the codicil have been performed.

[1] These objections to the complaint and the equity power of the court are not well taken. In such circumstances a complainant is not required to seek redress as in a suit at law. The equity side of the court is open to him as affording the best means of settling rights so involved, and administering adequate relief.

The law defining the power of the court and governing procedure in similar cases is stated in Nugent v. Smith, 85 Me. 433, 27 Atl. 342, in these words:

"Among the equity powers expressly conferred upon the court is the power to compel the specific performance of written contracts. R. S. c. 77, § 6, cl. 3. True, this is a discretionary power; and, generally, it will not be exercised when the party seeking to have it exercised has a full and adequate remedy by an action at law. But an action at law has never been regarded as an adequate remedy for breach of an agreement to convey real estate; and when such an agreement is founded on an adequate consideration, and is obtained without fraud or oppression, the duty of the court to compel its specific performance is universally acknowledged."

That compensation in damages for the breach of an agreement to convey real estate is not regarded as adequate relief is well settled. Foss v. Haynes, 81 Me. 89; Woodbury v. Gardner, 77 Me. 69; Twiss v. George, 33 Mich. 253; Bennett v. Dyer, 89 Me. 17, 35 Atl. 1004; Howe v. Watson, 179 Mass. 30, 60 N. E. 415; 36 Cyc. 673, and cases cited; Howe v. Benedict, 176 Mich. 522, 142 N. W. 768.

[2-4] The second objection has no merit, inasmuch as the plaintiff has received and retains the personal property involved in the contract and seeks no other. The third and fourth objections deal only with questions raised in view of the codicil, which in no manner affect the main question involved here. The parties directly interested are in court and answering, and the parties who are pointed out as having an indirect interest under the codicil, the other children of James Eastman or their descendants, are not necessary parties to this proceeding. If there is a remote or contingent interest in the parties named, it would be by right of representation, and they would be bound by any decree made against the defendants under whom they must claim, if they should claim at all. Morse v. Machias Co., 42 Me. 119. Nor are the executors necessary parties, as they are not in this instance charged with any duty involving the real estate in question.

[5] Here as the sitting justice finds, there was full performance on the part of the plaintiff. The contract was founded on an adequate consideration, was finally put into writing when the will was made, and the plaintiff relied thereon.

In addition to the performance of his obligation, and the payment of the consideration, the plaintiff must be held to have been in possession under the contract for the last three months at least with the knowledge and consent of the decedent, and that on entering upon the contract the plaintiff abandoned other plans and business prospects at the request of his father, who well knew that such abandonment caused the plaintiff financial loss. Again the plaintiff from time to time earned money from other work and used the same in the development, use, and improvement of the farm.

[6] The findings of fact by the sitting justice are amply sustained by the evidence, and in accord with the cases above cited, announcing a uniform rule that specific performance may be decreed in such cases against heirs.

[7] It is well settled that the decree of a single justice upon matters of fact in an equity hearing will not be reversed unless it clearly appears that the decree is erroneous. Paul v. Frye, 80 Me. 26, 12 Atl. 544; Sposedo v. Merriman, 111 Me. 530, 90 Atl. 387.

We find no error. The entry will be:

Appeal dismissed, with additional costs.

(117 Me. 291)

BRAMAN, DOW & CO. v. KENNEBEC GAS & FUEL CO. et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 8, 1918.)

1. SALES ¶32—CORRESPONDENCE—COMPLETED CONTRACTS.

Where defendant gave printed order for pipe, stating terms of payment, and plaintiff replied asking guaranty or offering to ship with sight draft attached to the bill of lading, and defendant wrote plaintiff that he had arranged for guaranty and to consider the pipe purchased, and plaintiff again wrote, stating that the order would be filled, there was a completed contract for the sale and purchase of the pipe.

2. CORPORATIONS ¶399(7)—POWERS OF OFFICERS—GENERAL MANAGER.

General manager of gas company in town where only one director resided, who stated his duties as conducting the local affairs, buying and paying for materials, and operating the plant, had apparent authority to order and agree to pay for pipe to be used in construction.

3. CORPORATIONS ¶303—POWERS OF OFFICERS—"GENERAL MANAGER."

The term "general manager" of a corporation indicates one who has general direction and control, as distinguished from one having management of a particular branch of the business.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, General Manager.]

4. CORPORATIONS ¶519(3)—EXECUTION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that sales contract was made with the general manager of the corporation, and not with an unauthorized agent.

5. CORPORATIONS ¶426(2)—POWERS OF OFFICERS—GENERAL MANAGER.

A general manager of a corporation may have authority to ratify a contract within the scope of his authority to make, though actually made by an unauthorized person.

Report from Superior Court, Kennebec County.

Action by Braman, Dow & Co. against the Kennebec Gas & Fuel Company and its trustee. Case reported. Judgment for plaintiffs.

Argued before SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Carroll N. Perkins, of Waterville, and Allen & Smith, of Boston, Mass., for plaintiffs. Mark J. Bartlett, of Waterville, for defendant.

MORRILL, J. This is an action to recover damages for failure to accept certain quantitles of pipe which plaintiffs claim that the defendant agreed to purchase of them and to accept and pay for, upon presentation at any bank in Waterville of sight drafts with bills of lading attached. The case is before us on report, and it is agreed that, if plaintiffs are entitled to recover, the damages shall be fixed at $1,048.30.

The position of defendant is thus stated in the brief of its counsel:

"The contention of the defendant is that the goods were never purchased or contracted for by it, and the shipment was made, in the way it was, without its consent, that the agreement made for the purchase of the goods and shipment was made by a party not connected with the defendant in any way as officer or agent, and whom it had never held out as authorized to act for it in the matter of the purchase and shipment of the goods, and that it never ratified or confirmed any contract of purchase."

The facts are not seriously in controversy. The transaction had its inception upon July 25, 1917, when one Morrill, a salesman of the plaintiffs, called at the office of the defendant corporation in Waterville and asked the general manager of the defendant, one Colton, if they were in the market for anything in his line. Inquiries by Mr. Colton for prices on certain amounts of 6-inch, 4-inch, 3-inch, and 2-inch pipe followed. The prices quoted being apparently satisfactory, the salesman, in the presence of Mr. Colton, called by telephone the Boston office of the plaintiffs and ascertained by talking with Mr. Sheldon, one of the plaintiffs, that the firm had in stock the desired amount of 4-inch, 3-inch, and 2-inch pipe. By direction of Mr. Colton the order was placed by telephone with the assurance that copy would be forwarded that night. Mr. Colton then gave to Mr. Morrill a printed order blank of Kennebec Gas & Fuel Company, and the latter then wrote the order, and Mr. Colton signed it, "Kennebec Gas and Fuel Co., by Francis Colton, Superintendent." This written order specified the terms of payment to be "60 das. net 2 per cent. 10 das.," and the pipe was to be "f. o. b. Waterville." These details had not been communicated to Mr. Sheldon, but were inserted in the written order by the salesman.

The next day, July 26, 1917, upon receipt of the written order, plaintiffs wrote defendant as follows:

"In regard to your valued order and conversation over the telephone on Wednesday in regard to the shipment of material, we should want a guaranty for the payment from you from bank or else payment before shipping the material. We will be willing however, to ship the order with sight draft attached to the bill of lading if you will arrange with the bank in Waterville to pay each draft on arrival of each car.

"We have the pipe at present in stock and can make shipment at once. There will probably be four carloads of it. Pipe is scarce and some sizes are about out of the market, and we wish you would advise us as soon as possible in regard to the above."

On July 30th Mr. Colton wrote plaintiffs as follows:

"Referring to your letter of July 26th and to our conversation on the telephone at a previous date.

"I have arranged to furnish you ample guaranty for the payment of pipe ordered from your office. Mr. Patrick Hirsch, president of the Constructive Utility Corporation, 149 Broadway, New York, who also represents A. B. Benesch & Co., of New York, will call upon you in your office Thursday and arrange to your satisfaction any payment guarantee necessary.

"In the meantime kindly consider the pipe purchased from this office sold to us. We wish this pipe could be delivered in Waterville as soon as possible."

On the same day plaintiffs wrote the defendant asking—

"if you can give us the information and security or guaranty that we desired, and if not, if you wish us to release this pipe on other orders. We have been holding it for you, and it is extremely scarce in the market, particularly the 4" size. We have an inquiry to-day taking all that you specified; we cannot replace this for some little time and need to know whether or not we are to cancel your order before giving this party the final answer."

And on the next day, July 31st, plaintiffs wrote defendant as follows:

"Replying to your letter of 30th inst., we shall be glad to talk with your representative when he calls on Thursday, and, in the meantime, understanding that you wish the pipe covered by the original order, we are holding the same and letting the other proposition go by, as we cannot fill both."

[1] These letters, with the order, must be regarded as evidence of a completed contract for the sale and purchase of the pipe, in which the defendant by Mr. Colton acceded to the terms of the plaintiffs that satisfactory guaranty be furnished. We have quoted the correspondence at length, because counsel for defendant earnestly contends that the contract was not closed with Mr. Colton, but with Mr. Hirsch, on August 11th, and in support of his position he relies on a letter from his client to the plaintiffs, dated August 7th, as showing that the matter was still open. That letter contains this sentence which is relied upon:

"As he [Mr. Hirsch] stated to you we intend to purchase the pipe and if sufficient cash discount is allowed pay for same in this manner; i. e., after pipe has been received and quantity checked."

We do not construe this letter in accord with counsel's views; it seems to have been written by Mr. Colton to reassure plaintiffs that the pipe would be taken—a reassurance which might have been considered opportune on account of the failure of Mr. Hirsch to furnish the promised guaranty—and to advise plaintiffs that their suggestion of cash payment was under consideration.

Was Mr. Colton authorized to make this purchase and to arrange terms of payment or guarantee? Did defendant clothe him with such apparent authority that it must be held bound by his acts?

[2] We have no doubt that Mr. Colton had such authority. He had been elected "general manager" of the defendant corporation. The by-laws of the defendant empower the directors—

"from time to time to provide for the management of the affairs of the company at home or abroad in such measure as they see fit, and in particular from time to time to delegate any of the powers of the board in the course of the current business of the company to any standing or special committee, or any officer or agent, and to appoint any person to be the agent of the company, with such powers (including the power to subdelegate) and upon such terms as may be thought fit, so far as it may legally do so."

Mr. Colton was not only appointed by the board of directors "general manager of the company," but, so far as appears, was the only executive officer of the company in the state. Of the five directors of the company, four resided in New York, and one in Waterville, but the latter does not appear to have exercised any active duties in the management of the corporate affairs. Mr. Colton himself says:

"My duties as general manager, as I understand them, are to conduct the local affairs of the company, and to buy materials and pay for materials as necessary in the operation of the plant."

While his duties and authority do not appear to have been defined by express vote of the directors, when Mr. Colton was elected general manager, under the authority of the by-laws quoted, the company must be held to have clothed him with all the authority which the term implies, and which is ordinarily incident to that position.

A general manager of a business corporation, such as this defendant corporation is, has general charge of those business matters for the carrying on of which the company was incorporated. These might include the buying of material, the employment of laborers, the supervision of their labor, the manufacture of gas, its distribution, and the general ways and means of accomplishing the object of the corporation. Washington Gas-light Co. v. Lansdell, 172 U. S. 534, 19 Sup. Ct. 296, 43 L. Ed. 543.

[3] The term "general manager" of a corporation, according to the ordinary meaning of the term, indicates one who has the general direction and control of the affairs of the corporation, as contradistinguished from one who may have the management of some particular branch of the business. Railway Co. v. McVay, 98 Ind. 391, 49 Am. Rep. 770.

We think that the defendant must be held to be bound by the action of Mr. Colton in purchasing the pipe and arranging for shipment thereof, as he did. It must be conceded that the material was suitable and of a kind required for the company's business, and that the amount was not unreasonably large. We must hold that a general manager of a company of this kind has authority to buy and arrange to pay for such material. The authorities in this state as to powers of general agents are in harmony with this conclusion. Trundy v. Farrar, 82 Me. 227; Heath v. Stoddard, 91 Me. 499, 40 Atl. 547.

But the defendant contends that the agreement for the purchase of the goods and shipment was made August 11th with one Patrick Hirsch, who was not connected with the defendant corporation.

[4, 5] We think that the evidence does not sustain this position. It is true that no arrangements had been closed about shipping the pipe until the interview between Mr. Sheldon and Mr. Hirsch on August 11th; but, as we have seen, Mr. Colton had closed the trade for the pipe on July 30th. He had arranged the required guaranty with Mr. Hirsch; later, on August 7th, he notified plaintiffs that defendant would pay cash if sufficient discount was allowed. It is very clear that Mr. Colton made the arrangements through Mr. Hirsch for the shipment of the pipe, with sight draft, bill of lading attached. It is a reasonable inference from his testimony and from his letter to plaintiffs of August 16th acknowledging advice that the pipe was being so shipped that he knew that Mr. Hirsch, through whom he was making his financial arrangements, had made the arrangements on which the pipe was shipped, and that those arrangements were satisfactory to him, and were in accordance with his understanding of the terms of the sale. A general manager may have authority to ratify a contract which is within the scope of his authority to make, when such contract is made by an unauthorized person. Railway Co. v. McVay, supra. Mr. Colton, as general manager of the company, and not Mr. Hirsch, was the active representative of the defendant corporation. Under the broad powers of a general manager appointed under the authority of the by-laws quoted Mr. Colton had authority to arrange through Mr. Hirsch for the shipment. Indeed, it is difficult to understand the object of Mr. Hirsch's call at the office of plaintiffs on August 11th, except to learn from Mr. Sheldon's lips the terms which had already been stated in correspondence and to assure Mr. Sheldon that the funds would be in Waterville to meet the drafts.

The suggestion now made by Mr. Colton that he should have had an opportunity to check up the pipe impresses us as an afterthought. The pipe was in Waterville several weeks, and no request was made, so far as appears, for opportunity to inspect it. Mr. Colton permitted the drafts to be returned twice without any such suggestion.

A careful study of the evidence makes clear that the failure of defendant to accept and pay for the pipe was not on account of want of authority in the person contracting for same, nor for lack of opportunity to inspect the shipment.

Judgment for plaintiffs for $1,048.80, with interest from date of writ.

(117 Me. 269)

STATE v. DODGE

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. June 17, 1918.)

1. COMMERCE — 63 — OCCUPATIONS—FISHERIES.

The imposition by Rev. St. c. 45, § 30, of a reasonable license fee for smacks or vessels engaged in the lobster fisheries on waters within the jurisdiction of the state, and moving in interstate commerce, is not a burden on interstate commerce.

2. EVIDENCE — 20(1) — JUDICIAL NOTICE—GEOGRAPHICAL FACTS — INDUSTRIES—POLICY.

The court takes judicial notice that the lobster fisheries is one of the great industries of the state of Maine which it is the established policy of the state to protect.

3. COMMERCE — 10 — INTERSTATE COMMERCE — NONEXERCISE OF POWER BY CONGRESS.

The state has the right to legislate as in Rev. St. c. 45, § 30, providing for licensing of smacks and vessels, except common carriers engaged in interstate shipments of lobsters, until Congress exercises its authority over the subject.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — 208(6) — VALIDITY OF STATUTE RELATING TO CLASSES — LOBSTER FISHERIES.

Rev. St. c. 45, § 30, requiring a license for transportation of lobsters to another state, but excepting common carriers, deals with a class, and does not discriminate against individuals of that class, but affects all alike, and is valid.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — 236 — EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS.

Rev. St. c. 45, § 30, requiring a license and bond for transportation of lobsters to another state, excepting common carriers, is not in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, § 1, prohibiting denial of equal protection of the laws.

6. FISH — 10(1) — OCCUPATIONS—LOBSTER FISHERIES—STATUTE—REASONABLENESS.

The regulations of Rev. St. c. 45, § 30, providing that persons, except common carriers, transporting lobsters beyond the limits of the state, must secure a license and provide a bond to be forfeited upon violation of the lobster fisheries laws, held reasonable, fair, and uniform.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — 48 — STATUTES — WHO MAY ASSAIL VALIDITY—DISCRIMINATION.

The party assailing the constitutionality of a state police statute must clearly show that it offends constitutional guaranties in order to justify the court in declaring it void.

Appeal from Supreme Judicial Court, Hancock County, at Law.

Charles P. Dodge was convicted of transporting lobsters out of the state in a manner contrary to law, and he appeals. Judgment for the State.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, and PHILBROOK, JJ.

W. R. Pattangall and H. E. Locke, both of Augusta, for appellant. Fred L. Mason, of Ellsworth, for the State.

HANSON, J. This case is reported to the law court upon the following agreed statement of facts:

"This is a criminal prosecution for breach of section 30 of chapter 45 of the Revised Statutes, for the failure of the respondent, Charles P. Dodge, to file bond and receive a license from the department of sea and shore fisheries to transport lobsters for commercial purposes beyond the limits of the state of Maine in the smack Grace M. Cribbey, said respondent being in control of said smack, and said smack not being a common carrier within the meaning of said statute.

"The respondent, Charles P. Dodge, who is a resident of the state of Maine, on the 20th day of June, A. D. 1917, filed with the commissioner of sea and shore fisheries at Augusta, an application for a license to transport lobsters in said smack Grace M. Cribbey beyond the limits of the state, together with fee of $5 for same, but refused and neglected to file a bond as required by said statute, although requested so to do by said Commission in his letter of June 20, A. D. 1917.

"On June 26, A. D. 1917, the commissioner of sea and shore fisheries received from said respondent an application for a license to transport lobsters within the boundaries of said state of Maine in said smack Grace M. Cribbey, as provided in section 18 of said chapter 45 of the Revised Statutes, stating that there had been a change in his plans, and asking that the fee of $1 for same be taken out of the $5 still held by said commissioner, and the balance returned to him, which was done.

"The respondent thereafter, on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1917, and on other days between said date and August 11, A. D. 1917, purchased lobsters of legal length and legally caught in Maine, and, not having obtained a license or filed a bond in compliance with said section 30, chapter 45, of the Revised Statutes, transported them in said smack Grace M. Cribbey, from Stonington in the county of Hancock beyond the limits of the state of Maine, for which offense he was arraigned before the Western Hancock municipal court on a warrant properly drawn and properly charging the offense of transporting lobsters beyond the limits of the state without a license, whereupon he entered a plea of not guilty, was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of $250 and costs, $7.87, from which sentence he appealed to the Supreme Judicial Court for Hancock county.

The sole question raised by the respondent is as to whether or not the provisions of section 30, chapter 45, of the Revised Statutes, under which the offense of which he is accused of committing is charged, namely, the provisions relating to the procurement of a license to transport lobsters beyond the limits of the state, and requiring the applicant to file a bond as set forth therein as a condition of procuring said license, are valid and in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the state of Maine, and the Constitution of the United States.

If, on these facts, judgment is for the state, judgment and sentence of the lower court shall be affirmed; otherwise respondent shall be discharged."

Section 30 of chapter 45, R. S., reads as follows:

"Sec. 30. No lobsters shall be transported beyond the limits of this state, whether of legal length or otherwise, except by common carriers as provided in section seventeen, unless by persons licensed to transport lobsters outside the limits of the state under the following conditions; the commissioner of sea and shore fisheries shall issue a license, which shall not be transferable, to the owner or party in control of any smack, vessel, or other means of transportation, either foreign or domestic, authorizing him to purchase and to transport lobsters within or beyond the limits of the state upon the following conditions: The license in each instance shall state the name of the smack, vessel or other conveyance to be used in so purchasing or transporting lobsters, and will give no authority to purchase or transport in any other smack, vessel or other conveyance except that named in the license. The name of the smack, vessel or other conveyance may, however, be changed by the licensee upon application to said commissioner, within the license period, without further charge. The fee for issuing said license shall be five dollars, and a record shall be kept of the same, similar to that provided for other licenses in section eighteen. Besides the name of the conveyance, the license shall bear the date of taking effect and the termination thereof, which last-named date shall be the last day of November next after it becomes effective, and shall state that such license, together with the bond hereinafter provided for, shall be forfeited upon the violation of any law of this state relating to lobsters; and it shall further provide that such smack, vessel or other conveyance shall, at all times, be subject to inspection and search by the commissioner of sea and shore fisheries, or his wardens or deputy wardens, with warrant or without, in which inspection and search they shall in no way be obstructed. Before said license is issued, the applicant shall file with the said commissioner a bond in the penal sum of five hundred dollars, conditioned that the same shall be forfeited to the state upon conviction of the licensee of any breach of any laws of this state pertaining to lobsters. All licensees under this section shall be required to load all smacks, vessels or other contrivances within the waters over which this state has jurisdiction, and any licensee loading outside the jurisdictional waters of this state, or who refuses to come within the jurisdictional waters of this state when ordered so to do by the commissioner, or any of his wardens or deputy wardens, shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section, and his bond shall be forfeited. Any license issued under this section shall become void on conviction for the breach of any law of this state pertaining to lobsters. No new license shall be issued for a period of one year to any party whose license has been revoked because of such conviction. Any license issued contrary to the provisions of this section is void and of no effect."

Counsel for the respondent in argument says that "various constitutional objections to the admissibility of the statute suggest themselves," and considers them in argument in the following order:

1. Is the commerce clause of the United States Constitution violated?
2. Is the license fee illegally discriminatory?
3. Is the penal liability illegally discriminatory?
4. Is the penalty excessive and unreasonable?

[1] The imposition of a license fee for smacks or vessels engaged in the lobster fisheries on waters within the jurisdiction of the state, and moving in interstate commerce, if reasonable, is not a burden on interstate commerce. License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. Ed. 256. The general power of police is in the states. Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835.

And neither the power itself, nor the discretion to exercise it as need may require, can be bargained away by the state. Cooley, Const. Limitations (7th Ed.) 831. All that the federal authority can do is to see that the states do not, under cover of this power, invade the sphere of national sovereignty, obstruct or impede the exercise of any authority which the Constitution has confided to the nation, or deprive any citizen of rights guaranteed by the federal Constitution. Id. 832. The same authority states the guiding rule upon questions of conflict between federal and state authority thus: If the power extends only to a just regulation of rights, with a view to the due protection and enjoyment of all, and does not deprive any one of that which is justly and properly his own, it is obvious that its possession by the state, and its exercise for the regulation of the property and actions of its citizens, cannot well constitute an invasion of national jurisdiction, or afford a basis for an appeal to the protection of the national authorities. Page 833 and note (a). The right to license is not questioned; and it is not claimed that the license fee is intended for revenue or a tax. License laws are of two kinds; those which require the payment of a license fee by way of raising a revenue, and are therefore the exercise of the power of taxation, and those which are mere police regulations, and require the payment only of such license fee as will cover the expense of the license and of enforcing regulation.

[2, 3] This court takes judicial notice that the lobster fisheries is one of the great industries of the state of Maine. It is a part of the sea and shore interests of the state that has been the subject of constant investigation by the lawmaking power for nearly a century, and year by year as the Legislature has convened the attention of the representatives has been enlisted in the direction of the best means of fostering the industry and protecting the state against means and methods calculated to impair it. Legislation to this end has been enacted from time to time until it is believed that the regulations now in force are sufficient to meet all reasonable requirements, and fully preserve the interests of all concerned. And this is the stated and accepted policy of the state, founded upon experience and conscientious investigation. Has the state the right to so legislate? The state has the right to legislate in this instance, even if interstate commerce is indirectly involved, until Congress exercises its authority over the subject. Sligh v. Kirkwood, 237 U. S. 58, 35 Sup. Ct. 501, 59 L. Ed. 835. See Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18. If the Legislature has the right to legislate for the protection of the fishing industry, it follows that it has the power to prescribe rules and regulations, for the proper execution of the laws deemed necessary. Cooley, Const. Lim. 98.

[4, 5] Are the established rules and regulations illegally discriminatory and the penalty excessive? It needs no citation to support the statement that every person and all property in the state are subject to some restraints and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the state. From the beginning, our shore fisheries have been important, and have received from the executive and legislative departments the attention their importance demanded. There have been many branches of the industry, and necessarily as many classes, of those engaged in the various branches. The laws and rules intended to control and regulate the fishing business have been passed for the benefit and regulation of the classes in the conduct of the business of each class. No other method is practicable. It is, then, with a class we are dealing—a class engaged in the lobster fisheries, and so long as the regulation is intended to operate upon the class and does not in its operation discriminate against an individual of that class, but affects all alike, it is lawful. It is clear that the asserted discriminations are within the power of classification which the state has made.

The agreed facts show a deliberate intention to evade or violate the statute, the setting up of the individual will against the clearly expressed judgment of the Legislature. The respondent did not file a bond, nor did he pay the $5 required for the license to do an interstate business. He paid the minimum license and attempted to do the maximum business provided by the regulations, without paying the license or filing the required bond. In other words, the respondent desired to carry on the lobster business at the least expense to himself, and that meant practically to disregard the law altogether. The position he takes is against the best interest of the people of the state, while the whole course of legislation has been directed to preventing so far as possible the exercise of such individual practice. That a state may so legislate in the exercise of its highest functions is well settled. "A state may direct its law against what it deems the evil as it actually exists without covering the whole field of possible abuses, and it may do so none the less that the forbidden act does not differ in kind from those that are allowed. * * * If a class is deemed to present a conspicuous example of what the Legislature seeks to prevent, the Fourteenth Amendment allows it to be dealt with, although otherwise and merely logically not distinguishable from others not embraced in the law." Hall v. Gelger-Jones Co., 242 U. S. 539, 37 Sup. Ct. 217, 61 L. Ed. 480, L. R. A. 1917F, 514, Ann. Cas.

1917C, 648. The same principle is stated in another leading case, as follows:

"The Fourteenth Amendment does not prohibit legislation special in character. * * * It does not prohibit a state from carrying out a policy that cannot be pronounced purely arbitrary, by taxation or penal laws. * * * If a class is deemed to present a conspicuous example of what the Legislature seeks to prevent, the Fourteenth Amendment allows it to be dealt with although otherwise and merely logically not distinguishable from others not embraced in the law." Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, 226 U. S. 157, 33 Sup. Ct. 66, 57 L. Ed. 164. "A state which, at its own expense, furnishes special facilities for the use of those engaged in interstate and intrastate commerce may exact compensation therefor; and if the charges are reasonable and uniform they constitute no burden on interstate commerce. The action of the state in such respect must be treated as correct, unless the contrary is made to appear. * * *

In view of the many decisions of this court, there can be no serious doubt that where a state at its own expense furnishes special facilities for the use of those engaged in commerce, interstate as well as domestic, it may exact compensation therefor. The amount of the charges and the method of collection are primarily for determination by the state itself; and, so long as they are reasonable and are fixed according to some uniform, fair, and practical standard, they constitute no burden on interstate commerce." Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 611, 35 Sup. Ct. 140, 59 L. Ed. 385, and cases cited; Cooley, Const. Lim. 857.

[6, 7] It is clear that the regulations complained of are reasonable, fair, and uniform, and reflect the judgment of those best qualified to settle questions of public policy and police regulations, and it is equally clear that the respondent has failed to bring himself within the rule that the party assailing the constitutionality of a state police statute must clearly show that it offends constitutional guaranties in order to justify the court in declaring it invalid. Eubank v. City of Richmond, 226 U. S. 137, 33 Sup. Ct. 76, 57 L. Ed. 156, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 192; Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 611, 35 Sup. Ct. 140, 59 L. Ed. 385.

The entry will be:

Judgment for the state.

(117 Me. 321)

BRIGGS HARDWARE CO. v. AROOSTOOK VALLEY R. CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 17, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS — 177(3) — NEGLIGENCE OF TERMINAL CARRIER — LIABILITY OF INITIAL CARRIER.

Under Act Cong. Feb. 4, 1887, § 1, as amended by Act Cong. June 29, 1906, § 1 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 8563), defining transportation and section 20, as amended by section 7, par. 11 (section 8604a), initial carrier liable for damages accruing on connecting lines where terminal carrier notified party of arrival of shipment, and shipment was not removed within 48 hours, held initial carrier's liability thereafter, for acts of terminal carrier, was that of warehouseman, in view of bill of lading.

2. WAREHOUSEMEN — 24(1) — DEGREE OF CARE.

A warehouseman must use ordinary care, and is liable only for negligence.

3. STIPULATIONS — 14(10) — SHIPMENT OF GOODS — NEGLIGENCE.

In action for damages against initial carrier for carload of potatoes destroyed by fire after reaching destination, stipulation that contents of car "were damaged by fire originating, either from heating apparatus, or from a stove placed in the car, without the knowledge of the terminal carrier," without evidence as to cause and circumstances of fire, would not authorize judgment for plaintiff; causes stipulated being disjunctive, excluding operation of both.

Agreed Case from Supreme Judicial Court, Aroostook County at Law.

Action by the Briggs Hardware Company against the Aroostook Valley Railroad Company. Case submitted upon agreed statement of facts. Judgment for defendant.

Argued before SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Cyrus F. Small, of Caribou, for plaintiff. Powers & Guild, of Ft. Fairfield, for defendant.

BIRD, J. This case is before us upon the following agreed statement of facts:

"On January 24, 1916, the plaintiff delivered to the defendant, which is a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, a carload of potatoes loaded in an Eastman heater car, upon receipt of which the defendant issued a bill of lading, a copy of which is hereto annexed.

"The car was transported to its destination by the defendant and connecting carriers, arriving at Atlantic Terminal, Brooklyn, February 2, 1916.

"The terminal carrier gave notice of the arrival of the car to E. Waterman & Co., the notify party named in the bill of lading, on February 4, 1916, and the car was placed for delivery on February 5, 1916. The car remained on the track of the terminal carrier until the night of February 14th, when its contents were damaged by fire, originating either from defective heating apparatus or from a stove placed in the car without the knowledge of the terminal carrier. The contents of the car were damaged to the amount of $487.81.

"It is agreed that a reasonable time for unloading the car had elapsed after notice of arrival was given and before the occurrence of the fire.

"It is agreed that the plaintiff made claim against the defendant for its loss within the four-month period provided for in the bill of lading.

"Immediately upon receipt of the bill of lading, the plaintiff drew a draft upon the notify party for the purchase price of the car of potatoes, attached the bill of lading, properly indorsed, thereto, and forwarded the draft through its bank for collection. At the time of the fire the draft and bill of lading were in the possession of the collecting bank of New York City and had not been surrendered to the carrier.

"The parties agree that if the defendant is liable upon the above facts, judgment is to be rendered for the plaintiff for the amount of damages specified, with interest from the date of the writ. If the defendant is not liable upon these facts, judgment is to be rendered for the defendant."

The bill of lading referred to is of the standard form approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Section 5 thereof is as follows:

"Property not removed by the party entitled to receive it within forty-eight hours (exclusive of legal holidays) after notice of its arrival has been duly sent or given may be kept in car, depot, or place of delivery of the carrier, or warehouse, subject to a reasonable charge for storage and to carrier's responsibility as warehouseman only, or may be, at the option of the carrier, removed to and stored in a public or licensed warehouse at the cost of the owner and there held at the owner's risk and without liability on the part of the carrier, and subject to a lien for all freight and other lawful charges, including a reasonable charge for storage."

The action is an action on the case for negligence whereby the car "containing said potatoes * * * caught fire and completely destroyed said potatoes. * * *"

By the act (1906) to amend the act to regulate commerce, transportation is defined as including, among other things, "all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported." Act Cong. Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 1, 24 Stat. 379, as amended by Act Cong. June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 8563). By a later section of the amendatory act (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 8604a), it is provided:

"That any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company so receiving property for transportation from a point in one state * * * to a point in another state * * * shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass, * * * and no contract, receipt, rule, regulation * * * shall exempt such common carrier, railroad or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed. * * *"

[1] We think, in view of section 5 of the conditions of the bill of lading, there can be no question upon the facts of this case; that defendant is liable to plaintiff for all damages claimed to be caused by the terminal carrier in the "transportation" of the potatoes, if any, and that the liability, if any, from the acts done by the latter must arise from his acts as warehouseman and not as carrier. Discussion is unnecessary, however, as we regard Southern Railway v. Prescott, 240 U. S. 632, 637, 640, 36 Sup. Ct. 469, 60 L. Ed. 836, as decisive of the question.

[2] The care required of a warehouseman over the property in his charge is ordinary care. He is liable only for negligence. In Southern Railway Co., supra, it is said:

"The plaintiff, asserting neglect, had the burden of establishing it. This burden did not shift. As it is the duty of the warehouseman to deliver upon proper demand, his failure to do so, without excuse, has been regarded as making a prima facie case of negligence. If, however, it appears that the loss is due to fire, that fact in itself, in the absence of circumstances permitting the inference of lack of reasonable precautions, does not suffice to show neglect, and the plaintiff, having the affirmative of the issue, must go forward with the evidence."

[3] This case presents no evidence as to the cause and circumstances of the fire or the precautions taken by the terminal carrier as warehouseman, except the statement agreed upon by the parties to the effect that the contents of the car "were damaged by fire originating either from defective heating apparatus or from a stove placed in the car without the knowledge of the terminal carrier." The cause is thus stated disjunctively, or in the alternative, and such statement excludes the operation of both as the cause. Austin v. Oakes, 48 Hun, 492, 498, 1 N. Y. Supp. 307.

The court has, in the absence of other evidence or other statement, no means of determining whether the defective heater or the stove was the cause of the fire, and, as that which would constitute lack of ordinary care in the one case would not necessarily be lack of ordinary care in the other, it is difficult to see how the court can find negligence or lack of ordinary care on the part of the terminal carrier as warehouseman. In regard to the alleged defective heater, there is no evidence as to the nature of the defect, the period of its existence, the care actually exercised by defendant, or the time when the fire developed after the last visit of defendant's employes to the car. Nor does the agreed statement show when the stove was placed in the car "without the knowledge of the terminal carrier," nor whether or not the circumstances were such as to warrant the inference that the warehouseman did not exercise ordinary care in preventing its introduction into the car or in ascertaining its presence there. We conclude that neither the statements agreed upon nor the inferences to be drawn therefrom are sufficient to justify the conclusion that plaintiff has sustained the burden of proof imposed upon him. De Grau v. Wilson (D. C.) 17 Fed. 608, 701; Southern Railway Co. v. Prescott, 240 U. S. 632, 641, 36 Sup. Ct. 469, 60 L. Ed. 836.

Judgment must be entered for defendant.
So ordered.

(32 Vt. 388)

WHITE v. THORP et al.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Chittenden. May 29, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR — §2(5) — MATTERS APPEALABLE — ORDERS GRANTING EXECUTION — "DECREE."

An appeal does not lie from an order that execution issue in a chancery case, such order not being a "decree," but entered under P. S. 1302, to enforce a decree previously rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Decree.]

Suit by Wesley G. White against Ira G. Thorp, trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of W. L. White, and W. L. White. From an order granting an execution against defendant Thorp, he appeals. On motion to dismiss. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HAS-
ELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

E. C. Mower and C. H. Darling, both of Burlington, for plaintiff. Sherman R. Moulton, of Burlington, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. The motion heard is to dismiss an appeal in chancery. The decree was rendered on May 22, 1917, and filed two days later. Thereby a certain sum of money was ordered, adjudged, and decreed to be paid by defendant Thorp to the plaintiff.
No appeal was taken therefrom. On July 30, 1917, the chancellor, on petition of the plaintiff, ordered that execution issue against the chattels and lands of defendant Thorp, and for want thereof against his body, for the amount due the plaintiff under the decree, according to the prayer of said petition. The order was filed August 6, 1917, and on the same day a motion was filed by Thorp, praying "for an appeal from the order and decree * * * granting an execution against him in said cause."

The plaintiff moves that the appeal be dismissed, for that the order from which it was taken is not a final decree. The motion must be sustained. The order that execution issue was not a decree. It was made under the statute as a method of enforcing the performance of the decree previously rendered.
P. S. 1302. See Kopper v. Dyer, 59 Vt. 477, 9
Atl. 4, 59 Am. Rep. 742; Vilas v. Burton,
27 Vt. 56.

Appeal dismissed.

(92 Vt. 390)

GILBO & SWARTZ v. MERRILL'S ESTATE et al.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Chittenden. May 17, 1918.)

SALES \Leftrightarrow 273(5)—GUARANTY—BREACH.

Where contract for windmill water supply system specified sizes of the pipes and further guaranteed efficiency and operation of the plant, the guaranty was no more than a guaranty of such efficiency as the work properly carried out according to specifications would afford, and contractor was not responsible for inefficiency resulting because pipes specified were too small.

Exceptions from Chittenden County Court;
W. W. Miles, Judge.

Proceedings in the matter of the estate of Anna S. Merrill, wherein Gilbo & Swartz filed a claim which was opposed by James A.
Merrill, as administrator. On plaintiff's exceptions to judgment for defendant. Reversed and remanded.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HAS-
ELTON, POWERS, and TAYLOR, JJ.

Powell & Powell, of Burlington, for plaintiff. V. A. Bullard and Sherman R. Moulton, both of Burlington, for defendant.

HASELTON, J. This is an appeal to the county court from the disallowance by the commissioners on the estate of Anna S. Merrill of the plaintiffs' claim. In county court the case was tried on a declaration in assumpsit in the common counts. The plea was the general issue. The trial was by the court, and on findings made judgment was rendered for the defendant. The plaintiff brings a bill of exceptions.

The plaintiffs are successors to Gilbo & Tobin, who contracted with Anna S. Merrill and her husband, James A. Merrill, to install on the Merrill farm in Addison, on the shore of Lake Champlain, a water system comprising a windmill, a tank and tankhouse, a pipe leading from the lake to the windmill, a pipe leading from the windmill to the tank, and other pipes. Gilbo & Tobin and Gilbo & Swartz, who have been treated throughout as standing in the shoes of Gilbo & Tobin, will herein be spoken of indifferently as the plaintiffs. Following the language of the bill of exceptions the word "defendant" is herein used to designate the intestate, her husband, a party to the contract, her estate, or her administrator as the sense may require. No confusion can result. The defense on trial was by way of recoupment and the claim of nonacceptance. The contract was not fully performed by the plaintiffs within the time specified in the contract in certain respects as found and designated by the court. Some time after the expiration of the period fixed for the completion of the contract the defendant caused a letter to be written to the plaintiffs pointing out certain failures to perform, and stating that the things left undone must be done by a day named or the defendant would proceed to do them and charge the plaintiffs therefor. No one appearing in answer to the letter, the defendant undertook the completion of the work, and in doing so paid out various sums. Thereafter the defendant commenced to operate the plant, and because of inefficient or improper construction the windmill fell and the defendant was obliged to expend a sum named to repair it.
The court finds that the plant, from the commencement of its use until the defendant sold the premises on which it stood, never operated in a satisfactory and efficient manner; that it was at no time an efficient working windmill water plant; and that the main trouble with it lay in the size of the pipe from the windmill to the tank or in the intake pipe.
The court finds that the pipe from the windmill to the tank was too small for the intake pipe. There is expressed an inability to find how much it would have cost to correct this defect, which is treated as chargeable to the plaintiffs, but there is a finding that in addition to making the repairs referred to the defendant was obliged to purchase a gasoline engine costing $51 in order to make this windmill plant constantly available. The contract price for the plant agreed upon was something over $800. The defendant had paid the plaintiffs $400 on account, and claimed to have been damaged through the default of the plaintiffs under the contract to an amount more than the balance unpaid under the terms of the contract. On its findings and failures to find the court rendered judgment for the defendant as stated at the outset.

The finding which the court makes the main cause of damages to the defendant is, as already appears, the finding as to the size of the pipes. The pipes were, however, of the precise size fixed by the contract, and the plaintiffs took an exception on this ground. The force of the claim under this exception the defendant attempts to meet by pointing out, what is true, that the contract contained this clause, "The efficiency and the operation of the plant is guaranteed," and by calling attention to the finding that the plant was not efficient. But the contractors were nevertheless bound to follow the specifications, and the guaranty of efficiency was no more than a guaranty of such efficiency as the work properly carried out in accordance with the specifications would afford. Bush v. Jones, 144 Fed. 942, 75 O. C. A. 582, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 774; MacKnight Co. v. Mayor & Co., 160 N. Y. 72, 54 N. E. 661; 6 R. O. L. 866. There are in the case no findings that reach back of the contract and make the plaintiffs responsible to the defendant on account of its terms and specifications. So in regard to this fundamental basis of the judgment very substantial error intervened.

The court found that the contract was not complied with because the floor of the tank-house within its walls, the floor upon which the tank rested, was of an unstable character. The plaintiff excepted to this finding and also to the finding already mentioned that the windmill accident was due to improper construction. These two exceptions the plaintiff briefs. But there was some evidence to support each finding, and as to the tank floor, windmill, and some other matters there were no specifications which prevented the full operation of the undertaking for the construction of an efficient plant.

Some exceptions to the exclusion of evidence were taken, but the evidence shut out against exception was properly excluded, either because of remoteness or because its admissibility under the plaintiffs' specification was not made to appear. Some questions that might naturally have arisen in the trial of the case are not presented by the bill of exceptions.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

MILES, J., did not sit.

(92 Vt. 313)

BRADLEY v. BLANDIN et al.

(Supreme Court of Vermont, Brattleboro. May 8, 1918.)

1. PLEADING §77—PRACTICE ACT.

Practice Act (Laws 1915, No. 90) § 18, applies to an action pending at the time of its passage.

2. PLEADING §78—ANSWER—DEFENSES.

Under Practice Act (Laws 1915, No. 90) § 2, all the defenses relied upon must be stated in the answer.

3. PLEADING §93(1)—ANSWER—INCONSISTENT DEFENSES.

Under Laws 1915, No. 90, § 2, the answer cannot contain inconsistent defenses, which cannot both be true.

4. PLEADING §94—SEPARATE PARAGRAPHS.

Under Laws 1915, No. 90, § 2, the answer may be divided into separate paragraphs, although this is not essential.

5. PLEADING §362(4)—DEFENSE IN ANSWER—REMEDIES.

If the answer sets forth inconsistent defenses, advantage thereof should preferably be taken by motion to strike out.

6. PLEADING §369(4)—INCONSISTENT DEFENSES—ELECTION.

If the answer sets forth inconsistent defenses, advantage thereof may be taken by moving for election, although motion to strike out is preferable.

7. BROKERS §82(2)—ACTIONS—ANSWER—SUFFICIENCY.

In broker's action for commission, answer setting forth the contract alleging that there was no other contract, and that the sale was not made, was proper, being in effect the general issue.

8. PLEADING §204(7)—DEMURRER TO PART OF ANSWER—EFFECT.

A demurrer to part of the answer cannot be sustained, unless the part demurred to as a whole shows no defense.

Exceptions from Bennington County Court; E. L. Waterman, Judge.

Action by Gilbert W. Bradley against Amos N. Blandin and the Somerset Land Company. On plaintiff's exceptions to order overruling demurrer to the answers. Affirmed and remanded.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HAS-ELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Batchelder & Bates, of Bennington, and F. O. Archibald, of Manchester Center, for plaintiff. Harvey & Whitney, of Brattleboro, Robert E. Healy, of Bennington, and Hale K. Darling, of Chelsea, for defendants.

WATSON, C. J. This is an action of assumpsit on contract. The case (which has been here twice before, and is reported in 89 Vt. 542, 95 Atl. 894, and in 91 Vt. 472, 100 Atl. 920), is here on plaintiff's demurrer to the so-called "second plea" of defendants' answer; more properly speaking, it is the second paragraph of the answer.

[1] Though the action was pending at the time of the passage of the Practice Act, the law of that act applies. Laws of 1915, No. 90, § 18.

[2] By section 2, pleadings in defense shall consist of: "(b) An answer, which shall contain either a denial of the allegations of the complaint or some of them; or a brief and simple statement of the facts relied upon in defense." By subdivision (c), a demurrer may be filed, which shall distinctly specify the reason why the pleading demurred to is insufficient. By section 3, no pleading shall fail for want of form, but shall be amended in such respects at any stage of the proceeding, if the fault be pointed out, and the sufficiency of all pleadings in this respect shall be for the discretionary determination of the trial court. Subdivision (d) provides for such further pleadings as may be required, etc.; but this has reference to pleadings subsequent to the answer.

[3-6] It is very apparent that, in contemplation of the act, the answer shall, in the manner stated, contain all the defenses relied upon. This is in accordance with the general rule governing pleadings under reform procedure acts, where, as here, the primary object of the Practice Act is to simplify and improve practice and procedure in civil actions. The answer, as in equity pleadings, should be drawn in a way stating all grounds of defense upon which the defendant relies. In doing this the answer may properly be divided into separate paragraphs, thus distinguishing the different grounds; but this is not essential, for all may be stated in one paragraph. Greenthal v. Lincoln, 67 Conn. 372, 35 Atl. 266; Freeman's Appeal, 71 Conn. 708, 43 Atl. 185. A limitation of the rule is that the answer cannot contain inconsistent defenses. But defenses are inconsistent only when they cannot both be true, and the proof of one necessarily proves the falsity of the other. McKinstry v. Collins, 74 Vt. 147, 52 Atl. 438; Suznik v. Alger Logging Co., 76 Or. 189, 147 Pac. 922, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 700. If the answer sets forth inconsistent defenses, advantage thereof should be taken by motion to strike out, or perhaps by moving that the defendant be directed to elect upon which of the inconsistent defenses he will rely. Noonan v. Bradley, 9 Wall. 394, 19 L. Ed. 757; Strouse v. Leipf, 101 Ala. 433, 14 South. 667, 23 L. R. A. 622, 46 Am. St. Rep. 122; Hart-Parr Co. v. Keeth, 62 Wash. 464, 114 Pac. 169, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 243. The former should seem to be the better practice, since thereby the plaintiff may be informed of the particular grounds of defense in season to prepare his case for trial accordingly.

[7, 8] The paragraph of the answer demurred to sets forth, as one ground of defense, that on or about the day named the Somerset Land Company promised to pay the plaintiff a 2½ per cent. commission if certain lands were sold to Finch-Pruyn & Co., of Glen Falls, N. Y., for the sum of $1,000,000; that neither said lands, nor the timber growing thereon, nor any part thereof, was then or ever sold to said Finch-Pruyn & Co.; that no other or different contract existed between said plaintiff and said defendants, or either of them. It is said that this part of the answer amounts to the general issue. We think it does, because it is equivalent to a denial of the making of the contract alleged in the complaint, and in making such denial it was proper for the defendants to state the facts as explanatory of their denials, thus making the denial more fairly to meet the substance of the allegations denied. Thereby the plaintiff was more fully apprised of the real issue raised by the denial. The demurrer was properly overruled. Wilmot v. McPadden, 78 Conn. 276, 61 Atl. 1069; British American Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 77 Conn. 559, 60 Atl. 293. A demurrer to part of the answer (as in this case) cannot be sustained, unless the part demurred to, as a whole, shows no defense.

Whether by the revision of 1917, of the statutes, the Practice Act was materially altered in any of its provisions discussed above, is not considered.

Judgment affirmed, and cause remanded.

(41 R. I. 444)

DORRANCE et al. v. GREENE et al.
(No. 418.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. July 5, 1918.)

1. WILLS ¶524(2)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES CREATED—"HEIRS."

The word "heirs" refers to living persons holding such relation at time of testator's death, in the absence of an intention to the contrary clearly evidenced in the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Heirs.]

2. WILLS ¶524(6)—ESTATES CREATED—CONSTRUCTION—RESIDUARY LEGATEES.

Under will giving wife cash in lieu of dower or other interest, creating trust estate, to pay annuities for life of daughter, and if she died without children to pay a further annuity to the wife and to pay other bequests and to distribute the remainder to the heirs, the heirs at law, as ultimate distributees, were to be determined at the date of the daughter's death.

3. WILLS ¶634(8)—ESTATES CREATED—CONSTRUCTION—RESIDUARY LEGATEES.

Will giving wife cash in lieu of dower or other interest, creating trust estate, to pay annuities for life of daughter, and, if she died without children, to pay a further annuity to the wife and to pay pecuniary bequests, mostly of small amounts, and to distribute the remainder to the heirs, gave the pecuniary legatees only contingent and nontransmissible interests, which failed when they predeceased the daughter.

4. WILLS ¶858(1)—ESTATES CREATED—CONSTRUCTION—RESIDUARY BEQUESTS.

Under will giving wife cash in lieu of dower or other interest, creating trust estate, to pay annuities for life of daughter, and, if she died without children, to pay a further annuity to the wife and to pay other pecuniary bequests and to distribute the remainder to the heirs, when the pecuniary legatees died before the death of the daughter, their legacies did not fall into the residue, but devolved as intestate estate of the testator, passing to testator's next of kin at the date of his death.

5. TRUSTS ¶191(2)—POWERS—SELLING PROPERTY.

Where trustees under will were directed to distribute property to a number of persons, the power to sell enough of the property to equalize the division was implied if distribution could not otherwise be made.

Certified from Superior Court, Providence and Bristol Counties.

Suit by Charles T. Dorrance and others, as trustees pro tempore under the will of Samuel Larned, deceased, against W. Maxwell Greene, as administrator of Celia Larned Greene, deceased, and others. Case certified to the Supreme Court. Decree ordered submitted.

Elisha C. Mowry, of Providence, for complainants. Frank W. Hackett, of Washington, D. C., and Mendell W. Crane, of Providence, for Laura L. Sayles. Walter A. Edwards, Elliot G. Parkhurst, and Edwards & Angell, all of Providence, Richard W. Hale and George A. Moriarty, Jr., both of Boston, Mass., and Greenough, Easton & Cross and Frank T. Easton, all of Providence, for various respondents.

BAKER, J. This cause is a suit in equity, brought by the complainants in their capacity as trustees for the time being under the will of Samuel Larned, late of Providence, for instructions relating to the construction of said will. The complainants are also interested in the questions raised in their capacities as executors of the will of Katharine Celia (Larned) Greene, the testator's daughter, and as trustees under certain clauses of her will, and the complainant W. Maxwell Greene is also interested as administrator of the estate of Celia (Larned) Greene, the testator's widow, who remarried subsequent to his decease. Accordingly, in these capacities they have, with numerous other parties, been joined as defendants.

The case, being ready for hearing for final decree, has been certified to this court for final determination under General Laws 1909, c. 289, § 35, upon bill, answers and proof, the bill having been taken as confessed against such parties as failed to answer.

The important facts disclosed by the evidence may be thus summarized: Samuel Larned died in December, 1846, leaving him surviving his widow, Celia Greene Larned, and a daughter, Katharine Celia Larned. He was the son of William Larned, and had 16 (or perhaps 18) brothers and sisters, whose numerous descendants, so far as known, are among the parties respondent. His will, dated November 28, 1846, about a month before his death, was admitted to probate in the municipal court of the city of Providence on January 28, 1847. His first provision was for his wife, to whom he gave $12,000 outright "in lieu of her dower or other interest in my real or personal estate." He also gave her two gifts not of a pecuniary nature. He then disposed of his household furnishings, made numerous small pecuniary gifts to relatives, friends, and servants, provided for several small annuities for relatives, and appointed his wife guardian of his daughter. The rest and remainder of his estate, both real and personal, he directed to be sold, and the proceeds to be paid over to three trustees, to whom he gave and bequeathed said proceeds in trust. The trustees were given power to invest in Rhode Island real estate, real estate mortgages and bank stock, and to change investments from time to time in their discretion. They were directed to make payment from the trust funds (1) of the annuities thereinbefore bequeathed; (2) of various annual sums for the testator's daughter, Katharine Celia Larned, the amount thereof being gradually increased for a certain period until it reached a maximum of $1,200 each year, said amount until her marriage to be paid annually to her guardian during her minority and to her upon reaching her majority; (3) to the Bishop of the Diocese of Rhode Island, for religious purposes, all surplus income not required for the foregoing payments until an aggregate sum of $4,050 had been so paid; (4) thereafter to invest any surplus income for the purposes of the trust; and (5) to pay to the testator's said daughter from and after her marriage during her life the whole of the income of the trust fund remaining after the foregoing payments. Then appear the provisions of the will which have given rise to the questions now before the court, as follows:

"And from and after the decease of my said daughter should she leave a child or children, the said trustees shall appropriate so much of the income of the said trust funds as may be necessary for the support of such child or children until the youngest of them shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or otherwise become of age—at which time they shall terminate their said trust by conveying to the child or children of my said daughter their heirs and assigns in equal shares all the estate real and personal then holden by them in trust.

"But if my said daughter shall decease without leaving any child or children living at the time of her decease, I then direct that the said trustees shall thereafter pay to my wife for her own use, if she has remained unmarried the annual sum of five hundred dollars so long as she remains unmarried—And shall also immediately thereafter pay the following sums to the persons hereafter named that is to say:

"My mother Mrs. Sarah Larned two hundred dollars.

"My brother William G. Larned one hundred dollars.

"My brother George Larned one thousand dollars.

"My sister Sarah S. Larned two hundred dollars.

"My sisters Laura S. Hallett and Abby S. Brown two hundred dollars each.

"My nephew William Larned two hundred dollars.

"My nephew Russell M. Larned five hundred dollars.

"My nephew Edwin C. Larned one thousand dollars.

"My nephew Charles H. Larned or L'arnard fifty dollars.

"My nephew William Henry Larned five hundred dollars.

"My nieces Elizabeth H. Coburn and Sarah Osgood each fifty dollars.

"My nephew Henry L. Hallett two hundred dollars.

"My niece Jane H. Sayles fifty dollars.

"My brother-in-law Benjamin F. Hallett fifty dollars.

"My brother-in-law William Brown fifty dollars.

"They shall also pay to some suitable person the sum of two thousand dollars as trustee for the sole use and benefit of my sister Sophia L. Clifford so that she shall receive the income thereof during her life, and so much of the principal from time to time as may be necessary for her support, with the right of disposing of the principal or what may remain of it at her decease.

"They shall also pay to each of my nieces Lucinda M. Larned, Mary Letitia Larned, Ellen G. Larned and Anne M. Larned the annual sum of thirty dollars so long as they respectively remain unmarried—and also to my nephew Samuel Larned the annual sum of thirty dollars for the term of ten years.

"And all the rest and residue of the said trust funds, remaining after the payment of the said sums, and reserving a sufficiency for the payment of the annuities provided for in this my will, they shall distribute to and among my heirs at law, in the proportions in which they would severally be entitled under the statute for the distribution of intestate estates.

"And whenever the payment of the said annuities shall cease so much of my said estate, as may have been reserved for their payment shall be then distributed in like manner."

The testator was survived by his wife, Celia Greene Larned, and his only child, Katharine Celia Larned, no other person at the date of his decease holding the capacity of his heir at law or next of kin. The testator's widow subsequently married Richard W. Greene, who predeceased her, and she died intestate in 1887, leaving her daughter Katharine Celia as her sole heir at law and next of kin. Said Katharine Celia Larned married the defendant W. Maxwell Greene in 1872, and died June 29, 1917, testate and without ever having had any issue. In her will she directed that all property of hers derived from the testator be kept separate and disposed of it in part for the benefit of certain charities and in part for the benefit of various members of the Larned family, including many of the parties to this suit.

All of the persons, including the legatees of the said 17 pecuniary legacies and said Sophia L. Clifford, for whom special provision was made by the testator in case his daughter Katharine should decease without leaving living children, survived the testator, but predeceased said Katharine, Sophia L. Clifford dying intestate and without ever having attempted to exercise the power of disposing of the fund which would have been available for her were she now living.

The various gifts made by said will prior to the creation of the trusts were paid by the executors, the persons to whom were bequeathed annuities upon the death of the testator survived the testator and predeceased his daughter, and said annuities were paid in full. The payments required to be made by the trustees to the Bishop of the Diocese of Rhode Island were made, and the other provisions and directions of the will have been fully carried out, except those relating to the payments and distribution to be made after the decease of said Katharine Celia (Larned) Greene, leaving no living child or children. The trust estate, consisting principally of personal property, is now distributable.

The complainants seek instructions with respect to four questions as follows: (1) Whether or not the 17 pecuniary legacies bequeathed in and by said will in case the said Katharine Celia (Larned) Greene deceased without leaving any child or children living at the time of her decease have, by reason of the decease of the legatees during the lifetime of the said Katharine, lapsed; (2) whether the legacy in trust for the use and benefit of Sophia L. Clifford bequeathed in and by said will in case the said Katharine Celia (Larned) Greene deceased without leaving any child or children living at her decease and the said 17 pecuniary legacies, if they shall be deemed to have lapsed, have fallen into the residue of said trust estate; and, if they have not fallen into said residue, what disposition should be made of them; (3) whether the phrase "heirs at law" of said Samuel Larned in the provision in said will for the distribution of the trust estate in case the said Katharine Celia (Larned) Greene deceased without leaving any child or children living at the time of her decease has reference to the persons holding said capacity at the date of the death of the said Samuel Larned, or to the persons who would have held said capacity had the said Samuel Larned deceased immediately after the death of the said Katharine on the 29th day of June, 1917; and (4) whether or not, if the residue of said trust estate is distributable among two or more persons at the present time, the complainants, as such trustees, have for the purpose of making distribution of the same power to sell real estate not capable of being partitioned in kind, and power to sell such securities as remain after their holdings as such trustees in each security, so held by them, have, so far as possible, been distributed in kind in equal portions among the persons entitled to said residue.

[1] Question 3 is undoubtedly the most important one in the present case, and therefore it has been given the prominent position in the discussion by all of the parties in interest. The executors of the will of Katharine Celia Greene, the administrator of the estate of Celia (Larned) Greene, who is also one of said executors, and one other respondent claim that the words "heirs at law," as used in the will of Samuel Larned relative to the distribution of the rest and residue of his trust estate, refer to persons having that capacity at the date of his decease in 1846. All the other respondents, who have appeared by counsel, claim that the words refer to persons having that capacity at the date of his daughter's decease in 1917. Broadly speaking, the controversy is between the representatives of the deceased daughter of the testator and the descendants of the testator's brothers and sisters. Under the well-established rules of construction the word "heirs" is held to refer to the living person or persons holding that relation at the time of the testator's death, in the absence of an intention to the contrary clearly evidenced in the will itself. The question presented, therefore, is, Does the will itself clearly reveal such contrary intention? To satisfactorily answer this inquiry it is desirable to consider the situation and circumstances as they are disclosed to us, in which the testator executed his will within a month of his death. At that time his infant daughter was not quite a year old. In case she survived him, she would be his sole heir, speaking with technical strictness, while she and her mother would be the only persons, in the event of his decease intestate, entitled to share in his estate under the statute of distributions. We think it may be assumed that he knew this. His other family relatives then living were his mother, brothers and sisters, and nephews and nieces. There is nothing in the will or otherwise to suggest that he then expected to have other children. His wife was a young woman, at the time not much more than half his age, and the will itself contains evidence that he deemed her marrying again after his death as not an improbable event. It is reasonably clear that the early death of his daughter was in his mind as a possibility, if not as a probability, the evidence of which is the giving upon her decease a pecuniary legacy to his mother. The testator was 58 years of age when his will was executed. Exhibit B, Table of Descendants of William Larned. Table I, attached to the bill of complaint, shows that he was the third child born of his mother. It is reasonable to infer that when the will was made she was upwards of 80 years old, with of necessity an expectation of life of very few years. The amount of property disposed of by the will is not definitely shown, but it seems fairly apparent that it was not a very large estate even for that period. Katharine Celia (Larned) Greene in her will attempts to dispose of the trust fund as a fund separate and apart from her estate derived from other sources. She gives from it in the form of specific legacies in all $63,000, and in addition there is a residuary clause in favor of a person to whom she had given from this fund a pecuniary legacy as large as that given to any other person. This affords some indication of its present condition, and probably it is considerably larger now than originally, inasmuch as, apart from any possible increase by judicious management by the terms of the will the surplus income in excess of the provision for the support of his daughter before her marriage and the payment of a few small annuities, after the bequest to the Diocesan Convention was paid, was added to the principal until the daughter's marriage in 1872.

In these circumstances the testator made his will. He first gave to his wife $12,000 "in lieu of dower or other interest in my real or personal estate." Then he created a trust estate, and provided that part of the income thereof should be used for the benefit of his daughter, and all of it after marriage during her life, and, in the event that she leave children surviving her, provided for their support from the income until the youngest of them attained the age of 21 years, and then terminated the trust by giving the entire trust fund to such children. But if the daughter died without leaving any living child, which has happened, he provided for the payment annually to his wife of $500 "if she has remained unmarried," and "so long as she remains unmarried," provided also for the payment of 17 pecuniary legacies, amounting in all to $4,600, and for a few small annuities, and then directed that:

"All the rest and residue of the said trust funds, remaining after the payment of said sums, and reserving a sufficiency for the payment of the annuities provided for in this my will, they shall distribute to and among my heirs at law, in the proportions in which they would severally be entitled under the statutes for the distribution of intestate estates."

In view of these provisions, did the testator intend, in the event that his daughter should die childless, that his widow, if she survived her, whether she remained unmarried or not, should receive the entire residue of the trust estate, or do these provisions indicate a clear intent to the contrary? In Welch v. Howard, 227 Mass. 242, 116 N. E. 492, a testator gave all the rest and residue of his property and estate to trustees, with directions to dispose of the net income "so long as my said wife shall live and remain my widow, or either of my four children hereinafter named shall live, as follows," namely, after paying stated amounts annually to a brother and a nephew during their respective lives to divide "the residue of said net income" among his said wife and his four children, "so long as my said wife shall live and remain my widow and all my said children shall live, equally, share and share alike." There are further provisions: First, that when his wife shall die or be married, her share of said income is to be divided among his said children, or the survivors of them, letting in the issue of a deceased child by right of representation; and, second, that if a child die leaving no issue surviving, his share of the income is to be paid "to my said wife, if living and unmarried" and the survivors of said children and the issue of a deceased child by representation, and "upon the decease or marriage of my said wife and the decease of the last survivor of my said four children, my trustees shall divide and distribute all said trust property and estate among my heirs at law, according to the statutes which shall then be in force in said commonwealth, regulating the distribution of intestate estates," adding a clause saving the rights of said brother and nephew as annuitants. The court stated the question presented to be whether the heirs were to be taken as of the death of the testator in 1871, or as of the death of the survivor of the life tenants in 1916. A second question was in the event that heirs at the death of the testator were meant, whether they were to be ascertained by the statutes then in force or by the statutes in force in 1916. The court held that the words "statutes which shall then be in force" clearly indicated that the heirs were to be determined as of the death of the surviving life tenant, but added:

"If such interpretation be not required by the construction of the precise language of this will * * * ample and plain reason therefor arises from the fact that the expressed intent, that the interest of the widow in the estate should determine absolutely on remarriage, would be defeated if the remainder was construed to be vested in the heirs at law at the death of the testator, or in the heirs at law of the testator at the death of the testator as determined by the statute in force in 1916. * * * The provision relating to the disposition of the income upon the death or remarriage of the wife discloses a clear intention to exclude the widow from any interest in principal or income on the happening of either event."

In the present case the provision for the annual payment to his wife of $500 from the rest and residue of the trust estate which was to come into effect after the daughter's death only if the wife had remained unmarried, and was to at once cease on her remarriage, when considered in connection with the original bequest to her as being "in lieu of her dower or other interest in my real or personal estate" evinces, we think, a clear intention that she is not to share in the distribution of "the rest and residue of the trust funds remaining after the payment of the" pecuniary legacies already mentioned, "and reserving a sufficiency for the payment of the annuities" of which hers was one if she did not remarry. And if the testator intended to exclude his wife as a distributee of his trust estate, it seems obvious that he did not mean, in directing the distribution to and among his heirs at law, that the law was to take its course, as is stated in a number of the cases cited in the brief of the executors of the will of Katharine Celia (Larned) Greene.

[2] With this situation in mind, namely, the death of his daughter without leaving a living child, and his wife excluded from sharing in the distribution of the residue of the trust estate, it seems reasonably plain that the testator, in providing as to this residue that the trustees "distribute" it "to and among my heirs at law in the proportions in which they would severally be entitled," is directing his mind to the death of his daughter at some time in the future, near or remote as the case might be, and to such distribution among those who would then be his heirs, his mother, if the occasion be not far away, his brothers and sisters, and the descendants of those who may have died. Construing the will thus, the "heirs at law" are to be determined at the date of the death of the daughter.

The giving of the pecuniary legacies to some of the persons who would in all probability be distributees of the fund, if worthy of note, will perhaps be sufficiently explained if they are regarded simply as intended as personal gifts and tokens of personal regard.

It is not so easy to understand why he should direct the payment of $2,000 "to some suitable person" in trust for the sole use and benefit of his sister Sophia L. Clifford when she would also be a distributee of the rest of the trust fund. It is at least conceivable that there was a reason satisfactory to the testator for the provision without its being inconsistent in any way with making her a beneficiary in her own right otherwise. The successive distributions of portions of the fund on the termination of the annuities would not necessitate the ascertainment of a new group of heirs, as the heirs would once be determined as of the date of the death of the daughter. Their right to a share of the fund retained to support the annuities would vest in ownership on the daughter's death, but not in possession until the annuities were at an end.

This case is readily distinguished from Kenyon, Petitioner, 17 R. I. 149, 20 Atl. 294, as the court in that case largely rests its decision on the use of the words "I give and bequeath" in the Kenyon will as importing "a benefit in point of right, to take effect upon the decease of the testator and the proof of his will." Those words are lacking in the present case. Comment on the several Rhode Island cases in which has been found clear evidence of an intent to give the word "heirs" a meaning different from its strict technical sense does not seem necessary, as they have been considered somewhat recently in the case of Taber v. Talcott, 40 R. I. 388, 101 Atl. 2.

The statute for the distribution of the personal estate of intestates was the same in 1846 as in 1917. After a specified part thereof is given to the widow, the statute provides that:

"The residue shall be distributed amongst the heirs of the intestate, in the same manner real estates descend and pass."

In other words, the same persons, who as heirs take real estate, take "the residue" of the personal estate as persona designata. De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 8 H. L. Cas. 524, 550. In deciding that the widow is excluded from sharing in the distribution of the residue of the trust fund, we find that the testator, in using the words "heirs at law" in like manner, intended to designate the persons who at the death of his daughter childless would in strictness then be his heirs.

[3] As to the 17 pecuniary legacies, all the legatees survived the testator, but died in the lifetime of his daughter. It appears that some of them died more than 50 years ago, that many of them died testate, and that, if these legacies were held to be transmissible, it would be difficult, if not impossible, at the present time to ascertain into how many parts they would be split up, and in whom they are now vested. While such a result would be full of difficulty, it would, however, be unavoidable, if under the will the intention to impart transmissibility to them is clearly apparent. We are of the opinion, however, that each legacy was given for the benefit solely of the person named. They are payable only in case his daughter died without leaving children surviving her, and then the trustees are directed to "immediately thereafter pay the following sums to the persons hereafter named." Thirteen of the legacies are sufficiently small as to suggest that the gift in each case was simply a personal remembrance, some of those 13 are so small as to make this positively clear, for example, the five gifts of $50 each; and, inasmuch as they are all grouped together, it is not unreasonable to infer that all the gifts thus grouped should be regarded as purely personal. Some of them were made to brothers and sisters, who might be regarded as the heads of different branches of the Larned family, and at the same time gifts were specifically made to descendants of such heads of families. There are no words of limitation annexed to any of these legacies, as might be expected, if the testator intended them to be transmissible. We think the only intention clearly apparent is the intention to benefit personally each named legatee, should he or she survive to take the gift. And if it was necessary in the case of each legatee for him to survive the life tenant in order for the gift to him to be effective, then, as his own existence at some particular future time was to determine whether any interest was to take effect in him, the interest was contingent and non-transmissible. Brown v. Williams, 5 R. I. 309, 316; Tingley v. Harris, 20 R. I. 517, 519, 40 Atl. 346; In re Watson's Trusts, L. R. 10 Eq. 36; Strode v. McCormick, 158 Ill. 142, 41 N. E. 1091. While, therefore, these 17 legacies have not in strictness "lapsed," nevertheless, as already indicated, in reply to question 1 we decide that they were non-transmissible and have failed because of the decease of the legatees before the death of the life tenant. The power to dispose by will of "contingent, executory or other future interests," given by section 2 of chapter 254 of the General Laws of 1909, first appeared in our statutes in 1896, and, of course, this statute is not applicable in the present case.

[4] Replying to question 2, we are of opinion that the bequest in trust for the use and benefit of Sophia L. Clifford and the 17 pecuniary legacies did not fall into the residue of the estate, that they are not disposed of by the will, but devolve as intestate estate of Samuel Larned. Peckham v. Newton, 15 R. I. 321, 324, 4 Atl. 761, is cited in support of the claim that they have fallen into the residue, when the court says:

"It is, however, well settled that lapsed and void specific or pecuniary legacies fall into the residue, in the absence of any indication to the contrary."

The residuary clause of the will before us is:

"And all the rest and residue of said trust funds, remaining after the payment of said sums, and reserving a sufficiency for the payment of the annuities provided for in this my will, they shall distribute to and among my heirs at law."

The "intention to the contrary" is found in the exclusion of the pecuniary legacies and the bequest in trust for Mrs. Clifford from the rest and residue which is to be distributed. In Davis v. Davis, 62 Ohio St. 411, 57 N. E. 317, 78 Am. St. Rep. 725, it appears that the testator directed the creation of a fund, from which he made some charitable bequests, and then provided that:

"The balance be divided between the children living at my death of the hereinafter named brothers and sisters of my late wife and myself, viz."

The charitable bequests were held to be void, and the question was as to what became of them.

It was held that the void legacies did not fall into the "balance" above mentioned; but passed as disposed-of property. The court says, on page 414 of 62 Ohio St., 57 N. E. 318, 78 Am. St. Rep. 725:

"The 'balance' that is given to the so-called residuary legatees is not the general residuum of all of the testator's estate, but only what remained of a particular fund derived from specified sources, after deducting therefrom the amount of the charitable legacies and certain other charges upon it. The gift of that balance necessarily excludes from the gift everything that the will provides shall be deducted from the fund in order to arrive at the balance."

On page 416 it says:

"In King v. Woodhull, 3 Edw. Ch. 79, 82, it laid down that 'to entitle a residuary legatee to the benefit of a lapsed or void bequest he must be a legatee of the residue generally, and not partially so; for, when it is manifest from the express words of the will that a gift of the residue is confined to the residue of a particular fund or description of property, or to some certain residuum, he will be restricted to what is thus particularly given, since the legatee cannot take more than is fairly within the scope of the gift.'"

See, also, Power v. Hayne, L. R. 8 Eq. 262; Beekman v. Bonsor, 23 N. Y. 298, 80 Am. Dec. 269; Kerr v. Dougherty, 79 N. Y. 327, 347. In this case the next of kin of the testator at his death take the property devolving as intestate estate in accordance with the statute of distributions then in force. Voorhees v. Singer, 73 N. J. Eq. 532, 534, 68 Atl. 217. See, also, section 7 of the act in relation to wills of real and personal estate in Public Laws of Rhode Island of 1844, which section remained in effect until 1896.

[5] We are of opinion that question 4 should be answered in the affirmative. Whether or not the power "to change investments from time to time as they may think necessary or expedient" has continued since the arrival of the time for distribution, it is not necessary to decide, inasmuch as the power to sell enough of the trust property to equalize its division is implied, when the trustee is directed to distribute it to and among different persons, and cannot make the division or distribution otherwise. Ames v. Ames, 15 R. I. 12, 22 Atl. 1117; National Bank v. Smith, 17 R. I. 244, 21 Atl. 959; Pearce v. Rickard, 18 R. I. 142, 26 Atl. 38, 19 L. R. A. 472, 49 Am. St. Rep. 755; Smith v. Hall, 20 R. I. 170, 37 Atl. 698.

A form of a decree in conformity with this opinion may be submitted for approval.

(41 R. I. 408)

SHEPARD et al. v. SPRINGFIELD FIRE & MARINE INS. CO. et al. (No. 419.)*
(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. July 1, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE — 574(5) — FIRE INSURANCE — AWARD — SETTING ASIDE.

Plaintiffs brought separate actions at law on three fire policies alleging, among other things, the invalidity of the award of appraisers. Thereafter they filed a bill in aid of such actions in the same court to set aside the award. Defendants severally pleaded the general issue in the three actions, but by agreement of counsel such plea was withdrawn, and special pleas of tender filed. Defendants paid into court the amount of the award together with interest and costs pursuant to Gen. Laws 1909, c. 288, § 6, providing that defendant in every action grounded upon express or implied contract shall have the right to make and plead a tender and leave to bring into court the money which he shall acknowledge to be due, and that plaintiff shall have a right to take the same in full or in part satisfaction of the demand made in such action, and section 7, providing that, if plaintiff shall receive the same in part satisfaction only, and shall proceed further in the same action, and it shall be determined that no more is due, plaintiff shall not recover costs. The payment was accompanied by said pleas, which amounted to a confession that plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount paid into court and left open to further determination the question as to whether plaintiffs were entitled to recover any more. Plaintiffs received and retained the amount in part satisfaction. Held, that complainants were not bound by the award and precluded from seeking to have it set aside because before hearing or decision upon their actions at law, or their suit in equity, they withdrew and retained the amount paid into court.

2. INSURANCE — 574(7) — FIRE INSURANCE — AWARD — SETTING ASIDE — EVIDENCE.

In bill in aid of actions at law under fire policies to set aside award of appraisers, evidence held to warrant conclusion that award was unjust, inequitable, and grossly inadequate, so that complainants were entitled to have it set aside.

3. ARBITRATION AND AWARD — 52 — VALIDITY.

An award signed by only one of two appraisers appointed and by a third selected by them to settle matters of difference between the two was not valid on its face where it failed to show that any matters of difference had arisen between the appraisers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Providence and Bristol Counties; Chester W. Barrows, Judge.

Bill by William B. Shepard and another against the Springfield Fire & Marine Insurance Company and others. From final decree dismissing bill, complainants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Wilson, Gardner & Churchill, of Providence, for appellants. Mumford, Huddy & Emerson, of Providence (E. Butler Moulton and Charles O. Mumford, both of Providence, of counsel), for appellees.

PARKHURST, C. J. This is an appeal from a final decree dismissing a bill in equity which was brought by William B. Shepard and Louis F. Bell in the superior court in Washington county against the Springfield Fire & Marine Insurance Company, of Springfield, Mass., the Northern Assurance Company, Limited, and the Phenix Assurance Company, Limited, both of London, England.

The bill was brought in aid of three certain actions at law which are being prosecuted against the same defendants severally by Shepard and Bell to recover the amount of a loss under certain fire insurance policies issued by the defendants. The object of this bill in equity is to set aside an award made by appraisers appointed under the policies to appraise the loss. The bill sets forth substantially that previous to November 15, 1916, William B. Shepard was the owner of and Louis F. Bell the mortgagee of a dwelling house, barn, and storehouse situated in Wickford, R. I., and insured in the above-mentioned companies in the following aggregate sums: $11,000 on dwelling house; $500 on barn; $750 on storehouse. On November 15, 1916, a fire destroyed the barn and storehouse and partially destroyed the dwelling house.

Proofs of loss were duly submitted. The parties disagreed as to the amount of the loss, and the matter went to an appraisal. The companies appointed Michael J. Houlihan; the complainants appointed Vere W. Beck; these two selected Henry L. Evans as third appraiser or umpire. The two appraisers being unable to agree upon the amount of loss and damage to the dwelling house, Henry L. Evans, as umpire, and Michael J. Houlihan together signed an award. The entire controversy between the parties is in regard to the amount of loss suffered by the damage by fire to the dwelling house. Henry L. Evans and Michael J. Houlihan rendered an award, estimating the total loss at $6,525, of which $4,970 was estimated as the loss to the dwelling house. Vere W. Beck refused to sign the award.

* For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

* For opinion on motion for leave to reargue, see 104 Atl. 635.

The complainants charged that the dwelling house was damaged to the amount of $9,000. This the defendant denied, and averred that the damage did not exceed $4,970. Thereafter the complainants asked for a second appraisal on the ground that the pretended award by Houlihan and Evans was void on grounds set forth in the bill, and this demand was refused by the insurance companies. The complainants alleged, among other things, that the appraisers failed to take into consideration and failed to allow any amount for the loss occasioned to certain items of construction in the dwelling house, and that they were not impartial and disinterested.

The respondents admitted that the dwelling house was partially destroyed, that the loss was covered by the policies, that a second appraisal had been demanded and refused by them, but denied that the appraisers had either omitted any essential items in their appraisal, or that they were unfair or prejudiced in their action in making the award.

The three actions at law upon the three policies above referred to were brought in the superior court in Washington county, by writs dated March 21, 1917, and were duly entered on the return day, March 31, 1917, and therein allegations were made setting forth the plaintiffs' claims as to the invalidity of the award above mentioned. These suits were brought and entered within the time limited in the several policies for bringing suits at law. The bill in the case at bar in aid of these actions at law was filed in the same court April 4, 1917, and the joint and several answer of the respondents was filed in said court July 27, 1917. It appears that on or about this last date the defendants severally pleaded the general issue in the three actions at law, and that thereafter, in September, 1917, by agreement of counsel they withdrew these pleas of the general issue and filed certain special pleas of tender, more particularly set forth below. The facts with regard to the several pleas of tender and to the withdrawal by plaintiffs of sums of money paid into the law court by defendants in the actions at law are set forth by stipulation filed in this court as follows:

"Stipulation.

"In the above-entitled cause it is hereby stipulated that in addition to the facts set forth in the bill of complaint and in the answer of the respondents the following facts have been established since the filing of said bill of complaint:

"(1) On the 12th day of September, A. D. 1917, the respondents, each contributing its several proportion, paid into court under the provisions of chapter 288, § 6, of the General Laws of Rhode Island 1909, the sum of, to wit, $4,970, being the amount of the award referred to in said bill of complaint, together with interest and costs thereon to the date of payment into court, said payment being accompanied by a plea filed in behalf of each defendant in the several actions at law in aid of which the present bill in equity is brought, and which are referred to in said bill. Said pleas, except as to the names of the companies and the amounts stated, were in the following form:

"The _____ Company, comes and defends the wrong and injury when, etc., and as to all the supposed promises and undertakings in said declaration mentioned excepting the sum of $_____, parcel of the said several sums of money in said declaration mentioned, says that it did not undertake or promise in manner and form as the said plaintiffs have thereof complained against it, and of this it puts itself upon the country.

"And as to the said sum of $_____, parcel of the said several sums of money in said declaration mentioned, the said defendant says that the said plaintiffs ought not further to have or maintain their aforesaid action against it to recover any more or greater damages than the said sum of $_____ because it says that it now is ready to pay the said plaintiffs the said sum of $_____, parcel of the said several sums of money in said declaration mentioned together with the plaintiff's lawful costs heretofore accrued, a total of $_____, and it now asks leave to bring the same into court, and now brings and pays the same into court, here ready to be paid to the said plaintiffs if they will accept the same, and this the defendant is ready to verify.

"Wherefore it prays judgment if the said plaintiffs ought further to have or maintain their said action against it to recover any more or greater damages than the said sum of $_____, parcel of the several sums of money in said declaration mentioned. By Its Attorneys."

"(2) On the 17th day of September, A. D. 1917, the complainants (plaintiffs in said actions at law) took and received said sum so paid into the registry of the court by the respondents (defendants in said actions at law), and said complainants gave, and the clerk of said court received, a receipt therefor in the following form: 'Received of W. Herbert Caswell, clerk of the superior court for Washington county, the amount of one thousand one hundred and eighty-nine and $\frac{58}{100}$ (\$1,189.58) dollars, being the amount paid into the registry of the said court by the Springfield Insurance Company in the case entitled William B. Shepard et al v. Springfield Insurance Company, under its plea of tender. Said amount is taken and received by us in part satisfaction only of the demand made by us in the above-entitled action, and without waiving any rights or remedies to recover the full amount due and owing us as alleged in the declaration.'

"(3) The complainants have not repaid or restored or offered to repay or restore to the respondents or to any of them the sum so received by the complainants or any part thereof, but have retained and still retain the same.

"(4) That on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1917, the complainants filed in the above actions at law pending in the superior court for Washington county, R. I., a replication in each of said cases which, except as to the names of the companies and the amounts, are as follows:

"Now come the plaintiffs, and for replication to the defendant's plea of tender filed in the above-entitled action say that they accepted the sum of two thousand six hundred and nineteen and $\frac{93}{100}$ (\$2,619.93) dollars paid into the registry of the court by the defendant in part satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim against said defendant, but say that at the time of the making of said tender in said plea alleged there was, and still is, a larger sum than two thousand six hundred and nineteen and $\frac{99}{100}$ (\$2,619.99) dollars due and owing to the defendant as set forth in the plaintiffs' declaration against the defendant; and said plaintiffs further say that said sum of two thousand six hundred and nineteen and $\frac{99}{100}$ (\$2,619.99) dollars was not tendered to them before the commencement of this action, and of this they put themselves upon the country. By Their Attorneys.

"(5) And it is hereby further stipulated that the court may consider the above facts and their bearing upon the liability of the respondents herein and the rights of the parties hereto in the same manner and with the same effect as though said facts had been set up by way of plea and supplemental bill filed and said pleas set down for hearing."

This cause came on to be heard before Mr. Justice Barrows upon bill, answer, replication, proofs, and the aforesaid stipulation. Issues of fact were framed and agreed upon by the parties, and the last or twelfth issue was abandoned by the complainants during the hearing.

The following constitute the issues of fact submitted to the trial court:

(1) Was the frame dwelling house described in the fifth paragraph of the bill of complaint damaged to the extent of $9,000?

(2) Did the damage to the frame dwelling house exceed the sum of $4,970?

(3) Did the defendants or any of them refuse to furnish the plaintiff, Shepard, with a copy of the award described in the bill of complaint?

(4) Were Appraiser Houlihan and Umpire Evans disinterested, and did they act with impartiality in making their appraisal?

(5) Did Appraiser Houlihan and Umpire Evans refuse to take into consideration certain items of damage to the frame dwelling house in making their appraisal of the loss sustained and in making their award?

(6) Did Appraiser Houlihan and Umpire Evans refuse to take into consideration loss and damage to that certain portion of the construction of the frame dwelling house known as double sheathing in making their appraisal and award?

(7) Did Appraiser Houlihan and Umpire Evans refuse to make any allowance for the loss arising from the damage to that portion of the construction of the dwelling house as set forth in issue 6 in making their appraisal and award?

(8) Did Appraiser Houlihan and Umpire Evans refuse to take into consideration in estimating the sound value of the dwelling house betterments which had been made to the dwelling house since the purchase thereof by the plaintiff Shepard?

(9) Was the amount of $4,970 allowed by Appraiser Houlihan and Umpire Evans known by them to be insufficient to pay the loss sustained by the plaintiff from the damage to the dwelling house?

(10) Was the amount of $4,970 fixed by the umpire, Henry L. Evans, and Appraiser Michael J. Houlihan arrived at in the exercise of their honest and deliberate judgment and without prejudice or partiality?

(11) Did Appraiser Houlihan and Umpire Evans consider the cause and origin of the fire in reaching the amount of damage to the frame dwelling house?

A large amount of testimony was submitted by the complainants in support of these issues of fact. At the close of the proof offered by the complainants the respondents, having offered no testimony, except the award itself, which appears on file as their Exhibit A, moved to dismiss the bill of complaint upon the following grounds:

(1) That the facts established by the stipulation aforesaid show an election on the part of the insured to accept the award.

(2) That the proof offered by the complainants was not such as to warrant a decision in their favor upon any of the material issues of fact.

The motion to dismiss was granted; the trial court adopting as the reasons for so doing both of the grounds urged by the respondents. The present proceeding is the complainants' appeal from the decree dismissing the bill of complaint.

[1] The questions raised are two:

(1) Are the complainants bound by the award and precluded from seeking to have it set aside by reason of the fact that before hearing or decision upon their actions at law, or their suit in equity, they withdrew and have retained the amounts paid into court?

(2) Are the complainants entitled to have the award set aside upon the proof offered by them?

Upon careful consideration of both questions this court is of the opinion that the trial court erred in its determination of each of them.

As to the first question, it is to be noted that the pleas of tender in the three law cases were filed (after withdrawal of pleas or the general issue which they had at first filed) as special pleas to declarations which expressly allege the invalidity of the award upon several grounds substantially as set forth in the bill in equity filed and prosecuted in aid of the actions at law. Since this court had previously determined that under our practice, which has always preserved the distinction between actions at law and proceedings in equity, it was not possible to impeach an award under an insurance policy in an action at law on the policy (Barly v. Providence & Washington Ins. Co., 31 R. I. 225, 76 Atl. 753, 140 Am. St. Rep. 750), and since this court had also determined that a bill in equity in aid of an action at law, filed after the action at law had been instituted on an insurance policy, is a proper proceeding for the purpose of setting aside an award under an insurance policy so as to enable the insured to recover in excess of the award (Hirsch v. Home Ins. Co., 38 R. I. 189, 94 Atl. 722), the procedure in the case at bar up to this point is in accordance with our decisions.

The pleas of tender in the three actions at law above referred to were filed under and pursuant to Gen. Laws R. I. c. 288, §§ 6, 7, which read as follows:

"Sec. 6. The defendant in every action grounded on an express or implied contract * * * that may be pending before any court shall have the right to make and plead a tender, or may have leave to bring into court the money which he shall acknowledge to be due on such contract, * * * together with the plaintiff's lawful costs up to the time of the tender made or pleaded, or the bringing of the money into court; and the plaintiff shall have a right to take the same in full or in part satisfaction of the demand made in such action.

"Sec. 7. If the plaintiff in either of the above cases shall receive the same in part satisfaction only and shall proceed further in the same action, and the court or jury who shall finally assess the damages in such case shall determine that no more was due on the demand made in such action than was tendered or brought into court, as aforesaid, at the time the same was tendered or brought in, the plaintiff shall not recover costs, but shall be obliged to pay the costs accruing after such tender or after the money was brought into court as aforesaid, as the case may be."

It may be noted, in passing, that these pleas of tender do not expressly claim to be made under and for the purpose of carrying out the award, since the award is not mentioned in them and the several sums brought into court do not together aggregate the amount of the award. Apparently, however, this point is waived by the terms of the stipulation, and the pleas are to be treated as if they expressly referred to the award. The defendants, with full knowledge of all these claims on the part of the plaintiffs in regard to the invalidity of the award, with notice given by allegations of invalidity both in the declarations at law and in the bill in equity, having seen fit to bring into court the amount of the award and to admit by their pleas that they are liable at least to that amount, by the very terms of their special pleas raise only the issue which is tendered in the final clause thereof. "Wherefore it prays judgment if the said plaintiffs ought further to have or maintain their said action against it to recover any more or greater damages than the said sum of $——, parcel of the several sums of money in said declaration mentioned."

These pleas amount to a confession that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amount paid into court, and by their very terms leave open to further determination the question whether or not they are entitled to recover any more. The terms of section 6 and section 7 plainly authorize the plaintiffs to take what is paid into court in part satisfaction and to proceed further to determine whether or not they are entitled to recover more. We are of the opinion that the terms of the statute are quite applicable to the cases here under discussion and are too plain for argument, and that the contention of the defendants that the plaintiffs' actions at law are lost by the withdrawal of the money in part satisfaction when in fact the plaintiffs have done only what the statute plainly authorized them to do is entirely without support. No cases are cited on either brief which have any application in support of this contention or any application to the construction and effect of this statute; we assume that, if there had been any such cases, counsel would have found them and submitted them to us.

Counsel for defendants argue that because there was an award, and because in the law suits it was impossible for the award to be set aside, the plaintiffs could only recover at law the amount of the award, and that the acceptance of the amounts paid into court was an acceptance of the award and conclusive of the rights of the plaintiffs to recover anything more. In this argument counsel ignore the very purpose of the whole procedure, which includes this bill in equity as an auxiliary proceeding to set aside the award as a necessary preliminary to further proceedings at law. It cannot be successfully argued that plaintiffs have accepted the award in view of the whole procedure which assails it and in view of the plain terms of the statute above quoted. Such a conclusion would nullify the statute.

[2] We come now to the second question, viz: Are the complainants entitled to have the award set aside upon the proof offered by them?

The only testimony offered on behalf of the respondents is the paper headed "Agreement for Submission to Appraisers," which we find on file marked "Respts. Ex. A." In that agreement, dated November 17, 1916, which seems to be in the common printed form used by insurance companies and to be in substantial accord with the terms of the policies, it is agreed:

"That Vere W. Beck for assured and Michael J. Houlihan for the companies shall appraise and estimate the loss upon the property damaged and destroyed by the fire of November 15, 1916, as specified below: Provided, that in case of disagreement the said appraisers shall select a third, who shall act with them in matters of difference only. The award of said appraisers, or any two of them, made in writing, in accordance with this agreement, shall be binding upon both parties to this agreement.

"It is expressly understood that this agreement and appraisal is for the purpose of ascertaining and fixing the amount of sound value and loss and damage only to the property hereinafter described, and shall not determine, waive, or invalidate any other right or rights of either party to this agreement.

"The property on which the sound value and the loss or damage is to be determined is as follows, to wit: Dwelling, $11,000 on — story frame building and additions while occupied only as a private dwelling, including plate and ornamental glass in doors and windows, decorations on walls and ceilings, chandeliers, electric and gas fixtures and fittings, piping and plumbing work and fixtures, apparatus and fixtures for heating and cooking," etc. (This appears to be in the same terms as the description of property insured in the policies).

Then follows this concluding paragraph:

"It is further expressly understood and agreed that in determining the sound value and the loss or damage upon the property hereinbefore mentioned the said appraisers are to make an estimate of the actual cash cost of replacing or repairing the same, or the actual cash value thereof, at and immediately preceding the time of the fire; and in case of depreciation of the property from use, age, condition, location, or otherwise, a proper deduction shall be made therefor."

The agreement was executed by W. B. Shepard and the agents of the three insurance companies November 17, 1916. On the back of the same sheet appears the engagement of the two appraisers Beck and Houlihan under oath:

"That we will act with strict impartiality in making an appraisal and estimate of the sound value and the loss and damage upon the property hereinbefore mentioned, in accordance with the foregoing appointment, and that we will make a true, just, and conscientious award," etc.

Following that is the "Selection of Third Appraiser," wherein the said Beck and Houlihan select and appoint Henry L. Evans "to act as the third appraiser to settle matters of difference that exist between us," etc.; then the "Qualification of Third Appraiser" under oath, wherein said Evans accepts the appointment as third appraiser, and swears that he "will act with strict impartiality in all matters of difference only," etc. Then follows the "Award of Appraisers," which reads as follows:

"To the Parties in Interest: We have carefully examined the premises and remains of the property hereinbefore specified, in accordance with the foregoing appointment and have determined the sound value and the loss and damage to be as follows:

	Sound Value.	Loss.
1st Item. Main house and ell..	$13,000 00	$4,970 00
2d Item. Barn, etc.	1,373 00	824 00
3d Item. Garage	870 00	731 00

Total sound value and loss $15,243 00 $6,525 00
 "Witness our hands this 2d day of Dec., 1916.

"[Signed] Henry L. Evans, Umpire.
 "Michael J. Houlihan,
 "Appraisers."

We have been thus particular in reciting the terms of this submission and award because the respondents appear to claim that the award is valid upon its face and is entitled to the presumption that it is correct, and that it is not to be set aside except for very grave reasons and upon very strong testimony, and that respondent therefore need offer no testimony except the award itself.

[3] In our opinion the award is not valid upon its face. It is signed only by one appraiser and by the umpire. It does not disclose that any "matters of difference" had arisen between Beck and Houlihan which Evans the umpire was called upon "to settle." For all that appears upon the face of the award, Beck did not act at all as an appraiser with Houlihan. He might have been absent or dead or ill and unable or unwilling to act. So far as the face of the award shows, it is the act of Houlihan and Evans acting without Beck, and not at all in accordance with the duties of their appointment. It is only when we examine the testimony of Mr. Beck in this cause that we find that Beck and Houlihan did examine the property together and did make their figures regarding the loss and damage, and that they were unable to agree, and that Evans, acting as umpire did finally agree with Houlihan's figures, and thereafter signed the award with him, Beck refusing to sign because he deemed the award grossly inadequate and because certain items of loss were entirely omitted. Since, therefore, we find that the award is not valid upon its face because it does not show that the appraisers and the umpire acted strictly in accordance with their duties under and in the manner provided by the submission, and since we can only determine just what was done by the appraisers and the umpire from the testimony, we can give very little weight to the award as testimony, particularly in view of the fact that the award simply fixes certain total sums as the loss, but gives us no details or methods by which those sums were determined by them, does not state what items of loss were allowed to make up the sum of $4,970, and furnishes no means of comparison with the testimony offered on the part of the complainants. The court is in the situation of having before it the testimony adduced by the complainants with practically no defense offered except the award itself, which amounts, as we have shown, to a mere statement that the amounts claimed by the complainants are greater than they should be.

After a careful examination of all the testimony offered by the complainants, we find that there is ample evidence to support several of the issues which have been heretofore set forth. Complainants examined Mr. Beck at length as to the details of the appraisal, and his testimony, given in great detail and with apparent frankness and sincerity, convinces us that the award of $4,970 as the loss upon the dwelling house (being the only amount disputed) was grossly inadequate. He testified that the cost of replacing the dwelling house in as good condition as it was at the time of the fire would be about $9,400, and was examined in great detail as to items of loss which went to make up that amount. He was a builder of long experience and undoubted and undisputed qualifications, and we do not find that his testimony was shaken or materially weakened upon a long and searching cross-examination. He also testified, in partial explanation of the discrepancy between his figures and those of the other appraisers, that they refused to make any allowance for certain important items of loss which undoubtedly occurred. It appears that there was upon the roof of the main portion of the dwelling house a balustrade extending all the way around the roof just back of or upon the jet, that the roof was badly burned, and that about 125 feet of this balustrade was destroyed or so badly burned as to require replacement, and that the cost of replacement would be $375, or $3 per foot. Mr. Beck testified to all this, and also that the cost of replacing the portion of the jet destroyed would be $2 per foot. Upon conference with Houlihan and Evans Mr. Beck found that they had allowed a loss of $2 per foot on the jet and nothing in addition for the balustrade, Mr. Houlihan in effect saying, when questioned by Mr. Beck why no allowance was made for the balustrade, that he had allowed for the balustrade in allowing for the jet. It is obvious that the balustrade was no part of the jet; it was an architectural feature of ornament and possible utility, frequently placed upon large houses with flat roofs; and it is evident from the testimony that the claim that the cost of its restoration was included in the figures allowed for the restoration of the jet was a mere evasion, and that its omission from the items of loss was an arbitrary omission.

It also appears that the main body of the house was constructed with double sheathing i. e., that it had a sheathing of ordinary boards nailed onto the upright joists or framework of the house; that over this was paper, and over the paper a boarding consisting of tongued and grooved white pine which was painted, and again over this were clapboards for the outside finish. A very substantial portion of the outside walls of the house so constructed was destroyed or so damaged by the fire as to require reconstruction and replacement with new material, and it appeared from the testimony of Mr. Beck, and of the other contractors and builders who corroborated him, that the cost of replacing this double sheathing in as good condition as before the fire would be from $400 to $600, that the tongued and grooved material was of white pine, which was then very scarce in the market and very expensive, and that they did not allow for that, but for a less expensive pine, which could be easily procured and would answer the purpose. It further appears that Houlihan (with whom Evans appears to have agreed in all respects), when this item of double sheathing was called to his attention and he was asked why he made no allowance for it, said in substance, "that they were not building houses that way now," and gave no other reason for refusing to allow the item. It further appears from the testimony of Mr. Beck and the other corroborating witnesses that this method of construction, although not now or perhaps ever commonly used in building dwelling houses, was of substantial value to the owner, in that it made the outer walls tighter and stiffer, kept out the cold, and made the house more stable. It also appeared that if, in the restoration of the house, double sheathing was not used, it would be necessary to incur expense for additional "furring" upon which to nail such single sheathing as might be used in order to bring the surface of the single sheathing out to the general line of the surface of the outer walls remaining, and not in need of reconstruction, so that the clapboards to be nailed upon the sheathing would come into alignment with the clapboards remaining upon the walls not destroyed; but it nowhere appears that any allowance was made for the expense of such additional "furring." Upon this point we think that the refusal to allow anything for the loss of double sheathing was an arbitrary refusal; this method of construction was proper, even if unusual; it added value to the house and was of substantial value to the owner; and the reason given "that they were not building houses that way now" furnished no basis for the refusal. Such a reason might be urged as to any method of construction used by owners of houses of large size, seeking stability and protection from the bitter winds of winter; many people during the past winter, with its bitter cold and the difficulty of obtaining adequate fuel, would have been thankful if their houses had been constructed with double sheathing so as to enable them to conserve the little heat they had and keep out the cold. As well might the appraisers say, in case of injury to hardwood floors, or to polished mahogany or black walnut wainscoting, hard-finished stucco walls and ceilings, in somewhat old-fashioned residences, that they would not allow for their loss and the cost of replacement because nowadays it is the custom to build houses with cheaper floors, or with white wood wainscoting painted, or with rough plaster walls and ceilings covered with cheap paper.

Besides the above-mentioned important items of exterior construction, the evidence shows that the plumbing work and heating apparatus within the house, which are expressly enumerated among the fixtures covered by the terms of the submission as above quoted, were very badly damaged. It appears that the fire broke out early in the morning, and that from about 6:30 to 11 a. m. two streams of salt water from an adjacent cove were being pumped into the house to put out the fire, and that the house was flooded with salt water from attic to cellar, that a water tank on the third floor, made of plank and lined with copper and worth about $100, was totally destroyed, and that other serious damage was done to the plumbing system, and to the heating system, which was composed of a steam generator and of direct pipes to steam radiators, and also of indirect heating through a brick chamber and registers. The witness Beck estimated the damage done to the heating and plumbing apparatus as upwards of $500. In this he was corroborated by the witness Hainsworth, an expert of over 30 years' experience in plumbing and heating apparatus, living in Wickford, R. I., who had from time to time for 15 years before the fire done work on that apparatus in that house, and was thoroughly familiar therewith, and with its condition just prior to the fire. He testified that the apparatus was in good condition and good repair at that time. He examined it in detail just after the fire, and testified that it would cost, in his estimation, based upon what damage he actually saw, $570 to put the plumbing and heating apparatus in as good condition as it was before the fire, and that it would cost in addition $125 to $150 to take down the furnace in order to be sure that it was put in proper condition before it would be safe to light a fire therein. When Mr. Beck consulted with Messrs. Houlihan and Evans just before they signed the award, he found that they had allowed nothing for plumbing damage, and only $35 for heating damage, and after an extended argument with them, calling their attention to the matters above set forth, they finally agreed to allow $100 for the loss of the tank, and $75 for some other items apparently relating to the heating, but not clearly shown in the testimony. In the opinion of this court, here again was evidence of an arbitrary refusal to allow anything for substantial items of damage specifically brought to the attention of Messrs. Houlihan and Evans.

It is needless to prolong further the examination of the evidence in regard to the action of these appraisers. The witness Beck is fully corroborated by experts of apparent fairness and long experience as to his estimates in the matters specifically above referred to, as well as in his general estimate of the entire amount of loss and damage to the house. These corroborating witnesses made their estimates independently of Mr. Beck, and without conference with him; he did not know their figures, nor they his, till after the respective estimates were completed.

The evidence convinces us that many specific items of loss and damage above set forth which were of substantial pecuniary value to the assured and which were proper subjects of appraisal and award under the submission were specifically called to the attention of said appraisers, and were so obvious that said appraisers, if they properly appreciated their duty, should themselves have taken notice of them, and that said appraisers willfully refused to allow anything in several important instances; and these instances, coupled with the well-supported evidence as to gross inadequacy of the award in its total amount, lead us to the conclusion that the award as a whole was unjust, inequitable, and grossly inadequate.

It is our opinion that there is ample evidence in the record before us to warrant an affirmative answer to issues numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 9; that issue 3, in our view of the case, is immaterial; that as to issue 4 there is no evidence that they were interested in the result, but there is evidence that they did not act impartially; that as to issue 8 there is no evidence of sufficient clearness to warrant a finding; that issue 10 should be answered in the negative; that as to issue 11 there is no evidence sufficient to warrant a finding.

We think the case in its general aspects is within the scope of the decision in Low Estate Co. v. Lederer Realty Co., 35 R. I. 352, 361, 86 Atl. 881, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 341, although some of the more important facts of that case which warranted the court in setting aside the award were different in character. The award in that case, however, was grossly inadequate by reason of the fact that the appraisers misconceived their duty. In the case at bar the complainants have cited certain cases in support of their contentions, which in their general principles are in point. Buy's v. Eberhardt, 8 Mich. 524; Van Cortlandt v. Underhill, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 405; Chicago, etc., Co. v. Stewart (C. O.) 19 Fed. 5, 8; Adams v. N. Y. Bowery Fire Ins. Co., 85 Iowa, 6, 51 N. W. 1149; Schmidt Bros. v. Boston Ins. Co., 82 App. Div. 234, 81 N. Y. Supp. 767; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 1131; American Fire Ins. Co. v. Bell, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 11, 75 S. W. 819; Canfield v. Watertown Fire Ins. Co., 55 Wis. 419, 13 N. W. 252; Hong Sling v. Nat. Assur. Co., 7 Utah, 441, 27 Pac. 171; Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Board of Education, 49 W. Va. 360, 38 S. E. 679; Ross v. German Alliance Ins. Co., 86 Kan. 145, 119 Pac. 366, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1045.

We find few cases cited upon defendants' brief and none which affect this case.

We are of the opinion that the trial judge failed to give due consideration to the weight of the testimony in this case, which was uncontradicted, and that he was in error upon both points, upon which he granted the motion to dismiss, and was in error in entering the decree appealed from dismissing the bill.

We do not intend by this opinion to be understood to have made any conclusive findings of fact as to any specific amounts of loss or damage above referred to. Such amounts will presumably be the subject of another inquiry before another tribunal. We have simply determined upon the uncontradicted testimony before us that the award is invalid for the reasons above set forth.

The appeal is allowed, the decree appealed from is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the superior court sitting in Washington county, with direction to enter its decree setting aside the award.

(11 Del. Ch. 433)

KINGSTON et al. v. HOME LIFE INS. CO. OF AMERICA et al.

(Supreme Court of Delaware. June 18, 1918.)

CORPORATIONS ¶204—ACTION BY MINORITY STOCKHOLDERS—AVOIDANCE OF CONTRACT.

Where a contract between a private corporation and an insurance company whereby the corporation has a perpetual and exclusive option to purchase the stock of the insurance company operates prejudicially to the minority stockholders of the insurance company, they may bring a bill to have such contract terminated.

Appeal from Chancery Court, New Castle County.

Bill by Thomas Kingston and others against the Home Life Insurance Company of America and another. From a decree for respondents (101 Atl. 898), complainants appeal. Affirmed.

PENNEWILL, C. J., and BOYCE, CONRAD, and RICE, JJ., sitting.

Thomas Raeburn White, of Philadelphia, Pa., and Caleb S. Layton, of Wilmington, for appellants. John P. Connelly, of Philadelphia, Pa., and Charles F. Curley, of Wilmington, for appellees.

This was a bill by shareholders of the Home Life Insurance Company to annul contracts entered into by and between said company and the Home Protective Company. The statement of the case by the Chancellor, in 11 Del. Ch. —, 101 Atl. 898, is ample, and a restatement here is unnecessary.

PER CURIAM. After a careful consideration of this case the court are of the opinion that the decree of the Chancellor should be affirmed, but think it proper to say that while the arrangement under which the Protective Company advanced money to the Insurance Company may not have been illegal or unfair, and the stock option not invalid when entered into, yet if it now appears to work inequitably to the minority stockholders it should be terminated. The evidence, within the findings of the Chancellor, seems to disclose a situation with respect to the stock option which, if continued, might operate prejudicially to the minority stockholders of the Insurance Company; for it appears that the present value of the stock of the Insurance Company is very considerably in excess of the par value. If this be so, it would be the duty of the court to consider in a proper case whether it is sufficient to render the stock option at this time inequitable, and whether the Protective Company, after so long a lapse of time in which to exercise its option, and before the stock had increased so much in value, has any claim in equity for the continuance of the option.

The question suggested, viz. the termination of the option contract, was not before the Chancellor, and, perhaps, could not have been considered by him under the bill filed. But if minority stockholders of the Insurance Company are satisfied that said contract does now operate prejudicially and inequitably to them, they may have the question determined by the court under a bill that fairly and clearly presents the question.

The decree of the Chancellor is affirmed.

(38 N. J. Law, 38)

BERRY v. O'NEILL et al.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 19, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUNDAY ¶12—CONTRACT—VALIDITY.

The mere carrying on of negotiations on Sunday will not invalidate a contract completed on a secular day. The final consummation of the contract on Sunday is necessary to bring it within the prohibition of the Sunday statutes.

2. SUNDAY ¶23—CONTRACT—EVIDENCE.

It is open to the trial judge, sitting without a jury, to determine that the plaintiff's contract of employment as an architect to make plans for a house and garage was not a Sunday contract, when the evidence tended to show that, though the parties on a Sunday discussed the probable cost of various kinds of houses and the architect's customary charges, yet the Sunday interview terminated to give the plaintiff a chance to "think it over," and the defendant an opportunity to purchase a lot on which to build and decide upon the character of house desired, and the parties later, on a week day, agreed upon the employment to make plans, not only for a house of a designated cost, but also for a garage.

Appeal from District Court of Atlantic City.

Action by Frank A. Berry against Robert J. O'Neill and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued February term, 1918, before SWAYZE, TRENCHARD, and MINTURN, JJ.

U. G. Styron, of Atlantic City, for appellants. Lee F. Washington, of Atlantic City, for appellee.

TRENCHARD, J. The plaintiff below brought this suit to recover for services rendered as architect in drawing plans and specifications and taking estimates from various contractors for a frame house and brick garage for the defendants. The trial judge, sitting without a jury, rendered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

We are of the opinion that the judgment must be affirmed. At the trial it appeared that the services were rendered and that the claim therefor was unpaid. The defendants' sole contention on this appeal is that the evidence showed that the contract of employment, upon which the judgment rests, was made upon a Sunday, and was therefore void.

[1] In general, a contract made on Sunday is void. Rosenblum v. Schachner, 84 N. J. Law, 525, 87 Atl. 99, and cases there cited. But the mere carrying on of negotiations on Sunday will not invalidate a contract completed on a secular day. The final consummation of a contract on Sunday is necessary to bring it within the prohibition of the Sunday statutes. Burr v. Nivison, 75 N. J. Eq. 241, 72 Atl. 72, 138 Am. St. Rep. 554, 20 Ann. Cas. 35.

[2] Tested by this rule, we think the contract of employment in the present case was not invalid. True, there was an interview on a Sunday between the parties at which the probable cost of various kinds of houses was discussed, and the plaintiff's customary charge for drawing plans and supervision was asked and stated. But the defendants had not yet acquired a lot upon which to build, nor decided upon the kind and cost of the house desired, and the Sunday interview terminated to give the plaintiff a chance to "think it over" and the defendants an opportunity to purchase a lot and decide upon the character of house required. Later the defendants acquired a lot, and determined to build, not only a house of a designated cost, but also a garage, and the interview at which the employment of the plaintiff to plan these was agreed upon was on a week day. Obviously, in this state of the proof, it cannot be said that the judgment in question rests upon a Sunday contract.

The judgment below will be affirmed, with costs.

SWANK v. PENNSYLVANIA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 11, 1918.)

COMMERCE §8(6)—FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—ACTION FOR DEATH—PLAINTIFF—"PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE."

Act March 27, 1917 (P. L. p. 531), supplemental of the Death Act, requiring action instituted under and by virtue thereof to be in the name of an administrator ad prosequendum, does not apply to action under federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. 1910, §§ 8667-8668), declaring liability of carrier for death of employe to his personal representative, meaning his executor or general administrator.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Personal Representative.]

Action by Elizabeth Swank, administratrix, against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Heard on defendant's rule to show cause. Rule discharged.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

Gaskill & Gaskill, of Camden, for the rule. James Mercer Davis, of Camden, opposed.

GUMMERE, C. J. This suit is brought by the plaintiff as the general administratrix of Herbert L. Swank, deceased. Mr. Swank, at the time of his death, was in the employ of the defendant company, and, according to the averment of the complaint, lost his life by accident while being employed by the defendant company in interstate commerce. The action is brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act. Upon being brought into court the defendant moved at chambers to strike out the complaint and dismiss the action upon the ground that the suit was brought by the general administratrix of the decedent contrary to the provisions of chapter 180 of the laws passed by our Legislature, and approved by the Governor, in 1917. Pamph. Laws, p. 531. A rule to show cause why this application should not prevail was allowed, and the matter is before us for determination.

The statute appealed to by the defendant is a supplement of our "Death Act" (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1007, §§ 7-9), and provides that every action instituted under and by virtue of its provisions "shall be brought in the name of an administrator ad prosequendum." It is, of course, apparent that if this action was brought for the enforcement of a remedy given by our "Death Act" the procedure must be that provided by the statute and its supplements. The trouble with the defendant's case, however, is that the remedy sought to be enforced is not provided by our state statute, but is conferred by federal legislation; and in the enforcement of a remedy thus conferred the method of procedure provided by Congress must control. The language of the federal act is that the liability of the carrier in case of the death of the employe is "to his or her personal representative for the benefit of the surviving widow," etc.; and that language has been construed by the United States Supreme Court to mean the executor or general administrator. American Railroad Co. v. Birch, 224 U. S. 547, 32 Sup. Ct. 603, 56 L. Ed. 879; Missouri, Kansas & Texas Ry. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 33 Sup. Ct. 135, 57 L. Ed. 355, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; St. Louis & C. Ry. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 33 Sup. Ct. 651, 57 L. Ed. 1129, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156.

The plaintiff, as general administratrix, being the only person who is entitled to maintain the present action, the rule to show cause will be discharged.

(91 N. J. Law, 713)

SAPER v. BAKER.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. July 2, 1918.)

1. TRIAL §295(10)—INSTRUCTIONS.

An excerpt from instruction, "I cannot recall any testimony in the case which shows that the deceased did anything which was careless or negligent, or contributed to the accident," was not erroneous, where in same instruction jury were told they could consider whether there was any contributory negligence.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §705(1)—COLLISION—LIGHTS.

A person in street with wheelbarrow need neither carry a light nor have one on wheelbarrow.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §1066—HARMLESS ERROR—STATEMENTS TO JUROR.

Where court, on being asked by juror whether wheelbarrow was supposed to have a light, answered that a wheelbarrow was not obliged to have a light, and, in addition, that man pushing it was not obliged to carry a light, the additional matter in the answer, although irrelevant, was harmless.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Passaic County.

Action by Fannie Saper, administratrix of Louis Saper, deceased, against John Baker. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Kalisch & Kalisch, of Newark, for appellant. Ward & McGinnis, of Paterson, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The defendant seeks to reverse a judgment of the Passaic circuit court in favor of the plaintiff. The action grew out of the death of Louis Saper, who in the early evening of November 1, 1916, was killed by an automobile driven by the daughter of defendant. The accident happened shortly before 6 o'clock on Jefferson street in the city of Passaic. The deceased, according to the testimony, was pushing a wheelbarrow along Jefferson street on the right-hand side in a westerly direction, and had not quite reached Hope avenue, which crossed Jefferson street. The automobile driven by the daughter of the defendant was going in the same direction and approached the deceased from behind, and without warning knocked him down and ran over him, inflicting fatal injuries. At the intersection of Jefferson street with Hope avenue was a lighted arc lamp, and there were stores on the corners, all lighted, although it was not completely dark at the time of the accident.

The defendant advances four grounds for reversal of judgment, viz.: (1) The court's refusal to nonsuit; (2) the court's refusal to direct a verdict; (3) a remark of the trial judge as to certain evidence he did not recall; (4) his answer to a request of one of the jurors as to whether the law required the deceased to have a light on his wheelbarrow.

1. The defendant was lawfully upon the highway at the time of the occurrence of the accident, and he was not required to carry a light himself or on the wheelbarrow which he was pushing. On the question of negligence a jury question was presented at the close of the plaintiff's case, and therefore the trial judge's refusal to nonsuit the plaintiff was correct.

2. At the close of the whole case the situation was not changed, and the trial judge likewise rightly refused to grant a motion for the direction of a verdict in favor of the defendant.

[1] 3. The defendant appellant states his third point as follows:

"Because the trial court erroneously and improperly charged the jury as follows: 'I cannot recall, myself, any testimony in the case which shows that the deceased did anything which was careless or negligent or contributed to the accident.'"

If this were all there was of the charge in that regard, we might be called upon to say whether or not it was erroneous, but, in point of fact, it was not all, but is an excerpt from the charge, severed from its context. What the trial judge said on this score was as follows:

"You may also consider, gentlemen, whether there was any contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. I cannot recall, myself, any testimony in the case which shows that the deceased did anything which was careless or negligent or contributed to the accident. Now if you find that the defendant was guilty of negligence then, of course, you come to the question of damages."

That is not all. The trial judge further charged as follows:

"So take the case gentlemen, and determine, first, was there negligence on the part of the defendant, acting through the driver of the car. If there was, and there was no contributory negligence, then you take up the question of damages."

There was no error in the charge as delivered upon the question of contributory negligence.

[2, 3] 4. The defendant-appellant states his fourth point as follows:

"Because the trial court, upon being asked by a juror, the following question, 'Whether a wheelbarrow is supposed to have a light on,' erroneously and improperly answered the question in the following manner: 'A wheelbarrow is not obliged by the law to have a light under the conditions here disclosed, and the man is not obliged to carry a light either.'"

This answer by the trial judge to the juror's question was not erroneous. It went further than the question in stating that the deceased was not obliged to carry a light. It was, however, correct as a proposition of law, although irrelevant in respect to the man himself. It was therefore harmless.

The judgment under review will be affirmed.

ALBRIGHT v. VAN VOORHIS et al.

(No. 43/615.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 12, 1918.)

1. WILLS §634(13)—CONSTRUCTION—VESTED REMAINDERS.

Under devise of homestead to wife for life, and at her death to children or their legal representatives, remainder vested in children at testator's death.

2. WILLS §634(15) — CONSTRUCTION — REMAINDERS.

Under a bequest of income from personalty to children, principal upon death of children to be divided among their legal representatives, legal representatives can only be determined when survivor dies.

3. WILLS §507—CONSTRUCTION—"HEIRS AT LAW."

Where testator gave child income of property, the principal at his death to go to child's heirs at law, if property at child's death was realty, or realty not notionally converted, "heirs at law" meant technical heirs (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1918); but if personalty, or realty notionally converted, heirs at law meant next of kin, in the sense of distributees under statute of distributions (2 Gen. St. 1895, p. 2390).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Heirs at Law.]

4. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION \Leftrightarrow 35—HEIRS—HALF BLOOD.

Under Statute of Distributions (2 Gen. St. 1895, p. 2390), mother and half sister take equally with sisters.

5. CONVERSION \Leftrightarrow 15(1)—DIRECTIONS OF WILL—“SHALL” BE SOLD.

Direction in will that land “shall be sold,” proceeds invested in bonds, etc., upon the occurring of a “favorable opportunity in the opinion of his executors,” amounted to imperative direction to convert.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Shall.]

6. CONVERSION \Leftrightarrow 21(1) — EFFECT — VESTED RIGHTS.

Where right of heir to land is once vested, fact that it has been changed into personality by executors does not alter such vested right.

7. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 524(2)—HEIRS AT LAW—TIME OF ASCERTAINMENT.

Where personality on death of a certain person goes to heirs at law of such person, heirs at law must be ascertained by reference to the statute in force at death of such person.

Bill by James P. Albright against Fred Van Voorhis and others to construe the will of Frederick Springer, deceased.

On June 4, 1883, Frederick Springer died leaving the following will:

I, Frederick Springer of Madison, Morris county, New Jersey, being of sound, memory and understanding do hereby make, publish and declare this to be my last will and testament in manner following that is to say

First. It is my will that all my debts and funeral expenses be paid as soon as conveniently can be after my decease.

Second. The homestead property whereon I now reside comprising the three story house and about two acres of land lying between the railroad and the brook and adjoining the graveyard including the lot occupied by Charles Garrison and all my household furniture and housekeeping articles (except the piano forte which I have heretofore given to my daughter Pauline) I give and devise to my wife Louisa for and during the term of her natural life or for so long as she may remain my widow and at her death or remarriage I give and devise the same absolutely to the children I have had or may have by my said wife or their legal representatives.

Third. I do order and direct that my executors hereinafter named shall sell the cider mill and distillery building, steam engine, machinery, kettles and distilling apparatus at such time and in such manner as shall in their opinion produce the most money and shall use sufficient of the proceeds of said sale to alter and convert into a dwelling house, the large building standing next to the cider mill and known as the carpenter shop, according to the plans which I have caused to be made for said purpose and which will be found among my papers and the surplus of the proceeds of said sale, if any, shall be invested by my executors and form a part of the residue of my estate hereinafter mentioned and disposed of and I do further order and direct that the said building altered and converted into a dwelling house as aforesaid together with a suitable quantity of land therewith as a house lot for said house, shall be kept rented until a favorable opportunity, in the opinion of my executors, shall arrive for the sale thereof and then it is my will that the same shall be sold and the proceeds of said sale together with the net amount of rents derived therefrom shall be invested and form a part of the residue of my estate hereinafter mentioned and disposed of.

In making any lease or sale of the house and lot in this clause of my will mentioned my executors will take care to provide for always keeping open a sufficient, convenient and suitable right of way from the public road in front thereof to my homestead premises above mentioned.

Fourth. It is my will that the premises owned by me and occupied by William Tuttle, also the house and lot occupied by Henry W. Harman. Also the property I purchased from the estate of Henry P. Green shall be kept rented until a favorable opportunity in the opinion of my executors shall arrive for the sale of the same or of any one or more of said pieces of property and then it is my will that the same or any one or more of said pieces of property of which sale can be made shall be sold and the proceeds of said sale together with the net amount of rents derived therefrom shall be invested and form a part of the residue of my estate hereinafter mentioned.

Fifth. I do order and direct that the stock of whisky or other liquors I may have on hand at the time of my death, also my horses, wagons, harness, sleighs, tools, farming implements and other goods and chattels not otherwise herein disposed of shall be sold in such manner, upon such terms and at such times as shall be most advantageous to my estate and the proceeds thereof shall be invested and form a part of the residue of my estate.

Sixth. I do order and direct that the tract of land containing twenty-one acres on the Green Village road opposite the Gibbons wash house shall be held for six years at least after my decease by my executors who shall use or rent the same to the best advantage until a favorable opportunity in their opinion shall arrive, after the expiration of said six years for the sale thereof and then it is my will that the same shall be sold and proceeds of such sale together with the net income which shall have accrued from said premises shall be added to the residue of my estate.

Seventh. All the rest and residue of my estate shall be divided into five equal shares for the benefit of my wife Louisa, my three children, Frederick, Pauline and Lilly and my granddaughter Catharine Laubacher and I do order and direct that each of said shares shall be well and safely invested upon bond and mortgage of unincumbered real estate and that the interest arising upon one of said shares shall be paid to my said wife Louisa semiannually during the term of her natural life or for so long as she may remain my widow and upon her death or remarriage, then to the children which have been or may be born to me by her share and share alike for and during the term of their natural lives and upon the death of all of said children the principal of said share shall be divided among the legal representatives of the children which have been or may be born to me by her.

II. The interest arising upon another of said original shares shall be put out at interest and all the interest arising upon said share and the interest upon said interest shall be retained in the hands of my executors during the minority of my granddaughter Catharine Laubacher and shall be paid to her in person when she shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years and thereafter the interest which shall arise upon her original share shall be paid to her semiannually in person for and during the term of her natural life and at her death the principal of her said share shall go to her heir or heirs at law but in no event shall her said share or any part thereof go to the father of said Catharine Laubacher.

III. The interest arising upon another of said original shares shall be paid semiannually to the guardian of my son Frederick until he shall attain the age of twenty-one years and then to him in person for and during the term of his natural life and at his death the principal of his said share shall go to his heir or heirs at law absolutely.

IV. The interest arising upon another of said original shares shall be paid semiannually to the guardian of my daughter Pauline until she shall attain the age of twenty-one years and then to her in person for and during her natural life and at her death the principal of her said share shall go to her heir or heirs at law absolutely.

V. The interest arising upon the other of said shares of the residue of my estate shall be paid semiannually to the guardian of my daughter Lilly until she attains the age of twenty-one years and then to her in person for and during the term of her natural life and at her death the principal of her said share shall go to her heir or heirs at law absolutely.

Eighth. The devises and bequests in this will and testament in favor of my wife are to be in lieu of all her right of dower or other rights whatsoever either at common law or by statute in and to any of my estate. And I do hereby appoint my said wife to be the guardian of our children Frederick, Pauline and Lilly.

Ninth. I do hereby nominate, constitute and appoint my friends J. Preston Albright of Madison, New Jersey, and John H. Hornett of New York to be the executors of this my last will and testament.

In witness whereof, I, the said Frederick Springer, have hereto set my hand and seal on this thirteenth day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five.

[Signed] Fr. Springer. [L. S.]

Testator left him surviving his wife Marie, three children, Frederick, Pauline and Lilly, and a granddaughter, Catherine, the child of his first wife. His widow Marie died intestate in 1907 and his daughter Pauline, who had married Edward Van Voorhis, died intestate in 1917 leaving her surviving three children Fred, Harold and Preston.

Charles A. Rathbun, of Morristown, for complainant. C. Franklin Wilson, of Morristown, for defendant Lilly Cook. Howard F. Barrett, of Madison, for defendants Fred Van Voorhis and others.

STEVENS, V. C. [1] Testator gives the homestead to his wife for life and at her death "to the children I have had or may have by my said wife or their legal representatives." The remainders vested in the children at testator's death (Guild v. Newark, 87 N. J. Eq. 38, 99 Atl. 120), and as her son Frederick was then living a one-third interest vested in him. When he subsequently died intestate this interest descended upon his heirs at law.

[2] Testator directs that the residue of his estate be divided into five shares, and that the interest of one of said shares be paid to his wife during her life, and at her death to her children during their lives, and "upon the death of all of said children the principal of said share shall be divided among the legal representatives of the children which have been or may be born to me by her." The testator's grandchild, Catherine, the daughter of his first wife, is expressly excluded from participation in this share. Who the legal representatives of the children may be at the death of the survivors can only be determined when the survivor dies. Smith v. Robinson, 83 N. J. Eq. 384, 389, 90 Atl. 1063.

[3, 4] Frederick's share is given in the following terms:

"The interest arising upon another of said original shares shall be paid semiannually to the guardian of my son Frederick until he shall attain the age of twenty-one years and then to him in person for and during the term of his natural life and at his death the principal of his said share shall go to his heir or heirs at law absolutely."

Frederick survived testator four months and died intestate. At the time of his death testator's estate consisted partly of realty and partly of personalty. The question is, Who are his heirs? If any of testator's estate was at Frederick's death realty and realty not notionally converted, his heirs at law were his two sisters. Comp. St. 1910, "Descent," p. 1918. As far as the estate was personalty, or realty notionally converted into personalty, it went to his next of kin, in the sense of distributees under the statute of distributions. Meeker v. Forbes, 84 N. J. Eq. 272, 93 Atl. 887; Id., 86 N. J. Eq. 255, 98 Atl. 1086. The mother and half sister, represented by her daughter Catherine take equally with his other sisters under this statute. Dickinson's Probate Court Practice, 165 Gen. St. p. 2390. See Smith v. McDonald, 71 N. J. Eq. 261, 65 Atl. 840. And the only question is, What portion, if any, of the real estate is to be considered as having been at Frederick's death, notionally converted?

[5] I think the testator intended a conversion out and out of all his real estate except his homestead. It is his will that the property he particularly specifies "shall be sold" and that the proceeds "shall be invested" and form part of the residue. As to the residue he divides it into five shares and "orders and directs that each of said shares shall be well and safely invested upon bond and mortgage of unincumbered real estate"—a direction which, if it is to be complied with, necessitates a conversion of all the real estate included in the residue. Lindley v. O'Reilly, 50 N. J. Law, 646, 15 Atl. 379, 1 L. R. A. 79, 7 Am. St. Rep. 802; Wright v. Keasbey, 87 N. J. Eq. 52, 100 Atl. 172. He directs that the interest arising upon each of the shares shall be paid to the wife and children respectively, and that the principal of the several shares shall go, in the case of the wife's share, to the legal representatives of her children and in the case of the other shares to the heir or heirs at law of the children respectively. The direction to sell is throughout mandatory.

[6] It is true that the sale is not to take place until the occurrence of "a favorable opportunity in the opinion of his executors," but this is no more than what is generally implied, for unless directed to sell within a specified time executors do not ordinarily sell until the "favorable opportunity" arises. In Lewin on Trusts (*947) it is said:

"A direction to trustees to sell 'as soon as they shall see necessary for the benefit of the cestui que trust or whenever it shall appear to their satisfaction that such sale will be for the benefit of the cestui que trust,' amounts to an imperative direction to convert," and the property is under such circumstances considered as converted from the death of the testator. In re Raw, 26 Ch. Div. 601; Cook's Executors v. Cook's Administrators, 20 N. J. Eq. 375.

I had occasion to consider one phase of this question in Martin v. Kimball, 86 N. J. Eq. 10, 96 Atl. 585; Id., 86 N. J. Eq. 432, 99 Atl. 1070, but the question itself was different. It was whether testator intended the life tenants to have rent or an apportionment of the proceeds of sale. I came to the conclusion that he intended them to have only rents. I said, however, in the course of the opinion, that:

"It may be safely asserted that notional conversion will not be referred to a time anterior to the time when conversion is directed. If, in my will, I direct that my property shall not be sold until ten years after my death, it cannot be deemed converted as of the time of my death."

The reason is obvious. The testator intended it to retain its character of real estate for that length of time. In the case of the Green Village tract, mentioned in paragraph 6 of the will now under consideration, the testator directs that it should be held for six years at least. This was done. It was, so counsel states in his brief, subsequently sold. Its proceeds are now actually personalty. But at the time of Frederick's death it was real estate, actually and notionally. It therefore descended as such upon Frederick's heirs at law. The fact that it has since been changed into personalty cannot alter the right once vested. Meeker v. Forbes, 84 N. J. Eq. 272, 93 Atl. 887.

[7] Pauline Van Voorhis died intestate in 1917. The will gives the fifth share in which she had a life right to her heirs at law; but these, so called, in a gift of personalty, mean next of kin, not next of kin in the technical sense of nearest kinsman, but next of kin in the sense of distributees under the statute of distributions. Meeker v. Forbes, supra. Who answer this description cannot be known until the death of the person whose next of kin they are. Williams on Executors, *1008. As they are the statutory next of kin, they must be ascertained by reference to the statute then in force, for no other persons then answer that description. Van Tilburgh v. Hollinshead, 14 N. J. Eq. 32. Consequently Pauline's next of kin must be ascertained by reference to the act of 1914 (P. L. 1914, p. 69).

(91 N. J. Law, 360)

NUGENT v. GRASSMAN et al.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 6, 1918.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION §—44—CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION.

Occasional acts of trespass committed upon wild and uncultivated lands, although extending over a period of 20 years, will not give title, but if such acts occur with sufficient frequency, they amount to that continuity of possession which is an essential ingredient of title by adverse possession.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION §—115(4)—CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In ejectment, whether annual cutting of hay on wild land, and placing of corner posts, was sufficient possession to give title by adverse possession, held, under the evidence, for the jury.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §—301—OBJECTIONS IN LOWER COURT—NEW TRIAL.

On rule to show cause why verdict should not be set aside, contentions that error in law appears in the charge of the trial court cannot be considered, where not presented by any of the reasons submitted as ground for setting aside the verdict.

Ejectment by James R. Nugent against Edward J. Grassman and others. On rule to show cause why verdict for defendants should not be set aside. Rule discharged.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

George Holmes, of Jersey City, and George W. Anderson, of Newark, for the rule. Arthur F. Egner, of Newark, opposed.

GUMMERE, C. J. This is an action of ejectment and involves title to a tract of land on the meadows adjacent to Newark Bay. It is conceded that the ownership of five-sixths of the tract is in the plaintiff. The controversy concerns the remaining one-sixth.

The proofs show that the paper title to this one-sixth is in the defendants. The case of the plaintiff is that originally the whole tract was held in common by several owners, and that in 1865 the owners of five-sixths interest executed a deed to one William F. Haines purporting to convey the absolute ownership of the whole tract; that Haines immediately entered into possession, and exercised acts of ownership over the land from that time on until 1901, which were so open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted as to vest in him at the end of 20 years from his original entry, a title by adverse possession; and that this title has now devolved upon the plaintiff.

The trial of the case resulted in a verdict in favor of the defendants, and we are now asked to set it aside for three reasons:

(1) "Because the verdict of the jury was contrary to the weight of the evidence"; (2) "because the verdict of the jury was contrary to law"; (3) "because the verdict of the jury was contrary to the charge of the trial court."

The plaintiff's claim of adverse possession was rested largely upon the testimony of his grantor, Mr. Haines. He testified that immediately upon the conveyance to him in 1865 he mowed the grass on this tract, and that he continued to do this every year until 1901, when the construction of a railroad embankment prevented him from further continuing this practice; that after that he visited the land from time to time, and cleaned out the ditches around the tract. He further testified that some four or five years after taking possession of this land he put a stake at each corner of the tract; that those stakes were locust stakes; and that they remained in their original position up to the time of the trial. There was also proof that the present plaintiff had paid the taxes upon the premises for the past five or six years; in other words, ever since the conveyance to him by Haines.

On the other hand, there was testimony offered by the defendant tending to show that the stakes at the four corners of this tract are not locust, and that they very plainly have been there for only a comparatively short period of time, not over 10 or 15 years. The defendant's evidence also tended to contradict the story of Mr. Haines with relation to his having cut the salt hay on the tract annually during the period specified by him. This proof, however, was not, in our opinion, sufficient to justify the jury in disregarding Haines' testimony upon this point.

The principal question, therefore, would seem to be this: Does the fact that Mr. Haines, for a period of over 20 successive years, annually cut the salt hay upon the locus in quo, justify us in declaring that the finding of the jury was contrary to the weight of the evidence? In the case of Foulke v. Bond, 41 N. J. Law, 527, the principles on which the doctrine of title by adverse possession rests are thus stated by Mr. Justice Depue, speaking in the Court of Errors and Appeals:

"The possession must be actual and exclusive, adverse and hostile, visible or notorious, continued and uninterrupted. Notoriety of the adverse claim under which possession is held is a necessary constituent of title by adverse possession, and therefore the occupation or possession must be of that nature that the real owner is presumed to have known that there was a possession adverse to his title, under which it was intended to make title against him. * * * A party relying on title derived from such a source must prove possession in himself, or in those under whom he claims, of such a character as is calculated to inform the true owner of the nature and purpose of the possession to which the lands are subjected. The question whether possession has been held adversely continuously for the period of 20 years, with the requisite notoriety, is one of fact for the jury. * * * Occasional acts of trespass extending over the period of 20 years will not give title."

In the case of Cornellius v. Giberson, 25 N. J. Law, p. 1, in which the title to a tract of timber land was involved, the defendant set up title by adverse possession, and attempted to sustain his claim by proof of the cutting of timber from time to time, and the erection of woodchoppers' cabins on the tract. It was also shown that the defendant had paid the taxes thereon: Chief Justice Green, speaking for this court, used the following language:

"Will an occasional entry upon wild and uncultivated lands for the purpose of cutting wood or making surveys, joined with the payment of taxes, by a party having no legal title, there being no actual residence upon any part of the land, no cultivation, no inclosure, no improvement, no actual occupancy for any purpose whatever, operate to bar the title of the rightful owner? Or may several distinct entries and acts of trespass, coupled with temporary actual occupancy for the purpose of cutting wood, be thus united, and constitute one continuous adverse possession? The question is certainly of great moment in this state, where there are extensive tracts of wild and uncultivated lands at all times exposed to trespass and encroachments without the knowledge of the true owners. There is no decision of this court to countenance the doctrine, and the decided weight of authority elsewhere, as well as sound principle, is opposed to it. * * * And in this view there is no distinction between a naked trespasser and one who enters under color of title. Both are alike trespassers. The title papers of the latter may serve to extend and define the limits of his occupancy, but it does not change its character. He is nevertheless a trespasser, and the moment his actual occupancy ceases, the rightful owner, without actual entry, is in possession by construction of law. The mere payment of taxes cannot prove possession. It may be evidence of a claim of title; it may serve to explain the character of the possession, and to extend it beyond the limits of actual occupancy; but the payment of taxes by a party not having the actual possession of any part of the premises cannot prove possession. It would give the owner of the land no right of action against the party paying taxes as a trespasser; and no act can show possession in a party doing it which will not afford to the owner of the land a remedy by action."

[1, 2] Two principles may be considered to have been established by the authorities referred to: (1) That occasional acts of trespass committed upon wild and uncultivated lands, although extending over a period of 20 years, will not give title; (2) If such acts occur with sufficient frequency they amount to that continuity of possession which is an essential ingredient of title by adverse possession. These are legal rules, but whether in a given case the acts of trespass relied upon to establish title are of sufficient frequency to amount to a continuity of possession is necessarily a question of fact to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court. In the present case the jury has determined that acts of trespass committed annually upon the property of the real owner do not amount to that continuity of possession which is necessary to be established in order to support a claim of title by adverse possession. We cannot say that they were not entirely justified in so determining, and the claim of the plaintiff that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the evidence must therefore fail.

The claim that the verdict of the jury was contrary to law is without merit. The law of the case was that laid down by the trial court in its charge to the jury.

So, too, the claim that the verdict was contrary to the charge of the trial judge is without merit. An examination of the instruction to the jury shows that it was strictly regarded by that body in its finding.

[3] Some contention is made in the brief submitted on behalf of the plaintiff that error in law appears in the charge of the trial court. But, as such error, if it exists, is not presented by any of the reasons submitted by the plaintiff as ground for setting aside the verdict, we have not given it consideration.

The rule to show cause will be discharged.

(80 N. J. Eq. 1)

ROGERS v. ROGERS. (No. 43/413.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. May 29, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DIVORCE \Leftrightarrow 127(4)—GROUNDS—ADULTERY—CORROBORATION.

The corroboration of petitioner's testimony, required by the law of this state in order that a decree of divorce may be granted, need not be the testimony of witnesses, although, when such testimony can be procured, it should be introduced. The required corroboration may be furnished by surrounding circumstances, adequately established.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Corroboration.]

2. EXPLANATION OF SYLLABUS.

A misleading statement in the third syllabus in Foot v. Foot, 71 N. J. Eq. 273, 65 Atl. 205, pointed out.

Petition for divorce by Jeffrey J. Rogers against Julia Rogers. Decree for petitioner, advised by an advisory master, adopted as the conclusion of the court, and a decree nisi to be entered.

This matter was referred to Alonzo Church, Esq., as advisory master, who filed the following conclusions:

"This is a petition for divorce on the ground of adultery. The testimony of the petitioner is corroborated by the confession of the defendant, and by admissions made by her to a friend who testified to them before the special master. Were this all the evidence, I should be forced to the conclusion that the case was one coming under the rule laid down in Garrett v. Garrett, 86 N. J. Eq. 293, 98 Atl. 848, where the Chancellor held that testimony of the petitioner, corroborated only by the admissions or confession of the defendant, will not, without more, support a decree. There is another principle, however, of the law of evidence in divorce cases, which is sometimes overlooked, but which is highly important in the determination of these cases.

"The Chancellor, in Garrett v. Garrett, supra, held that a decree cannot be granted upon the uncorroborated testimony of the petitioner, nor upon the uncorroborated confession of the defendant, nor upon one plus the other. He adds, however, that both are admissible in evidence, but must be corroborated to amount to legal evidence. This brings us to a consideration of what is corroboration. It need not necessarily be the testimony of witnesses, although when such testimony can be procured, it is important that it be introduced. Corroboration may arise out of facts and circumstances.

"In Orens v. Orens, 102 Atl. 436, it was held inter alia: 'The corroboration of a petitioner's testimony, required by law, in order that a di-vorice may be decreed, need not be testimony given by another or other witnesses to all of the same identical facts to the minutest particulars, but only their giving such facts in evidence as already testified to by petitioner, or such circumstances tending to establish them, as renders petitioner's testimony so much more probable as to be legally acceptable, and which serves to empower the judge to accept the truth of the petitioner's whole story.'

"The case of Foot v. Foot (Court of Errors and Appeals) 71 N. J. Eq. 273, 65 Atl. 205, is cited in the Orens Case as authority for the above proposition, as is also Williams v. Williams, 78 N. J. Eq. 13, 78 Atl. 698. In the Foot Case, 71 N. J. Eq. at page 280, 65 Atl. at page 208, the court says: 'If the circumstances of the case as shown by the expressions and conduct of the defendant, together with the letters of the parties, all corroborate the testimony of the complainant, the case is complete.' This case, of course, was decided upon its own particular facts, as indeed every case should be, and it might be thought, in the absence of corroboration by witnesses, that both conduct of the defendant and letters of the parties, or at least of the defendant, must necessarily be shown to afford corroboration. I do not so take it. In the case of Robinson v. Robinson, 83 N. J. Eq. 150, 90 Atl. 811, Vice Chancellor Leaming held that corroboration of the testimony of a petitioner need not be by other witnesses, but may be furnished by surrounding circumstances, and remarked, at page 152, that surrounding circumstances adequately established may be of a nature to fully supply the office of corroboration which the law requires in matrimonial cases. In other words, letters and conduct, or either, if established with sufficient clearness, form, as it were, the general atmosphere of the case, which, taken as a whole, will establish a proper basis for a decree, even though there are no corroborating witnesses to the acts alleged by the petitioner.

"Applying the above principles to the case under discussion we find, in addition to the evidence mentioned above, that there are in evidence letters, postcards, and pictures which were found in the defendant's valise. They were sent to her by several different men, some of whom are named as correspondents. When confronted with these, the defendant confessed, and they are evidence corroborating the confession. The petitioner's mother testifies that the defendant received a large amount of mail, which she refused to read except in private. When the husband desired to read a letter directed to her as 'Miss,' defendant snatched it out of his hand and ran upstairs with it; and these facts are corroborating circumstances.

"Upon considering the whole case, therefore, I conclude that there is sufficient corroboration of the petitioner's testimony from the defendant's confession, corroborated by the above circumstances, to justify a decree for the petitioner, which I shall accordingly advise."

Carl Weitz, of Union Hill, for petitioner.

WALKER, C. [1] A decree of divorce nisi will be made in conformity with the advice contained in the conclusions of Advisory Master Church, which are hereby adopted as the opinion of the court.

[2] As the case of Foot v. Foot, 71 N. J. Eq. 273, 65 Atl. 205, is cited in the opinion of the learned master, I desire to call attention to a misleading statement in syllabus 3. It is found in this expression: "Under a statute requiring corroborative evidence . . . to obtain a divorce," etc. There is no statement in the body of the opinion that corroboration of the petitioner's testimony in divorce cases is required by statute; and properly so, as there is no statutory requirement in that regard. It is part of the substantive law of divorce evolved by the court as a matter of sound public policy, and resides in numerous decisions.

I have examined the original opinion on file in the secretary of state's office and find that Judge Vroom, who wrote the deliverance for the Court of Errors and Appeals, did not preface it with any headnote whatever. The syllabus in the official report is copied from the report of the same case in 65 Atl. 205. The error, therefore, appears to have originated with the editor of the Atlantic Reporter, and to have been copied by the official equity reporter. The one with whom the mistake originated was doubtless misled by an assertion in the opinion (71 N. J. Eq. at page 280), where it is stated that it was insisted that the corroborative testimony offered did not extend to all the essential elements of the offense "defined by our statute." It is the elements of matrimonial offenses that are defined by our statute, and there is, as stated, no statutory requirement that there shall be corroborative testimony. That there must be corroboration, however, is established by a long line of cases.

(79 N. H. 7)

STATE v. DINAGAN.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Cheshire.
May 7, 1918.)

1. ARSON \S 9—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 277, §§ 1-3, providing that if any person shall willfully or maliciously burn a dwelling house or outbuilding, etc., he shall be imprisoned, it was immaterial whether the dwelling house was his own or that of another, though "arson," at common law, was the malicious and willful burning of the house or outhouse of another.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Arson.]

2. ARSON \S 25—INDICTMENT—PROOF OF OWNERSHIP—IMMATERIALITY.

If the allegation of the indictment that the dwelling house burned was the property of one other than defendant, which allegation was proved as laid, could be construed as alleging the occupancy of the house in the other, as claimed by defendant, the allegation would be immaterial.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \S 167—IMMATERIAL AVERTMENT—PROOF.

An immaterial averment need not be proved.

4. CRIMINAL LAW \S 722(3) — ARGUMENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.

In a prosecution for arson, the language of the Attorney General in argument, "Will you permit that woman who has looked into your eye and told her story in a way that wasn't possible for an unlettered woman to tell unless it was actually so, will you permit distinguished counsel to crucify such a witness in order that a villain and a criminal may go free?" was legitimate, the characterization of defendant being justified by the evidence; the word "crucify" being used in the sense of discredit.

5. CRIMINAL LAW \S 725—ARGUMENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The Attorney General's argument, calling to the jury's attention their responsibility to the citizens of the county and to their God, not only in relation to the particular case, but also to future cases of like character, though forcible and rhetorical, was within the limits of legitimate advocacy.

6. CRIMINAL LAW \S 725—ARGUMENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The portion of the Attorney General's argument, asking the jury to consider their oath and to find a true verdict between the state and the prisoner at the bar, was proper.

Transferred from Superior Court, Cheshire County; Kivel, Judge.

John W. Dinagan was convicted of arson, and he excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Indictment for arson. Trial by jury, and verdict of guilty. The indictment alleged that:

"John W. Dinagan, * * * with force and arms, a certain dwelling house, otherwise called a hotel situated in Chesterfield in said county of Cheshire, of the property of one Mary J. Dinagan, willfully, feloniously, and maliciously did set fire to, burn, and consume."

At the conclusion of the state's evidence the respondent moved to dismiss the indictment on the ground of variance between the allegations in the indictment and the evidence as offered by the state. This motion was denied, and the respondent excepted.

During his argument the Attorney General made the following statement:

"Will you permit that woman who has looked into your eye and told her story in a way that wasn't possible for an unlettered woman to tell unless it was actually so, will you permit distinguished counsel to crucify such a witness in order that a villain and a criminal may go free? If so, gentlemen, the responsibility towards citizens of Cheshire county and towards your God is with you, and if on some other occasion some other villain, some other firebrand, shall rise up that shall out-Dinagan Dinagan, and some humble dwelling house be lost, and some life go to its Maker because of the fire, the responsibility, gentlemen, will rest upon you."

At this point the respondent excepted. Whereupon the Attorney General continued:

"I call your attention to the situation, gentlemen, with all sincerity, and, gentlemen, when you measure up the facts in this case, consider the oath you have taken to find the true verdict between the state of New Hampshire and the prisoner at the bar."

To the above statements the respondent excepted.

James P. Tuttle, Atty. Gen., and Roy M. Pickard, Sol., of Keene, for the State. Richard J. Wolfe, of Keene, and Doyle & Lucier and A. J. Lucier, all of Nashua, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. [1] Arson at common law "is the malicious and willful burning the house or outhouse of another man." 4 Blackstone, Comm. 219. Hence at common law the respondent could not have been convicted of arson in this case, because the evidence disclosed that he was the habitant of the house burned, and not Mary J. Dinagan. In other words it would not have been the burning of a dwelling house of another. But the common law relative to arson is not in force in this state. In 1791 acts were passed making the burning of a dwelling house of another in the nighttime a more serious offense than the burning of it in the daytime, also including other kinds of property. Laws Ed. 1792, p. 245. In 1828 the laws relating to burning property were changed, and the distinction between burning in the night and day time disappeared. Session Laws, Nov. Sess. 1828, p. 362. When the Legislature of 1842 enacted the Revised Statutes, it adopted substantially the recommendations of the commissioners on revision, relating to the burning of property, in which the words "of another" were omitted. Com'rs Rep. 1842, c. 218, §§ 1-3; R. S. c. 215, §§ 1, 2, 4. These statutes, except as to punishment, are the same that are in force to-day. P. S. c. 277, §§ 1-3.

Section 1 of chapter 277 of the Public Statutes, under which the indictment in the present case was found, is as follows:

"If any person shall willfully and maliciously burn a dwelling house, or an outbuilding adjoining thereto, or any building whereby a dwelling house shall be burned, he shall be imprisoned not exceeding thirty years."

The title of this chapter is "Arson and Burning Property." And the marginal annotation opposite section 1 is "Arson, How Punished." It is said this indicates that common-law arson is intended. Doe, J., in State v. Hurd, 51 N. H. 176, discussed this question, and pointed out, that "the index at the head of [a] chapter cannot be wholly relied upon as an accurate designation of the subject-matter of legislation," and then said:

"A man may maliciously beat his own horse (State v. Avery, 44 N. H. 392), and he may maliciously burn his own dwelling. If he burns it for the purpose of destroying the home and lives of his wife and children, when they happen without his knowledge to be absent, the burning may be malicious; and there may be malice in other cases. The Legislature might well have intended to provide for such cases, and to remedy a defect of the common law, which has been cured by statute in England. The omission of the terms 'arson' and 'of the property of another,' in the body of the statute may well be taken as an intentional remedy of that defect, making section 1 to include not merely common-law arson, but something more. In a condensed enumeration of the contents of the chapter, the word 'arson' might well enough be used as an abbreviated expression to answer the practical purpose of conveying a general, though not a complete and precise, idea of the subject-matter of section 1."

If it can be found that the respondent willfully and maliciously burned a dwelling house, that is sufficient to warrant a conviction under our statute, and it is of no consequence whether the dwelling house was his own or that of another. The burning by the owner of his own dwelling house for the purpose of acquiring the insurance upon it would be a willful and malicious burning of the house. It could be found from the evidence in this case that the dwelling house at the time of the fire was overinsured, and that it was burned by the respondent to defraud the insurers. The indictment alleging that the respondent willfully and maliciously burned a dwelling house is sufficient. And the proof warranted the verdict of the jury.

[2, 3] The indictment alleges the dwelling house was the property of Mary T. Dinagan, and the allegation was proved as laid. If the allegation could be construed as alleging the occupancy of the house in Mrs. Dinagan as claimed by the respondent the allegation would be an immaterial one. "The statement of ownership was necessary at common law because it was not arson for a man to set fire to his own house. But under the statute it is otherwise; and therefore the averment of ownership is an immaterial averment." The Queen v. Newbould, L. R. 1 Cr. Cas. Res. 344, 347. Here as in England the defect of the common law is cured by the statute. State v. Hurd, supra. An immaterial averment need not be proved. State v. Langley, 34 N. H. 529.

[4] The Attorney General, in his closing argument to which the respondent excepted, indulged in vigorous figures of speech. But we do not think that they were of a character to render the trial unfair and destroy the verdict. He said:

"Will you permit distinguished counsel to crucify such a witness (referring to the principal witness for the state) in order that a villain and a criminal may go free?"

[5] The Attorney General here used "crucify" in the sense of discredit, and by this term urged the jury that they should not permit counsel to discredit, and destroy the power of the state's evidence, and let a villain and criminal go free. This was legitimate, and the characterization of the respondent was justified by the evidence.

He then called to the jury's attention their responsibility to the citizens of Cheshire county, and to their God, not only in relation to this case, but also to future cases of like character. As to the present case the jury were legally and morally bound to find the respondent guilty if the evidence was sufficient to require it. It was this responsibility that the state's counsel was endeavoring to impress upon the jury in figurative speech. The statement that the responsibility for future crimes of this character would rest upon the jury had reference, of course, to their moral responsibility, and must have been so understood by them. The object of the punishment of crime not only includes the punishment of the criminal, and protection of society against his acts, but also the protection of society against all persons criminally disposed. There is no doubt that vigorous enforcement of the law lessens the commission of crimes. In this sense the jury were to some extent responsible for the future commission of crimes in the county. The language used to impress this responsibility upon the jury was very forcible and rhetorical, but within the limits of legitimate advocacy.

[6] The exception of the respondent to that portion of the argument in which the jury were asked to consider the oath they had taken, and find a true verdict between the state of New Hampshire and the prisoner at the bar, is without merit. Following his previous remarks he was asking the jury to do nothing except what they had sworn to do, and there was no objection to calling their attention to the oath they had taken. The argument to which exceptions were taken in this case is similar to that in State v. Small, 102 Atl. 883. The exceptions in that case were overruled, and the same disposition is required of the exceptions here.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 23)

BOW v. PLUMMER, State Treasurer.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Merrimack. June 4, 1918.)

1. STATES ⇨191(1)—ACTION AGAINST—CONSENT.

The state cannot be sued in the absence of a statute authorizing such suit or without its consent either expressly given or clearly implied.

2. STATES ⇨191(2)—ACTION AGAINST STATE OFFICIAL—UNENFORCEABLE JUDGMENT.

Under Const. art. 55, and Pub. St. 1901, c. 16, § 4, requiring warrants signed by the Governor for all payments out of state treasury, a judgment rendered in action against state treasurer in his official capacity directing him to pay a certain sum of money out of state treasury would be nonenforceable, and suit must be regarded as against state.

3. STATES ⇨191(1)—ACTION AGAINST OFFICIAL—APPEARANCE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.

In an action against a state treasurer in his official capacity, the appearance of the Attorney General in behalf of such treasurer does not constitute consent on the part of the state to become a party to such action.

4. STATES ⇨191(2)—ACTION AGAINST STATE TREASURER—MONEY PAID UNDER PROTEST.

Where taxes are paid under protest and money deposited in state treasury, an action against state treasurer to recover part thereof on theory that money became trust fund with treasurer as trustee will not lie, because, if money became trust fund, the state, and not the treasurer, became trustee.

Transferred from Superior Court, Merrimack County; Chamberlin, Judge.

Action by one Bow against J. Wesley Plummer, individually and as State Treasurer. Action dismissed as against defendant individually. Motion to dismiss as against defendant as treasurer denied, and defendant excepts. Exceptions sustained.

Assumpsit to recover money paid by the plaintiff to the defendant as state treasurer for its share of the state tax for the year 1914 as claimed by the defendant. The plaintiff insisted that an error had been committed in making the assessment, and that it was legally liable for a much smaller sum than the amount assessed against it, which it paid under protest.

Upon the motion of the plaintiff the court dismissed the action as against the defendant individually. The defendant then moved that it be dismissed as against him as treasurer. This motion was denied, and the defendant excepted. Transferred from the superior court.

Robert W. Upton, of Concord, for plaintiff. James P. Tuttle, Atty. Gen., and Joseph S. Matthews, Asst. Atty. Gen., for defendant.

WALKER, J. [1] As the suit has been dismissed as against the state treasurer in his individual capacity, the question is whether the state, so far as it is represented in this action by the treasurer in his official capacity, may be held liable to respond to the plaintiff's claim. That the state cannot be sued in our courts in the absence of a statute authorizing it, or without its consent, either expressly given or clearly implied, is a proposition requiring little discussion. In fact, it is axiomatic. Cooley, Const. Idms. 23, note; Cunningham v. Railroad, 109 U. S. 446, 451, 3 Sup. Ct. 292, 609, 27 L. Ed. 992; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 504, 33 L. Ed. 842; State v. Kinne, 41 N. H. 238; Opinion of the Justices, 72 N. H. 601, 54 Atl. 950.

[2] No statute has been suggested in argument and none has been found authorizing an action at common law against the state for the recovery of money owed by it to an individual; nor has the Legislature authorized its treasurer to represent the state in litigation of that character, or to disburse its moneys in accordance with a judicial judgment upon the merits. The Constitution (article 55) provides that:

"No moneys shall be issued out of the treasury of this state and disposed of * * * but by warrant under the hand of the Governor for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the council, for the necessary support and defense of this state * * * agreeably to the acts and resolves of the general court."

Accordingly the Legislature has provided (P. S. c. 16, § 4) that:

The state treasurer "shall pay, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, all sums due by virtue of general or special appropriations of the Legislature, on warrants drawn by the executive, and the principal or interest of all loans which may at any time become due."

It thus appears that, if the defendant desired to pay out of the treasury the amount of the plaintiff's claim, he would be unable to do so of his own motion. He could only draw out the money under an executive warrant, which presumably would not be given except in accordance with a statute authorizing it. It would therefore be absurd for the court to give judgment against the defendant in his official capacity which it would have no power to enforce and which the defendant could not perform. Weston v. Dane, 53 Me. 372. This result shows clearly that, while the cause of action is against the state, not the treasurer, the action must fail because the state is not a party.

"Although the state, as such, is not made a party defendant, the suit is against one of its officers as treasurer; the relief sought is a judgment against that officer in his official capacity; and that judgment would compel him to pay out of the public funds in the treasury of the state a certain sum of money. Such a judgment would have the same effect as if it were rendered directly against the state for the amount specified in the complaint." Smith v. Reeves, 178 U. S. 436, 438, 480, 20 Sup. Ct. 919, 920 (44 L. Ed. 1140.)

[3] But it is argued that the appearance of the Attorney General amounts to a consent on the part of the state to submit the cause to judicial investigation and judgment. One difficulty with this argument is that it is based on the erroneous assumption that the sovereign or the Legislature has authorized the Attorney General to bind the state by appearing for the defendant in a suit brought against the head of a governmental department. In other words, the attempt is thus made to bind the state as though it were in fact a party defendant in a suit against the treasurer, upon the ground that the cause of action is against the state and because the Attorney General has appeared. But his appearance cannot have that effect when the state has given him no authority to appear for it. The silence of the Legislature upon this subject is equivalent to a prohibition. As the agent of the state the Attorney General could not exceed the limits of his authorization, and bind the state by proceedings in a suit to which it is not a party and could not be made one.

The cases cited in argument by the plaintiff do not sustain the contention that the state has consented to be bound by the judgment or has waived its immunity from suit. When it is held that there has been such a waiver by the Attorney General or by a state official, the decision is based upon a statute having special reference to the subject-matter of the suit and conferring power upon the official to appear for and represent the state (People v. Railway, 157 Mich. 144, 121 N. W. 814; McKeown v. Brown, 167 Iowa, 489, 149 N. W. 593; Gunter v. Railroad, 200 U. S. 273, 26 Sup. Ct. 252, 50 L. Ed. 477) or the state has voluntarily intervened and become a party (Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 446, 2 Sup. Ct. 878, 27 L. Ed. 780).

Whatever doubt may be entertained as to the right of the Attorney General of this state to enter his appearance for the state in suits to which the state is not a party (P. S. c. 17, § 4; Laws 1911, c. 190, § 1) and whatever legal effect such an appearance might have, if, as in this case, he only appeared for a state official, and not for the state, he did not consent in its behalf that it should be bound by the result of the suit. There is no evidence that he understood he was waiving the rights of the state, and his mere appearance for the treasurer does not have that legal effect. The plaintiff's position practically is that it is entitled to recover from the state treasury the amount of its claim in a suit against a state official, because the law officer of the state has appeared for that official. As well might it be claimed that an attorney by appearing for one against whom no judgment could be rendered consented that it might be rendered against another one of his clients who appeared to be the rightful debtor. As already pointed out, the cause of action is against the state; while the suit is against the treasurer.

[4] But the argument is presented that, as the tax in question was paid to the treasurer under protest, a trust arose upon the money in his hands in favor of the plaintiff for the excessive or illegal payment, and as a consequence that the title to the money did not pass to the state, and that the action is not against the state, but against the treasurer as the custodian of the fund. The result of this theory would seem to be to make the treasurer individually liable as a trustee of the fund, notwithstanding the fact that upon the plaintiff's motion the court dismissed the suit against him as an individual. But his only relation to the action now is that of a state official. Moreover, it is clear that the money was not placed in his hands to be held for the plaintiff, but in the custody of the state through the treasurer as its agent. The plaintiff was dealing with the state, not with Mr. Plummer, and it understood that the money would be deposited in the treasury with other public money. If, under the circumstances, it or a part of it became a trust fund the state became the trustee, and since the state is not a party to the action, the court cannot declare the trust, even in an equitable proceeding. Nor can it authorize or direct the treasurer to pay the plaintiff's demand from the state's money. That is exclusively a legislative function.

Cases holding that, when a state officer does an act in his official capacity that may be prejudicial to the rights of a private person, and is in violation of the Constitution, he may be individually enjoined (Pennoyer v. McConaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 699, 35 L. Ed. 363) upon the ground that the state is not a necessary party (Cunningham v. Railroad, 109 U. S. 446, 3 Sup. Ct. 292, 609, 27 L. Ed. 992), are not in point. The injury the plaintiff complains of is not some threatened invasion of his rights, but it results from the inability of the treasurer to withdraw the money from the control of the state where the plaintiff was willing to put it. The money, even if wrongfully received by the defendant, was delivered to him as the agent of the state; it was in fact intrusted to the state (Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 722, 723, 2 Sup. Ct. 128, 27 L. Ed. 448); and what the plaintiff now seeks is a return of it, or a part of it, from the state, not from the defendant individually. If under such circumstances it has been held that a defendant, although a party only in his official capacity, was liable individually to repay the money (Scottish Ins. Co. v. Herriott, 100 Iowa, 606, 80 N. W. 665, 77 Am. St. Rep. 548), the decision cannot be followed. The language of the court in Smith v. Reeves, supra (178 U. S. 430, 20 Sup. Ct. 920, 44 L. Ed. 1140), in holding under a somewhat similar state of facts that the cause of action was against the state, and that an order for judgment against the treasurer was error, is applicable to the case at bar:

"In the present case the action is not to recover specific moneys in the hands of the state treasurer nor to compel him to perform a plain ministerial duty. It is to enforce the liability of the state to pay a certain amount of money on account of the payment of taxes alleged to have been wrongfully exacted by the state from the plaintiffs. Nor is it a suit to enjoin the defendant from doing some positive or affirmative act to the injury of the plaintiffs in their persons or property, but one in effect to compel the state, through its officer, to perform its promise to return to taxpayers such amount as may be adjudged to have been taken from them under an illegal assessment."

See generally State v. Burke, 83 La. Ann. 498; Seltz v. Messerschmitt, 117 App. Div. 401, 102 N. Y. Supp. 732, approved in 188 N. Y. 587, 81 N. E. 1175; Ex parte Dunn, 8 S. C. 207; State v. Bank, 8 Neb. 218; Troy, etc., Railroad v. Commonwealth, 127 Mass. 43.

The motion to dismiss the action should have been granted.

Exceptions sustained. All concurred.

(132 Md. 533)

COOK v. UNITED RYS. & ELECTRIC CO. OF BALTIMORE. (No. 53.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 4, 1918.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⇐91—COLLISION—ORDINANCE REGULATING TRAFFIC.

In an action by the owner of an auto ambulance for damages to it in a collision with defendant's street car, defendant's failure to observe an ordinance giving a right of way at street intersections to north and south bound travel could not be relied on as creating liability notwithstanding contributory negligence.

2. STREET RAILROADS ⇐103(3)—COLLISIONS—"LAST CLEAR CHANCE" DOCTRINE.

Where an auto ambulance was injured in a collision with a street car because of the contributory negligence of the owner of the auto ambulance or his employes, the last clear chance doctrine is not applicable; such doctrine being applicable only when defendant's negligence is the last negligent act.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Chas. W. Henisler, Judge.

Action by Joseph E. Cook against the United Railways & Electric Company of Baltimore, a body corporate. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

C. R. Wattenscheidt and Laurie H. Riggs, both of Baltimore, for appellant. J. Pembroke Thom, of Baltimore (Walter V. Harrison and Joseph C. France, both of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. The plaintiff, appellant in this court, brought suit to recover damages from the United Railways & Electric Company of Baltimore for injury to an auto ambulance, occasioned by a collision between the machine while being operated by one of his employes and a street car owned by the defendant and operated by its employes. The ambulance in question was of Cadillac make, weighing something over two tons.

On the morning of January 21, 1916, the plaintiff had been notified from the University Hospital that there was some one at Union Station to be brought to that hospital, and at the time of the collision the ambulance was on its way to answer that call. It was proceeding north on Cathedral street at a rate variously estimated from 15 to 25 miles per hour, and at the intersection of Cathedral and Biddle streets came in contact with a car of the defendant of the Roland Park line. The morning was wet and the streets slippery, but the ambulance was not at the time equipped with chains to prevent sliding or skidding. The driver in charge of the ambulance saw the car proceeding slowly westward when he was at a distance of from 100 to 125 feet south of Biddle street, but contented himself with ringing a large gong upon the ambulance, without seeking to check his speed until he was within 25 feet of the car. He then applied both the foot and the emergency brakes, and attempted to cut across the path of the car into Brevard street. The effect of this action was to bring him in a line parallel with the car, and he would probably have avoided the collision had not the machine skidded on the wet and slippery street. The condition of the street, the change in direction of the machine, and the sudden application of the brakes acted in combination to produce the result that the rear wheel of the ambulance struck the car about in the center. The ambulance was severely damaged, the repairs to it costing $692.88.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case the defendant offered three prayers; the first to the effect that there was no evidence in the case legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and that the verdict of the jury must be for the defendant. The third asked the court to instruct the jury that from the uncontradicted evidence in the case the driver of the ambulance was guilty of negligence directly contributing to the happening of the accident, and that the verdict of the jury must be for the defendant. These two prayers were granted by the court, whereupon the defendant withdrew its second prayer. The ruling of the trial court upon these prayers constitutes the sole exception in the record.

Several questions were raised by counsel at the argument, though it will be sufficient for the disposition of this case to consider only two of them.

[1] The plaintiff urges as an act of negligence on the part of the defendant a failure to observe the ordinance then in force designed to regulate traffic in the streets of Baltimore city, and which gave a right of way at street intersections to north and south bound travel over that moving east and west. This provision, like all provisions of municipal regulation, must be given a reasonable construction. To extend it as far as the plaintiff now asks would be to place a prohibition upon all east and west bound traffic, a condition which cannot be supposed to have been intended by the framers of the ordinance, and it entirely ignored the further provision in the same ordinance that:

"Nothing contained herein or omitted herefrom shall be construed or held to relieve any person using or traveling, or being upon any street for any purpose whatever, from exercising all reasonable care to avoid or prevent injury, through collisions with all other persons and vehicles."

It is conceded that the speed of the ambulance was greater than that permitted by the ordinance, and that the car was moving slowly. It is also established by the evidence that the chauffeur of the ambulance saw the car when distant 100 to 125 feet from it, and had it in such full view that both ends of the car were visible, and that the car was proceeding slowly westwardly, within the speed limits prescribed by the ordinance.

The plaintiff attempted to show by the chauffeur that the motorman of the car was looking in a different direction, and therefore did not see the approaching machine. This last, however, was a mental deduction of the witness, rather than a statement of fact, and while the prayers which were granted necessarily concede the truth of the evidence of the plaintiff, that is an entirely different proposition from conceding inferences which may be drawn by a witness from matters which were observed by him.

Numerous cases decided by this court are referred to by the plaintiff in support of his contention of negligence on the part of the employé of the defendant, such as United Railways v. Kolken, 114 Md. 160, 78 Atl. 383, Consolidated Ry. Co. v. Armstrong, 92 Md. 554, 48 Atl. 1047, and Cooke v. Balto. Traction Co., 80 Md. 551, 31 Atl. 327, but a close examination of each of those cases will disclose its inapplicability to a case like the present. This was clearly indicated in United Railways v. Durham, 117 Md. 197, 83 Atl. 154, where it was said that:

"If the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, the question of negligence vel non on the part of the defendant becomes immaterial, for, if there was no negligence on its part, there can be no recovery, and if there was, the same result would follow, because of the plaintiff's contributory negligence."

It was there said that the case should have been withdrawn from the consideration of the jury.

[2] The plaintiff in his argument endeavors to introduce the doctrine of the last clear chance, but that is not applicable in a state of facts such as those presented by this record, for, as was said in McNab v. United Ry., 94 Md. 719, 51 Atl. 421, following the case of R. R. v. Neubeur, 62 Md. 401, that rule "is only applicable when defendant's negligence is the last negligent act, and not when plaintiff's contributory negligence is the final negligent act," and this same rule was applied in the case of Westerman v. United Ry., 127 Md. 225, 96 Atl. 355.

In the present case the negligent acts which directly caused the collision and injury to the plaintiff's ambulance were those of either the plaintiff or the plaintiff's employé; such, for example, as driving the ambulance, at the time when the streets were slippery, without chains upon the wheels, at a speed which, whether in excess of that permitted by ordinance or not, was such as to constitute a menace to persons upon or crossing the streets, and making no attempt to slacken or check the speed of the ambulance after the car had come into full view, until a point was reached where the inevitable momentum of the machine made a collision practically certain.

In states other than Maryland the courts have been called upon to rule upon questions very similar to that now involved. In the case of Ray v. Brannan, 196 Ala. 113, 72 South. 16, decided in 1916, the court had under consideration an ordinance very similar to that which was designed to regulate traffic in the city of Baltimore, and in force when this accident occurred, and the Alabama Supreme Court, in an exceptionally strong opinion, uses the following language:

"The conditions of traffic on intersecting streets may reasonably require that such (referring to the ordinance) priority be given to one street over another. But the mere fact that one vehicle has the 'right of way' over others crossing its path does not release the vehicle thus favored from the duty of exercising due care not to injure the others at the place of crossing. On the contrary, the duty of due care to avoid collision remains reciprocal, and the driver of each vehicle may, within reasonable limits, rely upon the discharge of this duty by the other, including, among other things, the reasonable observance of those municipal regulations with respect to speed and position, which are designed not only to facilitate traffic and travel, but also to make it safe for the public as far as it is humanly possible. * * * But this right to expect the observance of specific legal duties by others does not excuse any one from observing the specific duties imposed by law upon himself; and his failure to do so, if the proximate cause of his injury, would, as a matter of law, defeat his right of recovery."

In Pilgrim v. Brown, 168 Iowa, 177, 150 N. W. 1, which was in regard to the collision between two automobiles, and where suit had been brought for the recovery of the damage done to one of the machines, the Iowa court was construing the provisions of an ordinance of the town of Grinnell designed to regulate the speed of such vehicles, and said:

"The ordinance does not, and reasonably could not, charge a driver who is observing the laws of the road to discover at his peril the approach of one who is violating that law, and yields him the right of way."

Under the facts presented by the record in this case, and the rules of law applicable thereto, no error can be imputed to the trial court for the rulings made by it, and the judgment appealed from will be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

(132 Md. 437)

MAYOR, ETC., OF BALTIMORE v. BASSETT. (No. 16.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)

1. TRIAL §139(1)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT—WHEN PROPER.

If there is any evidence from which a rational conclusion may be drawn contrary to the theory of a prayer for directed verdict, the weight and value of such evidence should be left to the jury.

2. TRIAL §178 — DIRECTION OF VERDICT — HEARING.

On prayer for a directed verdict, the court must assume the truth of all the evidence tending to sustain the claim or defense against which the prayer is directed.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §755—DEFECTIVE STREETS—LIABILITY.

If a city negligently fails to keep streets in reasonably safe condition for public travel it is liable to persons acting without negligence who are injured thereby.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §791(2) — DEFECTIVE STREETS—NEGLIGENCE.

Where a depression in pavement two to four inches deep and five feet in diameter existed for several months, at a point established by ordinance for stopping cars, negligence of the city officials in failing to keep the street in a reasonably safe condition is shown.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §806(2) — STREETS—RIGHTS OF PEDESTRIANS.

Since pedestrians have rights in the streets equal to vehicles, they may assume that they will not be subjected to the nuisance of a depression in the street, though pedestrians cannot shut their eyes to obvious defects.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §821(25)—DEFECTIVE STREETS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Evidence held to present jury question as to pedestrian's negligence defeating recovery for injuries caused by falling in depression in street at point where she was about to board a car.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas of Baltimore City; Morris A. Soper, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Elmira Bassett against the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, STOCK-BRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Edw. J. Colgan, Jr., Asst. City Sol., of Baltimore (S. S. Field, City Sol., of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellants. William H. Lawrence, of Baltimore, for appellee.

CONSTABLE, J. The appellee recovered a judgment against the appellant as a result of personal injuries suffered by her through the alleged negligence of the appellant in permitting one of its thoroughfares to be, and remain for a long time, in an unsafe and dangerous condition. At the trial below, the appellant offered three prayers, each seeking to withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury; two upon the ground that there was no legally sufficient evidence to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and one for the reason that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. It is only upon the theory that the court committed error in refusing one or all of these prayers that this appeal is prosecuted.

[1, 2] This court and others have so often and so consistently declared the rule of law as to when cases should be withdrawn from the consideration of the jury for want of legal evidence, that it is only necessary to repeat the rule: and that is, if there be any evidence from which a rational conclusion may be drawn as opposed to the theory of the prayer, the weight and value of such evidence should be left for the consideration of the jury, and, before such a prayer can be granted, the court must assume the truth of all the evidence before the jury, tending to sustain the claim or defense, as the case may be, and of all inferences of fact fairly deducible from it. Jones v. Jones, 45 Md. 144; Balto. Elevator Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 459, 5 Atl. 338; Moyer v. Justis, 112 Md. 220, 76 Atl. 496; Balto. v. Leonard, 129 Md. 621, 99 Atl. 621.

[3] The duty of a municipality to keep its public streets and highways in a reasonably safe and proper condition for public travel is too well settled in this state, by numerous and recent decisions, to admit of any doubt; and if the municipality negligently fails to do so, and persons acting without negligence upon their part are injured, because of such negligence of the city, the municipality is liable in damages. Balto. v. Marriott, 9 Md. 160, 66 Am. Dec. 326; Hagerstown v. Klotz, 93 Md. 437, 49 Atl. 836, 64 L. R. A. 940, 86 Am. St. Rep. 437; Keen v. Havre de Grace, 93 Md. 84, 49 Atl. 444; Magaha v. Hagerstown, 95 Md. 70, 91 Atl. 832, 93 Am. St. Rep. 317; Annapolis v. Stallings, 125 Md. 346, 93 Atl. 974; Delmar v. Venables, 125 Md. 476, 94 Atl. 89; Gutowaki v. Balto., 127 Md. 502, 96 Atl. 630; Burke v. Balto., 127 Md. 560, 96 Atl. 693; Hagerstown v. Crowl, 128 Md. 556, 97 Atl. 544; Biggs v. Balto., 129 Md. 684, 99 Atl. 860.

The testimony tends to show that the plaintiff, a woman of 75 years of age, attempted to board a street car at the southwest corner of North and Moreland avenues in Baltimore City, during the afternoon of March 5, 1917. She had been walking up Moreland avenue, and at the corner of that avenue and North avenue left the curb of the pavement and hailed a car. It had been raining the morning of, and the night before, the day of the accident. From the curb to the car line is a distance of 15 or 20 feet. And in a direct line from the corner to the entrance of a car standing to take on passengers, and about midway between the curb and the car, was a hole in the concrete or macadam street bed, described by the witnesses as of a bowl shape, and variously described by them as from 3 to 5 feet in diameter and hollowed out, at its greatest depth in the center from 2 to 4 inches. Several of the witnesses, in locating its position, testified that, in making the car, a person either had to jump over it or walk around it. And it was further testified that the hole had been there for at least a year. The plaintiff testified that after she left the curb, and while looking for automobiles both ways, she stepped into the hole and fell, breaking one of her arms in three places. She testified that she was not familiar with the point in question before the accident, and knew nothing of the hole in her path to the car until just as she was about to place her foot in it, and then she could not hold herself back; that, because of the rain, the earth in it was muddy and looked perfectly safe, like the rest of the street, and she did not know there was a hole there until she was falling.

[4] The chief contention of the appellant seems to be based upon the theory that the court below should not have allowed the case to go to the jury upon what it claims to have been no evidence of negligence whatsoever, when the only proof of such is based upon "the existence of such an insignificant defect." We cannot agree with this argument. If the authorities, charged with the duty of using reasonable care in keeping the streets and highways in safe condition for the traveling public, likewise using due care, choose to permit a defect, such as described by the testimony in this case, to continue for months, then there is strong proof that they have negligently failed to perform their legal duties. The fact that an ordinance requires all street cars to stop on the near side of a cross street for receiving and discharging passengers should have called to the attention of the authorities that holes, located as this one, were especial menaces to those compelled to avail themselves of the cars.

[5] We also are of the opinion that the question vel non of contributory negligence was one to be presented to the jury; for, since pedestrians have rights in the streets equal to vehicles, they are justified in assuming that they will not be subjected to the dangers of a nuisance, such as the testimony showed the city permitted to exist at a point where those about to take a car had to come into contact with it; but this presumption, of course, does not authorize one to shut his eyes to open and obvious dangers, and pay no attention, whatever, to the condition of the highway in which defects may, although they should not, exist. Balto. Trust Co. v. Helms, 84 Md. 515, 36 Atl. 119, 36 L. R. A. 215; Magaha v. Hagerstown, 95 Md. 62, 51 Atl. 832, 93 Am. St. Rep. 817; Knight v. Balto. City, 97 Md. 647, 55 Atl. 388.

[6] We think the testimony bearing upon this point is such as to cause reasonable men to differ, and therefore, under the rule, should have been submitted.

Finding no error in the rulings of the court, we will affirm the judgment.

Judgment affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

(132 Md. 397)

SHAWMUT MINING CO. v. PADGETT.
(No. 13.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 2, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE §471(2) — CONCLUSIONS — DESIRE OF THIRD PERSON.

In action against alleged partnership, where one defendant denied relationship, testimony of the other defendant that there was no written partnership agreement, and that the other "did not want any writing," was properly stricken, on objection that witness did not say that the other partner did not state that he did not want a writing.

2. PARTNERSHIP §49 — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

General indefinite statement that it was the common talk in the city that one defendant was the partner of the other, not shown to have been brought to defendant's knowledge, was properly excluded.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §1048(6) — HARMLESS ERROR — CROSS-EXAMINATION — SCOPE.

In action against alleged partnership, where one partner, testifying as to financial condition of the firm, was asked whether he took the firm money and left town and was afraid to return, and the court stated that he need not answer as to his private affairs not connected with the matter in controversy, and the witness then answered that he took some money and was not afraid to return, and had returned to town, there was no reversible error.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR §1048(6) — HARMLESS ERROR — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

Where witness was permitted without objection to give testimony more harmful as affecting his credibility than that objected to, there was no reversible error in admitting the testimony objected to.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR §1050(1) — HARMLESS ERROR — EVIDENCE.

Where witness had previously testified that a third person was not his attorney, admission of letter denying that such person was his attorney was harmless.

6. WITNESSES \Leftarrow 198(1)—PRIVILEGE—ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

The privilege resulting from communications between attorney and client is designed to secure the client's confidence in the secrecy of his communication, but it assumes that the communications are made with the intention of confidentiality, and the moment confidence ceases, privilege ceases.

7. WITNESSES \Leftarrow 219(3)—PRIVILEGE—ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

The privilege of communications to an attorney is for the protection of the client, and he may waive it expressly or by implication; and, if he discloses as much as he pleases, he cannot withhold the remainder.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Chas. W. Heulsler, Judge.

Action by the Shawmut Mining Company against Robert J. Padgett and others. From the judgment for defendant Padgett, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

George M. Brady, of Baltimore (William M. Maloy and William W. Tewes, both of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. Vernon Cook and Enos S. Stockbridge, both of Baltimore (France, McLanahan & Rouzer, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

PATTISON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the defendant, Robert J. Padgett, in an action brought by the appellant, the Shawmut Mining Company, against William J. Llewellyn and Robert J. Padgett, copartners trading as William J. Llewellyn & Co.

The suit or action was brought upon the common money counts; but an account was filed with the declaration, showing that the claim sued on was for bricks sold by the plaintiff to William J. Llewellyn & Co.

The defendant Padgett filed three pleas: (1) That he never was indebted as alleged; (2) that he did not promise as alleged; (3) that he was not copartner of William J. Llewellyn, trading as William J. Llewellyn & Co., as alleged in the declaration. The defendant William J. Llewellyn declined to plead, and later, in open court, confessed judgment in favor of the plaintiff, upon the claim filed.

In the course of the trial there were 35 exceptions taken to the rulings of the court upon the evidence, and one upon the prayers.

[1] William J. Llewellyn, being produced by the plaintiff, testified as to the copartnership agreement. In the course of his testimony he was asked, "Was there any writing between you?" and he answered, "None whatever; Padgett did not want any writing." The defendant asked the court to strike out this answer, unless "the witness means to say that Mr. Padgett said so." There was no explanation given as to his meaning, and the answer was stricken out.

This forms the first exception. In this ruling of the court we discover no error. The court's ruling on the second exception was also proper.

[2] The third exception was to Llewellyn's statement that it was the common talk of Baltimore that Bob Padgett was his partner. This general, indefinite statement, not shown to have been brought to the knowledge of the defendant, was properly excluded.

The fourth exception is to the admissibility of a ledger of William J. Llewellyn & Co., offered in evidence by the defendant. This evidence may not have been material, but in its admission we find no reversible error.

The witness Llewellyn was, at the time he testified, a manufacturer's agent, with his offices in the city of New York. He had the agency for the sale of the goods of the St. Mary's Sewer Pipe Company and the Shawmut Mining Company. These agencies he had held since he left Baltimore, in 1914. In his examination in chief he testified, as we have said, to the existence of an oral copartnership agreement between him and Robert J. Padgett, by which the firm of W. J. Llewellyn & Co., consisting of Robert J. Padgett and himself, was created. He further testified that the affairs of the firm were managed by the witness, and the profits were equally divided between him and Padgett; that Padgett's share of the profits was paid to him in cash. The firm was engaged in the sale of bricks, cement, etc., and was agent for the Shawmut Mining Company, and for the sale of the Alpha Portland Cement. The copartnership agreement was made, as he stated, in May, 1918, and shipment of goods to the firm started September, 1909, and ceased September, 1911. Thereafter, in January, 1912, a corporation was formed, known as the Contractors' Supply Company, with W. J. Llewellyn as president and general manager. The books of the company did not show Padgett's connection with the firm, or that he shared in the profits of the company. This, as witness said, was in accord with the wishes of Padgett. Upon cross-examination Llewellyn testified that Padgett would never receive a check for his profits. He always took to him the cash. There was no regular time at which these settlements were made. "The account would be on a piece of paper, so much cement sold to this party, so much brick sold to this party; that Padgett would look at the account, and, after receiving the money, would tear it up; that he took no receipts from Padgett and made no entries on the firm's books." The money for goods sold by the firm was collected by Llewellyn, and the deposits in the bank were made subject to withdrawal by him only. The witness was then asked, "Can you explain how you were so much behind?" He replied that the money was used to further the political interest of Robert J. Padgett; that he himself gave to Padgett, in addition to his share of the profits, large sums of money, for such purposes. The witness was then asked, "When did you leave Baltimore?" "I went in 1913. * * * I have been living in New York now a little over two years." "When did you leave for good?" "I left in 1914, in the month of March." Question: "Did you leave Baltimore in December, 1913?" Answer: "Why, sure. I left several times. I left in December, 1913, with a $4,000 check in my pocket, certified to the order of the St. Mary's Sewer Pipe Company, to pay a debt for which I was obligated." Question: "Did you leave rather suddenly?" Answer: "No." "You did not say goodbye to any of your friends, did you?" "I told William Corey." Question: "Anybody else?" "I told my wife." Question: "You got another check cashed just before you left?" To this question the plaintiff's counsel objected, saying, "What has that to do with the case?" As the record discloses, the witness voluntarily said: "It has to do with the Llewellyn Case, that is, the Contractors' Supply Company. I will acknowledge taking money there. I will acknowledge that." Then followed a discussion as to the question asked, participated in by the court, as well as the counsel for the respective parties. At its conclusion the court said, addressing the defendant's counsel, "If any of your questions broach upon his private affairs not connected with this matter, he has the right to refuse to answer." The counsel for the defendant, dropping the question to which objection had been made, asked the witness, "What do you mean by that acknowledgment?" This question was objected to by the plaintiff's counsel, and, the objections being overruled, the fifth exception was taken thereto.

It will be observed that this question was directed to the answer of the witness, voluntarily made, in which he said: "I will acknowledge taking money there. I will acknowledge that." The witness answered the question objected to, saying that, "On the same day that I had this $4,000 check certified I also drew the pay roll of the Contractors' Supply Company, and also drew a check to my order, W. J. Llewellyn, for $1,300." This answer, given in explanation of the earlier answer of the witness, which was uncertain in its meaning, was not objected to, and the witness was permitted, without objections, to state further that he put the money in his pocket and went to his home, and that night he went to New York, from which place he returned to Baltimore on the 20th of December, and, after remaining in Baltimore for about two days, again went to New York, and in the latter part of the year 1914 ceased to make his home in Baltimore. The plaintiff's counsel, proceeding with the examination, asked "This $1,300.00 you took"—here the witness interrupted him saying, "Was the stock—I will finish that for you—Was the stock of the Contractors' Supply Company which I was entitled to." Question: "Did you tell anybody you were going to take it?" Answer: "I resigned on that date." Question: "Then you took the money and went off with it?" Answer: "I took it and got the money, cash." "Well now, Mr. Llewellyn, isn't it a fact, for a long time afterward you were afraid to come back to Baltimore for fear you would be arrested?" "No; I was here all the time." He was back in the office the following Wednesday. He did not fear arrest. The witness was then asked, "Isn't it a fact, with regard to the $1,300 check that you got that check signed in Baltimore by Mr. Corey, as secretary of the company, representing to him that it was to be used for pay roll, and that you then, instead of using it for pay roll, used it for your own personal benefit?" This question was objected to, and the court thereupon struck from the question the words, "And that you then, instead of using it for the pay roll, used it for your own personal benefit"; and the question, as amended, was propounded to the witness. The plaintiff again objected, and the court overruled his objection. This forms the sixth exception. He replied, in substance, saying there were two or three checks, drawn in blank, signed by William H. Corey, an officer of the corporation, authorized to sign checks. He could not recall whether he had demanded his check of $1,300 or not; that he asked Miss Thompson, an employé in the office, to fill in a check to the St. Mary's Sewer Pipe Company, but she refused, saying, "They (meaning others interested in the company) did not want her to." He then filled in the check himself, for the sum of $4,000 to St. Mary's Sewer Pipe Company, and also filled in another to himself, W. J. Llewellyn, for $1,300; that the representations made to Corey to have him sign the checks were those ordinarily made; that is, that he wanted so many checks. He was not told for what he wanted them.

[3] We have gone very fully into the evidence leading up to the fifth and sixth exceptions, in order that it may be seen whether the answers to the questions objected to, when considered in connection with the evidence admitted without objections, injuriously affected the plaintiff, even though it should be held that the defendant pursued this line of questioning beyond what he should have done. In view of the evidence preceding the question involved in the fifth exception, and the doubtful character of the answer of the witness, voluntarily given, to which the question was directed to ascertain its meaning, and the statement of the court that the witness was not required to answer the question if it involved his private affairs, not connected with the matter in controversy, the court, in our opinion, committed no reversible error in permitting the question to be asked.

[4] As we have already said, no objection was made to the answer involved in the fifth exception, and the witness was permitted thereafter to state facts that, without explanation, were more harmful to the character of the witness, as affecting his credibility, and more injurious to the plaintiff's case, by reason thereof, than the answer to the question objected to in the sixth exception; and, consequently, we can find no reversible error in the court's ruling upon the sixth exception.

The ruling of the court upon the seventh exception was entirely proper upon cross-examination.

The eighth exception was to the admissibility of a letter from Hecht to the witness Yates. It was offered and admitted to refresh the memory of Yates as to a meeting with Hecht at the Caswell Hotel on January 14, 1917. We find nothing in its contents to injure the plaintiff.

[5] The ninth exception is to the admissibility of another letter of March 21, 1914, from Yates, manager of the Shawmut Mining Company, to Hecht, in which he denied having employed Hecht as his attorney. He had previously stated in his testimony that Hecht was not his attorney, and consequently this admission of the letter could not have injured the plaintiff.

We discover no error in the court's rulings in the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth exceptions.

The fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second exceptions are to conversations had by the witness Hecht with Yates, which are claimed by the plaintiff to be privileged communications, because of the alleged relation of attorney and client existing between Hecht and Yates. Yates was the agent of the Shawmut Mining Company, and it was with him that Llewellyn did all of his dealings in connection with the purchase of the goods mentioned in the account, filed with the declaration, upon which this suit is instituted. Yates, produced on the part of the plaintiff, had already testified as to the existence of a copartnership between Padgett and Llewellyn, and had been asked concerning conversations with Hecht, which, as claimed by the defendant, were inconsistent with any knowledge, on his part, of any such copartnership. There were no objections interposed thereto, or any claim made at the time, that said conversations were privileged communications, because of the relation of attorney and client, existing between them; but Yates, on the contrary, denied that Hecht was at the time of such conversations, his attorney. He said of Hecht that he never regarded him as of any consequence whatever, beyond that of an office boy for Mr. Padgett, that he did not place any great stock in Mr. Hecht, and concluded by saying that Hecht "never was a recognized attorney of mine."

[6, 7] The privilege resulting from communications between attorney and client is designed to secure the client's confidence in the secrecy of his communication, but it assumes, of course, that the communications are made with the intention of confidentiality. The moment confidence ceases privilege ceases. Wigmore on Evidence, § 2311. If Yates did not recognize Hecht as his attorney, the communications were not made to him as his attorney, and consequently such circumstances were without that confidentiality that is requisite, under the rule, to make it a privileged communication. It may also be said that while the privilege is for the protection of the client, he may waive the privilege, and this may be done by implication; for instance, he cannot be allowed, after disclosing as much as he pleases, to withhold the remainder. In view of the testimony of Yates, the evidence admitted under these exceptions was properly admitted.

We find no error in the court's ruling in the exclusion of evidence offered in the twenty-third, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth exceptions.

The court's rulings in admitting the evidence in the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth, and its excluding the evidence offered under the thirtieth and thirty-first exceptions, were proper.

The thirty-second and thirty-third exceptions were to the exclusion of evidence offered in rebuttal, which evidence was properly excluded, and the same may be said of the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth exceptions.

The thirty-sixth exception goes to the ruling of the court upon the defendant's first and second prayers that were granted, and the plaintiff's second prayer that was refused. The defendant's first prayer relates to the burden of proof, and we are unable to find any error committed by the court in granting that instruction; nor do we find any defect in the defendant's second prayer, to which the appellant, in its brief, makes no allusion.

Both the granted and rejected prayers of the plaintiff appear to have been drawn upon the theory that there was a plea of limitations in the case, but there was none. It is, however, only to the second or rejected prayer that our attention need be given; and this prayer was properly rejected.

There is a motion in this case to dismiss the appeal, involving not only the construction of chapter 625 of the Acts of 1916, but the validity of that act. These questions will be disposed of in an opinion hereafter to be delivered in a case now pending before us; and, as it is our opinion that the judgment below in this case should be affirmed regardless of our views of the questions raised by the motion to dismiss, it is not necessary to discuss the motion.

Having found no error in the rulings of the court below, the judgment of that court will be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs to the appellees.

(132 Md. 497)

NORTHERN CENTRAL RY. CO. et al. v.
MAYOR, ETC., OF BALTIMORE.
(No. 37.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 8, 1918.)

TAXATION — 391—VALUATION OF RAILROAD'S LAND.

Under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 23, § 818, and article 81, § 193, providing for assessing and taxing a railroad's property in the same manner as that of individuals, special utility, for railroad purposes, of a railroad's land, is to be considered in determining value.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Carroll T. Bond, Judge.

Tax proceedings by the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore against the Northern Central Railway Company and another. The court affirmed the assessment, and the Railroad Companies appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, O. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, TURNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Shirley Carter, of Baltimore (Bernard Carter & Sons, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellants. R. Contee Rose, Asst. City Sol., of Baltimore (S. S. Field, City Sol., of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

PATTISON, J. The Northern Central Railway Company, of which the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is lessee, is the owner of a number of lots or parcels of land in the city of Baltimore, lying and being in Jones Falls valley. In the year 1916 these parcels of land were assessed by the appeal tax court of Baltimore city for municipal taxation at amounts largely in excess of the assessment upon which the taxes had been previously paid. The Northern Central Railway Company and its lessee, being dissatisfied with the assessment, appealed to the state tax commission. The tax commission heard testimony, offered by each of the parties to the proceedings, as to the value of the real estate mentioned, and the city, as well as the railroad company, submitted to the commission propositions of law by which they respectively contended the taxing authorities should be governed in their valuation and assessment of the properties for the purpose of taxation. The only proposition submitted by the railroad company was that:

"The tax authorities of the city of Baltimore were and are required to assess the real property of the appellant railroad company in the same manner as of like property of individuals."

This submission, being in the form of a prayer, was granted by the commission.

Several propositions of law were submitted by the city, but the only one we think necessary to discuss, in view of the real contention of the parties, is the instruction asked for, and granted by the commission:

"That the utility of the property in this appeal for railroad purposes is a proper element of value to be considered in arriving at the value of said property for the purpose of taxation for the year 1917."

The tax commission affirmed the action of the appeal tax court in the assessment made by it, and the railroad company appealed therefrom to the Baltimore city court. That court, to which the case was submitted for trial without the intervention of a jury, upon the evidence produced before the tax commission, affirmed the assessment, and this appeal is from the action of the court in affirming the rulings of the commission upon the propositions of law submitted to it.

The sole question before us upon this appeal is whether the taxing authorities, in making the assessment complained of, followed the provisions of the statute. Section 193 of article 81, and section 313 of article 23, of the Code of Public General Laws of 1912. The language of these sections, having relation to the questions before us, is the same, and is as follows:

"The property, real and personal, of each and every railroad company in this state, working their roads by steam, shall be assessed and taxed for county and municipal purposes in the same manner as the property of individuals is now assessed and taxed; and the authorities of the several counties and the city of Baltimore are hereby authorized and directed to proceed to assess and collect taxes on said property in the same manner as upon like property of individuals now assessed and taxed or liable to assessment and taxation by the laws of this state."

The requirement of the statute is that the aforesaid property of the appellant shall be assessed and taxed for municipal purposes in the same manner as the property of individuals is now assessed and taxed, and that the city is authorized and directed to proceed to assess and collect taxes on the same in the same manner as upon like property of individuals. The appellants interpret or construe this language as prohibiting the taxing authorities from considering the utility of the property for railroad purposes in ascertaining its value for municipal taxation. The correctness of this contention it would seem, depends upon the question whether, under the law of this state, the taxing authorities, in valuing and assessing like property of individuals for municipal taxation, are authorized to consider its utility for railroad purposes.

The question, therefore, to be decided, is: How and in what manner are lands owned by individuals valued and assessed, under the laws of this state, for municipal taxation? In assessing real estate of individuals for the purpose of taxation, its full cash value is to be ascertained (chapter 120 of the Acts of 1896) without looking to a forced sale; and in ascertaining its value all utilities of which the property is capable, and which have the effect of enhancing its value, are elements to be considered. Brack v. Baltimore, 125 Md. 382, 93 Atl. 994, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 880; Bonaparte v. Baltimore, 131 Md. 80, 101 Atl. 594, and cases therein cited. If the lots of land in question, which are shown to possess special utility for railroad purposes by all the witnesses who testified before the commission were owned by individuals, there could be no doubt as to the authority of the taxing powers to consider that utility in ascertaining their value for taxable purposes; or if there are other lots owned by individuals, similarly located in Jones Falls valley, possessing special utility for railroad purposes, the taxing powers of the city have the undoubted authority to consider that utility in ascertaining the value of such lots for taxable purposes.

It is not, as suggested by the appellants' counsel, the increased value of the lots of land, resulting from the fact that they are parts or units of the railroad system, which the commission has said may be considered in ascertaining their value; but it is the utility they possess for railroad purposes, without regard to the fact that said lots of land are parts or units of the railroad system. The natural depression in which the lands are situated or located, running through the city, affords great advantages for the construction and operation of a railroad leading into the very heart of the city. It is this high, special utility for railroad purposes that we have said may be considered in ascertaining the value of the land in question, and such utility exists whether the lands are owned by the railroad company or by individuals; and, as such utility may be considered in ascertaining the value of lands owned by individuals, it, under the statute, may in the same manner be considered in assessing the lands of the railroad company.

There were other propositions of law submitted to and passed upon by the state tax commission, but we find no error in the commission's rulings thereon, which were affirmed by the court below, or, if so, no error by which the appellants were injured.

There is a motion in the record to dismiss the appeal, but, owing to the importance of the question presented, we have thought it best to decide it, and in so doing it is necessary for us to pass upon the motion to dismiss the appeal, as we will affirm the ruling of the lower court.

Ruling of the court below affirmed, with costs to the appellees.

(132 Md. 476)

BOGGS v. DUNDALK REALTY CO., Inc
(No. 29.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 8, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶718(1)—RECORD.

Where the order appealed from, dismissing the petition, gave no leave to amend the bill, an amended bill in the record will not be considered.

2. ACCOUNT ¶17(1)—PETITION—FRAUD.

Option holder's petition for accounting, etc., setting up fraud, but no facts to show a sufficient basis for charge of fraud, is demurrable.

3. EQUITY ¶71(2) — LACHES — LENGTH OF TIME.

What constitutes laches is not a hard and fast rule of a specific length of time, as in the case of limitations; but it is dependent in each case upon the facts of the particular case.

4. EQUITY ¶71(3)—LACHES—DELAY.

Where plaintiff, after three years, charged that transaction relating to land option contract was fraudulent, but made no explanation for the delay, a clear case of laches was apparent.

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶28(1) — CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—DEFINITENESS.

Specific performance can be granted only where the contract is definite and certain in all its parts.

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶114(2) — PLEADING.

Bill alleging that certain definite agreements were to be set aside for the purpose of entering into a new agreement, which failed to indicate the terms of the new agreement, did not entitle plaintiff to specific performance, which can be granted only where the contract is definite and certain in all its parts.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Baltimore County; Allan McLane, Judge.

Bill by A. Graham Boggs, Jr., against the Dundalk Realty Company, Incorporated. Judgment dismissing the complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Edgar Allan Poe, of Baltimore, for appellant. Robert H. Carr, of Baltimore (T. Scott Offutt, of Towson, on the brief), for appellee.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. This case was begun by the filing of a petition in the nature of a bill of complaint, to which a demurrer was interposed. The demurrer was sustained, and petition dismissed, in the circuit court for Baltimore county, sitting in equity.

[1, 2] The sustaining of the demurrer and the dismissal of the petition was on the 9th of July, 1917. On the 7th of September, 1917, and thus after the order had become enrolled, upon the petition of the complainant, the order of July 9th was revoked, and leave granted to file an amended bill of complaint, and on the day following, according to the docket entries, an appeal was taken to this court from the decree previously entered in Baltimore county. At the time when the appeal was so taken, there was nothing from which the petitioner could appeal. On September 20th the order passed on the 7th of the month was rescinded, the effect of which was to leave the case in the condition it was prior to the order of the 7th of September. The case will accordingly be considered as though the order of September 7th had never been passed.

[3] There appears in the record an amended bill, but the order of July 9th gave no leave to amend the bill, but dismissed the petition, and the amended petition bears this indorsement, "This paper was filed by the clerk without leave of court being first had and obtained," signed by Judge McLane. For the purposes of the case, therefore, this so-called "amended petition" will not be considered.

The original petition was drawn with no attempt at compliance with the general equity rules. It alleges in substance that on the 1st of August, 1913, the appellee gave to the appellant an option or right of purchase for a parcel of ground in Baltimore county, of approximately 29 acres, situate at Dundalk, for which the petitioner was to pay $500 an acre, and make certain payments on account of the purchase price of the land in accordance with the agreement. Exhibit A, filed with the petition, purports to be a copy of that agreement. When that is examined, it appears to be an agreement between the Dundalk Realty Company and the Branch Real Estate Company, per A. S. J. Jakeman, and in which the name of the petitioner nowhere appears. The agreement specifically provides that the option given by it is not to run over six months, and that, in order to keep it alive, $100 is to be paid on September 1, 1913, $200 to be paid on October 1, 1913, $300 on November 1, 1913, and that any money paid on account of the option is to be credited on the purchase price of the land, if a sale is effected under the option.

The petition further sets forth that $100 was paid on September 1, 1913, an offer made to pay the Realty Company $200 on the 1st of October, according to the terms of the option, but that the Dundalk Company declined to receive the same, and that several attempts were subsequently made to induce the Dundalk Company to accept the $200, but were declined, and that thereafter the company endeavored to cancel its contract, on the ground that the petitioner had not made the payments as agreed. On the 24th of October, 1913, an agreement was entered into between the Dundalk Company and Albert S. J. Jakeman, trading as the Branch Real Estate Company, reciting the agreement of August 1st, and that Jakeman had failed to comply with the terms thereof, so that it had become null and void, and that the payment of $100 had become forfeited to the Realty Company by reason of the noncompliance with the conditions named in the agreement of August 1st.

This paper, filed as Plaintiff's Exhibit B, gives an option to Jakeman to purchase the 29 acres referred to in the agreement of August 1st for the sum of $22,000, and contains provisions by which Jakeman should have the right to sell off the land in small lots, in accordance with a survey and division of the lands which had been made at the instance of Jakeman, and from the purchase money paid for such lots sold $650 was to be paid to secure the surrender by the tenant then in possession, certain amounts to the Dundalk Realty Company, which was thereupon to secure, as to the lots so sold and paid for, releases of two mortgages which were upon the land, and the entire purchase price of $22,000 was to be paid before July 1, 1914. The party of the second part to this agreement, Jakeman, trading as the Branch Real Estate Company, was to lay out and grade streets in 20 ¹⁸/₁₀₀ acres of the land, and to cause to be laid cement sidewalks upon said streets. This agreement was not to be assignable without the written consent of the Dundalk Company. The agreement was signed by the Dundalk Realty Company, by its president, and Albert S. J. Jakeman, trading as "Branch Real Estate Company."

A month and a day later, namely, November 25, 1913, this agreement was indorsed, "Canceled. A. Graham Boggs, Jr., Albert S. J. Jakeman." This is the first time that Mr. Boggs appears in the transaction. What his interest was is nowhere set out. On the same day, November 25th, Messrs. Jakeman and Boggs, for themselves and the Branch Real Estate Company, signed a release, declaring both of the agreements, that of August 1st and October 24th, null and void, and releasing the Dundalk Realty Company from any and all claims arising out of said agreements, and on the day following another release was executed by Jakeman and Boggs, reciting the failure of the Branch Real Estate Company to comply with the terms of the agreement, declaring the agreements null and void, and releasing any claim that they might have against the Dundalk Realty Company. The petition further recites that these releases were given upon an agreement to execute a new contract later in the day than the time when the releases were signed, but that such contract had never been executed, and apparently not even prepared.

There is no allegation or suggestion as to what the terms of the new contract were to be, nor anything from which an inference could be drawn with regard to the terms or conditions to be included in it. The petition further sets out that the Dundalk Realty Company has collected large sums of money on account of sales of the land made by the petitioner through its agent, which sums the petitioner believes would be more than sufficient to pay any balance due on the purchase price, and that the petitioner has made frequent demands for an accounting and been refused, and it concludes with the following prayers:

"(1) That an order may be passed by this court requiring the said Dundalk Realty Company to give to your petitioner an accounting of the moneys received on account of the purchase price of the said land as set forth in the above petition.

"(2) That the said Dundalk Realty Company be enjoined from disposing of the said land in disregard of your petitioner's rights.

"(3) That the said Dundalk Realty Company be ordered to convey the said land to your petitioner by a good and merchantable title.

"(4) And that your petitioner may have such other and further relief as his case may require."

[4] The petition in the case was filed on the 18th of December, 1916, more than three years after the release given by Boggs and Jakeman to the Dundalk Company. The argument is that these releases were procured by fraud, and the allegation in the petition is that the Dundalk Company endeavored to commit a fraud upon the petitioner; but there are no facts set forth in the petition, and the exhibits filed with it, to show a sufficient basis for any charge of fraud, and the petition was clearly demurrable. American Surety Co. v. Spice, 119 Md. 1, 85 Atl. 1031.

[5.6] Nor is there any attempt to explain away the long lapse of time between the execution of the releases and the institution of this suit. What constitutes laches is not a hard and fast rule of a specific length of time, as in the case of limitations, but it is dependent in each case upon the facts of the particular case. Warburton v. Davis, 123 Md. 231, 91 Atl. 163. A lapse of several years may in some cases be free from objection on this ground; in others a much shorter time, as in Whiteford v. Yellott, 104 Md. 191, 64 Atl. 936, where a delay of two years was held to bar the plaintiff from recovery, and there are cases where an interval of days has been held to constitute laches. In the present case the plaintiff alleges that he was deceived and defrauded, yet he permits more than three years to pass before he attempts to enforce his rights, if he had any. No explanation is offered for the delay, and, in the absence of any attempt to account for the inaction during this period, a clear case of laches is apparent on the face of the petition.

[7] If this could be regarded as a bill for specific performance, it would be on that ground also open to demurrer. That relief can be granted only for the enforcement of a definite agreement, certain in all its parts. The allegations of the bill in this case are that the agreements of August and October, 1913, were both to be set aside for the purpose of entering into a new agreement; but the terms of such new agreement are not indicated in any particular. To a case of this character the language of Alvey, O. J., in Coleman v. Applegarth, 93 Md. 21, 11 Atl. 284, 6 Am. St. Rep. 417, is entirely applicable:

"The contract set up is not one of sale and purchase, but simply for the option to purchase within a specified time and for a given price. It was unilateral, and binding upon one party only. There was no mutuality in it, and it was binding upon A. only for the time stipulated for the exercise of the option. After the lapse of the time given there was nothing to bind him to accept the price and convey the property; and the fact that this unilateral agreement was reduced to writing added nothing to give it force or operative effect beyond the time therein limited for the exercise of the option by the plaintiff. * * * When the time limited expired, the contract was at an end and the right of option gone, if that right had not been extended by some valid binding agreement, that can be enforced. This would seem to be the plain dictate of reason, upon the terms and nature of the contract itself."

See, to the same effect, Maughlin v. Perry, 35 Md. 352.

No error can be imputed to the court below for its ruling in this case, and the order appealed from will therefore be affirmed.

Order affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

(132 Md. 571)

NEUDECKER v. LEISTER. (No. 54.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 4, 1918.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE — PERSONAL SERVICES — PRESUMPTIONS.

Where a niece agrees with her aunt to board and lodge the aunt for the remainder of her life and to render her personal services, such services are not presumptively gratuitous; the kinship not being sufficiently close to create of itself the presumption.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE — PERSONAL SERVICES.

In an action by a decedent's niece against the executrix to recover for services rendered decedent under a promise to provide for plaintiff in the will together with other nieces, that decedent left all her property to the niece with whom she last lived did not affect plaintiff's right to recover the fair value of services performed by her.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — ACTIONS AGAINST EXECUTOR — PERSONAL SERVICES — CONTRACT TO MAKE WILL.

Where decedent had promised to provide for her niece by will in consideration of personal services, plaintiff could sue the executrix for the value of such services, although no recovery could be had on the contract to make a will; that being in parol.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE — RIGHT OF WIFE TO SUE.

Under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 45, § 5, empowering married women to engage in any business and to contract and sue as if unmarried, a married woman may in her own name instead of that of her husband maintain a suit against an executrix to recover for personal services rendered decedent, with her husband's consent, for a consideration passing to her personally.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carroll County; Robert Moss, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by Cora V. Neudecker against Sarah A. Leister, executrix of the last will of Sarah A. Noll, deceased. From a verdict directed for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Guy W. Steele, of Westminster, for appellant. Francis Neal Parke, of Westminster (Ivan L. Hoff and James A. C. Bond, both of Westminster, on the brief), for appellee.

URNER, J. The appellant, Cora V. Neudecker, brought this suit against the appellee, as the executrix of the will of Sarah A. Noll, deceased, to recover $407.10 for board and lodging furnished, and personal services rendered, to the decedent in her lifetime, during the period of three months in the year 1912, and about one year and ten months from September 7, 1913, to July 26, 1915, at the rate of $18 per month. It is stated in the declaration, and in the open account therewith filed, that the accommodations and attentions sued for were provided in pursuance of an agreement that the plaintiff should be compensated therefor by the defendant's testatrix in her will, but that she died without making such compensation by will or in any other manner. The case was withdrawn from the jury on the ground that there was no legally sufficient evidence to sustain the plaintiff's claim. The only exception in the record questions the propriety of that ruling.

There is no dispute in the evidence that the board, lodging, and services for which the plaintiff is suing were actually furnished and rendered to the extent and value claimed, but recovery was successfully resisted on the theory that these provisions for the support and comfort of the decedent were in fact made gratuitously, and that her failure to make an expected disposition in the plaintiff's favor by will is not an adequate legal basis upon which the present suit may be maintained.

The record shows that the decedent, Sarah A. Noll, was a widow without children, and had four nieces, one of whom was Mrs. Neudecker, the plaintiff, and there is evidence to the effect that prior to the first of the periods to which the account in suit refers she told the plaintiff that she would divide her estate among the nieces if they would keep her during her life. There were subsequent statements by Mrs. Noll to the plaintiff that she could not pay at the time for what was being done for her, but that she would give the plaintiff something by her will. The other nieces were Mrs. Leister, Mrs. Basler, and Mrs. Close. Each of the four nieces was substantially remembered by a will executed by Mrs. Noll in 1911. From that time until her death in November, 1915, she lived alternately with Mrs. Basler, Mrs. Neudecker, and Mrs. Leister. In 1913 she made a will giving her estate to those three nieces, but by her last will dated July 31, 1915, she gave her property wholly to Mrs. Leister, with whom she was then living. The proof is that during the periods of Mrs. Noll's sojourn in Mrs. Neudecker's home she was "treated as one of the family," but she "never helped around the house or did any kind of work," except that "occasionally she might have made up her bed." She was about 80 years of age when she went to the home of Mrs. Neudecker in 1912. While she remained there, during both of the periods mentioned, she received, in addition to her board and lodging, the benefit of the services of Mrs. Neudecker and other members of the family in doing her laundry work, sweeping her room, waiting on her, and giving her whatever attention she needed.

[1] It does not seem to us that the services thus rendered should be regarded as presumptively gratuitous. The kinship of Mrs. Neudecker to her aunt was not sufficiently close to create of itself such a presumption. This was expressly decided in the case of Bonic v. Maught, 76 Md. 440, 25 Atl. 423, where a niece was suing for personal care and attention bestowed upon her invalid aunt, who was a boarder in the home of the plaintiff's mother, and where it was said, in the opinion by Chief Judge Alvey:

"It is not to be inferred, simply from the relation that existed in this case between the parties, that the services were intended to be gratuitous, and were rendered with no view of compensation."

It is true that even in the case of a more remote kinship, or as between persons not related in blood or by marriage, the inference that particular services were intended to be gratuitous may arise when the domestic associations of the parties involve the usual incidents of family relationship. Pearre v. Smith, 110 Md. 531, 73 Atl. 141; Harper v. Davis, 115 Md. 349, 80 Atl. 1012, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1026, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 861; Elosser v. Fletcher, 126 Md. 244, 94 Atl. 776. But, except where the natural or actual relations of persons as members of the same family are such as to raise the presumption that their services were designed or understood to be gratuitous, "the law implies a promise to pay for services rendered and accepted, and the burden is on the party resisting the payment to show that no charge was to be made, if the rendition and acceptance of the services are proven." Marx v. Marx, 127 Md. 373, 96 Atl. 544; Harper v. Davis, supra; Wallace v. Schaub, 81 Md. 598, 32 Atl. 324; Gill v. Staylor, 93 Md. 472, 49 Atl. 650; Bixler v. Sellman, 77 Md. 496, 27 Atl. 137.

[2] In this case it appears that an aged aunt, after proposing that she would divide her estate among her four nieces if they would keep her during the remainder of her life, was received and cared for alternately by the plaintiff and two of the other nieces until the time of her death. The circumstances of her admission to the plaintiff's home, and the conditions under which she lived during the periods which she selected for her sojourn there, were not such, in our opinion, as to justify a conclusion, as a matter of law, that the care and attention thus received by the aunt were to be provided without compensation. There was a distinct promise in advance by the aunt to the definite effect that she would bequeath a due proportion of her estate to the plaintiff in consideration of the services and accommodations which the latter in fact subsequently rendered and furnished as required. The position accorded the aunt in the plaintiff's home was thoroughly consistent with the theory that both expected compensation to be made in the manner and to the extent which the aunt had proposed. The mere fact that the aunt failed to make the promised division of her estate among the nieces who kept her in accordance with her request, but left all her property to the niece with whom she was living at the time of her death, does not affect the plaintiff's right to recover the fair value of the services performed and accepted under the circumstances described.

[3] In Hamilton v. Thirston, 93 Md. 213, 48 Atl. 700, an uncle had agreed by parol to give his nephew by will a portion of his estate equal to that of any of his children, if the nephew would render certain services as requested during the remainder of the uncle's life. The nephew performed the desired services, but the uncle died without making the promised provision for the nephew by will or otherwise. In an action at law brought by the nephew to recover a portion of the uncle's estate according to the terms of the agreement referred to, it was held that while no recovery could be allowed on parole contract, because it was within the operation of the statute of frauds, yet the plaintiff was entitled to sue for the value of his services rendered in pursuance of the uncle's proposal. This just principle is appropriate to the facts of the present case.

[4] It has been argued that, if a right of recovery be assumed, it can only be asserted by the plaintiff's husband. This contention is based upon the theory that the husband is entitled to the benefit of his wife's services, and that she cannot recover for them without proving that they were rendered by her as an independent person on her own account in accordance with an understanding between herself and her husband to that effect. In support of this view, the appellee cites the cases of Neale v. Hermanns, 65 Md. 474, 5 Atl. 424; Poffenberger v. Poffenberger, 72 Md. 321, 19 Atl. 1043; Baker v. Hedrich, 85 Md. 661, 37 Atl. 363; and Herman v. Oehrl, 116 Md. 512, 82 Atl. 161. Those cases were quite different in their facts from the case now being considered. In none of the cases just cited were the services of the wife rendered with her husband's consent for a promised consideration which it was expressly proposed and mutually understood that she should separately receive. Such an understanding is one of the distinctive features of the case at bar. In our judgment the wife should be permitted to maintain the suit, under the circumstances proven, and in view of the provision of article 45, § 5, of the Code, that:

"Married women shall have power to engage in any business, and to contract, whether engaged in business or not, and to sue upon their contracts, and also to sue for the recovery, security or protection of their property, and for torts committed against them, as fully as if they were unmarried."

Judgment reversed, and new trial awarded.

(123 Md. 483)

THOMPSON v. THOMAS & THOMPSON
CO. OF BALTIMORE CITY et al.

(No. 34.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)

1. TENANCY IN COMMON ¶49—RIGHTS OF COTENANT.

A tenant in common has no right to bind the interest of his cotenant by a lease of the premises.

2. TENANCY IN COMMON ¶49—RIGHTS OF COTENANT—LEASES—RATIFICATION.

Where a cotenant accepted rent money under a lease executed by the other cotenant without authority, she ratified the lease, since ratification may occur by acts as well as agreement.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶150—
POWERS—LEASE OF LAND.

Will empowering executrix, for purpose of changing investments or making division, "to sell and lease any part or all of the property, subject to the approval of the court," did not require court approval for a lease made without purpose of changing investment or dividing the estate.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ¶25—CONTRACT ENFORCEABLE—LEASE BY COTENANTS.

Lessee of premises owned by cotenants, one of whom was an executrix with limited powers, who ratified the lease made by cotenant by receiving the rent money, the lease providing for 10-year renewal, held entitled to specific performance of a renewal lease.

5. PLEADING ¶261—ANSWER—AMENDMENT.

Where landlord's answer admitted the validity of a lease, by admitting receipt of the rent money during the initial 5-year period, the lease having provided for a renewal for 10 years, the landlord was properly refused permission to amend by reciting fraud, making the lease void ab initio.

Appeal from Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City; Henry Duffy, Judge.

Bill by the Thomas & Thompson Company of Baltimore City and another against Kate Thompson. Decree for complainants, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, and STOOKBRIDGE, JJ.

J. Cookman Boyd, of Baltimore, for appellant. Frank Gosnell and William Pepper Constable, both of Baltimore (Marbury, Gosnell & Williams, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. The questions of law involved in this appeal are not difficult, and have been settled as far as this state is concerned by the cases of Falck v. Barlow, 110 Md. 159, 72 Atl. 678, 17 Ann. Cas. 538, King v. Kaiser, 126 Md. 213, 94 Atl. 780, and Read v. Nattans, 129 Md. 67, 98 Atl. 158, and 130 Md. 470, 100 Atl. 736. The bill of complaint is one for specific performance. It will suffice to refer very briefly to certain prominent facts appearing from the exhibits and evidence, to make entirely plain the proper application of the legal principles as set out in the cases already mentioned.

Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1 purports to be an agreement to lease certain premises, known as No. 103 East Baltimore street, by John B. Thomas and Kate Thompson, trustee, to the Thomas & Thompson Company. It is dated May 10, 1910, and appears to have been intended as a lease of the cellar and first floor of 103 East Baltimore street, for a term of 5 years, at a rental of $3,600 per annum, for the half interest of the appellant herein, and further to be a lease for 10 years, commencing at the expiration of the 5 years, at an annual rental of $4,000, for the same half interest. This agreement was not acknowledged by either John B. Thomas or the Thomas & Thompson Company until the 21st day of March, 1917, and was never acknowledged at any time by Mrs. Kate Thompson, as trustee. The appellant claims that the paper referred to is not a valid lease, because not in accordance with section 1 of article 21 of the Code. There is no allegation that the rent stipulated is inadequate, or that any of the conditions embodied are unjust or unfair to the appellant.

It is unnecessary to consider whether the paper was a valid lease for the original 5-year term, from June 1, 1910, to June 1, 1915, for the reason that that term has fully expired, the rent been paid and accepted, and that question would at this time be purely academic. All that this case can properly deal with, therefore, is as to the effect of Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1 as creating a lease, or an agreement to lease, for the ten-year period beginning June 1, 1915. That it does not comply with the provisions of the Code, supra, necessary to constitute it a valid lease, is perfectly plain. At the same time, if the paper is adequate in other respects, it may constitute a perfectly good agreement to enter into a lease in accordance with the terms set forth, an agreement such as a court of equity will specifically enforce.

[1, 2] Mention has already been made of the fact that this agreement, though signed by Mrs. Thompson, was never acknowledged by her. Mr. Thomas and Mrs. Thompson, as life tenant and trustee under the will of her husband, were tenants in common of the property. As such, Mr. Thomas, of course, had no right to bind the interest of his cotenant by any lease of the premises. This situation might have been made a ground of defense by the appellant, but no stress was laid upon it, either in the argument before the court or in the brief filed by her counsel. If there had been, it would have been a sufficient answer to say that the appellant, by receiving the rental of $4,000 per annum down to the time of the bringing of this suit, had ratified the agreement, for a ratification may be established by acts as well as by parol or by written agreement. See 7 R. O. L. 877, Fellow v. Arctic Iron Co., 164 Mich. 87, 128 N. W. 918, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 573, and elaborate note appended thereto, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 827, and McDonald v. Finseth, 32 N. D. 400, 155 N. W. 863, L. R. A. 1916D, 149, in which a very able opinion was filed by Bruce, J., reviewing nearly all of the authorities.

What actually took place in this case was a notice, dated December 2, 1916, from Kate Thompson, trustee, to the Thomas & Thompson Company, to vacate the premises on the 31st of May, 1917. This notice referred to the agreement, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, already mentioned, and by inference ratified that agreement as a lease for 5 years, and then seeks to treat the appellee company as being a tenant holding over, and therefore a tenant from year to year. The communication of Mr. Boyd, which accompanied the notice, speaks of the agreement as a "supposed lease," for a period of 15 years. The instrument to which this refers makes no mention of a term of 15 years; that duration can only be arrived at by combining the two terms named therein, and for which terms the amount of rental payable was not the same. This notice having been served, the appellee, on the 30th of April, 1917, filed the bill in this case, by the prayers of which the following relief was asked: An injunction against the appellant to restrain any proceedings at law for the recovery of the premises, and a decree for a specific performance or execution of a lease, "in conformity with the terms of Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1. The answer, after admitting a number of the allegations contained in the bill, relies mainly upon two grounds: First, that under the terms of the will of her husband, Albert E. Thompson, she was without power to enter into such an agreement as that proposed; and the second ground of defense was as to the proper rule of law applicable to such cases.

[3] The will of Mr. Thompson, in so far as it places a limitation on the power of his executrix and trustee to deal with the property, is as follows:

"I hereby confer upon my executrix, or her successor in charge of my estate, full power and authority for the purpose of changing the investments of my estate so left, or for the purpose of making division thereof, to sell and lease any part or all of the property so held, subject, however, to the approval of the court."

The defendant claims that, no authority of the court having been given, such an agreement of lease as that now involved would be an ultra vires act. This, however, is a misconception of the plain intent of the testator. The approval of the court was evidently intended to apply only to the sale of property for the purpose of reinvestment, or a partition of the estate. The proposed agreement is neither; it looks only to obtaining a proper and adequate return from the estate, as it had been held by the testator, without any reference to a change of investment or partition.

[4] The legal requirements for the maintenance of a bill for specific performance have been so frequently repeated in this court that it would be a work of supererogation to again recite them. They were tersely stated in King v. Kaiser, supra, when it was said:

"To maintain a bill for specific performance it is requisite * * * that the agreement, which the court is asked to require to be performed, must be fair, just, reasonable, bona fide, certain in all its parts, and made upon a good and valuable consideration."

Tested by these requirements, and the evidence given at the trial of this case, there is not an element lacking upon which to base a refusal of a decree such as that asked for.

[5] Much of the contention at the trial of this case below grew out of an application for leave to amend the answer of Mrs. Thompson, as trustee, and the amendment desired was the insertion in that answer of the following language:

"And that at and before the time of the signing of the alleged lease she asked the said John B. Thomas if it was all right to sign the said paper, and he said, 'Kate, you know I would not ask you to do anything that was not right, and this paper is all right to sign,' and that in reliance upon the aforementioned intimate relationship between the said Thomas and herself, and ignorant of the contents of said paper, and because of said statement from Thomas to her, she was fraudulently induced to sign the same."

The application for leave to amend was refused by the court, and the correctness of that ruling has been sought to be raised in this court. In the case of McKim v. Thompson, 1 Bland, 162, the learned Chancellor said:

"It is with great difficulty permitted to a defendant to make any alteration in his answer, even upon a mistake, and there is no instance of its having been allowed for the purpose of retracting a clear and well-understood admission. It should appear due to general justice to permit the issue to be altered."

The case is referred to by Mr. Miller in his work on Equity, in section 189, and that author adds:

"A special case must be shown to allow the amendment. Before the court will permit the issue to be changed in this way, the defendant must show that it is due to justice that the amendment should be made."

The same doctrine was announced in Williams v. Savage Mfg. Co., 3 Md. Ch. 418. Between these cases and the case of Calvert v.

Carter, 18 Md. 108, there had been a modification in the phraseology of the section relating to amendments, and it was claimed in that case that the effect of the amendment had been to relax somewhat the strictness of the rule governing amendments to answers. That decision, however, sustained the prior rule, and went even further, holding in effect that the propriety of a proposed amendment lay in the discretion of the court to which the application for leave to amend was made, and that no appeal lay from its action in regard thereto. This case was later followed in Glenn v. Clark, 53 Md. 602.

Without passing at this time upon the question of the right of appeal from an order refusing an amendment, there is another consideration which is necessarily controlling in this case. It is said by Miller (section 94) that:

"A bill must be consistent with itself and must not contain averments which are repugnant to each other."

Manifestly that which is true of a bill of complaint in this respect applies with equal force to an answer. What, then, would have been the effect of permitting the amendment asked to be made? It would have placed the defendant in one part of her answer in the position of affirming an agreement, under which she had received the benefits, and in another of repudiating it as null and void ab initio, because of fraud in procuring her assent thereto. It is difficult to conceive of any more diametrically inconsistent positions than a granting of the application to amend would have permitted the defendant to occupy. Nor is this all. This application was made to the court after the defendant Mrs. Thompson had testified. In her evidence she was asked and answered as follows:

"Q. What, if anything, was said to you by him about the signing of that paper immediately prior thereto? A. Nothing was said to me about the signing of the lease at all."

If the application for leave to amend had been granted, there would have been a direct conflict between the allegations of the answer and that to which the defendant had then testified. It follows that, if it be assumed, though the question is not now decided, a refusal to amend an answer may be made a ground of reversal in this court, nevertheless the facts as shown by the record fully sustain the action of the trial court, and the decree appealed from should be affirmed.

Specific objection has been made by the appellant to having imposed upon her the cost of the insertion in the record of certain exhibits, and under the rule of this court (12a) the position is well taken. The cost of the insertion of the following exhibits will therefore be chargeable against the appellees: Plaintiff's Exhibits A, B, C, D, E, F, and I.

Decree affirmed, costs to be paid by the appellant, except the costs of insertion in the record of Plaintiff's Exhibits A, B, C, D, E, F, and I; the same to be ascertained and taxed by the clerk of this court.

(133 Md. 406)

McCOMAS et al. v. WILEY et al. (No. 15.)
(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 2, 1918.)

1. COURTS — 202(2) — PROBATE COURT — PLEADING.

Although formal pleadings are not required in the orphans' court, a petition that is vague, indefinite, and ambiguous is subject to demurrer.

2. PLEADING — 18 — PETITION — UNCERTAINTY.

A petition filed in the orphans' court against administrators by the heirs of the wife of the deceased, stating that deceased and his wife died on same day without stating which survived the other, and asking for proceeds of insurance policy without specifying who is assured on the policy or whether it was a regular policy on life benefit certificate, held vague and indefinite.

3. COURTS — 200½ — PROBATE — ORPHANS' COURT — JURISDICTION — REAL ESTATE.

The orphans' court has no jurisdiction to hear and determine an action involving title to real estate.

4. COURTS — 201 — ORPHANS' COURT — JURISDICTION — DETERMINING HEIRSHIP.

The orphans' court, having authority to supervise the accounts of an executor or administrator of deceased person, has the authority, incident thereto, of determining who are deceased's next of kin.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Harford County.

Action by Charles H. McComas and others against Thomas H. Wiley and others, administrators of Charles L. Wiley, deceased. From a ruling sustaining defendants' demurrer to the petition, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Wm. Pinkney Whyte, Jr., of Baltimore, for appellants. S. A. Williams, of Bel Air (Philip H. Close, of Bel Air, on the brief), for appellees.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. This appeal is from the orphans' court of Harford county, sustaining the demurrer to a petition filed by Charles H. McComas and others against the administrators c. t. a. of Charles L. Wiley, deceased. The allegations of the petition may be briefly stated as follows: That on June 28, 1917, the orphans' court of Harford county appointed Thomas H. Wiley and others administrators c. t. a. of the estate of Charles L. Wiley; that the testator by his will gave to his wife, Mary Edith Wiley, all of his estate, both real and personal; that Mary Edith Wiley died on the same day as the testator, leaving no child, children, or descendants of any child, but only her five brothers, as her heirs at law and distributees, and no child or children of any deceased brother or sister; that the petitioners have become entitled to recover all of the personal estate of the said

Charles L. Wiley, and are now the legal owners of the farm in Harford county, consisting of about 119 acres of land, on which the testator resided, and of which he died seised; that the petitioners are desirous of being possessed of said farm as soon as they reasonably can, without in any way interfering with the gathering of the crops growing at the time the petition was filed; and, lastly, that the personal estate of the testator consisted of various chattels used in farming, the crops, and a certain life insurance policy, the amount of which was unknown to them. No copy of Mr. Wiley's will was filed with the petition. It was to this petition that the administrators c. t. a. of Charles L. Wiley filed a demurrer, assigning eight grounds of alleged defect, as follows:

"(1) Because this court has not jurisdiction to determine the title to personal property; (2) because this court has not jurisdiction to determine the title to real estate; (3) because the petitioner does not set forth sufficient facts to enable this court to determine the validity or effect of the said will of Charles L. Wiley, deceased; (4) Because the petitioner does not set forth sufficient facts with reference to the deaths of the said Charles L. Wiley and of his wife, Mary Edith Wiley, nor the order in which the same occurred to enable this court to determine whether or not said will was revoked by the death of the said Mary Edith Wiley; (5) because it does not appear from said petition who are the heirs at law or distributees of said Charles L. Wiley; (6) because it does not appear that the said petitioner and his said brothers were the heirs at law and distributees of the said Mary Edith Wiley at the instant of her said death, nor how they became such; (7) because this court has no power to adjudicate questions of title dependent upon the operation and effect of a will; (8) because the said petition lacks necessary parties, to wit, the heirs at law of the said Charles L. Wiley, who are the said defendants Thomas H. Wiley, Richard H. Wiley, Harry F. Wiley, and Robert L. Wiley, in their individual capacities, and Elizabeth A. Slade, the wife of Asbury Slade and Caroline B. Anderson, widow, their sisters."

After hearing the orphans' court of Harford county sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the petition on the ground of lack of jurisdiction. This action of the orphans' court must be affirmed.

At the argument in this court facts were alleged and conceded which do not appear in the record, but to which it seems necessary to make some reference, in order that this opinion may be properly understood.

In June, 1917, Mr. and Mrs. Wiley, with their only child, Ruth, were crossing the tracks of the Northern Central Railway, when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by an express train, and all three killed, apparently instantaneously.

[1] The statement of the petition in regard to Mrs. Wiley that she "departed this life intestate on the same day as the testator, leaving no child or children or descendant of any child," is by no means a full disclosure of the facts, such as the petitioners now concede them to have been. It is not stated or alleged whether Mrs. Wiley survived or predeceased her husband, or whether she died before or after her daughter. A reading of the petition by one not acquainted with the facts would produce an entirely different impression from the events as admitted by counsel to have taken place. Although formal pleadings are not required in proceedings in the orphans' court, the practice in them bears a close analogy to that in courts of equity. No principle is more firmly established there than that if a matter is set out in vague, indefinite, and ambiguous terms, the bill or petition is subject to demurrer. Miller's Equity, § 92, and cases there cited.

The petition makes reference to real estate, chattels, and proceeds of insurance, and different rules may obtain with regard to the final disposition of each of these three species of property.

[2] It is not stated with regard to the insurance whether the assured was Mr. Wiley himself, or his wife. In the one case he would have the power of disposition of it by will, or it would have passed to the distributees of his estate; in the other, if it was a regular policy, there would have been a vested interest in the assured which could not be divested, so that it formed no part of his estate, and which would pass, in the event that the assured was not living, to the next of kin of such assured; or, in case the insurance was of the character known as membership in a beneficial organization, which provided for a change of beneficiary, there was no vested interest until such time as the life of the insured was terminated, when the right would become vested. The petition was therefore vague and defective in this allegation also.

[3] As regards the real estate, the situation is briefly this: The demurrer, which was sworn to, sets out specifically a lack of necessary parties, and who the additional parties needed are. If Mr. Wiley had executed a will prior to his death, in the terms alleged in the petition, to which the provisions contained in section 326 of article 93 were applicable; then under the allegations of the petition the real estate would have passed to his devisees and her heirs at law; on the other hand, if the will could not so operate, then the real estate upon his death would pass to and vest directly in his heirs at law. Under these circumstances it is plain that all parties who could be entitled to the property, in either event, were necessary and proper parties to the proceedings. In this condition, so far at least as the real estate is concerned, a question of title was involved in the proceeding, and was beyond the jurisdiction of the orphans' court to hear and determine.

[4] As to the personal property, while in one sense a question of title might be involved, nevertheless, under the authority given to the orphans' courts to supervise and pass administration accounts presented by executors and administrators, that power has been held to include in it the power of determining who are the next of kin (Blackburn v. Crauford, 22 Md. 447; Redwood v. Howison, 129 Md. 592, 99 Atl. 868); and if the ultimate distribution of this property is also controlled by section 326 of article 93, it is clear that the disposition of it was within the jurisdiction of the orphans' court.

It is an interesting fact that there have been but few cases in this state arising out of conditions similar to those which obtain in the present appeal. The case most nearly approaching it is the case of Cowman v. Rogers, 73 Md. 403, 21 Atl. 64, 10 L. R. A. 550. There have been many cases in the English and American courts of a similar nature, and a full collection of them will be found in the note to In re Maria H. Willbor, 51 L. R. A. 863. Courts have been most frequently called upon in such cases to deal with a question of survivorship upon a claim presented by representatives of one or another of the members of the family which had so perished. The cases have then turned largely upon the question of the burden of proof.

The prayer of the petition, in the present case, is that the orphans' court shall fix a day certain when possession of the farm shall be delivered to the petitioners. It thus sets up, inferentially at least, the question of title, and there is nothing now presented by the record in such definite form as to justify this court in making any positive ruling, either with regard to the title or possession of the premises.

It follows that the order appealed from will therefore be affirmed, but without prejudice to the parties, or any of them, to establish a valid claim to the whole or any part of the estate of Mr. Wiley in an appropriate proceeding; the costs to be paid out of the estate.

(260 Pa. 587)

COMMONWEALTH v. PRINCIPATTI.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 18, 1918.)

1. HOMICIDE — §190(1)—EVIDENCE—THREATS BY DECEASED.

In a trial for murder, where defendant pleads self-defense, he has a right to present evidence of alleged threats made by deceased and as to their effect upon defendant's state of mind.

2. HOMICIDE — §190(1)—EVIDENCE—THREATS BY DECEASED — DEFENDANT'S STATE OF MIND.

In a trial for murder, defended on the ground of self-defense, the exclusion of defendant's evidence that deceased had conversed with him about nine days before the killing and had told defendant that he was a member of the "Black Hand gang," and had been sent to murder defendant because defendant had previously killed a member of the gang, and that, if defendant did not pay over $200, deceased would kill him, that defendant promised to pay such amount knowing that deceased was a member of the "Black Hand gang," a society which extorted money under threats of murder, and believing that if he did not give deceased the money the latter would kill him, and that such threats had frightened him, and that he was scared when he fired second shot, as bearing upon the distinction between justifiable homicide and voluntary manslaughter, was error.

3. HOMICIDE §187—EVIDENCE—THREATS BY DECEASED—OPPORTUNITY TO DO HARM.

Where the district attorney objected to defendant's offer to prove that he was afraid of deceased on the ground that the two men were eating and sleeping in the same house from the date of the threat to the time of the killing, defendant was entitled to show that, notwithstanding their common abode, the shooting took place on the first chance that deceased had to do defendant harm.

4. HOMICIDE §194 — EVIDENCE — THREATS — ATTEMPT TO OBTAIN PROTECTION.

Where the district attorney stated to the jury that, if threats were made against defendant, instead of undertaking to secure his own safety, he should have gone to a proper officer of the law for protection, defendant had the right to show that he had endeavored to do so, though by mistake he had applied to the wrong officer.

5. HOMICIDE §190(5) — THREATS — REMOTENESS.

In such case the fact that the alleged threats of deceased to kill defendant were made at least nine days before the killing did not under the circumstances of the case, such as the occurrence of the difficulty on the first opportunity after the threats were made, destroy their relevancy on the ground of remoteness.

6. HOMICIDE §89, 116(4) — SELF-DEFENSE AND VOLUNTARY "MANSLAUGHTER" — DISTINCTION—"EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE."

The dividing line between self-defense and voluntary manslaughter resulting from the influence of the passion of fear lies in the existence as the moving force of a reasonably founded belief of either imminent peril to life or great bodily harm as distinguished from the influence of uncontrollable fear or terror conceivable as existing, but not reasonably justified by the immediate circumstances, and if the circumstances are both adequate to raise and sufficient to justify a belief in the necessity of taking life to save one's self from such a danger, where the belief exists and is acted upon, the homicide is excusable on the theory of self-defense; while, if the act is committed under the influence of an uncontrollable fear of death or great bodily harm caused by the circumstances, but without the presence of all the ingredients necessary to excuse the act on the ground of self-defense, the killing is manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Excusable Homicide; Manslaughter.]

7. HOMICIDE §39, 116(4) — SELF-DEFENSE — "PROVOCATION"—MANSLAUGHTER.

The fact that defendant when he came out of the kitchen of the house where they both lived saw deceased draw a revolver from his overcoat pocket would not be sufficient to show a "provocation" justifying the killing in self-defense, or even such a passion of fear as to reduce the alleged crime to manslaughter; yet in view of prior threats by deceased to kill defendant and the decedent's bad character and his connection with the "Black Hand gang," it might justify defendant in acting on a hostile demonstration much less pronounced than if such threats had not been made.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Provocation.]

8. WITNESSES §37(4) — COMPETENCY — KNOWLEDGE—REPUTATION.

It is not necessary that witnesses should know one personally in order to have sufficient acquaintance with his reputation to testify that his reputation was that of a dangerous man.

9. HOMICIDE §142(8)—ISSUES—REPUTATION OF DECEASED.

In a trial for murder, wherein defendant set up self-defense and claimed that because of threats made against his life by deceased and that his knowledge of deceased's reputation as a "Black Hand" and a dangerous man raised a fear in defendant's mind influencing him to shoot at once for his own protection after he saw a pistol in deceased's hand, the reputation of the deceased was in issue.

10. CRIMINAL LAW §339 — CHARACTER EVIDENCE—IDENTIFICATION.

It is always essential that one whose character is in issue shall be properly identified by those called to testify concerning him so that the court may be satisfied that there is no mistake as to identity, but when identity is shown the proof of reputation is subject to the same rules of evidence as prevail in establishing the character of a defendant or any one else.

11. CRIMINAL LAW §635 — TRIAL — EXCLUSION FROM COURTROOM.

In a trial for murder, where an Italian witness was produced by defendant and an offer made to show that the witness had been told by deceased, shown to be a member of the "Black Hand gang," that he had been sent to kill defendant and would do so at his first opportunity, and that witness had communicated such facts to defendant, the court on the refusal of the witness to testify unless all other Italians were removed from the room, on the ground that he was afraid of vengeance if they heard his testimony, had the right to grant the application.

12. CRIMINAL LAW §719(1) — REMARKS OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

In a trial for murder, wherein certain character witnesses had admitted on cross-examination that two or three years before they had heard defendant accused of killing another man, and the district attorney admitted that the grand jury had found no bill against defendant, his argument that defendant had in cold blood killed a man, and that the jury had disregarded the bill, and that unfortunately the district attorney was a party thereto, was improper, where there was no testimony that defendant had "in cold blood killed a man," or that the bill had been ignored at the instance of the district attorney.

13. HOMICIDE §300(1) — ISSUES — INSTRUCTIONS.

In a trial for homicide, where the defendant's evidence raised issues as to threats of deceased to kill defendant and as to their effect upon defendant's mind and as to the dangerous character of deceased, the court should specifically refer to such matters in the body of the charge.

14. CRIMINAL LAW §791 — INSTRUCTIONS — SUFFICIENCY.

The trial judge should be careful not only to state all appropriate rules of law, but to point out their relevancy with sufficient explicitness to enable the jury intelligently to apply the law to the facts.

15. HOMICIDE §300(2) — INSTRUCTIONS — SELF-DEFENSE.

In a trial for murder, the trial court should not overlook the relevant rules of law and distinctions to be kept in mind when considering the case from the aspects of self-defense and manslaughter.

18. CRIMINAL LAW §673(5)—INSTRUCTIONS—RELEVANCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a trial for murder, if the fact that defendant had been accused of killing another man is brought out by the district attorney, the jury should be instructed as to the relevancy of the testimony thereon, and that the inquiry is limited to ascertaining the opportunities and extent of the knowledge of the respective witnesses as to the defendant's general reputation, and not to show that he was probably guilty of that offense.

17. HOMICIDE §164 — EVIDENCE — RELEVANCY.

In a trial for murder, where it appeared that defendant's face was badly scarred on both sides, and that such blemishes were plainly visible, the refusal of the offer of his counsel to show that the blemishes came about through no fault of defendant was not error.

18. HOMICIDE §190(5) — EVIDENCE — BLACK HAND LETTER.

In trial for murder wherein defendant claimed that deceased was a member of a "Black Hand gang," and had threatened to kill him unless he paid over a certain amount, the exclusion of an anonymous letter received by defendant about a year before the killing which he claimed was a "Black Hand" communication, considering its remoteness and the lack of any evidence to connect deceased therewith, was not error.

19. CRIMINAL LAW §413(1) — EVIDENCE — SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

Where the fact that defendant had surrendered himself and given up his pistol to an officer of the law within an hour after the shooting was in evidence, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow defendant to be interrogated or in declining to admit other evidence as to his self-serving declarations at that time.

20. HOMICIDE §334—HARMLESS ERROR—VERBAL.

In a trial for murder, where certain matters, standing alone, do not show reversible error, but several matters do and together present a clear case of mistrial, the court will reverse.

21. CRIMINAL LAW §1144(13)—DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

Where witnesses by the action of their hands or otherwise undertook to indicate time, space, distance, etc., counsel eliciting such evidence should have an intelligible explanation placed on the record so that such testimony may be understood on review; otherwise the court must give them the interpretation supporting the verdict.

Appeal from Court of Oyer and Terminer, Beaver County.

Dominic Principatti was convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to be electrocuted, and he appeals. Reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

John B. McClure, Charles R. May, and Harold F. Reed, all of Beaver, for appellant. Louis E. Graham, Dist. Atty., and Frank H. Laird, both of Beaver, for the Commonwealth.

MOSCHZISKER, J. The defendant, Dominic Principatti, appeals from a judgment sentencing him to be electrocuted for committing murder of the first degree. The evidence presents, inter alia, the following facts: Principatti and the deceased, one Tony Amodeo had for about eight months lived in the same boarding house. On Sunday evening, February 18, 1917, the defendant and several others were assembled in the dining room of this abode, when, a little after 7 o'clock, Amodeo walked in and remarked to one Joe Spitaro, "I want to say something to you," at the same time beckoning him to follow. The two walked out into the yard and stopped eight feet from the kitchen door. They had been standing thus about two minutes, the noise from a passing train rendering conversation impossible, when Principatti appeared, and, without uttering a word, shot Amodeo. Then, in quick order, a second shot was fired, both bullets entering the head of the victim, who died at once. Shortly after this, when the body of the deceased was examined, a stiletto was found fastened to a belt hook under his clothes, three loaded cartridges were discovered in his trouser pockets, a razor in an inside coat pocket, and a pistol was handed to the man who was engaged in making the examination by an unknown onlooker who apparently picked it up near the spot where the dead body lay. Immediately following the shooting, Principatti returned to the house and said to his sister, who was the landlady, "I killed him, I am going to surrender to the officers and the court, because he wanted to kill me;" and on the same evening defendant gave himself up to a constable, to whom he handed over his gun. There is no conflict of testimony on the above facts.

Spitaro, the only eyewitness to the alleged crime, said that before the shooting took place Amodeo had his hands in his overcoat pockets; but, when asked the question, "Did you see anything in his hands?" he replied, "No, sir; it was too dark." When Principatti took the stand in his own defense, he stated that, four or five minutes after Amodeo had departed with Spitaro he, the defendant, left the room for the purpose of going to the toilet in the back yard; that as soon as the kitchen door closed behind him he saw Spitaro and Amodeo standing together, the latter with both hands in his overcoat pockets; that, "when he [Amodeo] seen me, he pulled his hand up this way [indicating], and I seen his revolver." Then the witness immediately added, "When I seen that [Amodeo's revolver], I pulled my revolver out and shot." In answer to the next question accused said he was "so scared" when he fired the first shot that "a minute or two minutes afterwards" he fired a second.

The foregoing references to the testimony and brief review of the material facts are sufficient to enable one to understand clearly the several matters before us for determination.

We gather from offers of proof, requests for charge, and other such matter upon the record that the defense the accused endeavored to stand upon, but which, owing to a series of adverse rulings, was not fully developed, is as follows: That Amodeo had conversed with defendant on Friday, February 9, 1917, nine days prior to the killing, and on that occasion the deceased said "he was a member of the 'Black Hand gang' sent over to New Galilee to murder the defendant," for the reason that the latter previously had killed a member of that organization; that he (Amodeo), however, "could fix the matter up, and prevent the defendant from being killed, if he would pay him the sum of $200, and that if he did not pay the deceased the sum of $200, he would kill the defendant"; that, thereupon defendant became frightened, and promised to give Amodeo the $200 on the next pay day, which occurred six days before the date of the killing; that defendant "had knowledge, at the time of the shooting and prior thereto, deceased was a member of the 'Black Hand gang,' and that defendant knew and believed the 'Black Hand gang' was a society of men who extort money from people under threat of killing"; further, that defendant believed if he did not give Amodeo the $200 which he demanded the latter would kill him; that four days prior to the shooting defendant, being in fear, went to see a constable in the neighborhood, and told the latter of the threat to kill, for the purpose of obtaining lawful protection. In short, the defense was that, while at the moment of the shooting Principatti intended to kill Amodeo, yet such intention was instantaneously impelled by the former's belief that he was in imminent danger of death, or it was the result of a passion of fear, influenced by Amodeo's previous threats, but immediately caused by the sight of the pistol in the hands of the deceased.

Fragments of this defense were permitted in evidence; but, in the main, accused was not given an opportunity properly to present his side of the case. His counsel repeatedly endeavored, by formal offers and specific questioning, to introduce the fact that Principatti was "afraid" of Amodeo, "frightened" and "scared" because of the latter's threat to kill him, together with the detailed circumstances attending this threat. He also offered to prove Amodeo's connection with the so-called "Black Hand society" and what that body was thought by the accused to be, its wicked objects, etc. Furthermore, he tendered evidence that the night of the killing was the first and only opportunity that "deceased had to do defendant harm," proposing to give details as to the latter's whereabouts from the time of the threat to the date of the alleged crime, in order to corroborate this last offer. Finally, counsel for defendant proffered testimony concerning the action of his client three or four days prior to the date of the alleged crime in going to a local constable to ask for protection, this latter offer being made "for the purpose of showing that defendant attempted to pursue his legal remedy in reference to the threats, likewise for the further purpose of showing that he feared the deceased and was afraid he would carry out his threat to kill him." The accused should have been given a fair opportunity to substantiate all of these offers by evidence.

[1] As to the right to present evidence concerning the alleged threats by the deceased and their effect upon defendant, see Wharton on Homicide (2d Ed.) §§ 610-611; Henry on Pennsylvania Trial Evidence, p. 33; 21 Cyc. 893, par. "e"; Underhill on Criminal Evidence, § 326; Com. v. Garanchoskie, 251 Pa. 247, 253, 96 Atl. 513; Com. v. Curcio, 216 Pa. 380, 65 Atl. 792; and Com. v. Keller, 191 Pa. 122, 132, 43 Atl. 198. On the defendant's right to prove his state of mind, either by his own or other competent testimony, see Com. v. Wooley, 259 Pa. 249, 251, 102 Atl. 947; 21 Cyc. 889, par. "b"; and opinion by Rice, P. J., in Com. v. Hazlett, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 352, 369.

[2-5] So far as defendant's offers relating to the "Black Hand society" and Amodeo's connection therewith are concerned, in Com. v. Varano, 258 Pa. 442, 446, 102 Atl. 131, we recently said that, when sufficient reason exists therefor, an inquiry such as here attempted is permissible; and in Commonwealth v. Curcio, 216 Pa. 380, 65 Atl. 792, a case somewhat like the one at bar, we granted a new trial because a defense of the same general character as the one now before us was not given due or proper judicial consideration at the trial there under review.

Since the district attorney, apparently in the hearing of the jury, repeatedly objected to defendant's offers to prove that he was afraid of the deceased, placing his objections upon the express ground that the two men were sleeping and eating in the same house from the time of the alleged threat to the date of the killing, the accused was entitled to an opportunity to show that, notwithstanding he had a common abode with Amodeo, the night the shooting took place was, in fact, the first chance the latter had to do him harm. See 21 Cyc. 954, par. "d."

When we come to consider defendant's endeavor, whether honest or otherwise, to secure the protection of the law, it appears that during the course of the trial the district attorney more than once stated, apparently in the hearing of the jury, that, if threats were made against the accused, instead of undertaking to secure his own safety, he should have gone to a proper officer of the law for protection; therefore the prisoner had the right to show that he had endeavored to do that very thing, and this even though, by mistake, he applied to the wrong official.

Finally, in connection with the several matters under immediate consideration, albeit the alleged threats by Amodeo against the defendant were made at least nine days before the killing, that fact, under the circumstances of this case, does not destroy their relevancy on the ground of remoteness. Com. v. Salyards, 158 Pa. 501, 27 Atl. 993; 21 Cyc. 892, par. V.

[6] Perhaps some of the rulings assigned as error were partly cured by the subsequent admission of testimony originally refused; but the result of these rulings was unduly and prejudicially to hamper the presentation of the defense; and, so far as we are able to see, this was due to a failure fully to keep in mind certain applicable rules of law, particularly those dealing with the subject of previous threats and their possible controlling effect upon the mind of the person against whom directed, and those relevant to the legal and psychological distinctions between justifiable homicide and voluntary manslaughter. In the latter connection we recently said:

"The dividing line between self-defense and this character of manslaughter (voluntary, brought about through the influence of a passion of fear) seems to be the existence, as the moving force, of a reasonably founded belief of either imminent peril to life or great bodily harm, as distinguished from the influence of an uncontrollable fear or terror, conceivable as existing, but not reasonably justified by the immediate circumstances. If the circumstances are both adequate to raise and sufficient to justify a belief in the necessity to take life in order to save one's self from such danger, where the belief exists and is acted upon, the homicide is excusable upon the theory of self-defense; * * * while, if the act is committed under the influence of an uncontrollable fear of death or great bodily harm, caused by the circumstances, but without the presence of all the ingredients necessary to excuse the act on the ground of self-defense, the killing is manslaughter." Com. v. Colandro, 231 Pa. 343, 352, 80 Atl. 571, 574.

[7] In the case at bar, the trial judge, when ruling upon offers of evidence, seems to have entirely overlooked the fact that these offers ex necessitate brought into the case the element of manslaughter through fear. Apparently the trial was conducted upon the theory that the deceased was not accused by the defendant of any actual menacing action at the time of or immediately before the killing; hence the latter's alleged fear rested upon no sufficient foundation; but this ignored the testimony of defendant that, when he came out of the kitchen door, just before the shooting, Amodeo turned toward him, at the same moment drawing a revolver which he, the prisoner, saw in the hands of the deceased. This fact, by itself, would not be sufficient to show a provocation which would justify killing in self-defense, or even such a passion of fear as to reduce the alleged crime to manslaughter; but keeping in mind the rule of law that in a case involving prior threats one is "justified in acting on a hostile demonstration of much less pronounced character than if such threats had not preceded" the killing (21 Cyc. 893), it is quite conceivable that, if the competent testimony as to other relevant facts offered by defendant (i. e., concerning prior threats and the wicked character of the man who made them, the latter's connection with the "Black Hand society," the nature of that society, and the resulting fear which pursued the defendant) had been given an opportunity to be heard and considered, the jury might have drawn conclusions therefrom favorable to the defendant, which would have affected the verdict.

[8-10] As a witness for himself the defendant testified he knew the reputation of Amodeo to be that of a dangerous man, and at the time of and prior to the killing he feared the latter because he believed such reputation to reflect his real character. When certain other persons were called by defendant to prove the character of Amodeo, the trial judge refused their testimony on the ground that these particular witnesses had no personal acquaintance with the deceased. This was error. It is not necessary to know one personally in order to have sufficient acquaintance with his reputation to give testimony concerning it; and this is so whenever one's character or reputation is properly at issue. Here the reputation of the man killed by defendant was in question, for Principatti claimed that, because of the threats against his life made by Amodeo when, immediately before the killing, he saw the pistol in the latter's hand, this, coupled with his knowledge of the reputation of the deceased as a "Black Hand" and dangerous man, raised a fear in defendant's mind which influenced him to shoot at once for his own protection. 21 Cyc. 889, par. "c," and page 956, par. II; Underhill on Criminal Evidence, p. 386, § 324. Of course, it is always essential that one whose character is at issue shall be properly identified by those called to testify concerning it, so that the court may be satisfied no mistake occurs regarding the identity of the person, but, after this is made sure, then the proof of reputation is subject to the same rules of evidence as prevail when establishing the character of a defendant or any one else. Underhill on Criminal Evidence, § 325. Before leaving this branch of the case, it is but fair to state that, so far as the assignments show, the witnesses in question were asked concerning the reputation of Amodeo only as "a bad and dangerous man." Strictly this might be objectionable, because the word "violent," or its equivalent, is not used; but the ground upon which the testimony was excluded, i. e., lack of personal acquaintanceship with deceased, was clearly wrong.

[11] An Italian was produced by the defendant, and the offer made to show that this witness had been told by Amodeo that he, the latter, had been sent to kill Principatti and would do it at his first opportunity; further, that the witness had communicated these facts to the defendant. This man, however, refused to testify unless all other Italians were removed from the room, claiming he was afraid vengeance would be visited upon him if his testimony were heard by them. Upon objection from the district attorney the trial judge said:

"The court is of opinion that it does not have the power to grant the application; therefore the objection to so doing is sustained."

'A request of this character is within the discretion of the trial judge, and had the court below, in the exercise of its discretion, refused the one at bar, we would be loath to characterize such a ruling as reversible error; but clearly in the present instance the judge was wrong in ruling that he had no power to grant the application. Archbold's Criminal Practice & Pleading (8th Ed.) vol. 1, p. 539, n. 1; Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, vol. 1. §§ 1183-1190; 12 Cyc. 546.

[12] During the course of the trial certain character witnesses admitted on cross-examination that two or three years prior thereto they had heard Principatti accused of killing another man; but in that connection the district attorney admitted that "the grand jury ignored the bill against the defendant." It is alleged the representative of the commonwealth, in summing up, said to the jury:

That "three years before the defendant, Dominic Principatti, had in cold blood killed a man, that it is true the grand jury disregarded the bill, and that unfortunately the district attorney was a party thereto."

If made, these remarks were highly improper; there being no testimony in the case that defendant had "in cold blood killed a man," or that the bill relating to the alleged crime had been ignored at the instance of the district attorney. We take it for granted, however, that no such mistake will occur at the next trial; hence it is unnecessary further to discuss the matter.

[13, 14] Several of the assignments criticize the charge upon the ground that it either omits all reference to or contains no sufficient instructions upon the various important matters which came before the jury at trial. We shall briefly refer to such of these as we deem material. The trial judge said nothing about the threats which Amodeo is alleged to have made against the defendant, or their possible effect upon the mind of the latter; further, he did not, in his general charge, sufficiently refer to or discuss the evidence as to the dangerous character of the deceased, nor did he point out its bearing upon the defense set up by the accused. Although these omissions are possibly corrected by the affirmation of certain of the latter's requests, at the next trial all such material matters should be specifically referred to in the body of the charge. Moreover, at that time the trial judge should be careful not only to state all appropriate rules of law, but to point out their relevancy with sufficient explicitness to enable the jury intelligently to apply the law to the facts as it may find the latter to be. Com. v. Smith, 221 Pa. 552, 553, 70 Atl. 850; Meyers v. Com., 83 Pa. 131, 143, Paxson, J.; Com. v. Colandro, 231 Pa. 343, 356, 80 Atl. 571.

[15, 16] In this connection it is particularly important that the learned court below should not overlook the relevant rules of law and distinctions to be kept in mind when considering the case from the aspects of self-defense and manslaughter, respectively, as pointed out in Com. v. Colandro, supra; and, if the fact that the defendant had been accused of killing another man is again brought forward in the same way as at the last trial, the jury should be instructed as to the relevancy of the testimony upon that subject, and that inquiry concerning the matter is permitted only for the limited purpose of "ascertaining the opportunities, sources, and extent of the knowledge of the respective witnesses on the point of the general reputation of the defendant, and not to show that defendant was probably guilty of the other offenses." Com. v. Colandro, supra, 231 Pa. at page 355, 80 Atl. at page 575.

[17] It appears that Principatti's face is badly scarred on both sides, and that these ugly blemishes are plainly visible. Counsel for defendant, fearing that, through a misunderstanding as to the source of his client's disfigurement, the jury might become prejudiced against the latter, offered to show that this came about through no fault of his own. To enter upon such an investigation might lead to collateral issues that would seriously confuse a trial; hence we cannot say error was committed in the refusal of the present offer.

[18] The accused tendered in evidence an anonymous letter received by him on May 1, 1916, almost a year before the killing, which he claimed to be a "Black Hand" communication. We have read the epistle in question, and, considering its remoteness from the day of the crime and the lack of any evidence to connect the deceased therewith, we cannot say that its exclusion was error.

[19] The fact that Principatti surrendered himself and gave up his pistol to an officer of the law within an hour after the shooting, was put in evidence; but the trial judge did not err in refusing to permit the defendant to be interrogated, or in declining to let in other evidence concerning his self-serving declarations at that time.

[20] There are 20 assignments, covering more than 30 printed pages. We do not deem it necessary specifically to refer to each of these, but have sufficiently reviewed those of importance. Many of them, standing alone, do not show reversible error; but several do, and together they present a clear case of mistrial. Were the matters of complaint all of a minor character, we would be disinclined, considering the evidence against the accused, to set aside the present judgment; but so much harmful error is called to our attention that, if the right to due and lawful trial is to be maintained, we must reverse.

The defendant may not be able to substantiate his various offers of proof, or the jurors may disbelieve the testimony with reference thereto, if produced, or, if believed, they may not draw the inferences or conclusions therefrom that he contends for, in fact, they may entirely discredit his version of Amodeo's actions immediately before the shooting, as possibly the jurors did at the last trial; but nevertheless the defendant is entitled to have his testimony as to what took place on that occasion, together with the relevant evidence covered by the various offers which we have discussed, received and properly submitted to a jury for its deliberate consideration, particularly on the issue as to whether at the time of the killing he acted with malicious deliberation or under other mental influences which might operate either to relieve him from the charge of murder or reduce the offense to voluntary manslaughter.

[21] Finally, since this case must be tried again, it may not be amiss to suggest that, when witnesses, by the action of their hands or otherwise, undertake to indicate time, space, distance, or anything else, as several appear to have done at the last trial, counsel eliciting the evidence in question should be careful to have an intelligible explanation placed upon the record, so that the testimony may be understood on review; otherwise, whenever the notes are not clear, we must give them the interpretation which supports the verdict. Donnelly v. Lehigh Nav. Elec. Co., 258 Pa. 580, 588, 589, 102 Atl. 219, and other authorities there cited.

All assignments that show rulings or instructions conflicting with the views here expressed, together with the twenty-ninth, which complains of the sentence, are sustained. The judgment is reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

(251 Pa. 35)

WINTER v. JOHN F. BETZ & SON, Limited
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 25, 1918.)

MORTGAGES §284—ASSUMPTION OF MORTGAGE—FAILURE TO INFORM AS TO JUDGMENT ON MORTGAGE—CAUSE OF ACTION.

Plaintiff purchased a saloon property and business, and, as part consideration, assumed the payment of the seller's indebtedness to defendant, secured by mortgages. There was no evidence that defendant, though it assisted in procuring a transfer of the license to safeguard its interests, undertook to examine the title for plaintiff to insure him against incumbrances, and plaintiff's attorney was present and had a report showing that the first mortgage had been reduced to judgment. Three years thereafter the property, on default in interest, was sold on a scire facias issued upon such judgment. Held, the defendant was not liable in damages for failure to inform plaintiff that the first mortgage had been reduced to judgment.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass by Rudolph Winter against John F. Betz & Son, Limited, for failure to inform plaintiff that a first mortgage on premises purchased from a third party had been reduced to judgment. Verdict for plaintiff for $2,600, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and judgment entered for defendant.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Frank H. Warner, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Owen J. Roberts and Howard E. Heckler, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

POTTER, J. In the month of June, 1912, the plaintiff, Rudolph Winter, purchased from C. J. Donnelly, Jr., a piece of real estate situated at Eighteenth and Courtland streets, Philadelphia. He purchased also, the saloon business conducted at that place by Mr. Donnelly, and secured a transfer of the license. As part of the consideration paid for the saloon, he assumed payment of an indebtedness of $3,000 due from Donnelly to John F. Betz & Son, Limited, the defendant. Actuated, no doubt, by a desire to safeguard its own interest in the matter, the defendant firm, in consequence of an inquiry from plaintiff, placed him in communication with Donnelly, and assisted in procuring a transfer of the license, and in arranging for the conveyance of the real estate. The plaintiff complains that the representative of the defendant firm, in explaining to him the terms upon which the purchase could be made, informed him that the premises were subject to two mortgages, one of $4,000 and another of $2,000 but did not tell him that proceedings had been instituted upon the first mortgage by which it had been reduced to judgment. It is upon what plaintiff regards as defendant's failure to discharge a duty it owed to him in this respect that he bases his claim to recover damages in this case.

We can find in the record no evidence that defendant undertook to examine the title to the premises for the plaintiff, or to insure him against incumbrances other than those specifically mentioned. And, even if it had undertaken to do so, it is by no means clear that defendant would be entitled to any greater degree of accuracy than was admittedly expressed in the statement with respect to the incumbrances upon the property. The lien of a mortgage is not merged in that of a judgment upon a scire facias issued thereon. Helmbold v. Man, 4 Whart. 410. The lien of the first mortgage here in question was no greater and no less in amount after the judgment had been entered upon the scire facias than it was before. The actual amount of the indebtedness was truly reported to plaintiff by defendant. True it is that, after the judgment upon the scire facias, an execution might promptly have been issued, but that was not done in this case, and upon that score plaintiff has no reason to complain. The record shows that the real estate was conveyed to plaintiff by Donnelly, in a deed dated June 10, 1912, in which there was a recital that the conveyance was made subject to the payment of two mortgages, one for $4,000, and one for $2,000. The first mortgage was due, according to its terms, in about six months from that date, or upon November 22, 1912. But, as stated above, presumably for failure to pay interest, a writ of scire facias had been issued and prosecuted to judgment. It appeared, however, that when Winter took title to the real estate, all costs and overdue interest had been paid upon the judgment, leaving the even sum of $4,000 due thereon. The final settlement of the transaction was made at the office of defendant's attorney at a meeting at which were present the vendor, the purchaser, the attorney for the building association which held the second mortgage, and the attorney for the defendant. The deed was prepared by the attorney for the building association, who also procured searches showing the incumbrances upon the title. He had the report with him which showed that the first mortgage had been reduced to judgment. In the course of the settlement Mr. Winter paid this attorney for his services in preparing the deed, and for having it recorded, and for the cost of the searches. There would seem to have been no reasonable excuse for failure upon the part of Winter to understand at that time that the searches showed the first mortgage had been reduced to judgment. The attorney representing him in the settlement could readily have made the fact plain had Winter shown any lack of understanding. The responsibility for that cannot be justly placed upon the defendant. But, aside from any question as to the accuracy of the statements made to Winter with respect to the first mortgage, it is apparent that any loss which plaintiff may have suffered was due entirely to his own neglect to pay the interest upon the indebtedness which he assumed. After meeting his obligation in this respect during a period of two years, he defaulted in payment of the interest in December, 1914, and the owner of the mortgage then called for the payment of the principal. Even then an extension of six months' time was given him, and it was not until the following June that the property was sold at sheriff's sale upon a writ of levari facias issued upon the judgment. We have then the fact that when plaintiff bought the property he assumed payment of a mortgage which he knew he might be required to pay in full at any time after November 22, 1912; but, instead of making prompt payment of the interest due in December, 1914, and gaining thereby a continued indefinite extension of time for the payment of the principal, he defaulted and brought upon himself the foreclosure.

It is idle to discuss the question raised by counsel for appellee as to whether or not the reducing of the mortgage to judgment rendered it more difficult to sell. Plaintiff did not own the mortgage, nor was it under his control. It was not at his disposal. His obligation required him to discharge the indebtedness which he had assumed. If he lacked the funds to do this, the obvious proceeding was to obtain a new loan from some other source. It does not appear that he applied to defendant for any assistance in any such effort; and, if he had done so, defendant was under no obligation to grant it. In no aspect in which the plaintiff's case may properly be viewed are we able to discern any merit.

The first and second assignments of error are sustained, and the judgment is reversed, and is here entered for the defendant.

(261 Pa. 1)

FLETCHER v. WILMINGTON STEAM-BOAT CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 18, 1918.)

1. SHIPPING — 166(1)—NAVIGATION—FOG—CAUTION.

Unusual caution is required of those in charge of vessels passing through a fog.

2. SHIPPING — 166(5)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—STEAMBOAT COLLISION—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action by a passenger upon defendant's steamboat for personal injury resulting from a collision between it and a ferryboat in a dense fog, where there was testimony that the master of defendant's steamboat failed to observe the navigation rules established for boats passing in a river, held, that defendant's negligence was for the jury.

3. DAMAGES — 167—PERSONAL INJURY—EVIDENCE.

In an action for personal injury, the admission of evidence as to the present value of money for different periods of expectancy based upon total disability was not erroneous, where there was evidence of plaintiff's earning power before the injury and that she was totally disabled by the injury.

4. DAMAGES — 100—PERSONAL INJURY—CONSTRUCTION.

In such case, if plaintiff was not totally incapacitated for work, but was able to do light work, the jury would consider compensation for diminution of earning power instead of contemplating a total loss of earning power.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass for damages for personal injury by Charity Fletcher against the Wilmington Steamboat Company. Verdict for plaintiff for $2,500 and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Francis S. Laws, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Victor Frey and Augustus Trask Ashton, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

BROWN, C. J. On the morning of August 27, 1916, the appellee was a passenger on a steamboat belonging to the defendant company, which started from Philadelphia for Wilmington, Del. Shortly after it left the wharf, when it reached a point in the Delaware river at or near Mifflin street, it collided with a ferryboat which was neither owned nor operated by the defendant. At the time of the collision the appellee was sitting on a camp stool on one of the decks of the boat. The collision threw her over or across the chair or stool on which she was sitting, and this action was brought for the recovery of damages for the injuries she sustained. From the judgment on the verdict in her favor the defendant has appealed.

[1, 2] The question of the defendant's negligence as the cause of the collision was submitted to the jury in a charge of which no complaint is made in any of the assignments of error. The defendant offered no testimony. At the close of plaintiff's case it asked that a verdict be directed in its favor, on the ground that nothing disclosed in the evidence submitted by the plaintiff showed negligence on its part. The refusal of this request and the overruling of the motion for judgment non obstante veredicto constitute one of the two complaints of the appellant. In support of this complaint it is urged that the rules for the government of the movement of vessels when approaching each other, which were offered in evidence by the plaintiff, were being strictly observed by the defendant at the time of the collision, and it was not, therefore, guilty of negligence in colliding with the ferryboat. This overlooks the testimony of the captain of that boat, and it was upon his testimony that the case went to the jury. He testified as to the movements of his boat coming up the Delaware from Gloucester, and stated that, when he reached a point opposite Mifflin street, he entered a bank of fog; that he ran his boat at about 4 miles an hour, blowing his foghorn; that he heard the foghorn of a boat coming towards him in the fog; that he was running close to the Pennsylvania shore, because of some obstructions in the river which he wished to avoid; that after he had got into the fog he saw ahead of him, and coming in his immediate direction, the steamboat of the defendant, between 400 and 500 feet up the river from him; that he immediately blew two whistles, which meant that the steamboat was to pass him on the left side. According to his testimony, the rule of the river as to the passing of one boat by another is the same as the rule of the road, and ordinarily boats keep to the right in passing. There is, however, an exception to this, according to rule 1, article XVIII, of the pilot rules. That rule, after stating the general regulation requiring each passing boat to keep to the right, provides:

"But if the courses of such vessels are so far on the starboard of each other as not to be considered as meeting head and head, either vessel shall immediately give two short and distinct blasts of her whistle, which the other vessel shall answer promptly by two similar blasts of her whistle, and they shall pass on the starboard side of each other. The foregoing only applies to cases where vessels are meeting end on or nearly end on, in such a manner as to involve risk of collision."

The captain of the ferryboat further testified that his boat was in the position covered by this rule; that he gave the signals provided for by it; that he received no answer; that he then stopped his engines and gave the danger signal and started his boat backward; and that there was sufficient navigable water on the right side of his boat for the steamboat to pass him. Instead of passing him on the right or starboard side, as the signal from the ferryboat indicated to it that it should, it did not vary its course, and struck the ferryboat on the port side with great force.

Unusual caution is required of those in charge of vessels passing through a fog (The Bailey Gatzert [D. C.] 170 Fed. 101; The Virginia [D. C.] 208 Fed. 851); and in view of the testimony of the captain of the ferryboat the question of the negligence of those in charge of the steamboat could not have been taken from the jury. It was submitted to them under the following correct instruction:

"Did he [the captain of the ferryboat] give these signals as he testified, and did the City of Chester negligently, under its high measure of duty to its passengers, fail to observe them, thereby violating the rule of navigation, and as a consequence by its negligence bring about the collision? The first point submitted by counsel for the defendant states the defendant's position here so accurately as to the law that I will incorporate it in my general charge, and instruct you at this point that, if you believe that the steamer City of Chester was proceeding down the Delaware river on the 27th day of August, 1916, upon her proper course and in a proper manner, that she was in charge of competent and skillful navigators, and was being operated and navigated in a careful, competent, and skillful manner, and that without fault on her part or those in charge of her she was run into by another boat over which neither the defendant nor its employees had any control, then the defendant was not responsible for any injury resulting to the plaintiff, and your verdict must be for the defendant. That is correct, gentlemen of the jury, and I so instruct you. If, however, the employees of the defendant company were at all negligent, if they failed to recognize the signals of the captain of the Dauntless, if you believe that he actually did give them, if by the exercise of the high degree of care imposed upon them as common carriers they could have stopped the City of Chester or have done anything else to have avoided the collision, then it was their duty to have done so, and if they failed in that duty, then they were negligent, and their negligence would impose liability upon the defendant company for any injuries suffered by the plaintiff as a result of their negligence."

The sixth and seventh assignments of error are dismissed.

[3, 4] The first, second, third, fourth, and fifth assignments complain of the court's admission of evidence of the present value of money for different periods of expectancy based upon total disability. It appeared from the testimony that before the plaintiff was injured she had an earning capacity of from $6 to $7 per week, and if there was evidence from which the jury could fairly find that she was totally disabled by the injuries she sustained, the first five assignments of error are without merit. The jury could fairly have found from the testimony of the plaintiff herself, and from that of two of the three physicians called, that her injuries were permanent, totally depriving her of earning capacity. From the amount of the verdict returned, in view of the expectancy of the plaintiff's life, the jury manifestly did not find that she was totally disabled. In submitting the question of her total disability to the jury, the learned trial judge correctly charged as follows:

"If, however, you do not believe that she is totally incapacitated for work, but find as a fact, as her one physician tells you, that she is now able to do light work, then you will consider compensation to her, instead of contemplating total loss of earning power, simply a diminution or lessening of earning power."

The first five assignments of error are also dismissed, and the judgment is affirmed.

(280 Pa. 477)

SOMERVILLE v. HILL.

Appeal of MILLER.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 11, 1918.)

1. EXECUTION §—247—SHERIFF'S SALE—RULE TO SET ASIDE—DISCHARGE.

On a rule to show cause why a sheriff's sale of realty should not be set aside, it appeared that petitioner was the holder of the legal title, subject to the control of trustees; that previous to the sale the trustees petitioned for a stay of the writ, and, before being advised of the discharge of the rule the sheriff announced that the property would not be sold; and that when subsequently notified of the court's action, and on request of counsel for the parties in execution, he sold the property, the attorney representing the trustees in the petition to stay the sale bidding on the property, though not for the trustees, and making no protest against the sale, and that petitioner did not complain in their behalf, but on his own behalf, as the real and registered owner, though he did not offer to bid or secure a purchaser at a higher price. Held, that the rule was properly discharged.

2. EXECUTION §—249—SHERIFF'S SALE—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

That the description of property advertised by a sheriff for sale contained a technical misstatement of the street numbers was not such an irregularity as would justify the setting aside of the sale, where the premises were otherwise properly described.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §—983(3)—SETTING ASIDE SHERIFF'S SALE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The setting aside or refusing to set aside a sheriff's sale on execution is in the sound discretion of the court below, and its decree will not be reversed, without a clear abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Anna M. Somerville against Thomas D. Hill. From an order discharging a rule to show cause why a sheriff's sale of real estate should not be set aside, Gerald F. Miller appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Graham C. Woodward, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Francis V. Godfrey, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. [1] Gerald F. Miller, as petitioner, appeals from the action of the court below in discharging a rule to show cause why he should not be permitted to intervene as a party defendant, and why a sheriff's sale of real property should not be set aside because of the misdescription of the premises in the sheriff's advertisement, and the misleading announcement at the sale, alleged to have resulted in an inadequate price being received for the property.

Appellant averred he was the real and registered owner of the premises in question. That he was the registered owner is admitted in the answer; it is denied, however, he was the real owner, and the evidence shows he was merely the holder of the legal title on behalf of his father, who was one of the executors and trustees under the will of Peter J. Tieman, to whom the property had been devised in trust. A mortgage covering the premises at the death of Tieman had previously been foreclosed, and the property bought by Hill, the defendant, who executed a new mortgage to plaintiff, upon which the present proceedings were begun to enforce payment. After title was taken, and the mortgage executed by Hill, the property was, for some reason not made clear, transferred to appellant, to hold, as stated by his counsel, "upon the trusts contained in Peter J. Tieman's will," for which estate appellant's father, David J. Miller, was a trustee.

From the foregoing statement of facts it seems the interest of appellant in the property was as holder of the legal title, subject to the direction and control of the trustees, one of them his father. Previous to the sale the trustees presented a petition to the court below, asking that the writ be stayed pending the determination of certain litigation in the orphans' court, which petition the court dismissed on the morning of the sale. The sheriff, having received notice of the application to stay the sale, immediately before beginning the sales of the various properties, and before being advised of the discharge of the rule by the court, announced the property in question would not at that time be offered for sale. Before the premises were reached on the list, however, the sheriff was notified of the court's action, and, counsel for plaintiff and for defendant in the execution joining in a request that the sale be proceeded with, he then offered the property for sale. Evidence was produced to show that in the meantime persons intending to bid on the property had left the room and were not present when the sale took place. The attorney who represented the trustees in the petition to stay the sale was in the courtroom and bid on the property, stating, however, he did so on behalf of another client, and not as the representative of the trustees. He also testified he made no protest against the sale, and considered the trustees had discharged their duty in attempting to secure a postponement. The trustees are not here complaining, nor is appellant complaining on their behalf, but on his own behalf, as real and registered owner. It may be doubted whether appellant has shown such interest in the property as entitles him to intervene on his individual behalf, and especially is this so as he does not claim to act on behalf of those who have the beneficial interest.

[2] Neither does it appear that the description was calculated to mislead bidders. The property alleged to have been insufficiently described consisted of a lot on which was built a three-story brick house and a two-story brick stable. On the books of the board of revision of taxes the house is No. 2409, and the stable Nos. 2411-2417 Cedar street. In advertising the premises they were properly described by metes and bounds, but the numbers were given as "2409-11-18 Cedar street," instead of "2409-11-13-15-17 Cedar street." The evidence failed to show that there were in fact any numbers on the property, except on the house, which was No. 2409.

This case falls within Home Buyers' B. & L. Ass'n v. Peterman, 253 Pa. 418, 421, 98 Atl. 619, 620, where premises, described as messuage, in fact consisted of a three-story brick store, with two upper floors suitable for apartments, and also a garage. The court below held, in an opinion adopted on appeal, that as "the dimensions of the lot are correct, the property is a corner property, so that the garage was visible to any one inspecting it, and no allegation appears in the petition that any buyers were deterred from bidding, and the person who makes the objection does not allege that she had no knowledge of the sale, and there is no offer on the part of the petitioner, either individually or as trustee, to make any bid at a sale," the rule was properly discharged. In the present case it is difficult to see how the omission of the additional street numbers could have misled any one, in view of the situation of the property, the notice of the improvements, and the fact that the only number on the main building was 2409. The additional numbers in the advertisement gave notice that more than the single building was included in the sale.

A discussion at length of the irregularity in the sale, by reason of the announcement that the premises would not be sold and the subsequent sale thereof, becomes unnecessary, as it does not appear appellant was harmed thereby. The evidence offered to show that, following the announcement of a postponement of the sale by the sheriff, intending bidders left the room, is not convincing. Furthermore, appellant makes no offer to bid or secure a purchaser at a higher price, merely averring he is informed and believes that upon a resale the property would bring approximately $8,000. This is not enough. Snyder v. Snyder, 244 Pa. 331, 90 Atl. 717.

Appellant not only failed to establish to the satisfaction of the court below that he possessed sufficient interest to enable him to intervene, but also failed to produce sufficient evidence of a material misdescription and an irregularity resulting in the sale of the property at a less price than would otherwise have been obtained. We can find no such error in the record as would justify a reversal.

[3] Setting aside or refusing to set aside a sheriff's sale is in the sound discretion of the court below, and the decree of that court will not be reversed, in absence of clear abuse of discretion. Chase v. Fisher, 239 Pa. 545, 86 Atl. 1094; Snyder v. Snyder, 244 Pa. 331, 90 Atl. 717; Watkins v. Justice, 256 Pa. 37, 100 Atl. 488.

The judgment is affirmed.

(361 Pa. 6)

TWERSKY v. PENNSYLVANIA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, March 18, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS §333(1) — INJURY TO PASSENGER—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A passenger who, though there was no pressure from behind, walked so close to the passenger in front of her that she was not able to see the open space between the car platform and the station platform into which she fell, was guilty of contributory negligence and could not recover.

2. CARRIERS §280(1) — SAFETY OF PASSENGERS—STATION.

The duty of a carrier rises no higher than to make and keep its stations safe for persons exercising ordinary care.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass to recover damages for personal injury by Rebecca Twersky against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Verdict for plaintiff for $2,800, motion for judgment n. o. v. denied, and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

Francis B. Biddle and Sharswood Brinton, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. William Morgan Montgomery, Samuel R. Lazowick, and E. Clinton Rhoads, all of Philadelphia, for appellee.

STEWART, J. On the afternoon of the 3d of July, 1915, the plaintiff, a middle-aged woman, unescorted, was a passenger on one of defendant company's trains, her destination being North Philadelphia, where she intended to alight. She had boarded the train at New York, and had arrived on schedule time, 4:45 p. m. The passenger station at this point is provided with a raised platform, which is on a level with the platform of the car when the train stops. The car platform is a trapdoor which is let down when the car stops, and the door of the car is opened for the discharge of the passengers. There is always, in such cases where the station platform is elevated, somewhat of a space between the station platform and the car platform. This is required in order to give sufficient clearance to passing trains. On arrival at North Philadelphia station plaintiff left her seat, and, with two or three other passengers walking in advance of her, she proceeded out to the platform of the car. When about to step from this platform over to the station platform she encountered the open space between the platforms, which she had not previously observed, and into which she stepped with one of her feet, with the result that she received the injury of which she complains, and for which she claimed to recover damages in the present action, referring the accident to negligence of the defendant company in failing to provide for passengers at this point a safe means of exit from the car. As the case was submitted to the jury it presented two questions of fact for their determination: First, the question of negligence of the defendant; and, second, the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence. Both issues were found in favor of the plaintiff, and a verdict in her favor was accordingly rendered. A motion for judgment for defendant, on the whole record, non obstante, was refused, and judgment on the verdict was directed. To this order of the court exception was taken, and it is made the subject of defendant's fifth assignment of error, the only assignment necessary to be here considered.

[1, 2] Whether in the light of the evidence the defendant came short of its legal duty, which is to so construct and maintain its platforms in the condition that they may be used, without danger, by a passenger exercising ordinary care (Graham v. Penna. Co., 189 Pa. 149, 21 Atl. 151, 12 L. R. A. 293), is a question in regard to which there may be diversity of view; but that question calls for no consideration here, inasmuch as the plaintiff's testimony discloses in unmistakable way contributory negligence on her part. In broad daylight, with her eyes open, herself unincumbered with baggage of any character, with entire freedom of limb, with nothing requiring haste on her part, she apparently walked this platform with as much unconcern and indifference for her own safety as one would walk the floor of his own domicile with which he was familiar. She did not see this open space between the platforms, into which she stepped until after she had been extricated therefrom. She says that if she had seen it she would have avoided it. But why did she not see it? The only answer that can be made is that she did not see it because she did not look. This is her own explanation: When advancing on the platform toward the open space, she was following some three or four passengers who had left the car before she did. The one passenger immediately in her front was a woman wearing a trailing dress and carrying a suit case. Plaintiff was so close to this woman that she could not see the open space had she looked directly down. Whether the trailing dress, or the suit case, or both interfered is a matter about which she was somewhat indefinite in her statement, but she leaves it in no doubt that she attributes her failure to observe the open space as due wholly to the circumstance that she was following too closely upon the passenger next in advance of her to admit of her looking down. She makes no complaint that this person was detaining her, or that there was pressure by those following her, nor does she suggest any reason whatever why she could not at her own pleasure have increased the distance between herself and the passenger in front. The insufficiency of the excuse she gives for not seeing the open space becomes apparent when it is considered that with knowledge of the fact that because of her position, so close behind the woman walking next in advance of her, she was prevented from seeing what lay directly in her path, she chose to retain that position when there was nothing requiring her so to do. A moment's delay on her part would have prejudiced nothing, and would have enabled her with a mere look to take in the whole situation with respect to her own safety. All that we have said is derived from the plaintiff's own testimony, and it leaves it not open to question that her own want of ordinary care was a contributing factor in the accident. The duty resting on the railroad company rises no higher than to make and keep its stations safe for persons exercising ordinary care. When injury results to any one who fails in this regard, the law charges the injury to the party's heedlessness as the proximate cause.

Defendant's motion for judgment non obstante should have prevailed.

The judgment is reversed.

(117 Me. 559)

BERMAN v. LANGLEY.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. June 17, 1918.)

SALES \Leftrightarrow 396—ACTION FOR PURCHASE MONEY—NONSUIT.

In assumpsit to recover part of agreed price of an automobile in view of plaintiff's pleadings and contentions that there was a written contract that the automobile should be in good condition when delivered, and that the vendor should keep the car in repair, a breach by defendant and rescission by plaintiff, it was error to nonsuit plaintiff.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Androscoggin County.

Action by Mark Berman against E. P. Langley. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff excepts. Exceptions sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, and PHILBROOK, JJ.

Benjamin L. Berman, of Lewiston, and Jacob H. Berman, of Portland, for plaintiff. J. G. Chabot, of Lewiston, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This is an action of assumpsit to recover $800 paid by the plaintiff as part of the agreed price of one National Highway Six automobile, and is before the court on the plaintiff's exceptions: (1) To the ruling of the presiding justice excluding the contract between the parties; and (2) an order of nonsuit.

The declaration contained four counts, the first two alleging a breach of warranty in the sale of the automobile, the third for money had and received, and the fourth the general omnibus count, with the specification:

"That under the latter the plaintiff will rely upon the evidence to be introduced under counts 1 and 2 in this declaration, as constituting grounds for the rescission of his contract, and that the evidence to be introduced under these counts will amount to a rescission of his contract, and thereby entitle him to recover the money paid by him on account of said automobile."

The plaintiff in his brief abandons the first count, and as to the second says:

"Plaintiff under this count does not seek to enforce the contract; he does not attempt to recover damages for its breach. Nor does he attempt to enforce his rights under it. But, on the contrary, he says the sealed contract has been terminated, ended, and as a result of its termination the defendant is unjustly enriched and has of the plaintiff's money the sum of $800. Plaintiff offers the sealed contract in evidence, not to support his claim for damages for its breach, but to prove the status of the parties, and to show the circumstances under which the defendant unjustly came into possession of his money."

The contract in question contained the usual clause that the automobile to be delivered should be "in good order and condition," and a further and final provision "that the vendor shall keep said car in repair for the term of one year from this date on account of any imperfections in the construction of said car at time of delivery to said purchaser or his agent." The contract is printed in the record. The only provisions of moment here are as quoted above.

A perusal of the evidence in the case, in view of the plaintiff's pleadings and contention that: (1) There was a written contract between the parties; (2) that the contract contained the provision that the automobile should be in good order and condition when delivered; (3) that the vendor shall keep said car in repair for the term of one year, etc.; and (4) that the contract was broken by the defendant and for that reason rescinded by the plaintiff—persuades us that in directing a nonsuit the trial judge erred. The questions involved were nearly, if not quite all, properly for the jury, and not for the court. The entry must be:

Exceptions sustained.

(117 Me. 562)

ROLFE v. LEWISTON, A. & W. ST. RY.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 14, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR \Leftrightarrow 1002 — REVIEW — VERDICT.

A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Androscoggin County, at Law.

Action by Abbie J. Rolfe against the Lewiston, Augusta & Waterville Street Railway. On motion for new trial before the law court. Motion granted conditionally.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Clifford & Clifford, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. Newell & Woodside, of Lewiston, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover damages caused by the alleged negligence of employees of the defendant in negligently starting a car of defendant, on Court street, in Auburn, whereby the plaintiff was thrown to the pavement and sustained injuries. The case comes before the law court upon motion for a new trial specifying the usual grounds.

The testimony was conflicting; the account given by the plaintiff and her witnesses would, if believed, warrant a verdict in her favor; on the other hand, the testimony of the defendant's witnesses would warrant the opposite conclusion. In weighing this conflicting evidence, the opportunity of the jury to see and hear the witnesses, to consider their appearance and demeanor on the stand, and to judge of the spirit with which they testified, must have been of great assistance in arriving at a correct decision; and we cannot say that upon the question of liability their conclusion was clearly wrong.

Upon the question of damages, however, we think the jury have exceeded the amount which will afford full and just compensation. Upon a careful consideration of the evidence we conclude that the following entry should be made:

Motion granted, unless within 30 days after this decision is received by the clerk of courts for Androscoggin county, the plaintiff remit all of the verdict in excess of $750; in which case, motion overruled.

(117 Me. 563)

GERARD v. LEWISTON, A. & W. ST. RY
(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 14, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ¶999(1) — ISSUES OF FACT.

The Supreme Judicial Court will not interfere with verdict of jury unless manifestly wrong.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Androscoggin County, at Law.

Action by Katherine J. Gerard against the Lewiston, Augusta & Waterville Street Railway. Verdict for plaintiff. On motion. Motion overruled, and verdict sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Seth May, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. Newell & Woodside, of Lewiston, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover damages for personal injuries. No questions of law were reserved for consideration by the court. In addition to a general denial of liability, and a claim that the damages awarded were excessive, the defendant also depended upon a release under seal, executed by the plaintiff, which purported to be an acknowledgment of satisfaction of damages. The plaintiff's reply is that the release was prematurely obtained, was misunderstood by her when she signed it, and was obtained under circumstances amounting to a fraud, in view of her mental and physical condition at the time when the alleged release was given. These claims of the plaintiff were strenuously denied by the defendant. All these issues of fact were submitted to the jury, and we cannot say that their finding was so manifestly wrong as to call for interference by this court. On the contrary, the court is of opinion that the verdict was amply justified and the damages exceedingly moderate.

Motion overruled.

(7 Boyce, 133)

STATE v. ALAMANIO.

(Court of General Sessions of Delaware. New Castle. May 7, 1918.)

ADULTERY ¶1—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Under Rev. Code 1915, § 4788a (29 Laws Del. c. 264), amending Rev. Code 1915, § 4788, a single person having sexual intercourse with a married person is guilty of adultery.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Adultery.]

RICE, J., sitting.

David J. Reinhardt, Atty. Gen., and Percy Warren Green, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State. Caleb B. Burchenal, of Wilmington, for accused.

Vincenzo Alamanio was indicted for adultery, under Code, § 4788a, 29 Laws of Delaware, 854, amending Rev. Code 1915, § 4788. On general demurrer to the indictment. Demurrer overruled.

It was urged: That the unlawful, voluntary sexual intercourse between two persons of opposite sexes, only one of whom is married, as in this case, the offense of adultery is committed by the married party only and not by the unmarried. State v. Chafin, 80 Kan. 653, 103 Pac. 143; Com. v. Lafferty, 6 Grat. (Va.) 672; Miner v. State, 58 Ill. 59; Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 54, 56 Am. Dec. 410; Helfrich v. Com., 33 Pa. 68; In re Cooper, 162 Cal. 81, 121 Pac. 318.

That, under the facts disclosed by the indictment, the unmarried party is never deemed to have committed adultery, except the statute clearly embraces both parties, as in State v. Mahan, 81 Iowa, 122, 46 N. W. 855, and In re Smith, 2 Okl. 153, 37 Pac. 1096.

That the statute under which the accused is indicted does not, in a case like this, expressly provide that both parties are guilty of adultery.

For the state it was contended that the statute embraces the unmarried as well as the married party.

RICE, J., delivering the opinion of the court:

The indictment in this case charges the defendant Vincenzo Alamanio with adultery in the following language:

"The grand inquest for the state of Delaware, and the body of New Castle county, on their oath and affirmation, respectively, do present that Vincenzo Alamanio, late of Wilmington hundred in the county aforesaid, on the seventeenth day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, with force and arms, at Wilmington hundred in the county aforesaid, being then and there an unmarried man, did commit adultery by then and there having carnal knowledge of the body of one Carmello Discorso, the said Carmello Discorso being then and there the wife of a man other than the said Vincenzo Alamanio, to wit, of one John Discorso, against the form of the act," etc.

To this indictment the defendant demurred on the ground:

"That the indictment states that the defendant is an unmarried man, and the crime of adultery under the statutes of the state of Delaware cannot be committed by an unmarried person."

Chapter 284, Laws of Delaware, volume 29, which is an amendment to section 8, chapter 153, Rev. Code 1915, provides as follows:

"4788a. Section 8a. Adultery is the sexual intercourse of two persons either of whom is married to a third person.

"4788b. Section 8b. A person who commits adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor."

It appears from the statute that adultery is defined to be "the sexual intercourse of two persons either of whom is married to a third person," and irrespective of what the common law may be with respect to this offense, or what it may be under the statutes of other states, the court is clearly of the opinion that under our statute if either of two persons having sexual intercourse is married to a third person, then either or both of the parties to the intercourse may lawfully be indicted charged with committing the act of adultery.

The demurrer is overruled.

(92 Conn. 698)

BRUNDRETT v. ROSOFF.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. July 23, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE \S 461(3)—PAROL EVIDENCE—LEASE—DESCRIPTION.

In action against landlord by tenant of living rooms on top floor for injuries on stairway between ground floor and cellar, where there were storerooms, parol evidence for plaintiff was admissible to show what was intended to be included within the lease, not altering terms of writing.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT \S 124(1) — APPURTENANCES OF ROOMS.

There necessarily passed to a tenant, with living rooms leased, all other appurtenances provided by the landlord and intended by him to be used by the tenant in connection with the rooms.

3. TRIAL \S 136(3)—SCOPE OF LEASE—QUESTION OF FACT.

The intention of landlord and tenant as to what was included within the lease was a question of fact for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; Howard J. Curtis, Judge.

Action by James Brundrett against Max Rosoff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

George E. Beers and Claude B. Maxfield, both of New Haven, for appellant. Samuel E. Hoyt, of New Haven, for appellee.

SHUMWAY, J. Of the numerous reasons of appeal, it is apparent that the treatment by the trial court of what the defendant calls a "vital" question of fact is the controlling question in this case. This question is what was the relation of the parties with respect to the stairway leading from the ground floor of the building to the cellar. It was clearly shown that the plaintiff was injured while using this stairway. The plaintiff contended that he was properly using this stairway, and by reason of the defective and dangerous condition of the stairs, which condition resulted from the negligence of the defendant, he was injured. The finding discloses that the plaintiff was a tenant in a building owned by the defendant. The plaintiff occupied a part of the building under a written lease. The first or ground floor of building was fitted and used for stores, and the floor or floors above contained a number of apartments, and were rented for dwellings. The written lease did not mention the cellar. At the time the plaintiff was negotiating for the lease he was informed by the defendant that there was a cellar in the building for use of the tenants, and that therein each tenant had a compartment for coal, wood, and goods, and the plaintiff would have one of the compartments. After the plaintiff moved into the building he was told by the defendant that the compartment in the cellar designated for his use would be marked with his name, and the plaintiff found his name on one of the compartments, and used the same from July, 1916, until the November, following. The cellar was reached by a stairway from the hall of the first floor, which hall and stairway were used in common by the tenants of the building.

The court in the charge to the jury stated that among the facts the plaintiff must prove were these: First, that the cellar in said building was used in common by the various tenants, in connection with their apartments, as a place for coal and wood and other storage, with consent of the defendant; second, that the entrance to said cellar was by a stairway from a hallway used in common by the tenants in the building, and that said cellar stairway was used in common by the tenants and reserved and intended by the defendant or used in common by the tenants. The court also said to the jury, as to the first fact as above quoted:

"On the evidence the plaintiff claims that that fact is proven. I do not recall any evidence that seriously disputes that fact."

As to the second fact, the court said:

"This the defendant denies. That fact, also, the plaintiff must prove by a fair preponderance of the evidence. The plaintiff claims that the condition of the cellar, divided up into compartments in connection apparently with the tenements above, the dumb-waiter which goes from the cellar to the floors above, all indicate that the facts just recited to you in this paragraph are proven. And, as I recall, the defendant upon the stand did not testify as to that feature of the case. The plaintiff, therefore, claims that that fact is proven."

A review of the entire evidence now before this court sustains the comment of the court as to the testimony, but the defendant contends that the rulings and charge of the court were erroneous because the court did not charge the jury in accordance with his request, to wit:

"If the plaintiff had no right to use the stairs under his contract of letting, but was simply allowed to use them through courtesy, there is no liability on the part of the defendant."

If the court's treatment of the question involved in this request was correct, it disposes of all the questions raised by the appeal.

[1-3] First, the defendant objected to parol evidence that the defendant designated the apartment in the cellar the plaintiff was to use and occupy in connection with his tenement on the upper floor. The ruling of the court was correct. The plaintiff could show what was intended by both parties to the lease to be included within it. Such testimony does not alter the terms of a written agreement. The only description of the tenement contained in the lease is "five rooms on the top floor of the building as living rooms." The plaintiff surely could show what five rooms were leased, and necessarily there passed with the rooms all other appurtenances provided by the landlord, and intended by him to be used by the tenant in connection with his occupancy of the rooms. The intention of the parties was a question of fact, and this was properly submitted to the jury by the court, and found adversely to the defendant's claims. This finding in effect disposed of the defendant's contention that as a matter of the law the plaintiff was occupying the apartment in the cellar, not under and by virtue of his lease, but by the permission of the landlord, and that the plaintiff was a mere licensee. All of the claimed errors of the court hinge upon this ruling. If the plaintiff was occupying the cellar and using the stairway as a tenant, all the other rulings of the court were obviously correct.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

(18 Conn. 28)

FERRY et al. v. ALDERMAN.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. July 23, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT §37—LEASES—CONSTRUCTION.

The intended meaning of the language used in a lease must control in its interpretation and enforcement, if the words used are susceptible of such meaning.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT §182—LEASES—CONSTRUCTION—RENT.

Lease providing for contingency of tenant's access being permanently interrupted by the construction of a building, "but if the interruption, having previously occurred, shall continue for two years from the date of the lease the tenant will continue to hire the entire building" at a stipulated rental for the full term, bound the tenant to pay the rent for the entire building from a date two years after the interruption of his access by the construction of a building.

Appeal from City Court of New Haven; Samuel E. Hoyt, Judge.

Action by Emily M. Ferry and others against Samuel Alderman. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. No error.

August 20, 1915, the plaintiffs were the owners of property in New Haven upon which stood two buildings. One was a large block fronting on Chapel street, and the other a small one-story structure in the rear of the block. Access to the latter building could be had only by means of an alleyway extending therefrom to the street, or through the front block. The plaintiffs were neither owners of the alleyway nor had they any other interest therein than the right to use it until it should be built upon. On that day they, as a result of prior negotiations, executed a lease in writing of the rear building to the defendant. The term ended August 31, 1920, and the stipulated rent was an annual one of $1,200, plus a sum equal to 10 per cent. per annum on any excess over $900 which the stipulated alterations should cost. This rent was payable in monthly installments in advance. By the terms of the lease they agreed to make sundry improvements and to increase the height of the structure by the addition of a second story, and gave to the defendant the privilege of using the alleyway so long as it remained unobstructed by the erection of a building thereon. The defendant thereupon went into occupation, using the lower floor as a garage and the upper, when completed, as a workshop in connection with his tailoring business. To the lease was attached a rider containing further stipulations concerning the payment of rent which has been the occasion of the present controversy. Those stipulations are as follows:

"In the event that the tenant's access to the said rear building shall be permanently interrupted by the construction of a building in and upon said Leavenworth alley or otherwise, then the tenant at his option may thereupon give up possession of the first or ground floor of the said rear building, and in that event, during the period of this lease, shall continue to rent and hire the second story of the said building at a rental of thirty-five dollars ($35) per month, or at his option the tenant may continue to occupy the entire rear building at a rental of eighty-three dollars and thirty-three cents ($83.33) per month; but if the said interruption shall occur, or having previously occurred, shall continue, after two years from the date hereof, the tenant will nevertheless continue to hire the said entire rear building at a rental of $1,000 per year. In that event, permission is hereby given to sublease a portion thereof to a tenant whose business shall not be objectionable or prejudicial to other tenants of the building No. 962 Chapel street, and who shall be reasonably satisfactory to the landlords, provided that his occupancy of the premises for the purpose for which they may be used by him shall not increase the rate of insurance on the said rear building or the front building, No. 962 Chapel street, or their contents."

During December, 1915, the owners of the alleyway began the erection of a building covering it. Thereupon the plaintiffs, through their attorneys, wrote the defendant, calling his attention to that fact, and asking him to notify the plaintiffs' agent in charge of the property whether he desired to exer-else the option and to continue to occupy the entire building. The defendant on the same day wrote the agent, saying that he did not care to occupy the ground floor any longer, but would continue to rent the upper floor as theretofore. The ground floor was already vacated, and has not since been used by the defendant. He has continued his use of the upper floor to the present time. August 1, 1917, the plaintiffs sent the defendant a bill for the current month's rent, made out at the rate of $35 from the 1st to the 20th of the month, and of $83.33 for the remainder of the month. The defendant's refusal to pay at a higher rate than $35 per month resulted in the bringing of this action, which was forthwith commenced.

The defendant answered, setting up the terms of the lease and the fact of his election thereunder in bar of a recovery in excess of $35, and asked by way of counterclaim that the lease be reformed by the striking out of the paragraph quoted of the words "or, having previously occurred, shall continue," so that it should conform to what was alleged to be the understanding and intention of the parties. In support of the prayer for reformation the counterclaim alleges that at the time the lease was drawn it was distinctly understood and agreed between the parties that, in the event that the alleyway should be permanently built upon, the defendant should have the option to surrender the first floor of the building, with the qualification, however, that, if the obstruction by the erection of a building should not occur for a period of two years after the signing of the lease, then the defendant was to continue to hire the whole building at a rental of $1,000 per year. The court has found that this was not the understanding and agreement of the parties. On the contrary, its finding is that their understanding and agreement, reached after a full discussion of the situation which the location of the building and the proposed enlargement and improvement of the property presented, and the one which the parties intended that the lease should express, was that, if the interruption of the use of the alleyway should occur within the first two years of the same lease, the lessee should have the right to give up the lower floor during the balance of the first two years only, and that the defendant was to pay for the entire building during the last three years of the lease in any event.

Walter J. Walsh, of New Haven, for appellant. Harrison T. Sheldon, of New Haven, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The court's finding as to the understanding and agreement of the parties intended by them to be expressed in the lease which they executed is decisive of the correctness of the action of the court in the rendition of its judgment. The intended meaning of the language used in the lease must control in its interpretation and enforcement, if it is susceptible of that meaning. Upon the latter point there certainly can be no reasonable question. The court, therefore, did not err, either in refusing to reform the lease as requested, or in rendering judgment for the plaintiffs for the full amount of their claim.

There is no error.

(300 Pa. 481)

WOOD v. PHILADELPHIA RAPID TRANSIT CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 11, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS \Leftrightarrow 238—WHO ARE "PASSENGERS."

One impliedly invited to enter a car is a passenger, and the carrier is required to exercise the highest degree of care and diligence in protecting him while entering and going into the body of the car.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Passengers.]

2. CARRIERS \Leftrightarrow 816(1) — PERSONAL INJURY — NEGLIGENCE—PRESUMPTION.

Where a passenger was not hurt by any instrumentality connected with the means of transportation, but by an iron pipe carried by an alighting passenger, there was no presumption against the carrier, and the burden of proof was on the passenger.

3. CARRIERS \Leftrightarrow 284(2)—PASSENGERS—NEGLIGENCE.

Street cars being for the use of people with or without their luggage, negligence cannot be inferred because a workman is permitted to enter or leave carrying tools, etc., though there might be some piece of machinery or instrument so dangerous that to suffer a passenger to take it with him on a street car would be evidence of the company's negligence, though that could not be affirmed of an iron pipe carried by an alighting passenger.

4. CARRIERS \Leftrightarrow 284(2)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—LIABILITY.

In an action for personal injury to a passenger while entering a trolley car from being struck by an iron pipe which a workman who was leaving the car was carrying, where the safety of passengers would not have been promoted by requiring the workman to remain on the platform until all passengers had entered or to leave by another door, the carrier was not liable.

5. NEGLIGENCE \Leftrightarrow 1 — MODE OF DOING PARTICULAR ACT.

In the absence of a fixed duty, negligence cannot be inferred from the failure to do an act in some other way not shown to be safer.

6. TRIAL \Leftrightarrow 141—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where the facts are simple and not controverted, their legal value is for the court.

7. CARRIERS \Leftrightarrow 284(1) — PERSONAL INJURY — ACTS OF OTHER PASSENGERS.

A carrier is only required to interfere with the voluntary acts of passengers when they suggest a reasonable probability that injury will thereby result to others.

8. CARRIERS \Leftrightarrow 284(2)—PASSENGERS—INJURY FROM OTHER PASSENGERS.

A carrier is not liable for injury sustained to one passenger from the rudeness, crowding, or jostling of another.

2. CARRIERS — 284(2)—PASSENGERS—INJURY BY OTHER PASSENGERS' NEGLIGENCE.

Knowingly to suffer the luggage of a passenger to remain so placed in a car as to endanger other persons is evidence of the carrier's negligence.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass to recover damages for personal injury by John L. Wood, in his own right and as executor of the estate of Ellie B. Wood, deceased, against the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company. Verdict for John L. Wood in his own right for $10,000, reduced by the court to $7,500, and verdict for John L. Wood, executor, for $8,000, reduced by the court to $5,500. Judgment was entered on the verdicts as reduced, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and judgment entered for defendant.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

David J. Smyth, of Philadelphia, for appellant. William T. Connor and Hugh Roberts, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is an action against a street railway company for personal injuries to one passenger by the act of another. On the afternoon of February 5, 1915, Mrs. Ellie B. Wood boarded one of the defendant's north-bound cars in Fifty-Second street, Philadelphia, at the Market street intersection. It is a transfer point, and, as was customary at that hour, a group of some 25 people were waiting, and they took passage on the car with Mrs. Wood, while others, including a man who carried an iron pipe on his left shoulder and a canvas bag in his right hand, left the car at the same place. As he alighted from the rear platform, where Mrs. Wood and other passengers were entering, the pipe came in contact with her head, inflicting a scalp wound, on account of which Mr. and Mrs. Wood brought this suit. Thereafter she died, and he prosecuted the case in his own right and as her executor.

There was a sliding door on the side of the car at each end; over that in the rear was the word "Entrance" or "Entrance Only," and over that in front was the word "Exit"; but so far as appears passengers left the car at either end. The conductor was stationed near the back platform, where he could collect the fares and look after the rear door. It was an old-fashioned car with seats along the sides, and was carrying 7 or 8 passengers as it came to Market street. The man was riding on or near the back platform, and there was nothing unusual in his appearance or conduct. The pipe was some 5 feet long and 2¼ inches in diameter, and as carried projected about 2 feet in front of the man. The conductor knew that people were there waiting to board the car as the man started to alight.

The trial judge charged the jury in effect that as defendant knew the man had the pipe it was its duty to see that he so carried it as not to harm a fellow passenger. The verdicts were for plaintiffs, and the court entered judgments thereon, from which defendant appealed. In our opinion the judgments cannot be sustained.

[1, 2] Mrs. Wood was a passenger and entitled to protection as such. "The carrier, having impliedly invited the plaintiff to enter the car, was required to exercise the highest degree of care and diligence in protecting her while she was in the act of ascending the steps and going into the body of the car." Bickley v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 257 Pa. 369, 376, 101 Atl. 654, 656. However, Mrs. Wood was not hurt by any instrumentality connected with the means of transportation; hence the accident created no presumption against the carrier, and the burden of proof rested upon the plaintiffs. Penna. R. R. Co. v. MacKinney, 124 Pa. 462, 17 Atl. 14, 2 L. R. A. 820, 10 Am. St. Rep. 601; Thomas v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 148 Pa. 180, 23 Atl. 989, 15 L. R. A. 416.

[3] Street cars are for the use of the people, with as well as without their luggage, and negligence cannot be inferred because a workman is permitted to enter thereon carrying the tools and implements of his trade. And the right so to enter implies the right so to depart. There might be some piece of machinery or instrument so dangerous that to suffer a passenger to take it with him on a street car would be evidence of the company's negligence, but that cannot be affirmed of the pipe or bar here in question.

[4] There is no suggestion that the man indicated any want of care in the manner of taking his luggage onto the car or of placing it while there. Nothing is alleged against him until he shouldered the pipe to leave the platform. No complaint is made down to that point, but it is urged that right there the conductor should have required the man to do something different. Counsel suggest that he should have ordered him to go through the car and out at the front door. If so, he would have been on a level with passengers going out in front of him and of others rushing in behind him—a more dangerous situation, as injury might be caused by either end of the pipe. It is also urged that the conductor should have required him to remain standing on the back platform until all the incoming passengers had entered. The passage there is narrow, and to require a man to stand in it, incumbered with such an iron pipe and bag, while 25 passengers rush by, would increase the danger. Had he carried the pipe in his hand or under his arm, it would have occupied equal space and been more likely to come in contact with incoming passengers. Our conclusion is that there was no safer method for the man to leave the car than the one he pursued, and that the conductor was not at fault in failing to interfere. There is no evidence that the safety of the passengers would have been promoted had the conductor pursued any one of the courses suggested, or that the hazard was increased by his failure to do so, and nothing that justifies a conclusion to that effect.

[5, 6] In the absence of a fixed duty, negligence cannot be inferred from the failure to do an act in some other way, not shown to be safer. The facts being simple and not controverted their legal value is for the court to determine. Davidson v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 171 Pa. 522, 33 Atl. 86; Wolf v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 252 Pa. 448, 97 Atl. 684.

[7] A carrier is required only to interfere with the voluntary acts of passengers when they constitute a breach of the peace or are such as to suggest a reasonable probability that injury will thereby result to others. When the car stopped it required only two or three steps to place the man on the pavement and out of the way. As he was going forward he practically had only to guard the front end of the pipe and that was before his face and held by his hand. The presumption was that he would use due care and we see no reason why the conductor should have anticipated danger. The conditions were not essentially different from those constantly arising.

[8] It is well settled that a carrier is not liable for injuries sustained by one passenger from the rudeness, crowding, or jostling of another (Ellinger v. P. W. & B. R. R., 153 Pa. 213, 25 Atl. 1132, 34 Am. St. Rep. 697; Graeff v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 161 Pa. 230, 28 Atl. 1107, 23 L. R. A. 606, 41 Am. St. Rep. 885), nor for injury from the negligent or willful act of another, unless given an opportunity to prevent it. See Widener v. P. R. T. Co., 224 Pa. 171, 73 Atl. 209; Kantner v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 236 Pa. 283, 84 Atl. 774; Hillebrecht v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 55 Super. Ct. Rep. 204; 10 Corpus Juris, 901. To hold otherwise would render a common carrier an insurer of the safety of its passengers, which it is not. This unfortunate accident resulted from the modern method of travel on electric street railways, and was a risk assumed by the traveler as incident thereto.

[9] Knowingly to suffer the luggage of a passenger to remain so placed in a car as to endanger other passengers is evidence of the carrier's negligence. Burns v. Penna. R. R. Co., 233 Pa. 304, 82 Atl. 246, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 811; Diffenderfer v. Penna. R. R. Co., 67 Super. Ct. Rep. 187. And the same rule applies where passengers or trespassers are permitted to engage in a fight upon a car to the terror or danger of other passengers.

P., F. W. & C. Ry. Co. v. Hinds, 53 Pa. 512, 91 Am. Dec. 224; Pittsburgh & Connellsville Ry. Co. v. Pillow, 78 Pa. 510, 18 Am. Rep. 424. But those cases are different from this.

At popular resorts and other like places where hundreds collect at one time to board the cars, it is sometimes necessary to employ assistants to keep back the people and prevent accidents from crowding. Coyle v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 256 Pa. 496, 100 Atl. 1005; Kennedy v. Penna. R. R. Co., 32 Super. Ct. Rep. 623. But a transfer point where 20 or 30 people gather to take passage on a street car is not such a place, and none of the cases above cited apply to the facts here presented. The diligence of counsel, supplemented by our own research, has failed to find an analogous case where a recovery has been sustained. Defendant's request for binding instructions should have been granted, as the evidence failed to disclose negligence on its behalf. That not having been done, the court should have granted the motion for judgment non obstante veredicto. This being decisive of the case, it is unnecessary to consider the other questions presented in the record.

The first and seventh assignments of error are sustained, and thereupon the judgment is reversed and is here entered for the defendant.

(41 R. I. 40)

MORRISON v. RHODE ISLAND CO.*
(No. 5073.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. July 2, 1918.)

1. STREET RAILROADS —117(35)—INJURY TO PERSON NEAR TRACK—LAST CLEAR CHANCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Conflicting evidence in action for injury by street car to person standing near track held to make a case for the jury under the last clear chance doctrine.

2. STREET RAILROADS —103(1)—INJURY—LAST CLEAR CHANCE—DUTY TO SEE.

The question of negligence, under the last clear chance doctrine, of the motorman whose car struck a woman near the track, depends, not merely on whether he saw her in time, but whether he could have seen her.

3. STREET RAILROADS —117(17)—INJURY TO PERSON NEAR TRACK—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Contributory negligence of person struck by street car using left-hand track, because of work on other, held for the jury, though she did not look for car from that direction; she testifying to ignorance of such use, and to not knowing of approach of car.

4. DAMAGES —132(8)—PERSONAL INJURY—EXCESSIVE VERDICT.

A verdict for $16,000 for injury chiefly to left arm of woman 26 years old, earning $10.50 per week, held excessive to the extent of $5,000, making allowance for pain and suffering, and conceding 50 per cent. impairment of earning capacity; medical expenses not being shown.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Providence and Bristol Counties; Charles F. Stearns, Judge.

Action by Rose Morrison against the Rhode

*For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

* For opinion on defendant's motion for reargument, see 104 Atl. 608.

Island Company. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant brings exceptions. Exception to damages sustained, and case remitted.

A. B. Crafts and Augustine H. Downing, both of Providence, for plaintiff. Clifford Whipple and G. Frederick Frost, both of Providence, for defendant.

BAKER, J. This is an action of trespass on the case to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant's agents and servants. The case was tried in October, 1916, before a justice of the superior court sitting with a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $16,000. The defendant excepted to the refusal of the court to direct a verdict in its favor, to the denial of a motion for a new trial, to a certain portion of the charge to the jury, and to the refusal of the court to charge the jury in accordance with four separate requests made by it, and the case is now before this court on these exceptions. The bill contains four other exceptions, but they are waived.

The testimony shows that the plaintiff was struck by an electric car of the defendant corporation at about 20 minutes after 9 o'clock in the evening of June 20, 1915, on Elmwood avenue in the city of Providence at a point a short distance south of its junction with Roger Williams avenue.

The plaintiff and a friend, named Thomas Rondina, on the evening in question, had taken a jitney near the city hall in Providence for the purpose of having a ride to East Greenwich. In the car beside the driver were two other passengers, a man and his son, a boy nine years old. As the car proceeded southward, there was a puncture of the tire on its right rear wheel, and the driver drew up alongside the westerly curb on Elmwood avenue in order to make the necessary repairs. In Elmwood avenue at this point are two car tracks, one on each side near the sidewalk, leaving the middle or central portion of the avenue for use by other vehicles. Ordinarily, south-bound cars use the westerly track, and the north-bound cars the easterly track. In June, 1915, owing to the fact that a bridge over a steam railroad track farther to the south was in process of repair, the westerly track was alone used by cars going in both directions between Roger Williams Park on the south and the car barn on the north, a distance of about half a mile. The situation at the place of the accident, more fully described, was this: The car track was practically straight for several hundred feet and was located near the west sidewalk. Next east of the track was a strip of earth several hundred feet in length, bounded on its easterly side by the westerly street curb, which strip measuring from the said curb to the easterly rail of the track was practically 6 feet in width for its entire length. On it near the curb were trolley and electric light poles and a row of trees about 50 feet apart—two of them of considerable size being upwards of 20 inches in diameter, the others small, ranging from 4 to 5 inches in diameter. The strip for the most part was covered with grass. The distance between the easterly rail of the track and the westerly side of the poles and trees was for the most part more than 4 feet, but as to one pole was given as 3 feet and 3 inches and the southernmost large tree as 3 feet and five inches. The overhang of the running board of the car in question when down—as it was shown to be at the time of the accident—was 24 inches.

After the jitney drew up to the curb, the driver and all the passengers got out; the plaintiff and boy after the others, and doing so in order to permit the driver to obtain from under the rear seat certain tools and a fresh tube. Mr. Rondina assisted the driver, while the other three stood upon the strip looking on; the plaintiff standing between the father and son and a little to the rear of them. All the occupants of the jitney say that it was drawn up at or close to a bare spot on the strip, which was shown to be about 70 to 75 feet south of the southernmost large tree and about 100 feet north of an electric light pole and nearly opposite but a little south of a hedge which was a few feet south of a house located on the west side of Elmwood avenue. The plaintiff says she stood about 2 or 2½ feet away from the car track; that she was facing towards the park as she alighted, and there was then no car in sight; that she had not been on Elmwood avenue for seven or eight months, and did not know that the westerly track was then being used by the north-bound cars, or that, when there were two tracks on a street, cars ever ran on the left side of the street; that while watching the fixing of the tire she stood facing the roadway, but in such way that she could see a car coming from the city, as she thought that such a car might strike her where she stood, but did not again look toward the park. Two or three minutes after alighting and while so standing and without having moved, she was struck by the car, a north-bound electric, which she had not before seen or heard, and which was the first car passing after their arrival at the place of the accident. All of the occupants of the jitney say that they neither saw nor heard the electric car until it was upon them, except the driver, who testifies that, as he was bending over to pick up a tool from the ground at the rear of his car, he saw the electric car headlight when the car was 20 or 25 feet away and shouted a warning, but it was too late. The speed of the car so far as it was specifically stated by plaintiff's witnesses, some of whom were passengers on the car, ranged from 15 to 25 miles an hour. The jitney was a Ford car, and after it stopped displayed no large headlight, but did show at the front of the car a red light on the right and a white light on the left. At the time many automobiles were said to be passing in the roadway blowing their horns. The plaintiff wore a dark suit and a large black hat.

The defendant offered testimony by the crew of the car and by one or more of its passengers that the jitney was drawn up to the curb near but north of the southernmost of the two large trees, or approximately 75 feet to the north of the location of the bare spot as testified to by several of the plaintiff's witnesses. The electric car was a large open one, more than 40 feet long. The track there was on an incline, and the motorman said the car was running from 10 to 15 miles an hour with the power shut off, and that he was ringing his bell and looking ahead, and that just before the plaintiff was struck he blew his whistle and threw on the power in reverse. Several passengers testify to his ringing of the bell and the blowing of the whistle. The car had a headlight of the size ordinarily used in the city. The motorman and other witnesses say that it was quite dark along there. He says that, just before he "got in front of the house where the hedge was, perhaps 15 or 20 feet," he "saw an automobile on the right-hand side of the road, * * * and there were some people down in there by the tree." "There was a girl come out dressed in black. She had a black hat on." If the first big tree was referred to, then he saw them at a distance of about 90 feet. He says elsewhere that he was 15 or 20 feet away from them when he first saw them. He also says that, when he first saw plaintiff, "she was about 3 feet or thereabout from the track"; that "she stepped out around there," which brought her within the overhang of the car. In another place, he says she stepped out from behind the tree; that before she stepped out the tree was between her and him. Another witness, a passenger sitting near the front of the car, testifies to seeing something step from behind a tree, and they were "right on top of the tree when the object came from behind it," four or five feet away. This witness gives the speed of the car as 6 or 7 miles an hour.

On the front seat of the car, immediately behind the motorman, sat three young ladies who testified in the case; two called by the plaintiff, the third by the defendant. The one sitting at the right end of the seat testified that when the car was at the top of the hill she saw a woman ahead, standing by a machine on which was a red light; the woman wore a dark suit and a big black hat. In answer to a question as to whether the woman moved after she saw her, she replied, "Not that I know of." After saying that the distance from the top of the hill to the woman was "considerable," that she could not estimate it in feet, on being pressed judged it to be "about a hundred if not more feet away." It developed in cross-examination that she had in an interview with an agent of the defendant signed a sworn statement in which, among other things, she had said:

"The car was about 15 yards away when I first saw her." "She seemed to be stooping over as car approached her, and she paid no attention to the warning." "I feel sure car wouldn't have hit her if she hadn't moved back, but I couldn't say whether she took a step backwards or not, as it was quite dark where this took place." "She had stood about two feet from the right rail alongside of auto and there were one or two other people with her."

She admitted making the last three quoted statements and said they were true, but did not remember making the first.

The young lady sitting at the left end of the front seat testified that from the "top of the hill" she "saw the lady and * * * a fellow stooping down"; also, the red light on an automobile. There was no one in the automobile. The woman did not move as the car approached her. Learned afterwards that her name was Morrison. When halfway down the hill, thought the woman was going to be struck. Witness said she was not a good judge of distances, and did not know how far it was from top of hill to place of accident. This witness some eight months after the accident had signed a statement. Witness denied saying she "first saw the woman at right of track when car was over one length away," as was recorded in the statement.

The third one of the young ladies who sat on the front seat was called by the defendant. She said the accident happened "right near the house with the hedge around it." She saw an automobile right at the curbstone and a stooping figure. When she first saw the stooping figure, the car was about opposite a slate-colored house, which she thinks is next south of the house with the hedge. She saw the figure move, and it seemed to move back towards the track. She was shown a signed statement which contained this sentence, "This lady was about 50 feet away when I first saw her." The witness said positively that she did not say that; that the defendant's agent asked her if it was 50 feet, to which she had replied, "I couldn't say how much 50 feet was." The agent of the defendant who obtained these statements testified in effect that he did not remember any thing these witnesses had told him, but that he had written only what they related to him.

From the top of the hill to the middle of the bare spot is shown to be upwards of 400 feet, the exact location of the top not being stated with exactness in the testimony. If the slate-colored house be the one next south of the house with the hedge, then the distance from the entrance to the south apartment thereof to the middle of the bare spot is given as 131 feet. Some of the witnesses say that the electric car made a quick stop. The motorman says it stopped in two-thirds of its length, or 28 feet. The conductor says that when it stopped the rear of the car was a little to the south of the first large tree. Several witnesses say that after the car stopped the plaintiff was to the rear of the car a car length or $1\frac{1}{2}$ car lengths.

[1] There was therefore conflicting testimony as to the precise place of the accident, as to the speed of the car, as to whether the plaintiff moved towards the track just before the accident, and as to the distance from which she could be seen by those on the car as it approached her. We think there was testimony from which, if believed, the jury could properly conclude that the plaintiff did not move from the position she had taken, that she was seen by those on the front seat of the electric car at such a distance as to permit the motorman to see that she was in a place of danger and apparently unaware of it, and that he was negligent in not stopping the car in order to avoid hitting her, in accordance with the doctrine of the last clear chance as stated in Underwood v. Old Colony Street Ry. Co., 33 R. I. 319, 325, 80 Atl. 390. Accordingly, it was not error to submit the case to the jury. The exception to the denial of the motion to direct a verdict is therefore overruled.

[2] The eleventh request of the defendant, on the denial of which the ninth exception is based, may be considered out of its order in this connection. It is as follows:

"(11) That if, as soon as the motorman saw the plaintiff in a position of danger, he used every appliance at his command to stop the car, he was not guilty of negligence in failing to stop the car before he struck the plaintiff."

The court below refused to so instruct, "because that leaves out the point that he should have seen her, if he could have seen her." We think there was no error in this ruling, and the ninth exception is overruled.

[3] Exceptions 6, 7, 8, and 10 are considered together in defendant's brief, and, instead of discussing them separately, we will consider the one question to which they all relate which is made clear by the charge and the exception thereto. The portion of the charge excepted to is as follows:

"Now, I cannot say to you, as a matter of law at this time, whether or not she was guilty of negligence in not looking toward the park. That is a question of fact for you to decide, whether, in view of all the conditions existing there, all of the dangers which a reasonably prudent person might apprehend, whether she should have taken a look occasionally in the other direction. It is a question of fact for you to say, in the particular situation which existed there that night whether she should have looked occasionally at least in the direction of the park. Now she says that she knew that the cars used the right-hand tracks, and, having that in mind she was looking in the direction from which she might expect danger to arise. It certainly has appeared in the testimony, and perhaps we all know, that the customary way for cars to run is on the right-hand track unless some exigency exists. It also appears that, although that is the customary practice all over the city where there are two tracks, it isn't a uniform practice. Any man who has observed at all the method of transportation knows perfectly well, as the evidence shows here, that where there is an occasion to tear up a street or repair tracks, or anything of that sort, sometimes only one track is used or the cars are run in a different way from what they are ordinarily run. Now, it is a fair question of fact for the jury, having in mind the fact that the custom was to use that outbound track on the right-hand side of the street for cars outbound, having in mind the fact that properly cars could use that track going in the other direction if they saw fit or if necessity required, whether or not she should have taken a look in the other direction and if she failed to do that, as a consequence of her failure to look up toward the track, she received this injury, whether that would be contributory negligence. If you say, however, that ordinary care did not require her to do that in the particular situation which existed there, if you say that that would amount to extraordinary care and not ordinary care, then she is not bound to take extraordinary care. If ordinary care is consistent with simply looking down at the place where the car ordinarily would run and watching out for that, then she would have complied with the standard I have indicated to you as requisite."

Defendant excepted on the ground that the jury should have been instructed that plaintiff was negligent as a matter of law in not again looking to the south.

As to the conflict of testimony relative to the question of whether the plaintiff suddenly moved towards the track or simply stood in the position originally taken by her, the court charged the jury in substance that if she stepped out suddenly, as one witness had stated, and in consequence was struck, the defendant would not be liable; so that the portion of the charge quoted clearly refers only to the question of her negligence as based on her own statement of where she stood, and particularly as to whether she was negligent in not from time to time looking along the track towards the south. Having seen no car approaching from the south as she alighted facing in that direction, and immediately taking a position which permitted her to see a car coming from the north, there must have been an appreciable period of time within which she was not negligent, even if the position occupied would be a place of danger when a car was passing. The question is whether or not she was negligent in continuing to remain in the place in which she stood without looking again in the direction of the park. She says that, according to her observation, where there were two tracks in a street cars always proceeded on the track which, in relation to the direction in which they were going, is on the right, and that she never knew them to go otherwise; that she had not been on Elmwood avenue for seven or eight months; and in substance that she was not aware of any existing condition or situation which affected or altered the mode of operating cars there. If her statements in this regard be accepted as true, yet if she heard a car approaching and thereupon, having observed that no car was to be seen coming from the city, if she then omitted to look in the other direction there would certainly be some basis for a claim of negligence on her part. She says, however, that she did not see or hear the car. Two other persons standing by her side also say that they did not see or hear it until it was right upon them. The chief reason suggested for this failure to hear the car and any warning it gave by bell or whistle is the noise caused by numerous automobiles passing there and the blowing of their horns. The court is of the opinion that the situation thus presented made it proper to submit to the jury for its determination as a question of fact whether the plaintiff was in the exercise of the care required of her in the circumstances in failing to see or hear the approaching car in season to move from the place where she stood, if need be, and that therefore the trial court did not err in so submitting it. While some of the cases cited by the defendant are somewhat similar to the case at bar in showing a reliance upon the regular or customary movement of steam trains and street cars, in other respects they contain features making them distinguishable.

The plaintiff in Beerman v. Union R. Co., 24 R. I. 275, 52 Atl. 1090, lived near the scene of the accident and was thoroughly acquainted with the location and the running of the cars. Apparently there was a single track on Camp street, the place of the accident, on which cars were operated in both directions. The plaintiff came out of a cross street at right angles, looked to his right, and proceeded to cross the track with a car coming from the other direction so near that an accident was inevitable. Obviously the failure to look in both directions was in the circumstances a lack of ordinary care. As to what constitutes ordinary care, the court on page 280 of 24 R. I., on page 1091 of 52 Atl., says:

"What is ordinary care under one set of circumstances might amount to negligence under a different set of circumstances. Ordinary care is such care as a person of ordinary prudence exercises under the circumstances of the danger to be apprehended."

In Baldwin v. Heraty, 136 Mich. 15, 98 N. W. 739, which the defendant says is in its facts more nearly like those in the present case than any other case cited, the jury returned a verdict for the defendant in the lower court from which the plaintiff appealed. In that case a person riding a bicycle in a northerly direction in the middle of the easterly of two street car tracks, on hearing a car approaching behind him, apparently assumed that the car was on the easterly track, and without looking behind crossed over to the westerly track on which the approaching car really was and was almost immediately struck and killed. The court said that:

"The evidence conclusively shows that the deceased, knowing that a car was coming, and hearing its warning, rode in front of it without looking behind, upon the assumption that it was upon the easterly track. This was contributory negligence, unless he had a right to rely upon the practice as an invariable one."

As a matter of fact the practice was not an invariable one, as some north-bound cars ran regularly on the west track. Plaintiff's proof on this point rested upon the testimony of a witness, who was with the deceased at the time of the accident, that, so far as he had observed, it was customary for north-bound cars to go on the east track. The court said:

"But this was not proof of such uniformity of practice as to justify the decedent in taking it for granted that this car was upon the east track, and disregarding the duty of turning his head to see whether he was safe when he heard the bell."

In that case the decedent heard the approaching car and suddenly without looking placed himself in its path. His failure to look after being warned of its approach is recognized as significant evidence of his negligence. It is distinguishable from the present case in that the plaintiff, if her testimony is believed, did not hear the car and was not aware of its approach. In passing it may be noted that in Baldwin v. Heraty the court held that there was no evidence warranting the inference that the accident could have been prevented after discovery of decedent's negligence.

The other cases cited by defendant do not seem sufficiently in point to require separate consideration. They are cases in which persons attempted to cross, without looking, steam railway tracks in front of approaching trains, which were close at hand and plainly in sight. The only suggested similarity is that in so doing they relied upon what they understood was the regular or customary movement of trains. We think, however, that the other circumstances of those cases readily distinguish them from the present case.

Exceptions 6, 7, 8, and 10 are therefore overruled.

The court later in its charge explained the doctrine of the last clear chance and instructed the jury in effect that if it were assumed that the plaintiff was negligent in failing to look towards the park, and continued to be negligent until she was struck, and that the motorman saw she was standing in dangerous proximity to the track, and apparently did not appreciate her danger or hear his warning signal, and he then had the opportunity to avoid striking her by using the appliances under his control for stopping the car and failed to do so, the company would be liable notwithstanding her negligence. No exception was taken to this portion of the charge. Therefore, under this statement of the law, even if the jury were of the opinion that she was negligent in not looking towards the park, and in standing where she did, that would not be decisive of the case in the event that they also found that the motorman was guilty of negligence under the doctrine of the "last clear chance." In such case the final act of negligence of the motorman would be the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff. The question of whether he was thus negligent clearly appears to be the vital one in this case.

A careful examination of the testimony satisfies us that it would be difficult to uphold the verdict except on the testimony to which the doctrine of the last clear chance is applicable. In all probability the car was going at a rate of speed greater than that permitted by ordinance. There is little, if any, evidence however to show that this was negligence in the existing circumstances.

So far as the exception taken to the denial of the motion for a new trial relates to the question of liability, inasmuch as there was conflicting evidence justifying the submission of the case to the jury and the trial judge has approved of the verdict, we do not find that he was clearly in error and the exception in this respect is overruled.

[4] It remains to consider this exception as based on the claim that the damages awarded are excessive. By the blow she received when struck by the car, the plaintiff received a comminuted fracture of the humerus of the left arm. She was immediately taken to the Rhode Island Hospital. After the lapse of about a week, to use the language of the surgeon in charge: "It was deemed necessary to make of this * * * a compound fracture; that is, * * * to cut in upon the fracture itself from the outside." This was done, and after a few days the cut or wound became infected, pus formed, followed by necrosis of the splintered bone, necessitating three operations at later periods for the removal of fragments of diseased bone, as well as another for an abscess in the left armpit which had resulted from the infection. She remained in the hospital from June 20th to November 13th. She returned to it in January, 1916, for one of the operations and remained about two weeks; was there in February for about the same time for a second operation, and in April for another. In the first operation the broken bones were wired into position; later drainage tubes of considerable length were inserted in the wound and maintained there for a long period, causing severe pain by their insertion and removal; and from May, 1916, to the end of the following September the arm was subjected to more than 40 bakings at a high temperature. The plaintiff early complained of pain in the right thigh and in the right leg above the knee, and after leaving the hospital and at the time of trial of a painful condition of the coccyx; but there were no objective symptoms of injury to either. At the time of the trial the wound on the arm had healed, leaving a depressed or grooved scar on the outside of the arm about seven inches in length. The freedom of movement of the arm, particularly at the elbow, was impaired to a considerable extent, and the medical testimony was practically unanimous in saying that there would be some permanent diminution in the movement and usefulness of the arm, although differing somewhat as to its extent. It was also said that she would probably on occasions suffer pain in it due to changes in the weather. At the trial she testified that she slept well, had a good appetite, and had regained her normal weight of about 155 pounds. She had walked to Market Square from Olneyville on seven or eight occasions since the accident, but it made her tired and she rode back. She had done no work since she was hurt. When injured she was 26 years old, was in good health, was then working and for about a year before had worked in the Paragon Worsted Mills as a burler, earning on an average of $10.50 a week. She had worked in mills previously, but her earnings in them were not given. By the life tables her expectancy of life was about 37 years. There was no evidence that she had incurred any expense for surgical or medical services. The court in its charge to the jury as to the matter of damages in pointing out the different things for which the plaintiff was entitled to compensation, in case the defendant was held to be liable, said:

"So far as it appears, the principal injury to this plaintiff is in the left arm, also shoulder joint, and things connected therewith."

In his rescript the trial judge says that, when the jury announced its verdict, he "was inclined to believe that the damages were excessive," but that "after a re-examination of the testimony, and upon careful deliberation," he had concluded that, "although the amount awarded is larger than" he would have given, he is unable to "say that the excess is so large" as to warrant "setting the verdict aside as excessive." He also says:

"It seems to me reasonable to suppose that a considerable part of this award was given by the jury as compensation for the pain and suffering endured by the plaintiff."

We think it must have been the chief element of the award.

As to the action of the trial judge in denying the motion for a new trial on the ground that the damages awarded were excessive, the court is of the opinion that said damages are so excessive that justice requires that there should be a new trial on that question unless they are reduced. In the trial no evidence was offered showing that the plaintiff had been subjected to any expense for medical attendance or other service rendered in her recovery from her injuries, so that the two principal elements of damage were the loss of wages, actual and prospective, and compensation for pain and suffering, past and future. Plaintiff's counsel in his brief computes her actual loss in wages from the date of the accident to the date of trial at $10.50 a week, which she was earning prior to the accident, to be $724.50. Then estimating that for the future she would be able "on the average to earn half as much as she has in the past at some kind of employment," he computes that her prospective loss on an expectation of life for 37½ years would be $10,287.50; the two items of pecuniary loss as thus computed together amounting to $10,962. It is not too much to presume that this claim of the pecuniary loss of the plaintiff was urged upon the jury. If the jury accepted this claim of loss as a fair one, then in their total award of damages an allowance of not much in excess of $5,000 was made as compensation for pain and suffering. This, of course, cannot be asserted as a fact. But, if we accept the suggestion of her counsel that for the future the plaintiff will be able on the average to earn half as much as she did before the accident, a suggestion which in the light of the evidence seems reasonable, then his computation of the prospective loss is erroneous, in that there is no attempt to estimate the present pecuniary value of such loss to be paid now in one sum instead of in weekly payments spread over a period of 37 years, which is the average of the two tables of expectancy of life in evidence. Wages at $10.50 a week yield a total of $546 for one year, one-half of which is $273. The present value of an annuity of $273 for 37 years at 4 per cent. as shown by approved tables is $5,225.93. If to that the actual loss of wages shown $724.50, be added, the total pecuniary loss, actual and prospective, is $5,950.43. Computing the present value at 4 per cent. is not unfavorable to the plaintiff inasmuch as an increase in the rate of interest results in a smaller present value of the annuity. Assuming as before that the jury allowed the plaintiff's claim of pecuniary loss of one-half earning power for the future, then the verdict would represent an allowance of about $10,000, for pain and suffering.

We are of the opinion, therefore, upon a consideration of the evidence, that the damages are excessive, and that there was error in the denial of the motion for a new trial on the question of damages. In so far as the exception taken to the denial of the motion for a new trial relates to the question of damages, it is sustained; all the other exceptions are overruled.

The cause is remitted to the superior court, with directions to grant a new trial on the question of damages only unless within 10 days after the return of the papers in said cause to said court the plaintiff shall file her remittitur in writing of so much of its verdict as is in excess of $11,000; and, if such remittitur be filed, to enter judgment for the plaintiff on the verdict as thus reduced by the remittitur.

(41 R. I. 468)

GILBANE v. LENT, City Treasurer.
(No. 5045.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. July 5, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 821(20) — DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Pedestrian's contributory negligence in falling into hole in sidewalk is generally for the jury, unless the only proper inference from the facts is that an ordinarily prudent man would not have acted as the pedestrian did.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 808(1) — DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS—CARE REQUIRED.

A pedestrian must be on his guard against such perils only as a reasonable man would apprehend in like circumstances.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 821(23) — DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Presence of fence across street and sidewalks beyond which a bridge was being built was not as a matter of law notice to pedestrian of unsafe condition of sidewalk on part of street not closed by the fence.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 821(23) — DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Presence of street obstruction, with sign, barring passage, was not as a matter of law notice to pedestrian on sidewalk that the sidewalk was closed or unsafe.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 821(25) — DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Plaintiff's testimony that, had he looked, he could have seen a hole in the sidewalk into which he fell, was not conclusive of his contributory negligence, when his attention was momentarily diverted from the walk.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 808(2)—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALK—CARE REQUIRED.

A pedestrian on a sidewalk, ignorant of a defect therein, may assume that the way is safe, and need not exercise the highest degree of care by keeping his eyes constantly on the walk, but he need use only the care of an ordinarily prudent man.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 761(1) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—INJURIES TO PERSONS—CONTROL OF STREET.

Where city authorized railroad contractors, building a viaduct to carry street over tracks, to use part of street for storing materials, the city was not thereby absolved from liability to pedestrian, injured by defect in sidewalk outside fence barring the street, and between it and a warning sign placed by the contractors.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 799 — STREET IMPROVEMENTS—INJURIES TO PERSONS—LIABILITY.

When changes are being made in street by body independent of the city, under direct legislative authority for abolition of grade crossings, the city is not thereby relieved from statutory liability for injuries to pedestrians, if the street has not actually been closed to public travel.

9. TRIAL — 189(1)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT —SUPERIOR COURT.

Since power of justice of superior court in ordering judgment does not exceed power of the Supreme Court, which is limited to cases in which there is no legal evidence to support the verdict, the justice of the superior court cannot direct a verdict according to the preponderance of the evidence.

Vincent, J., dissenting.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Providence and Bristol Counties; Charles F. Stearns, Judge.

Trespass on the case, by John J. Gilbane against Elmer E. Lent, as City Treasurer of Central Falls. On plaintiff's exception to order directing verdict for defendant, and to certain rulings as to admission of testimony. First exception sustained, other exceptions overruled, and cause remanded for new trial.

John P. Beagan, of Providence, for plaintiff. Mumford, Huddy & Emerson and George H. Huddy, Jr., all of Providence, for defendant.

SWEETLAND, J. This is an action of trespass on the case, brought against the defendant, as city treasurer of Central Falls, to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been received by the plaintiff by reason of the unsafe condition of a portion of the sidewalk on Cross street, a public highway in said city. The case was tried before a justice of the superior court sitting with a jury. At the conclusion of the evidence said justice directed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that it appeared from the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The case is before us upon the plaintiff's exception to this ruling of said justice, and upon his exceptions to certain rulings made by said justice with reference to the admission of testimony.

It appeared that at the time of the alleged accident to the plaintiff the Pawtucket & Central Falls Grade Crossing Commission, acting under the authority of chapter 896 of the Public Laws of 1912, had removed the bridge upon which said Cross street had formerly been carried over the railroad location operated by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, and were engaged in erecting the abutments for a new bridge at that point. To the east of the railroad location, and outside of the land which had been condemned for railroad purposes, said commission had built a tight board fence across the northerly sidewalk and the roadway of Cross street, and had placed a picket fence across the southerly sidewalk on said street. In this manner persons using Cross street were entirely excluded from the place where said abutments were being constructed. At the time of the alleged accident the plaintiff lived on the northerly side of Cross street, a short distance east of the point where said fences had been placed. There was evidence presented at the trial from which it might be found that on Sunday, August 9, 1914, at about half past 7 o'clock in the evening, two of the plaintiff's children, a little girl about 2½ years old and a boy about 7 years old, were playing near the curb on the southerly side of Cross street; that the plaintiff, having a baby about 10 months old in his arms, came from his home on the northerly side of the street, and crossed to where the children were playing, for the purpose of having them come home, because it was becoming dark; that as he approached them the little girl ran upon the southerly sidewalk, and the plaintiff, for the purpose of reaching her and getting her between himself and his home, went upon the southerly sidewalk, and while there stepped into a hole, of the existence of which he was ignorant. This caused the plaintiff to fall, and as a result of said fall he suffered the injury to recover damages for which this suit has been brought. The plaintiff testified that said hole was irregular in shape, extended from the curb across a portion of the sidewalk, was about 8 feet wide at its widest point and about 2½ feet deep in the deepest part, and was shallowest at the curb; that there were no lights and no guard about said hole.

[1-3] The ruling of said justice in directing a verdict is in accordance with the claim of the defendant that it should be said as a matter of law that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The question of contributory negligence is generally one for the jury, unless it clearly appears that the only proper inference from the facts is that in the circumstances of the case an ordinarily prudent man would not have acted as did the plaintiff. This court has frequently held that a verdict should not be directed if on any reasonable view of the testimony the plaintiff can recover. Baynes v. Billings, 30 R. I. 53, 73 Atl. 625; Reddington v. Getchell, 40 R. I. 463, 101 Atl. 123. It is the generally accepted rule that a person is required to be on his guard against such perils only as a reasonable man would apprehend in like circumstances. The fence across the highway was notice to the public that beyond that point the construction operations of the Grade Crossing Commission were being carried on; but it cannot be said as a matter of law that the presence of the fence was notice to the public that the highway to the east of the fence was not in condition for its ordinary use. It also appeared that in the middle of the roadway of Cross street, about 20 or 30 feet in front of the fence, was placed a wooden horse, estimated by different witnesses as from 8 to 16 feet long and about 3½ feet high. To this horse was attached a sign reading: "Street Closed. No Passing. C. W. Blakeslee & Son." C. W. Blakeslee & Son were the contractors who were engaged in constructing the abutments of the new bridge. The roadway of Cross street was about 21 feet wide. It thus appears that said horse did not extend entirely across said roadway, whichever estimate of its length be accepted as true.

The defendant contends that from the presence of this horse and sign it is conclusively shown that the plaintiff was given warning that he should be on the lookout for a possible defective condition, which might render the sidewalk unsafe for use. Just what interpretation an ordinarily prudent man would give to said notice is clearly a question of fact and not of law. The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company had charge of the reconstruction work under the commission. From the testimony of the civil engineer, the bridge foreman, and the construction inspector of said railroad company, the conclusion is warranted that said horse and sign were placed by them in the roadway of Cross street in connection with the removal of the temporary bridge and the erection of said fence, and were so placed for the purposes of notifying the public that the railroad could not be crossed at that point. It does not appear from their testimony that said horse and sign were intended to have any reference to the condition of Cross street to the east of the fence. It may be said that the sign on the horse would be a superfluous notice that Cross street no longer crossed the railroad; for the fence itself constituted a physical bar to such crossing, and hence the above conclusion is not a reasonable view to take of the purpose of the sign. Without the testimony of these agents of the railroad company, that would be a pertinent suggestion; what we have said above, however, appears to us to be the reasonable conclusion to draw from their testimony.

[4] But whatever may have been the intention in the minds of the agents of the railroad company who placed the horse and sign in Cross street, in our opinion a notice such as the one in question, placed upon a barrier in the roadway of a city street, may well be understood by a traveler upon the sidewalk, which is not barred, as referring merely to that portion of the roadway which lies beyond the barrier; and when in such circumstances the traveler proceeds along the unobstructed sidewalk the question of his due care is not concluded against him as a matter of law. This view is well supported by the authorities. In Hurley v. Boston, 202 Mass. 68, 88 N. E. 586, the court said:

"In the case of such a street, a barrier erected across the part used for carriages, but not across the sidewalk or part ordinarily used by pedestrians, may be interpreted by the traveler as being intended to stop the progress of carriages, but not of pedestrians upon the sidewalk; and many times that interpretation will be correct. And even if there be a notice that the street be closed to travel while grading, the question is not absolutely concluded against the traveler. In many cases he may be justified in thinking that the notice is no broader in its scope than the barrier, and that the thing closed to public travel is only that part of the street which is shut off by the barrier."

To the same effect is Stoliker v. Boston, 204 Mass. 522, 90 N. E. 927, and Leonard v. Boston, 183 Mass. 68, 66 N. E. 593.

In the view which we have taken of the meaning and the effect of said horse and sign, it was for the jury to say as a matter of fact whether their presence in the roadway should have caused the plaintiff as a reasonable man to apprehend danger on the sidewalk, and would call for the exercise of a degree of caution greater than that ordinarily required of a traveler upon the sidewalk of a city street.

[5] In support of his position the defendant places great reliance upon certain testimony given by the plaintiff at the trial. In cross-examination he testified as follows:

"975 Q. Then why couldn't you see the hole? A. Well, I didn't see the hole. 976 Q. The reason is you didn't look; isn't that the reason? A. I didn't look for it, no; I didn't look for the hole. 977 Q. If you had looked, you would have seen it? A. If I had looked, I would have seen it."

And in answer to questions by his attorney the plaintiff testified:

"982 Q. Now, as I understand you to say, you didn't know this hole was there or didn't expect to find the hole? A. No, sir. 983 Q. If you went looking for the hole, it was big enough to be found? A. Yes; yes."

The meaning of the plaintiff is plain; he was ignorant of the existence of the hole; the hole was large enough to be seen, if he had looked for it or had looked at it. We must assume that the plaintiff did not see the hole, for he stepped into it, thereby causing serious injury to himself and offering the possibility of very severe injury to the child which he was carrying in his arms. In our opinion it is immaterial whether or not the plaintiff stated that he could have seen the hole if he had looked for it, as it is perfectly apparent that, in the state of the light on the street at that time, a person of ordinary eyesight could not have failed to see a hole of the size of the one in question if he had looked for it. The same is true in most cases where a plaintiff is seeking to recover damages for injuries received by reason of a defect in a highway, when said defect is not concealed by the darkness or otherwise. If the contention of the defendant is adopted, recovery could rarely be had in such cases. There are few defects in the surface of a highway which in the daytime, or even in the twilight, cannot be seen by one who looks at them, or looks for them, or, having reason to apprehend their existence, is particularly on his guard against injury from them. However, whether or not a traveler could have seen such defect, if he had looked for it, is not conclusive in determining whether he is guilty of negligence contributing to his own injury, unless the surrounding circumstances are such that no other inference can be drawn from his conduct. In this case, in our opinion, notwithstanding the admission of the plaintiff, there still remained the question of fact for the determination of the jury whether, acting upon the assumption that the city of Central Falls had performed its statutory duty, with his attention momentarily diverted, the plaintiff was exercising the care of an ordinarily prudent man in the circumstances.

In support of his contention the defendant cites Nicholas v. Peck, 20 R. I. 533, 40 Atl. 418. The decision there is not applicable to the facts in the case at bar. In Nicholas v. Peck it appeared that the plaintiff was injured by falling over stones projecting above the surface of the highway. The plaintiff had previous knowledge of the defect, and when she had occasion to pass that way had been in the habit of going around said stones. The court held that the plaintiff was bound to look for said stones, if they were dangerous and she knew of the danger. The defendant also cites cases from other jurisdictions, where the facts were somewhat similar to those that appeared in Nicholas v. Peck. These cases are based upon the principle that, when a traveler has previous knowledge of a defect in a highway, a greater degree of caution is required of him, and he must be on his guard to avoid injury from a known danger. It may be noted that in some jurisdictions it has been held by the courts of last resort that, in case of injury to a plaintiff through a defect in a highway, the fact of previous knowledge of such defect on the plaintiff's part is not in all circumstances conclusive upon the question of his contributory negligence.

[6] The ordinary rule is that, when a person is traveling on the sidewalk of a public street and is ignorant of a defect in its surface, he has a right to assume that the way is safe, and is not required to exercise the highest degree of care and keep his eyes constantly on the walk. The care required of him is that of an ordinarily prudent man, and the question of his contributory negligence is for the jury. In Wood v. Boston, 121 Mass. 337, the plaintiff alleged that, while walking along the sidewalk of one of the public streets of the city of Boston, she stepped into a hole and was injured. The plaintiff in that case, in answer to the question whether she knew of any reason why she did not see the place into which she stepped, testified as follows:

"I don't know any reason why, except I didn't expect it was there. I wasn't looking at the sidewalk. I suppose I was looking at the ferry. It is most natural, if I was looking at it, I would most likely see it."

She also testified:

"If I had been looking on the sidewalk for the hole, I would have stepped past it. I don't think, if I saw it, I should have gone into it. I can't say why I was not looking at the sidewalk. I know I wasn't looking for an accident, or expecting it, until it came onto me."

The court said:

"The surrounding circumstances, and the conduct of the plaintiff at the time she stepped into the hole in the sidewalk, were fully disclosed by the evidence. It cannot be said to appear conclusively that she was careless, because she failed to keep her eyes constantly upon the sidewalk before her. Whether she was in the exercise of that due care which persons of common prudence would exercise under like circumstances was properly submitted to the jury."

In Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill. 358, 32 N. E. 271, the court said:

"A person passing along a sidewalk in a city is required to use ordinary and reasonable care and diligence to avoid danger; but what is such ordinary and reasonable care depends upon the circumstances of each particular case, and is a question of fact for the jury. A pedestrian upon such sidewalk may ordinarily assume that the sidewalk is in a reasonably safe condition for travel. To hold that such person is absolutely bound to keep his or her eyes constantly fixed on the sidewalk in a search for possible holes or other defects would be to establish a manifestly unreasonable and wholly impracticable rule."

In Cantwell v. City of Appleton, 71 Wis. 463, 37 N. W. 813, it appeared that the plaintiff walked into an excavation on the sidewalk in broad daylight, that she was walking slowly, looking straight ahead, and did not see that the sidewalk had been disturbed. The court said:

"Moreover, she was passing along the principal thoroughfare of the city, and had no reasonable cause to fear or suspect that such an unguarded pitfall would be allowed in her path. Many facts were proved bearing upon the question of the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff, from which different inferences may reasonably be drawn. In such a case the authorities all agree that the question of negligence is for the jury."

See, also, Flynn v. Watertown, 173 Mass. 108, 53 N. E. 147.

We are of the opinion that a verdict should not have been directed for the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

[7] The defendant contends before us that a verdict should have been directed in his favor, because the city of Central Falls had no jurisdiction over the place where the plaintiff claimed that the accident occurred, and owed no duty to the plaintiff. He bases this contention on the fact that the Pawtucket & Central Falls Grade Crossing Commission had been empowered by the General Assembly to condemn land, and to make changes in and about public bridges and highways, in the cities of Pawtucket and Central Falls, in order to carry out the purpose of its creation. In regard to any portion of Cross street, which said commission had taken under its jurisdiction in accordance with the power conferred upon it, the claim might well be made that the city of Central Falls had been relieved of its statutory obligation to repair and keep safe for travel. As to the rest of Cross street the duty of the city remained unchanged. For the purpose of operating a steam shovel, and for convenience in erecting the abutments of the new bridge, either by authority of the statute or by permission of the city of Central Falls, said commission had taken temporary control of a part of Cross street beyond the place where the abutments of the new bridge would stand when completed, and beyond the line of its condemnation. Well outside of and to the east of its operations the commission had erected said fence across the highway. Said fence must be held to mark the limit of the control assumed by the commission for the purpose of carrying on its work. Mr. Curtis, the civil engineer of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, called by the defendant, testified that:

"In all street work we have to take as much as is necessary to build a new bridge."

And further that:

"The city gave us authority to go in there and restore our masonry abutments and whatever was necessary in accordance with the plans."

From this testimony of the defendant it appears that the fence was erected and a portion of Cross street to the east of its line of condemnation was occupied by the commission in accordance with a special permission obtained from the city of Central Falls. When the former bridge on Cross street was removed, a similar fence was erected, which was taken down when the temporary bridge was completed and travel across the railroad location was resumed. When the progress of the construction work required that the use of the temporary bridge should be discontinued, the fence which existed at the time of the accident in question was erected. The grade of Cross street to the east of the fence remained undisturbed throughout these operations. It is plain from these circumstances that at all times the control of Cross street to the east of the fence had remained in the city of Central Falls. The placing of the horse and sign in front of the fence does not affect this question. By whomever they were placed there, they cannot properly be regarded as working an extension of the jurisdiction of the Grade Crossing Commission beyond the point which it had clearly marked off as the limit of its operations. If the city permitted the horse and sign to remain in one of its highways, it may avail itself of any advantage to be gained from the notice and warning which their presence gave, in accordance with the principles which we have set out above. Further consideration of this claim of the defendant is unnecessary.

[8] The proposition, however, is well supported by authority that, when changes are being made in a public street of a city by some body independent of the city and acting under direct legislative authority providing for the abolition of grade crossings, or for some other public work, such city is not relieved from its statutory liability for injury to a traveler caused by a defect in the street, if the city has not actually closed said street to public travel. Connelly v. Boston, 206 Mass. 4, 91 N. E. 998; Stewart v. Boston, 223 Mass. 525, 112 N. E. 218; Torphy v. Fall River, 188 Mass. 810, 74 N. E. 465.

[9] The defendant further claims that the direction of a verdict by said justice should not be disturbed by us, because it was supported by the weight of the evidence that there was no hole in the sidewalk in question, and if the plaintiff fell into a hole it was into one on private land adjoining said street. An examination of the transcript of evidence discloses that there was testimony presented at the trial that the plaintiff was injured by falling into a hole on the sidewalk. We have frequently said that it is not within the province of a justice of the superior court to direct a verdict in accordance with what appears to him to be the preponderance of the evidence. Under the provisions of our statute relating to appellate proceedings, the authority of this court to order judgment against the party in whose favor a verdict or decision has been rendered is limited to cases in which we find that there is no legal evidence to support such verdict or decision. The power of a justice of the superior court in that regard does not exceed the power of this court.

The action of the superior court in directing a verdict for the defendant was not warranted. The plaintiff's exception thereto is sustained. We find no merit in the other exceptions of the plaintiff, and they are overruled.

The case is remitted to the superior court for a new trial.

VINCENT, J., dissents.

(92 N. J. Law, 219)

WINCH v. JOHNSON.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS \S 708(6) — COLLISION ON STREET—TRAFFIC REGULATIONS.

Where an automobile at an intersecting street collided with a motorcycle coming in an opposite direction, the fact that the automobile failed to observe the provisions of the traffic act (Act April 6, 1915; P. L. 1915, p. 285) does not per se present the basis for the direction of a verdict against the defendant; such fact being but one factor in the situation, which, considered as a whole, presents a jury question as to the defendant's negligence under all the circumstances.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by Percy H. Johnson against Herbert A. Winch. From a judgment on a directed verdict for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and venire de novo ordered.

Kalisch & Kalisch, of Newark, for appellant. Herbert Clark Gilson, of Jersey City, for appellee.

MINTURN, J. The plaintiff, while riding upon the rear seat of a motorcycle, operated by another, was run into and injured by an automobile, driven by defendant, on Park avenue, at the intersection of Summer avenue, in the city of Newark, coming in an opposite direction. The collision, it is alleged, arose out of the fact that the defendant was in the act of turning to the left into Summer avenue, contrary to the provisions, inter alia, of subdivision 6, section 2, of chapter 156 of the Laws of 1915, commonly designated the "Traffic Act," which provides that:

"A vehicle turning into another road to the left shall, before turning, pass, when possible, to the right of and beyond the center of the intersection of the two roads."

This the defendant palpably failed to do, and his failure in that respect was made ratio decidendi for the direction of a verdict against him by the learned trial court. The reason underlying this direction manifestly was that this violation, regardless of other concurring or contributing factors, incident to the collision, dominated the situation, and characterized the defendant's act per se as the sole act of tortfeasance.

It will be observed that the section in question is not intended to supply a rigid unvariable rule of conduct, but one to be applied "when possible," ceteris paribus, to ordinary road conditions. If extraordinary conditions exist at an intersection, making its practical application obviously dangerous or unwise to a reasonably prudent man, this legislative proviso is intended to vest in the driver a reasonable discretion in order to avoid accident to himself and to others.

The manifest purpose of the legislation being the avoidance of danger and collision upon the highway, its application in any instance must co-ordinate with the rule of reason, which at common law vests an exercise of discretion for care and foresight in the wayfarer, consistent with the exercise of a like discretion in others in the lawful use of the highway. To adopt a construction which would militate against this common-law rule would necessitate a construction as unplastic in its operation as the laws of the Medes and Persians, and which might by its potent mandate and active instrumentality evolve, in many cases, the very dangers which the Legislature intended to obviate. The question, therefore, was one for the jury, under the familiar rule whether, under all the circumstances, including the failure to observe the provisions of the traffic act, the accident arose by reason of the defendant's negligence, and whether the plaintiff, by reason of any act of his, was a proximate and contributing factor to the result, so far as the latter doctrine can be applicable in this instance, in view of the plaintiff's status as a passenger.

Since the only inquiry before us is the legal propriety of the court's direction, in this respect, the construction we have thus put upon the act renders further consideration unnecessary, except to remark that cases in this court not unlike in principle the case at bar are: Evers v. Davis, 86 N. J. Law, 196, 90 Atl. 677; State v. Schutte, 88 N. J.

Law, 396, 96 Atl. 659; Pool v. Brown, 89 N. J. Law, 314, 98 Atl. 262; Erwin v. Traud, 90 N. J. Law, 289, 100 Atl. 184, L. R. A. 1917D, 690; Chiapparine v. Public Service Ry. Co., 103 Atl. 180; Horowitz v. Gottwalt, decided last term, 102 Atl. 930.

The judgment below will be reversed, and a venire de novo is ordered.

(32 N. J. Law, 94)

HYATT ROLLER BEARING CO. v. PENNSYLVANIA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 21, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 101(1)—FINDINGS OF COURT.

Since the trial court possesses the opportunity of viewing the witnesses and considering the credibility of their testimony, its finding upon conflicting testimony will not be disturbed.

2. CARRIERS \S 159(1)—CLAIM OF LOSS.

Where, in addition to notation of shortage on the original delivery receipt, consignee promptly wrote the carrier a letter reciting the facts, and carrier replied in three days that it could not locate the missing goods, there was sufficient compliance with the bill of lading requirement of claim of loss.

3. CARRIERS \S 159(1)—CLAIM OF LOSS.

Substantial compliance with bill of lading requirement of notice of claim for damages is all that is required.

Appeal from District Court of Jersey City.

Action by the Hyatt Roller Bearing Company against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued November term, 1917, before SWAYZE, TRENCHARD, and MINTURN, JJ.

Vredenburg, Wall & Carey, of Jersey City, for appellant. Day, Day, Smith & Slingerland, of Newark, for appellee.

MINTURN, J. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and the following facts were expressly or incidentally found as the basis for the judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff: Five bundles of steel were consigned to plaintiff at its works at Harrison, in this state, on February 24, 1916, by the Becker Steel Company of America, at Charleston, W. Va. The car provided by defendant for the purpose of carriage to plaintiff's premises from the Harrison station was known as a "ferry car," and was sealed at Harrison in accordance with the tariff filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, the effect of which was that defendant was relieved of responsibility for the losses incident to the intermediate carriage from the Harrison station to plaintiff's premises at that place. The ferry car was run into the premises of the plaintiff on March 11, 1916, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. When the car was unloaded, one of the steel bundles was missing, and plaintiff brought suit to recover its value.

Defendant contended that, since the five bundles had been loaded in the car and properly sealed, the plaintiff, under the terms of the bill of lading, assumed all the liability for loss during transportation. The trial court found that the defendant failed to deliver the goods at the Harrison station. The testimony was that, when the shipment was received at the plaintiff's plant, it was checked up by three of its employes, and the fact of the absence of the fifth bundle was noted by another employe upon the original delivery receipt, and the receipt with that notation was forwarded to defendant. There was, in addition, ample testimony furnished from which the trial court reasonably concluded that the fifth bundle was delivered to the plaintiff at Charleston, in West Virginia, but was not placed by defendant upon its ferry car at Harrison, to be run into the plaintiff's premises, upon the siding maintained for that purpose.

[1] There was a diversity of testimony upon that question, but the trial court, possessing the opportunity of viewing the witnesses pro and con, and with the advantage of considering the credibility of their testimony, found that the five bundles were not placed upon the ferry car at the Harrison station, and that finding upon well-settled rules, we cannot disturb. It eliminates from our consideration the legal effect of the consignment, under the terms of the bill of lading, as well as under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 379), which, under the conditions contended for by the defendant, it may be conceded, would relieve the defendant from responsibility, and impose the risk of transportation upon the plaintiff.

[2] It is insisted, finally, that the claim of loss, required by the bill of lading, to be furnished by the plaintiff, within four months, to the defendant, after delivery, was never furnished. The testimony evinces that, in addition to the notation upon the receipt already referred to, there was a letter written by plaintiff to defendant on April 17, 1916, citing the facts, and informing defendant that the fifth bundle had not been delivered. The defendant, after investigation, notified plaintiff by letter, three days thereafter, that they had been unable to locate it. The stress of the reasoning upon this point is placed upon the word "claim," contained in the bill of lading, as follows:

"Claims must be made in writing, to the carrier, at the point of delivery, or at the point of origin within four months after delivery," etc.

We think the information conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant was substantially a claim within the meaning of the language quoted. The liberality of interpretation placed upon that term by the federal Supreme Court, and the courts of sister states where the question has arisen, evinces that the fundamental reason for the requirement is to enable the carrier to trace the goods within a reasonable period after the delivery, or the failure to deliver, so as to protect itself from resulting loss, upon a subsequent claim for damage. Manifestly the delivery of a notice of the loss, from which no other inference is reasonably derivable than that the loss has occurred, and giving the substantial particulars as in the case sub judice, and which resulted in an investigation by the carrier, is substantially a claim or a notice of a claim within the reasonable construction of the bill of lading. The most recent review of the subject is contained in St. Louis & I. Mt. Ry. Co. v. Starbird, 243 U. S. 592, 37 Sup. Ct. 462, 61 L. Ed. 917. There the court points out the rationale for a reasonable interpretation of the word as follows:

"Such notice puts in permanent form the evidence of an intention to claim damages, and will serve to call the attention of the carrier to the condition of the freight, and enable it to make such investigation as the facts of the case require, while there is opportunity so to do."

[3] In conformity with that general view, the rule is generally accepted to be that a stipulation requiring the giving of notice of a claim for damages must be given a reasonable construction, and a substantial compliance therewith on the part of the shipper is all that is required. See annotations to Hoye v. P. R. R., 191 N. Y. 101, 83 N. E. 586, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 641, 14 Ann. Cas. 417; 4 R. O. L. 796, and cases cited; 10 C. J. 336, and cases cited.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed, with costs.

(91 N. J. Law, 426)

KREBS v. RUBSAM et al.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 5, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT §167(4)—INJURY TO TENANT—FAILURE TO KEEP HALL LIGHTS BURNING—NEGLIGENCE.

An action lies against the owner of a tenement house for failure to keep the hall lights burning until 10 p. m., as required by section 126 of the act (4 Comp. St. 1910, pp. 5323, 5341), when it appears that such failure was negligent, tested by the rules of common law.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT §167(4) — FAILURE TO KEEP HALL LIGHTS BURNING—NEGLIGENCE.

Where the lights have been properly lit, but extinguished before 10 p. m. by an independent agency for which the owner is not responsible, and an accident occurs in consequence, the question to be answered in determining negligence of the owner or his agent is whether the period of time between the extinguishing of the light and the injury was such that said owner or agent should in the exercise of reasonable care have discovered the situation and relit the light.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT §169(11)—FAILURE TO KEEP HALL LIGHTS BURNING—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Ordinarily, that question is for the jury; but when the facts are undisputed, and no other inference can be reasonably drawn than that of absence of negligence, a verdict for defendant is properly directed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Essex County.

Action by Wilma Krebs, administratrix of Julius Krebs, deceased, against Edward F. Rubsam and others. Judgment for defendants upon a directed verdict, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

A. J. Rossbach, of Newark, for appellant. John A. Bernhardt, of Newark, for respondents.

PARKER, J. This is a negligence case. The trial judge directed a verdict for the defendant, and this judicial action is the sole ground of appeal.

[1, 2] Defendants were the owners and proprietors of a house in Newark occupied by three families, one on each floor, and coming within the statutory definition of a "tenement house." P. L. 1904, p. 96, § 2; C. S. 5323. It was their statutory duty as such owners to keep a proper light burning in the public hallways near the stairs, upon every floor, between sunset and 10 o'clock each evening. Section 128; Kargman v. Carlo, 85 N. J. Law, 632, 635, 90 Atl. 292. The complaint alleged a negligent failure to perform this duty, and that in consequence thereof deceased fell while descending the stairs on a specified evening before 10 o'clock, and sustained injuries from which he died. There was a dispute on the evidence as to whether he died as a result of the fall, but this may, for present purposes, be assumed to be a jury question. In cases of this class where the statute is penal in character, and the right of action is predicated on an alleged violation of the statutory duty, the action is governed by the ordinary rules of negligence cases except that the violation of the statute operates as the basis of the defendant's liability, the defendant retaining all the defenses appropriate to an action of negligence that are not affected by the statute. Evers v. Davis, 86 N. J. Law, 196, 204, 205, 90 Atl. 677. Thus to recover in a private action for an omission of the statutory duty, plaintiff must show that the omission was a negligent one (Id.); and, indeed, this was the charge in the complaint. But in the case at bar there was, in our opinion, no evidence to justify the submission of alleged negligence to the jury. It appeared on the testimony that deceased started down stairs from the top floor, occupied by a friend of his named Ruder, just before 10 o'clock, and that as he was descending the stairs from the second to the ground floor the gaslight on the ground floor newel was out; but on the other hand it appeared by plaintiff's own witness, Ruder, that the light in question had been lit that evening until deceased actually started or was ready to start down the stairs. Ruder testified that when he turned up his own light (on the third floor as Krebs was about to leave) the first floor light was lit, and when Krebs came from his kitchen to go down that went out. There was nothing in the defendant's case more favorable to the plaintiff. It appeared without contradiction that the light had been turned out by a young son of Rubsam, who testified that he was at night school till 9:30, and reached home at 9:55, turning out the light as he went upstairs, and that his father had forbidden him to touch the lights, but on this night he thought his father was already home, and so he turned out the light as he went upstairs. Defendant Edward F. Rubsam testified that no one but himself had any authority to turn out the lights. Mrs. Scherer, the other defendant, also testified that she never gave any authority to the son, and that her brother, Edward Rubsam, had the entire active management of the house. There was no claim that either defendant, or Edward's wife, knew the light was out before the accident. It was therefore uncontradicted that the light was extinguished by the unauthorized act of a third person, and consequently for this direct act defendants were not responsible.

[3] Any claim that they were negligent must rest on the proposition that after the light was turned out, they should, in the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered this and relit it, not merely before 10 o'clock, but before Krebs went down stairs. Schnatterer v. Bamberger, 81 N. J. Law, 558, 79 Atl. 324, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1077, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 139. Ordinarily this is a jury question, but this case falls within the class of cases where by reason of undisputed facts and an interval of time between the creation of the danger and the accident, so short that men cannot reasonably draw different inferences from the testimony, negligence has been held as a court question to be nonexistent. Timian v. Dilworth, 76 N. J. Law, 568, 71 Atl. 33; Schnatterer v. Bamberger, 81 N. J. Law, 558, 79 Atl. 324, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1077, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 139. Assuming, therefore, that the absence of light caused the fall, and the fall caused the death, there was nothing to require the submission to the jury of the question whether the defendants were negligent in not relighting the light prior to Krebs' departure from the Ruder apartment. The trial court therefore properly directed the verdict, and the judgment will be affirmed.

(82 N. J. Law, 185)

CASTELBAUM v. WOLFSON.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR \Leftrightarrow 1051(3)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

If it was error to admit a transcript of the pleadings of another case in evidence, it was harmless, where it was averred in the complaint and admitted in the answer that a certain judgment was entered in such case.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ¶226—ASSUMPTION OF MORTGAGE—LIABILITY.

Assumption, by grantee of business, of a chattel mortgage upon the property conveyed, is an agreement to assume and pay interest as well as principal notwithstanding that the amount of the principal alone is recited in the assumption clause.

3. EVIDENCE ¶384 — VARYING TERMS OF WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Where a written agreement is complete on its face, oral testimony will not be permitted, either to contradict it or to supply terms with respect to which the writing is silent.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶862(1) — MATTERS REVIEWABLE—RECORD.

On appeal, a contention not supported by any ground of appeal will not be considered.

White, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Suit by David Wolfson against Jacob Castelbaum. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas Brown, of Perth Amboy, for appellant. Isidor Kalisch, of Newark, for appellee.

GUMMERE, C. J. The material facts in the present case are thus stated in the brief of counsel for the appellant:

"The suit is founded on an agreement wherein the respondent, the party of the first part, agreed with the appellant, the party of the second part, to convey a certain saloon business in the city of Perth Amboy, together with the stock of liquors and cigars. The sale was made subject to the following conditions: 'Subject to a mortgage of $950 (really $900) now held by the Peter Breidt Brewery, which the said party of the second part agrees to assume in addition to the consideration above named.' The respondent, who is the party of the first part to this agreement, was sued by the Peter Breidt Brewery, and was obliged to pay interest and costs on the chattel mortgage referred to in the foregoing provision of the agreement, and thereupon the respondent brought this action in the Supreme Court to recover from the appellant the moneys which he claimed to have paid, and the costs and expenses, above the principal sum of the chattel mortgage."

The plaintiff had a verdict for the full amount of his claim, and judgment was entered thereon against the defendant.

[1] The first ground of appeal is directed at a ruling of the trial court admitting in evidence, and permitting to be read to the jury, a transcript of the pleadings in the suit of the Peter Breidt Brewery against the plaintiff; the contention being that the only proper proof upon that point was a certified copy of the judgment itself. It is not necessary for us to consider the soundness of the legal proposition thus submitted, for the recovery of this judgment by the brewing company against the plaintiff was not a matter in controversy between the parties. It was averred by the plaintiff in his complaint, and was admitted by the defendant in his answer, and it is probably for this reason that counsel for the appellant in his brief states the recovery of this judgment as a fact. It is, of course, true that the amount of the judgment is not shown by this transcript; but it was proved by the testimony of the plaintiff without objection, as was its payment in full by him.

[2] It is next argued that by the provision of assumption the defendant only became bound to pay the principal of the mortgage, and not the interest accrued and to accrue thereon. But this is not the extent of his legal obligation. The assumption by the grantee of a mortgage existing upon the premises conveyed is an agreement to assume and pay that mortgage, both principal and interest, notwithstanding the fact that the amount of the principal is recited in the assumption clause. The cases so holding are numerous, and no authority to the contrary is referred to by counsel for the appellant.

[3] It is further contended that the court erred in excluding a conversation between the parties, had at the time of the execution of the agreement, as to what part of the interest, if any, should be assumed and paid by the defendant. We think this testimony was properly excluded. The written contract is plain, and was an agreement on the part of the defendant to pay both the principal and the interest of the mortgage. Testimony offered for the purpose of proving a conversation had at the time of the execution and delivery of the agreement, which controverted the writing itself, is not admissible in the absence of fraud. No principle is more firmly imbedded in our law than that which declares that in the absence of fraud or illegality, where a written agreement is complete on its face, oral testimony will not be permitted either to contradict it, or to supply terms with respect to which the writing is silent. In such a case the writing must be accepted as a full expression of the agreement of the parties.

We are asked to reverse the judgment under review upon the further ground that the trial court erred in refusing to nonsuit the plaintiff at the close of his case. This motion was based upon the theory that the proof showed there had been an accord and satisfaction between the parties, the effect of which was to release the defendant from any further obligation with relation to the subject-matter of the present suit. A recital of the evidence upon which the defendant based his theory will serve no good purpose; it is sufficient to say that we have carefully examined it, and find nothing in it to support his contention. The motion to nonsuit was properly refused.

[4] The appellant further contends that the judgment is erroneous in its amount, because the respondent was improperly permitted to recover not only the interest on the Breidt Brewery Company mortgage, but also the costs which he incurred in the Breidt litigation. As this contention, however, is unsupported by any ground of appeal, it has not received consideration at our hands.

Other grounds of reversal are specified in the appellant's reasons for appeal; but, as they were none of them argued by counsel, we have treated them as having been abandoned.

The judgment under review will be affirmed.

WHITE, J., dissenting.

(89 N. J. Eq. 205)

KEMPSON v. KEMPSON et al. (No. 52.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

WILLS §865(1) — CONSTRUCTION — PARTIAL INTESTACY.

The will of Peter Tertius Kempson consists of six paragraphs or items, numbered first, second, third, sixth, seventh, and ninth. After disposing of the residuary estate, this clause appears: "From all the provisions of the preceding clauses I except my interest in the Insurance Times newspaper, its good will," etc. Held, that Peter Tertius Kempson died intestate as to his interest in "the Insurance Times."

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Suit by John Fraser Kempson against Grover O. Kempson and others. From a decree for complainant (102 Atl. 673), defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Smith, Mabon & Herr, of Hoboken, for appellants. Charles O. Truex, of Montclair, and Mark Townsend, Jr., of Jersey City, for Charles M. Van Cleve. John K. English, of Elizabeth, for administrator of Julia H. Kempson.

BLACK, J. A bill in this case was filed in the Court of Chancery for the construction of certain items of the will of Peter Tertius Kempson, who died September 25, 1890. The property affected is the estate or interest in certain personal property, consisting of a newspaper called the Insurance Times. The contest is over the one-third interest in the Insurance Times. The appellant's brother St. George Kempson, a son and legatee under the will of Peter Tertius Kempson, on the 30th day of December, 1893, assigned his one-third interest in the Insurance Times to his stepmother, Julia H. Kempson, and James A. Van Cleve. He died August 12, 1907, leaving a will in which he bequeathed his property to his wife and children. The question, therefore is whether the assignment made by St. George Kempson on the 30th day of December, 1893, is legal. That in turn depends upon the question whether Peter Tertius Kempson died intestate as to this item of the Insurance Times, because, if he did, then St. George Kempson had legal power to make the assignment of December 30, 1893.

The assignees and their heirs, the respondents, have a legal title. The Court of Chancery held that Peter Tertius Kempson died intestate as to the Insurance Times, and that St. George Kempson made a valid assignment of all his interest in the Insurance Times. We think the Court of Chancery reached a right conclusion, and the decree of the Court of Chancery should be affirmed. The reason on which this conclusion is based, in brief, is this: The will of Peter Tertius Kempson consists of six paragraphs or items, numbered first, second, third, sixth, seventh, and ninth; the first five being single paragraphs, making specific bequests. The ninth paragraph is composed of eight distinct sections, although not numbered. The first four refer to the disposition of the residuary estate by the following clause:

"All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, both real and personal, not hereinbefore disposed of, or hereinafter specified, to have and to hold the same, in trust," etc.

The last four relate specifically to the Insurance Times and the conduct of the business connected therewith. Then follows this clause:

"From all the provisions of the preceding clauses, I except my interest in the Insurance Times newspaper, its good will, etc."

From these clauses, read in connection with the entire will, we think the conclusion is irresistible that the testator's intention, as gathered from within the four corners of the will, to use a picturesque phrase in the law of wills, was to exclude the Insurance Times from the residuary clause; that Peter Tertius Kempson died intestate as to his interest in the Insurance Times. Failing to make subsequent provisions for its ultimate disposal, that the will must furnish the basis for construction is elemental. It can make no difference whether the testator through ignorance or inadvertence fails to dispose of all his estate. The courts cannot supply the omission. The province of the courts is to construe, not to make, wills. Tyndale v. McLaughlin, 84 N. J. Eq. 657, 95 Atl. 119.

The decree of the Court of Chancery is affirmed.

(89 N. J. Eq. 128)

DOLAN v. UNIVERSAL FIRE BRICK CO.
(No. 45/33.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 12, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS §684 — INSOLVENT FOREIGN CORPORATION — APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER.

The court may, under the provisions of sections 65 and 66 of an act concerning corporations (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1640), appoint a receiver of a foreign corporation found to be insolvent notwithstanding the fact that no receiver had been appointed in the jurisdiction of the domicile of the corporation and that there are no proceedings there pending against it, and the procedure is substantially the same as if the corporation were domestic.

2. CASE DISTINGUISHED.

McDermott v. Woodhouse, 87 N.J.Eq. 617, 101 Atl. 375, distinguished upon the grounds indicated in Atwater v. Baskerville, 104 Atl. 310, 647.

Application by Patrick J. Dolan for the appointment of a receiver for the Universal Fire Brick Company. Application granted.

Michael J. Tansey, of Newark, for complainant. Clifford L. Newman and Edgar M. Tilt, both of Paterson, for defendant.

LANE, V. C. [1, 2] This is an application to appoint a receiver of a foreign corporation under the provisions of the sixty-fifth and sixty-sixth sections of the Corporation Act, 2 Comp. Statutes of N. J. p. 1640. The jurisdiction of the court is questioned upon the authority of McDermott v. Woodhouse, 87 N. J. Eq. 617, 101 Atl. 375. I considered that case in Atwater v. Baskerville, 104 Atl. 310, 647, not yet officially reported, and came to the conclusion that it is not an authority for the proposition that this court may not under the sixty-fifth and sixty-sixth sections of the statute appoint a receiver of a foreign corporation. This court may, where a foreign corporation is shown to be insolvent, appoint a receiver notwithstanding the fact that no receiver has been appointed in the domicile of the corporation and there are no proceedings there pending against it, and the procedure is substantially the same as if the corporation had been domestic.

(91 N. J. Law, 400)

LANNING v. COHEN et al.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 7, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INNKEEPERS ~~§4~~—LICENSE—STABLING.

To authorize the court of common pleas to grant a license for an inn and tavern in a township, it is essential, among other things, that the applicant should be well provided with stabling and provender of hay and grain for four horses more than his own stock.

2. INNKEEPERS ~~§4~~—LICENSE—REVOCATION.

On certiorari, the grant of a license to keep an inn and tavern in a township will be reversed when it appears that the conclusion of the court on the disputed question of fact as to whether the applicant was well provided with stabling and provender was without competent evidence to support it.

Certiorari to Court of Common Pleas, Mercer County.

Certiorari by Wallace Lanning against Harry Cohen and others to review the granting of an innkeeper's license by the court of common pleas of Mercer county. Grant of license set aside.

Argued February term, 1918, before SWAYZE, TRENCHARD, and MINTURN, JJ.

Wilcoff & Lanning, of Trenton, for prosecutor. John H. Kafes and John A. Montgomery, both of Trenton, for respondent Cohen.

TRENCHARD, J. This writ brings up for review the grant of a license by the court of common pleas of Mercer county to Harry Cohen to keep an inn and tavern in the township of Ewing pursuant to an application therefor under the inn and tavern act of 1846 (C. S. p. 2890). We are of the opinion that the court was without authority to grant the license, and that it must be set aside.

[1] On its face the application was sufficient and made out a prima facie case of authority in the court of common pleas to grant it. But that prima facie case was open to question before that court, and it was challenged by the prosecutor of this writ upon the ground, among others, stated in the remonstrance, that in fact the applicant "was not well provided with house room, stabling and provender." To authorize the court to grant the license, it was essential, among other things, that the applicant should be "well provided with house room, stabling and provender" (C. S. p. 2890, par. 2), and to be well provided with stabling and provender must have "stabling and provender of hay and grain for four horses more than his own stock." Paragraph 16. Accordingly, the court proceeded to inquire by evidence whether the facts existed without which its authority to grant the license would fall, and concluded to grant the license.

Of course, the jurisdiction of the court over such an investigation of facts is indisputable, and if its conclusions of fact thereon were legally warranted by the proofs adduced before it, those conclusions could not be reversed on certiorari. This being so, the sole province of the Supreme Court on these matters of fact is to examine the evidence offered in the court of common pleas, and decide whether on that evidence the court could lawfully determine that it had authority to grant the license. Dufford v. Nolan, 46 N. J. Law, 87; Houman v. Schulster, 60 N. J. Law, 132, 36 Atl. 776. Upon a careful examination of the evidence in the present case we think it could not.

[2] The house for which the applicant sought a license is in the township of Ewing, only 200 feet from the Trenton city line, in a manufacturing center. The whole lot on which it stands is only 32 by 86 feet. The building itself is 30 by 65 feet, leaving a back yard 21 by 32 feet. There is no stable or other accommodations for horses and wagons. On the first floor is the barroom, on the second floor are four bedrooms and a bath, on the third floor are two rooms, without beds, used as storerooms. The applicant, his wife, and two children, one ten years old and one five, live in the place. It is less than a mile from the center of Trenton, where are located all of Trenton's principal hotels, and is about 400 feet from the Johnson trolley line, running to the center of Trenton every 45 minutes, and about 1,400 feet from the Princeton avenue trolley, running to the center of Trenton on a 5 to 8 minute schedule. It is situate on a "dead-end" street not used as a through route of travel. The physical conditions of the property suggest only a city saloon and not an inn and tavern. The testimony tends to confirm one's expectations of nothing but a saloon use. It seems to show that, while Cohen's place had been licensed for seven years, yet he kept no guest register, entertained no travelers except a few "friends," and furnished but few meals. In short, his business seems to have consisted mainly of entertaining members of the local community by furnishing sandwiches and liquid refreshments. There is much to be said, therefore, in support of the assertion that the place had the characteristics of a saloon only, rather than those of an inn and tavern, and there is of course a clear distinction between the two. The former cannot be licensed in townships by the court of common pleas and the latter may be if it be found necessary to accommodate and entertain travelers and strangers, to serve the public occasions of the county, and for the convenience of men meeting together to transact business. C. S. p. 2893, par. 13. Until the Legislature sees fit to modify the requirements of the inn and tavern act in its application to townships (as it has with respect to some particular municipalities and classes of municipalities), these requirements in townships must be observed.

But we shall not pursue this phase of the case. We rest our decision upon the fact that it conclusively appears that the applicant was not well provided with stabling and provender as defined and required by the inn and tavern act. He had neither stabling nor provender for horses on his premises. Probably the reason is that his place was not intended for an inn and tavern. He claims to have the privilege of a stable near by in the city of Trenton, but the evidence shows that he has no present control of it. Moreover that stable does not meet the requirements of the statute since it has only three stalls, and no provender is kept there.

The grant of license will be set aside, with costs.

(31 N. J. Law, 479)

STEVENSON CO. v. OPPENHEIMER.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 6, 1918.)

1. BROKERS — COMPENSATION — WHEN EARNED — SPECIAL CONTRACTS.

The general rule that to earn his commissions a broker must be the procuring cause of the sale is subject to qualification by special agreement making the commission payable upon sale of the property.

2. BROKERS — COMPENSATION — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — SALE BY OWNER.

Under a contract constituting a broker the sole selling agent for land and providing for payment of commission "whenever the said property shall be sold" a sale by the owner renders him liable to the broker for the agreed commission.

Appeal from First District Court of City of Newark.

Action by the Stevenson Company against Edward Oppenheimer. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before SWAYZE, TRENCHARD, and MINTURN, JJ.

Kellogg & Chance, of Jersey City, for appellant. Barrett & Barrett, of Newark, for appellee.

MINTURN, J. The allegation of the plaintiff, a domestic corporation, was that on April 23, 1917, the defendant contracted in writing with it whereby the plaintiff was authorized to sell a certain farm of the defendant for the sum of $7,500, constituting plaintiff sole selling agent, and agreeing to pay a commission of 5 per cent. upon the selling price "whenever the said property should be sold."

The plaintiff, in pursuance of the contract, advertised the farm and expended money and time in negotiating for its sale. Without notice to the plaintiff, the defendant himself, within a month after the execution of the contract, sold the property for the sum of $7,500, but refused to pay to the plaintiff the agreed commissions. The trial court found for the plaintiff, from which judgment this appeal was taken.

[1] While the general rule is that a broker to earn his commissions must be the procuring cause of the sale, the qualification has been imposed upon the rule by repeated adjudications in this state that the parties may by special agreement so limit the operation of the rule as to make its application depend upon the happening of some stated certain event. Vreeland v. Vetterlein, 33 N. J. Law, 247; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. Law, 823; Payne v. Twitchell, 81 N. J. Law, 193, 81 Atl. 350; Dresser v. Gilbert, 81 N. J. Law, 358, 79 Atl. 1043. The last case cited presents an instance where the owner contracted to pay the stipulated commission to the agent upon a sale of the property "by him, me, or any other person," and this court held upon a sale of the property by the owner himself that the contingency presented by the contract thereby arose, and that the agent was entitled to his commission.

In that case we stated as ratio decidendi that the general rule governing the status between the parties was "a doctrine of public policy intended to effectuate justice between the parties, and is not intended to unmake an agreement which they deliberately executed, and which fixes the terms and conditions upon which compensation shall be made." The language presented by the contract in the case at bar is equally without qualification, and is emphatic and specific in statement.

[2] It promises to pay the agreed compensation to the plaintiff "whenever the said property is sold." The defendant would add to this promise in effect the words "sold by the Stevenson Company." But we find no warrant in the contract for the application of such qualifying language, and we must assume that, if the defendant intended to so limit its operation, he would have caused the words of qualification to be added before the execution of the contract. His failure so to do leads us to conclude that the construction contended for by him was not within the contemplation of the parties, but that, on the contrary, a sale made by the owner which in practical effect prevented the sale intended by the agreement was within the contemplation of the parties when they employed the generic language contained in the contract. It is to be observed also that the contract was exclusive in its nature, and was intended to commit the sale of the property exclusively to the plaintiff.

If the construction of the defendant were to be accepted, the efforts of the plaintiff, even though they awakened into activity by advertisement, hearsay, or other indirect method of inquiry, the curiosity of the purchaser, and ultimately led to the sale, would still go unrewarded and unrecognized, a situation which was criticised adversely in Vreeland v. Vetterlein, supra, and Weeks v. Smith, 79 N. J. Law, 388, 75 Atl. 773.

By the construction we have put upon the contract sub judice, in accepting the plain language of the parties as indicative of their intent, such an inequitable result in this instance is rendered impossible.

We find no merit in the remaining contentions of the defendant, and conclude that the judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

APPLE v. ATLANTIC CITY.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. March 27, 1917.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 185(5) — CHARGES AGAINST POLICE OFFICER — PROCEEDINGS.

Under P. L. 1915, p. 495, § 4, distributing judicial as well as executive and legislative powers, authority, and duties among the five city departments, the jurisdiction to try delinquent police officers is vested in commissioner of department of public safety.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 185(5) — CHARGES AGAINST POLICE OFFICER — LEGALITY.

The board of commissioners having no jurisdiction, under P. L. 1915, p. 495, § 4, to hear and determine charges against a police officer, a conviction and order of dismissal in proceedings before such board will be set aside, although commissioner of public safety who had jurisdiction to try officer dismissed heard testimony and voted for conviction and dismissal.

Certiorari by Charles N. Apple against Atlantic City to review a conviction of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman and subversive of good order and discipline of the police and for soliciting votes during hours of duty, and an order dismissing him from the police department. Conviction and order of dismissal set aside.

Argued November term, 1916, before SWAYZE, MINTURN, and KALISCH, JJ.

O. L. Cole, of Atlantic City, for prosecutor. Harry Wooton and Joseph B. Perskie, both of Atlantic City, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. The prosecutor was a member of the police department of Atlantic City. Charges were preferred against him of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and conduct subversive of good order and discipline of the police force, in violation of rules 16 and 17 of the rules and regulations adopted by the police department of Atlantic City, and also for the violation of a resolution passed by the board of commissioners on April 20, 1916, prohibiting any member or officer of the police department, during the hours of duty, from soliciting votes for or against any candidate for any election, etc. The prosecutor was tried on these charges by the full board of commissioners of Atlantic City, was found guilty, and dismissed from the police force.

The jurisdiction of the board of commissioners to hear and determine the charges against the prosecutor is challenged. Prior to the passage of the act of 1915 (P. L. 1915, p. 495, § 4), the power to try delinquents in the police department was vested in the board of commissioners. Herbert v. Atlantic City, 87 N. J. Law, 98, 93 Atl. 80. After that decision the Legislature amended section 4 so as to include within its terms the distribution of judicial powers, authority, and duties as well as those of executive, administrative, and legislative character among the five departments in cities under commission government having that number of departments.

[1] Atlantic City has five departments. Each department is under the direction and supervision of a commissioner. By virtue of section 4, as amended, of the act above referred to, the jurisdiction formerly vested in the full board of commissioners to try delinquents in the police department become vested in the commissioner of the department of public safety. Crane, Pros., v. Mayor and Ald. of Jersey City et al., 103 Atl. 678, decided at June term, 1916, opinion not yet officially reported.

[2] It may be suggested that the accused suffered no harm in this instance because the statutory tribunal which tried him was composed of the full board of commissioners, among which was the commissioner of the department of public safety, which commissioner was vested with the statutory authority to try the accused, and who heard the testimony and voted for the conviction and dismissal of the prosecutor. But we do not think this is a valid reason for ignoring the behest of the statute. For while it may be true that in the present case no particular harm was done to the prosecutor by the participation of the full board in his trial and conviction, we cannot overlook the serious result which would follow the countenancing of the legality of the action of an irregular and extrastatutory tribunal as this was. For among the many other good reasons which suggest themselves why the action of the board in the present case must be treated as a nullity is that to give the acts of such an extrastatutory tribunal legal effect necessarily enforces a recognition by this court of the power of such tribunal to retain or remove accused officers, after trial, etc., by a majority vote in which the commissioner of the department of public safety did not participate, or was in the minority; whereas the statute, in plain terms, casts the responsibility for the conduct of the department of public safety on the commissioner of such department of which he is the head.

For the reasons given, the conviction of the prosecutor and the order dismissing him from the police department must be set aside, with costs.

BRENNAN v. MAYOR AND ALDERMEN OF JERSEY CITY.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. Nov. 8, 1916.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §189(2)—SET-OFF AGAINST SALARY—POLICEMEN—FINES.

Where question is one of enabling city to enforce a fine imposed on its policeman for dereliction of duty, public policy does not require that compensation be exempt from judicial attack in view of P. L. 1915, p. 470, § 2.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §189(2)—POLICE OFFICERS—FINES—JURISDICTION.

In view of P. L. 1915, p. 495, as to appropriate commissioner acting alone, where a formal resolution delegating to the several commissioners, as directors of their respective departments, authority to try their subordinates, was duly passed by board, director of public safety had jurisdiction to try policeman and fine him for dereliction of duty.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §189(2)—POLICE OFFICERS—FINE—JUDGMENT.

Judgment of director of public safety: "Patrolman John Brennan. Charge, not properly patrolling. Plea, N. G. Finding, G. Sentence, 60 days' pay"—was sufficient judgment imposing fine.

Appeal from District Court of Jersey City.

Suit by John Brennan against the Mayor and Aldermen of Jersey City. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued June term, 1916, before GARRISON, PARKER, and BERGEN, JJ.

Harry Lane, of Jersey City, for appellant. Thomas J. Brogan, of Jersey City, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This was a suit to recover two months' salary as a patrolman on the Jersey City police force. The question arises out of a set-off claimed by the city, consisting of a fine of 60 days' pay imposed by the director of public safety for an offense against the Police Code. The district court sustained the set-off, which was equal to the claim, and gave judgment for the city defendant. The appellant claims: (1) That it is unlawful to deprive him of the salary to which he is entitled by law, by setting off a claim against him; (2) that the director of public safety had no power to impose the fine; (3) that there is no legal proof of a conviction as a basis for said fine.

[1] As to the first point it is argued that the salary or compensation of a public officer is exempt as a matter of public policy from judicial attack. This is true as to a private creditor. Spencer v. Morris, 67 N. J. Law, 500, 51 Atl. 470. The recent change in that policy introduced by the Legislature is not precisely applicable, but worthy of note. P. L. 1915, p. 470, especially section 2. Apart from this, however, when the question is of enabling a city to enforce a fine imposed on one of its policemen for dereliction of duty, the public policy is plainly the other way, for discipline would be seriously impaired, to say the least, if an officer dependent solely on his pay could insist on the payment of his salary while refusing to recognize a fine imposed for a failure in a breach of the duties that he draws salary for performing.

[2] 2. With the claim that the director had no jurisdiction we find no difficulty. The general power of the police board under the charter to frame a Police Code was adequate to support the enactment of a system of reasonable fines for derelictions in duty. It is not urged that the fine was unreasonable. The powers of the police board passed upon the adoption of the Commission Government Act to the board of city commissioners. It was held in Herbert v. Atlantic City, 87 N. J. Law, 98, 93 Atl. 80, that the clause (section 4) of that act, as first enacted, relating to distribution of powers among the individual commissioners, did not include the judicial power, but this was amended in 1915 (P. L. p. 495) so that the appropriate commissioner may act alone, and it appears that a formal resolution delegating to the several commissioners as directors of their respective departments the judicial authority to try their subordinates was duly passed by the board. This resolution provided that the directors of the respective departments should, whenever charges should be preferred against any officer or employé of the city conduct the trial of said employé, and render judgment thereon, which judgment upon the filing of a memorandum thereon (sic) with the city clerk should become the judgment of the board, provided that the maximum penalty to be fixed by any director should not exceed the forfeiture of 90 days' pay. We consider that it endowed the director of public safety, as the head of the police department, with the necessary authority in the premises.

[3] Lastly it is urged that there was no legal evidence of the trial of plaintiff and judgment imposing a fine on him. The director testified that he had tried plaintiff, found him guilty, and imposed a fine. He identified his own letter to the city clerk, reporting a sitting on a stated date for the trial of delinquent policemen, and annexed a memorandum of his judgments for the purpose of becoming the judgment of the board of commissioners. This is the language of the letter. The paper annexed included an entry reading thus: "Patrolman John Brennan. Charge, not properly patrolling. Plea, N. G. Finding, G. Sentence, 60 days' pay." If an explanation of the abbreviations were required, they were explained as meaning "Not guilty" and "Guilty," respectively.

Assuming that plaintiff may collaterally attack this judgment, which we think he cannot do, we consider it sufficient. It seems to be as explicit as the average police court record, and formality is not an essential. It is clearly before us that plaintiff was tried by his superior on a specified charge and sentenced, and that there was a plea and finding and any person of average intelligence can translate the abbreviations and confirm the translation by the context.

We think none of the points made is well taken. The judgment will be affirmed.

(91 N. J. Law, 594)

SPENCER HEATER CO. v. ABBOTT.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 19, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES §441(2)—WARRANTY OF FITNESS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where the evidence tended to show that a manufacturer of steam heaters, at the request of a florist, sent his salesman to the florist's greenhouse for a consultation as to the number and sizes of heaters required for the florist's purposes, and the salesman examined the premises, took measurements, and told the florist, who disclaimed any knowledge of the number and sizes required, that a No. 11 and a No. 12 would supply the heat required, and agreed to furnish them, it was open to the jury to find that there was a warranty of the fitness of the heaters for the purposes contemplated.

2. SALES §261(1, 5)—WARRANTY—TEST.

The question whether or not a statement or affirmation accompanying a sale is a warranty depends upon whether the conditions were such that the vendee had a right to understand, and did understand, that what was said by the vendor was meant as a warranty. A decisive test is whether the vendor assumes to assert a fact of which the buyer is ignorant, or merely states an opinion or judgment upon a matter of which the vendor has no special knowledge, and on which the buyer may be expected also to have an opinion, and to exercise his judgment. In the former case there is a warranty; in the latter, not.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §164(1)—AGENT'S UNAUTHORIZED WARRANTY—RATIFICATION.

A principal may ratify his agent's unauthorized warranty, and if, with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances attending the transaction, he does so, he is bound thereby.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §174—ACT OF SALES AGENT—WARRANTY—RATIFICATION.

When the evidence tended to show that a manufacturer of steam heaters, which failed to do the work that they were warranted by his agent to do, with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances of the transaction, acknowledged that the trouble was due to the mistake of his agent, offered to pay the expense of a temporary makeshift, proceeded to install adequate heaters, and all without any repudiation of the acts of his agent, it was open to the jury to find that thereby he ratified the warranty of his agent.

5. SALES §418(11)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—DAMAGES.

For the failure to fulfill a contract to furnish steam heaters adequate to heat a greenhouse sufficiently to force plants for the winter and early spring markets, the measure of damage is the difference between the market value of such plants in the winter and early spring markets and their market value when they were in fact matured.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County.

Action by the Spencer Heater Company against Randolph Abbott, trading, etc., as the Park Floral Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and venire de novo awarded, and new trial limited to certain issue.

Joseph L. Bodine, of Trenton, for appellant. Richard S. Wilson and W. Holt Agar, both of Trenton, for appellee.

TRENCHARD, J. This action was brought on a mechanics' lien claim to recover the price of certain Spencer steam heaters furnished to the defendant, together with some smaller items of labor and expense. The defendant is a florist. He admitted that the claim was unpaid, and, with his answer, filed a counterclaim for loss of profits on plants, and for expenses, caused by the alleged failure of the plaintiff to perform its contract to furnish heaters adequate to heat the defendant's greenhouses. The jury rendered a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed from the consequent judgment.

We are of the opinion that the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial awarded, to be limited as herein stated.

[1] We think that the motion for a direction of a verdict in favor of the plaintiff was properly denied. The motion seems to have been based mainly upon the contention that there was no legal evidence of an express warranty of the fitness of the heaters to do the work required by the defendant, and that under the contract no warranty could be implied. It may be assumed that no such warranty could be implied from the contract which would have grown out of the original order for No. 13 heaters, which was in writing, and contained a reservation with warranties, if it had been accepted, but it was not accepted, and such heaters were not delivered.

[2] The evidence tended to show that what then occurred was this: After receiving such order, the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, sent its salesman to the defendant's place for a consultation as to the number and sizes of heaters required for the defendant's purposes. The salesman went there, examined the premises, took measurements, and told the defendant, who disclaimed any knowledge of the number and sizes required, that a No. 11 and a No. 12 would supply the heat required, and agreed to furnish them. Now the question whether or not a statement or affirmation accompanying a sale is a warranty depends upon whether the conditions were such that the vendee had a right to understand, and did understand, that what was said by the vendor was meant as a warranty. A decisive test is whether the vendor assumes to assert a fact of which the buyer is ignorant, or merely states an opinion or judgment upon a matter of which the vendor has no special knowledge, and on which the buyer may be expected also to have an opinion, and to exercise his judgment. In the former case there is a warranty; in the latter, not. Wolcott v. Mount, 38 N. J. Law, 496, 20 Am. Rep. 425. Tested by that rule, it was open to the jury to find, as they did, that the plaintiff warranted the heaters to do the work the defendant required.

[3, 4] The plaintiff, however, contends that its salesman had no authority to warrant the heaters. In view of the evidence, we doubt if there is any merit in this contention. But whether so or not is immaterial. A principal may ratify his agent's unauthorized warranty, and if with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances attending the transaction, he does so, he is bound thereby. Gulick v. Grover, 33 N. J. Law, 463, 37 Am. Dec. 728. In the present case the evidence tends to show that after the heaters furnished had failed to do the work, the facts and circumstances were brought to the attention of the manager of the plaintiff, who had ample authority. He acknowledged that the trouble was due to the mistake of their agent, offered to pay the expense of a temporary makeshift, proceeded to install adequate heaters, and all without any repudiation of the acts of their salesman. We think, therefore, that the motion for a direction was properly denied.

[5] But we think the learned trial judge erred in his charge respecting the measure of damages. It was a part of defendant's business to force plants into bloom to make them ready for the winter and early spring markets, and for that purpose he required heat in his greenhouse of a certain temperature. It was open to the jury to find that the plaintiff knew this, and contracted to furnish heaters for that purpose, and failed in the performance of that contract. The trial judge directed the jury to consider the retail price of the flowers, what it would cost to replace them, and all the surrounding circumstances. But we think that was an inaccurate and misleading statement of the measure of damages in a case of the retardation in the development of plants for a particular market. The true measure of damage was the difference between the market value of such plants in the winter and early spring markets and their market value when they were in fact matured. Wolcott v. Mount, 36 N. J. Law, 262, 13 Am. Rep. 438.

The judgment will be reversed and a venire de novo awarded. Since the only question with respect to which judgment is wrong is the measure of damages, and since that question is here separable, the new trial will be limited thereto, pursuant to rule 131 of the Supreme Court made applicable to appeals by rule 147.

(30 N. J. Eq. 606)

GLOBE TICKET CO. v. INTERNATIONAL TICKET CO. et al. (No. 54/362.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. May 9, 1918.)

1. INJUNCTION ¶113 — DISCLOSING TRADE SECRET—LACHES.

Where complainant had sufficient information for suit three years before seeking to enjoin a competitor's use of a mechanical device claimed to be a trade secret and also complainant's former employees disclosure of the same, complainant was guilty of laches precluding injunction.

2. INJUNCTION ¶21 — DISCLOSING AND USE OF TRADE SECRETS—ACQUESCENCE—ESTOPPEL TO ENJOIN.

Where complainant had knowledge or the means of knowledge that a competing company, now absorbed by the defendant company, was regularly using a device claimed by complainant as a trade secret, and did not seek to restrain the same for three years, there was such acquiescence as to estop complainant from enjoining defendant.

Suit by the Globe Ticket Company against the International Ticket Company and others. Decree advised dismissing the bill.

Lindabury, Depue & Faulks and J. Edward Ashmead, all of Newark, and Frank Smith, of Philadelphia, Pa., for complainant. Eugene W. Leake, of Jersey City, and Breed, Abbott & Morgan and Louis F. Dodd, all of New York City, for defendants.

LANE, V. C. Suit is brought to obtain an injunction restraining defendants from using, or imparting information with respect to, a device alleged to be the exclusive property of complainant by reason of its being a trade secret.

It is called a barrel numbering head, and is used for the purpose of successive numbering of coupon tickets. While no new mechanical principle and no new mechanical appliances were used, there was a novel use of familiar principles and appliances which resulted in the perfection of a head which might be used in connection with a rotary press for the continuous successive numbering of tickets. The evidence is that up to the time of the perfection of this device there had not been in existence any apparatus which could be used upon a rotary press for such purpose. The invention permitted an enormous increase in production. It was admittedly an improvement upon anything that had gone before. Its use contributed largely to the successful building up of the business of the Globe Ticket Company. It was used exclusively by the Globe Ticket Company until October, 1913. No attempt was ever made to patent it; the explanation being given that its owners considered a "padlock better than a patent." The Globe Company undoubtedly was adverse to the details of the construction of this device being disclosed to a competitor. It was, however used on a machine in the open shop, where it might be seen by any of the employes or visitors. It was of such construction, however, that a mere casual inspection would not, I think, suffice to impart sufficient information to any one so that it might be reproduced.

Certain employes connected with the machine shop were assigned to the duty of cleaning the heads when necessary and of taking them down and repairing them. These men were ordinary mechanics employed at ordinary mechanics' wages. There was no definite contract entered into between the company and any of its employes which would forbid the disclosure of the alleged secret, nor is there sufficient evidence to permit me to find that any of the employes were definitely instructed that they were not to disclose any information they might acquire. The defendant Titus was employed by the concern some 23 years ago as an apprentice. He left in March, 1913. For some years prior to his leaving he had worked on the barrel head, had taken it apart and reassembled it. While he testifies that he was never instructed that the device was of secret construction, and I find no evidence upon which I can base a conclusion that he was, yet he and the other mechanics unquestionably knew that the complainant did not desire that the details of the construction should be disclosed. It chose to rest upon its ability to hold its employes in its employ, or upon the chance that none of its employes would have the necessary mechanical ability to reproduce the machine even if they were permitted to examine the interior construction.

In the year 1913 there was considerable dissension in the plant of the complainant. The morale of its officers seems to have broken down. Employes were leaving right and left. There was in existence in Providence, R. I., a concern known as the Sun Ticket Company, of which one Manshel was president and general manager. On February 22, 1913, Titus applied to Manshel for a position with that concern. He represented to Manshel that he had had 17 years' experience with the Globe Ticket Company, and I am forced to conclude that his experience with the barrel numbering device was referred to; for immediately after this employment with the concern on March 10, 1913, he started to build such a machine. Manshel denies that at the time he knew that the device was considered by the Globe Company as its exclusive property, or that he knew that Titus was under obligation not to use, in the interest of the Sun Ticket Company, the information which he had acquired at the Globe Company's plant. Titus denies that he considered that he was under any obligation to refrain from using information that he had acquired at the plant of the Globe Company. In view of the action of the officers of the complainant, which will be hereafter adverted to, it seems to me that, while Titus and Manshel knew that the Globe Company was adverse to this barrel numbering head being used by a competitor, yet they considered that they were under no legal or moral obligation, the one not to impart, and the other not to use, information acquired by Titus while in the employ of complainant. It is significant that when Titus went to Manshel he received no compensation for the information that he had obtained at the plant of the Globe Company. On the contrary, he was paid a dollar less a week wages. If he thought that he had a tremendous secret to disclose it would seem as if he would have bargained for more than mechanic's wages.

The machine built under the supervision of Titus was completed in October, 1913. While it is somewhat different in its construction and operation than the device used by complainant, the basic idea is the same. It is an improvement upon the device of complainant, but not so different in construction and operation as to make it a new device. It is conceded by Titus that, if he had not had the information acquired at the Globe Company's plant, he would never have thought of what he calls his own device. In this respect this case is within Stone v. Grasselli Chemical Co., 65 N. J. Eq. 756, 55 Atl. 736, 63 L. R. A. 344, 108 Am. St. Rep. 794.

[1, 2] We come now to the action, or lack of action by complainant, after Titus left, upon which I think the case depends. Titus made no secret of his intention to leave and become connected with the Sun Ticket Company. The officers of the complainant knew that Titus had the information necessary for him to have to reproduce the barrel numbering head. In 1914 the Sun Ticket Company began printing coupon theater tickets, and it was apparent to the officers of the complainant that they had been printed upon a device which performed the same function as the barrel numbering head of complainant.

It is perfectly apparent from an inspection of the various strips of tickets that have been put in evidence here that it is not difficult to determine whether the strips have been printed upon a flat press or upon some machine by which the figures are put on at different times rather than by one impression. The irregularities which appear upon the tickets printed upon the flat press or band machine as described by Mr. Keen, if there are any, are regular, whereas the irregularities which appear upon the tickets made by the barrel head device are irregular. It is perfectly clear to me that the complainant well knew in 1914 that Titus had made use of the information which he had acquired at the complainant's plant, and that the Sun Ticket Company was using that information. In 1914 competition on the part of the Sun Ticket Company increased. Herring admits that the Sun Ticket Company could not have produced the article it did without using a device performing the same functions as the barrel numbering head. The complainant knew that another of its employes possessing information with respect to this device was associated with the Sun Ticket Company. In February and March, 1915, there was brought to the attention of the complainant letters written by Titus to a concern in Chicago offering to build for that concern an apparatus which would contain this barrel numbering head. Competition had steadily increased. In June, 1915, Manshel visited the vice president and general manager of the complainant with the idea of offering to complainant the plant of the Sun Ticket Company for sale. In that conversation Pope, vice president and general manager of complainant, charged Manshel with being a business crook, with having enticed away employes of complainant. Titus must have been referred to specifically for Keen, the secretary, was sent for to attend the conference to verify a statement made by Pope to Manshel that Titus had offered to sell to the Chicago concern the barrel numbering head device.

There is no doubt I think but that at this conversation the facts that Titus had given to the Sun Ticket Company information which he had acquired at the Globe Ticket Company plant, and that the Sun Ticket Company was using this information and was numbering tickets with the barrel numbering head device, were referred to. Manshel denied none of the statements of Pope. Indeed, I think it clear that his possession of this information was used by him as a reason why the complainant should purchase the plant of the Sun Ticket Company. It is not asserted that at the conference any official of the complainant made any claim of exclusive right to the device. The most that Pope claimed was that Manshel had not acted in accordance with good business ethics. Manshel unquestionably left the conference with the idea that Pope considered that he (Manshel) had acted in a way that was unfair so far as business ethics were concerned, but certainly with no idea that Pope or the complainant considered that Titus had violated any legal right of complainant. Indeed, the conversation so far as Pope is concerned may be summed up in this that he practically said to Manshel, "You got this information, you are using it; I cannot stop you, but you are a crook for doing it." After consideration, the offer of the Sun Ticket Company to sell out was declined. While there is no evidence that at the board of directors' meeting there was discussed the fact that the Sun Ticket Company was using this barrel head device, there is evidence that almost everything else was discussed. There is evidence that the possession by the Sun Ticket Company of the alleged secret was of the utmost importance, and was thought one of the important factors to be considered in the sale, and it is hard to escape the conclusion that there was discussion with respect to this matter. During 1915 and 1916 competition between the Sun Ticket Company and the complainant became more bitter. In February, 1917, the International Ticket Company was formed. That concern was a consolidation of the Sun Ticket Company, the Rockwell Machine Company, and the Manshel Machine Company. The assets of the three concerns were conveyed to the International Company, and the stock of the International Company issued in payment therefor. So far as the Rockwell Machine Company stockholders are concerned there is no evidence whatever that any of them had anything to do with Manshel, or with the Sun Ticket Company, or with Titus, or had any knowledge that the Sun Ticket Company was using or might be charged with using the secret device of the Globe Company. There can be no doubt but that the ability of the Sun Ticket Company to number tickets by this barrel numbering device entered materially into the price fixed upon the assets of the Sun Ticket Company. It seems to me that the intervention of the International Ticket Company created a complete change of conditions. The International Ticket Company used the barrel numbering head device, and complainant permitted it to. Nothing whatever was done by complainant until August, 1917. It then sent an operative to the plant of the International Ticket Company, who obtained employment and made photographs of the device used by the International Company. Her report came in in a few weeks, but it was not until the 26th day of December, 1917, that the bill in the present case was filed. From June, 1915, to August, 1917, no additional information came to complainant indicating that the Sun Ticket Company or the International Ticket Company was using this device. Whatever information complainant had it had by June, 1915. Indeed, during the year 1914 it had information upon which it might have acted. It certainly had in 1915. I do not believe that the complainant had any intention of endeavoring to prevent either the Sun Ticket Company or the International Ticket Company from using this device until competition became so keen in 1917 that it began to look around for some possible means of preventing it.

I think both upon the ground of acquiescence and laches the bill should be dismissed. It is true that the defenses of laches and acquiescence, while cognate, are not correlative. Mere delay may constitute laches which will prevent relief, if conditions have changed. Acquiescence implies assent. And it is true that action, or lack of action, occurring during the commission of a wrong may constitute acquiescence or estoppel which would not have the same effect if occurring after the performance of the wrong. De Bussche v. Alt, 8 Chan. Div. 286, 314. In this case, however, the wrong was a continuing wrong. Complainant is entitled to the benefit of its secret device so long only as it preserves its secrecy.

It will have the aid and assistance of the court under certain circumstances in preserving secrecy. Consent to a disclosure or the use by another bars relief. Delay in applying for relief with knowledge of the circumstances may be considered as an element of evidence in determining whether or not there has been acquiescence. The distinction between laches and conduct evidence which may show acquiescence or election is clearly made in the case of Faulkner v. Wassmer, 77 N. J. Eq. 537, 77 Atl. 341, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872, citing Dennis v. Woglom, 44 N. J. Eq. 513, 14 Atl. 913, 6 Am. St. Rep. 899, and Clampitt v. Doyle, 73 N. J. Eq. 678, 70 Atl. 129.

Considering all of the testimony, I find complainant acquiesced in the continued use of this alleged secret device by the Sun Ticket Company and the International Ticket Company. With respect to laches the rule is well settled that, while under ordinary circumstances a court of equity follows the statute of limitations, yet when extraordinary circumstances intervene the court will disregard the statute and determine the case upon equitable principles. In this case, with knowledge, as I have found, of facts sufficient to charge it with knowledge that Titus was disclosing the alleged secret, and that the Sun Ticket Company was using it, and with knowledge imputed to it of the fact that under the law it was necessary, to protect its right, to preserve the secrecy of the alleged device, complainant failed to act until December, 1917. In the meantime the building up of a prosperous business by the Sun Ticket Company had been permitted, and the International Ticket Company had intervened and purchased the assets of the Sun Ticket Company, into the value of which undoubtedly entered the right of the Sun Ticket Company to use this device. Under the circumstances, I think the doctrine of laches applies.

Upon the main issue I have considered the cases of Salomon v. Hertz, 40 N. J. Eq. 400, 2 Atl. 379; Stone v. Grasselli Chemical Co., 65 N. J. Eq. 756, 55 Atl. 736, 63 L. R. A. 344, 108 Am. St. Rep. 794; Fleckenstein Bros. v. Fleckenstein, 66 N. J. Eq. 252, 57 Atl. 1025; Vulcan Detinning Company v. American Can Co., 70 N. J. Eq. 588, 62 Atl. 881; 72 N. J. Eq. 387, 67 Atl. 339, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 102; Pomeroy Ink Co. v. Pomeroy, 77 N. J. Eq. 293, 78 Atl. 698; Taylor Iron and Steel Co. v. Nichols, 70 N. J. Eq. 541, 61 Atl. 946.

I will advise a decree dismissing the bill with costs. Let decree be settled on two days' notice.

(93 N. J. Law, 99)

PAULSEN v. KLINGE.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ¶705(2) — STREETS—RIGHT OF WAY.

Right of automobile driver who has right of way is not exclusive, but at all times relative, and subject to fundamental common-law doctrine that he must use his right so as not to injure another.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ¶705(2) — STREETS—RIGHT OF WAY—INTERSECTION—TRAFFIC ACT.

By the Traffic Act, providing driver of vehicle approaching intersection of streets shall grant right of way to vehicle approaching from right, Legislature did not confer monopoly of way ad libitum on person so approaching, regardless of existing conditions and distance from intersecting street.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ¶705(2) — STREETS—INTERSECTION—DUTY OF DRIVER WITH RIGHT OF WAY.

Where automobile driver, having right of way at crossing under the Traffic Act, saw approaching on intersecting street, at least a block away, another driver, who held out hand as statutory indication of intention to turn, first driver was under duty to observe conditions, and drive accordingly.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ¶705(2) — STREETS—INTERSECTION—RIGHT OF WAY.

The Traffic Act, providing driver of vehicle approaching intersection shall grant right of way to vehicle approaching from right, merely adds factor to common-law rules, whereby negligence may be measured between conflicting claimants exercising common right.

Appeal from District Court, Bergen County.

Action by Neillsimine Paulsen against Gustave A. Klinge, Jr. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued November Term, 1917, before SWAYZE, TRENCHARD, and MINTURN, JJ.

Robert W. Thompson, of Morsemere, for appellant. James O. Agnew, of Town of Union, for appellee.

MINTURN, J. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and the court found the facts in favor of the plaintiff. The action was for damages caused by a collision between plaintiff's and defendant's automobile, on Main street in Ft. Lee, at the intersection of Anderson avenue. The plaintiff's version of the accident was that desiring to turn into Anderson avenue, she put out her hand in that direction and blew her horn; defendant was approaching in the opposite direction about a block distant, at a speed of 25 to 35 miles an hour. Plaintiff's car was followed by others immediately behind. Defendant failed to reduce his speed as he approached, although he knew the intersection to be dangerous, and the collision inevitably resulted. We think there was evidence in the case sufficient to warrant the trial court in finding that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and that defendant was guilty of negligence. Chapter 156 of the Laws of 1915, known as the Traffic Act, was invoked by defendant for the purpose of conceding to him a right of way under the circumstances. The section is as follows:

"On all public roads, streets, highways or turnpikes, the following rules and regulations shall be in force:

"1. Every driver of a vehicle approaching the intersection of a street or public road shall grant the right of way at such intersection to any vehicle approaching from his right."

[1-3] If we assume that the defendant had the right of way, the conditions must be such as to justify him in the absolute exercise of the right. In any event his right upon the highway is not exclusive, but at all times relative and still subject to the fundamental common-law doctrine, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas." Nor was his right of way exclusive because he was on the right side of the road, as required by the traffic statute. The Legislature did not contemplate by this enactment to confer a monopoly of way ad libitum upon a person in the posture of the defendant, regardless of existing conditions and the distance he was from the intersecting street into which others were proceeding. The plaintiff complied with the provisions of the same act when approaching the intersection while the defendant was at least a block away. She held out her hand as the statutory indication of her intention to turn into the intersecting street. It was the duty of the defendant at that time to observe the conditions and guide his machine accordingly. 2 R. O. L. 1184, and cases cited. The legislative act was not intended to provide an exclusively hard and fast rule, applicable to all hazards and in all situations, regardless of actual conditions, and thus liberate from responsibility one who by fortuitously adhering to the regulation may be otherwise reckless and indifferent to the situation of others lawfully exercising equal rights upon the highway, but who may be subject to untoward and unlooked for situations beyond their control.

[4] Such a construction would tend to encourage rather than diminish and obviate the dangerous situations this legislation was conceived to remedy. The common-law rules applicable to negligence have not been abolished by the enactment. Its existence but adds an additional factor to be considered in given situations by which negligence may be measured and determined between conflicting claimants exercising a common right. The situation contemplated by the Legislature must be present in fact in order to invoke the legislative regulation as an exclusive element to be considered in weighing the comparative tort-feasance of the parties; and in any event, as the Court of Errors and Appeals has determined at the present term in the case of Winch v. Johnson, 104 Atl. 81 (not yet officially reported), not unlike the case at bar in material particulars, the negligence of the defendant is to be determined upon all the facts and circumstances of the situation, and therefore the conceded violation of the statutory regulation, by a defendant, does not per se warrant the trial court in directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

We have examined the testimony as to the damage suffered by the plaintiff, in view of the defendant's contention that some of it was too remote and was not the proximate and natural result of the accident. We think there was sufficient testimony in the case to warrant the trial court in finding that it was neither too remote nor so disconnected from the injurious result of the collision as to render it an improper element of damage.

The judgment will be affirmed, with costs.

(20 N. J. Eq. 189)

FEICK v. HILL BREAD CO. (No. 38.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES §—306—RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF INDORSEE.

The indorser on a note is entitled to be reimbursed for what he has been required to pay in discharge of the note, in the absence of any equities.

2. BILLS AND NOTES §—518(1) — PAYMENT — EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that money given to an indorser of a note was consideration for a new note, and was not given to pay the first note.

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Bill by Bertha E. Feick, executrix of Charles A. Feick, against the Hill Bread Company. From a decree (99 Atl. 851) in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank E. Bradner, of Newark, for appellant. Waldron M. Ward and Pitney, Hardin & Skinner, all of Newark, for appellee.

SWAYZE, J. [1, 2] Such difficulty, if any, as there may be in this case, disappears when the facts are clearly apprehended. The situation is this: Feick's estate has been decreed to be insolvent. Among the claims filed with the executrix, which, by the adjudication of the orphans' court, are to be held and deemed as justly due (3 C. S. 1910, p. 8350, pl. 104), are a claim by the Union National Bank and a claim by the Hill Bread Company. The claim of the bank includes a claim for the amount due on notes of the Hill Bread Company, indorsed by Feick, amounting to $10,500. The rest of the bank's claim is not material to the present controversy. The claim of the Bread Company includes a claim on a note of $10,000 made by Feick, which is subject to a set-off of $2,500 due from the Bread Company to Feick, leaving $7,500 due, besides some interest. The rest of the Bread Company's claim is not material to the present controversy. On the face of the papers, the Bread Company is primarily liable on the notes held by the bank; Feick's estate is liable to the Bread Company for the balance due on the $10,000 note after crediting the $2,500 set off. The orphans' court decreed a dividend of 45 per cent. on each claim. The executrix paid the dividend to the bank, but refused to pay the dividend to the Bread Company, on the ground that she was entitled to be reimbursed for what she had paid the bank in discharge of the Bread Company's primary liability. In this she was clearly right, unless the equitable situation is not that shown on the face of the papers. The defendant undertook to prove this proposition. The claim is that the Bread Company paid Feick $10,000 in cash on account of its notes; that in equity he was bound to apply the money to that purpose; that his failure to do so altered the equitable situation as between themselves, and made Feick in equity the primary debtor. Since the $10,000 cash was the only consideration for Feick's note to the Bread Company, that note would not be enforceable as between them, if in fact the $10,000 was not a loan to Feick but was payment of the Bread Company's own obligation. The same money could not do double duty as payment of a debt and as the consideration of a new note. The disputed fact therefore is whether the money was a payment or a loan. On the evidence the Vice Chancellor could not help finding that it was a loan.

(1) It was so treated by the parties at the time. We cannot conceive that Feick would have given a note rather than a receipt if the intent of the Bread Company had in fact been to make payment; and although his failure to return the notes which had been made by the Bread Company to his order is susceptible of the explanation that they were then held under discount by the bank, it would nevertheless have been just as easy to have given a receipt and agreement to return the notes as to give the new note.

(2) Both Feick and the president of the Bread Company continued for some time, and until Feick's death, to treat both the set of notes indorsed by Feick and the note of which he was maker as outstanding obligations. Interest was paid and notes given in renewal. There is no adequate explanation, hardly what can be called an attempt at explanation of conduct so unusual, if the defendant's view of the transaction be accepted.

(3) The defendant filed a sworn claim with the executrix on the note. This could not be rightfully done if the $10,000 had been in fact payment of the other notes. This claim is now in the form of an adjudication of the orphans' court, final so far as the settlement of the estate is concerned; and the defendant claims its dividend thereon. It is said that the president of the Bread Company had no authority to file the claim with the executrix. We need not consider this question. It is enough to say that the defendant's case rests on his testimony, and, in considering its value, his own affidavit to the claim is weighty evidence against the construction he seeks to give the transaction by his testimony at the hearing. It was incumbent on the defendant to prove an equitable situation different from what was shown on the face of the papers. It has failed to do so. The complainant is therefore entitled to set off, against the dividend she owes the defendant, the amount she has already paid the bank as a dividend on what the defendant was primarily obligated to pay. The defendant's dividend was less than that which the complainant paid the bank. The same reasoning requires that the balance be charged upon any future dividends to which the defendant may be entitled; and it was of course proper to provide that she might apply on the foot of the decree for an execution to secure any balance that might still remain unpaid.

The Vice Chancellor advised such a decree. It is affirmed, with costs.

(89 N. J. Eq. 86)

UNITED NEW JERSEY R. & CANAL CO. et al. v. FREEHOLDERS OF HUDSON
& ESSEX. (No. 44/576.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. May 28, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS §94(1) — RIGHT TO BRIDGE ROAD—CONSENT.

Right of railroads to build road and carry it across public plank road by overhead bridge is absolute, and consent of municipal authorities is necessary only when it is desired to cross at grade, which consent must be obtained from municipality even in crossing county road.

2. RAILROADS §94(6)—INJUNCTION—IRREPARABLE INJURY.

Railroads having absolute right to bridge public plank road to connect lines will suffer irreparable injury, entitling them to injunction against county authorities interfering with work, if, with railroad partly constructed up to roadway, use is delayed for want of bridge.

3. INJUNCTION §89—LACK OF IRREPARABLE INJURY—PUBLIC NECESSITY.

Even if railroads, desiring to construct bridge to connect lines across public plank road, could not show irreparable injury in suit for injunction to restrain county authorities from interfering, court should see public work for government, proposed bridge being necessary for industrial works aiding prosecution of war, is not hampered.

4. RAILROADS §94(1) — RIGHT TO BRIDGE
HIGHWAY—TEMPORARY BRIDGE.

Where railroads have right to bridge public plank road to connect lines, and, though having right, under Railroad Act, § 27, to place abutments of bridge within road, nevertheless propose to place them outside, they have right to construct temporary bridge with abutments inside road.

5. RAILROADS §94(6)—BRIDGING HIGHWAY —SUIT AGAINST COUNTY AUTHORITIES—TECHNICAL OBJECTION.

Where railroads, in exercise of right, proceeded to bridge public plank road, and county superintendent of road caused arrest of engineer who has prior thereto been suspended in railroads' suit against county authorities to enjoin interference with construction, it being plain that what superintendent did accorded with authorities' views, objection superintendent's action was not that of county authorities is purely technical.

Suit by the United New Jersey Railroad and Canal Company and others against the Freeholders of Hudson and Essex. Order for complainants directed to be submitted.

Vredenburg, Wall & Carey, of Jersey City, for complainants. John J. Fallon, of Hoboken, for Freeholders of Hudson. H. W. Taylor, of Newark, for Freeholders of Essex.

GRIFFIN, V. O. The bill in this cause is filed by the complainants against the joint boards of Hudson and Essex counties to restrain interference with the complainants in the construction of a bridge across the Newark plank road (now called Lincoln Highway), forming a connecting link in a railroad duly laid out on both sides thereof. The joint boards are in possession of the plank road at the point in question. The history of the road and the title of the two counties may be found in Re Newark Plank Road & Bridges, 63 N. J. Eq. 710, 53 Atl. 5. The road is in the township of Kearny. A petition was presented to the boards by the complainants to build this bridge. The Essex board granted the permission, subject to the approval of the Hudson board. The Hudson board denied the request. Thereupon notice was given by the counsel of the complainants to the Hudson board that on the 25th of February, 1918, they would commence the construction of the bridge. On that day they entered on the road for this purpose. The bill charges that one Dugan, the superintendent of the Newark plank road and bridges, an appointee of the joint boards, caused the arrest of the complainants' engineer to stop the work; hence this bill is filed. The Hudson board alleges that Dugan had been suspended as such superintendent, and had no authority to act in the premises. The Essex board does not appear to oppose the action of the complainants; on the hearing its counsel merely read the resolution passed by his board, granting the permission, subject to approval by the Hudson board, and rested. The exigencies of the case are such that no time should be lost in disposing of the matter. On the Hackensack meadows, between the two rivers, and on both sides of this plank road, shipbuilding and other industries, employing many thousands of men, have been recently established to aid the government in prosecuting the war. Adequate transportation for men and materials is of prime importance, without which works of great public necessity will be greatly retarded. The Hudson board opposes the granting of the injunction on the following grounds: (1) That no irreparable injury will be suffered by the complainants if the case be delayed until final hearing; (2) that the complainants desire to build a temporary bridge until they can procure the girders for the permanent bridge. (These girders are to be 106 feet in length. The supporting abutments are to be constructed outside of the lines of the road. To procure these girders will take several months.) In erecting the temporary bridge, the abutments will be placed inside the curb line, in compliance with the Railroad Act (3 Comp. Stat. p. 4232, § 27).

[1-3] 1. Will the complainants suffer irreparable injury? The right of the complainants to build the road and carry it across the plank road with an overhead bridge is absolute. No consent of the municipal or county authorities is necessary. It is only when it desires to cross at grade that a consent becomes necessary, and that consent must be obtained from the municipality, and not from the county, even when crossing a county road. Freeholders v. Railroad Co., 68 N. J. Eq. 500, 59 Atl. 303; affirmed 70 N. J. Eq. 806, 65 Atl. 1117. This counsel for the Hudson board concedes. It is therefore apparent that the complainants will suffer an irreparable injury if, with their right clear, with the railroad partly constructed up to the roadway, the use of it is delayed for want of a bridge. But, in addition to this, if the complainants would not suffer an injury which might be said to be irreparable, the public necessity at the present time is paramount, and should outweigh questions of private consideration; and the court should see to it that public work for the government, in its aid, is not hampered nor impeded. Especially is this so in this case, where the right of the complainants is clear, and the injury defendants will suffer, if any, is trifling, and is injury, if any, that is not legal, affording them any right, because it is occasioned by operation of the law.

[4] 2. Counsel for the Hudson board, however, makes a distinction between a permanent and temporary bridge. He cites no authority to support his view. I am at a loss to follow his reasoning, considering that the temporary bridge is an added expense, incurred only to accommodate transportation pending the construction of the permanent structure. If his theory is correct, it would lead to very dangerous results. It is common practice, in replacing old bridges with new, to provide in the contracts for the erection of a temporary bridge pending the construction of the new one, as an incident; and the cost of such temporary bridge is charged against the cost of the new structure, without the statute particularly specifying that it might provide for the erection of the temporary bridge. If such power does not exist, whenever the county desired to replace an old with a new bridge, all traffic on the highway would be cut off for a long period, to the great detriment of the public. But, apart from this, the complainants, if they desired, might, under section 27 of the Railroad Act, supra, treat this temporary structure as permanent, to the detriment of the road. Instead, they do not desire to take advantage of the benefit conferred by the act to maintain their abutments within the road, but propose, at an additional expense, to replace the temporary structure with one, the abutments of which shall be outside of the lines of the road.

[5] 3. The third objection is purely technical. The complainants believed, when they filed their bill, that Dugan, as superintendent, was acting under the orders of the officers of the boards. The Hudson board does not disclaim an intent to stop the erection of this bridge. It says that, if another petition is presented, it is willing to permit the construction of a temporary bridge over the Lincoln Highway (the Newark plank road), and the maintenance thereof during the period of the war, upon such reasonable terms and conditions as might be agreed upon. This expression of views, coupled with the attitude of counsel with respect to the temporary bridge, clearly indicates the opposition of the Hudson board to the crossing of the highway, and plainly indicates that what Dugan did accords with their views, whether or not he had been suspended.

No criticism can be made of the Hudson board for its action. It is doing what it conceives to be its duty in the protection of the public highway; but, believing, as I do, that there is an absolute right, without its consent, to erect this bridge, and owing to the existing state of war rendering it necessary that these works should as early as possible, have the most adequate railway facilities, I will advise an order that the joint boards be enjoined from interfering with the complainants in the construction of the temporary bridge.

The order of restraint, however, must specifically provide that the joint counties, through their engineers, shall supervise the work, with power to see that no unnecessary damage is done to the road, that, upon completion of the temporary structure, the road at the point in question be placed in suitable condition for public travel and so maintained during the existence of the temporary bridge, and, upon its replacement by the permanent structure, that the road be placed in as good condition as it was before the surface was broken.

Counsel may present the order to me at the chancery chambers at Jersey City on Monday morning next, March 18th, at 10 o'clock a. m.

(32 Vt. 353)

BRIGHTLOOK HOSPITAL ASS'N v. GARFIELD.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Caledonia. May 16, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS \S 349(3)—EXPRESS CONTRACT—EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE.

In suit on implied contract for service rendered by plaintiff hospital in caring for defendant after he had been injured while working for a company, evidence, as to an agreement of manager of company to pay hospital expenses, held admissible to show an express promise to pay plaintiff; it being immaterial whether manager had authority to bind company, since if he did not, he would bind himself.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 997(3) — DIRECTED VERDICT—REVIEW.

Where neither party wished to go to jury on any issue, directed verdict will be affirmed, if there is any evidence to sustain it.

3. WORK AND LABOR \S 9—IMPLIED PROMISE.

Express promise of telephone company's manager to pay plaintiff hospital for caring for defendant, injured employé of company, being shown no promise implied in law, arises on the part of defendant.

Appeal from Caledonia County Court; Stanley O. Wilson, Judge.

Action by the Brightlook Hospital Association against Stanley F. Garfield. Directed verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Dunnett, Shields & Conant, of St. Johnsbury, for appellant. Porter, Witters & Harvey, of St. Johnsbury, for appellee.

MILES, J. On the 22d day of August, 1913, the defendant, while working for the New England Telephone Company, was severely injured and taken to the plaintiff's hospital in St. Johnsbury, where he was treated and cared for until November 3, 1913, incurring an expense in the sum of $167.19. This suit in contract, in the common counts, is brought to recover that sum. It is conceded by the defendant that, if the plaintiff is entitled to recover, it is entitled to recover that sum, with interest on the same from November 3, 1913, to the date of judgment. The general issue was pleaded and the case was tried by jury at the December term of the Caledonia county court, 1917. The plaintiff seeks to recover on a promise implied by law. The defendant defends on the ground that the liability was incurred by the New England Company or by its general manager, C. F. Merrill, under an express contract between Merrill and the plaintiff, with the understanding of the plaintiff, defendant, and the New England Telephone Company, through its general manager, at the time the defendant was taken to the hospital, that the telephone company was to pay the expense for the care and nursing of the defendant while at plaintiff's hospital.

[1] The first exception taken and relied upon by the plaintiff was to the testimony tending to show the contract claimed by the defendant to have been made by Merrill, on behalf of the telephone company, with Mrs. Flora Lovejoy, matron of plaintiff's hospital, on behalf of the plaintiff, in which it was agreed that the telephone company should bear the expense incurred by the plaintiff in the care of the defendant, and that this contract was made in accordance with the understanding of the defendant, Merrill, and Mrs. Lovejoy, Merrill acting on behalf of the telephone company and Mrs. Lovejoy on behalf of the plaintiff. The objection to this evidence was based upon the ground that Merrill had no authority to bind the telephone company, and that the defendant, having received the benefit, with full knowledge of the same, a promise implied in law created a liability on his part, and that the promise of the telephone company, if one was made, was collateral, and did not extinguish the original liability of the defendant.

It is immaterial whether Merrill had authority to bind the telephone company; in other words, it is of no importance whether the contract, which the defendant relies upon, was with the telephone company or with Merrill. If such a contract was made, allowing that Merrill had no authority to bind the telephone company, he would bind himself. Clark v. Foster, 8 Vt. 98; Roberts v.

Button, 14 Vt. 195; Royce v. Allen, 28 Vt. 234; Clay v. Wright, 44 Vt. 538; Hinsdale v. Partridge, 14 Vt. 547. The testimony was therefore admissible as tending to show an express promise to pay the plaintiff for the expenditures on behalf of the defendant which was accepted by the plaintiff and charged by the plaintiff against the telephone company. This holding is not in conflict with Sias v. Consolidated Lighting, 73 Vt. 35, 50 Atl. 554; Whitwell et al. v. Warner et al., 20 Vt. 426; Roben v. Ryegate Light & Power Co., 91 Vt. 402, 100 Atl. 768; Lyndon Mill Co. v. Lyndon Literary & Biblical Institution, 63 Vt. 581, 22 Atl. 575, 25 Am. St. Rep. 783.

[2] The remaining exception to be considered is to the court's refusal to direct a verdict for the plaintiff and to its direction of a verdict for the defendant. Since it affirmatively appeared from the record that neither party wished to go to the jury on any issue of fact, it was for the court to direct a verdict for one party or the other on such a state of the facts as it regarded proved by the evidence, and the verdict will be upheld if there was any evidence to sustain it. Lowe v. Vermont Savings Bank, 90 Vt. 532, 98 Atl. 1023. An examination of the transcript, referred to in the bill of exceptions, discloses that there was substantial evidence sustaining it. The evidence was clear that Merrill promised to pay the plaintiff for the care and nursing of the defendant while at its hospital, and that promise was original and not collateral, and that it was so understood by the defendant and by Merrill and Mrs. Lovejoy.

[3] The express promise of Merrill being shown, no promise implied in law arises on the part of the defendant. Morse v. Kenney, 87 Vt. 445, 89 Atl. 865. The plaintiff's claim that Merrill's promise was collateral cannot be sustained, for there was no evidence in the case tending to support it. If the promise was made by Merrill, as the evidence tends to show, and as the court must have found, it was original, and he or the telephone company, to whom the credit was given, is liable on that promise.

Judgment affirmed.

(92 Vt. 362)

IN RE MARTIN'S WILL.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Windsor. May 16, 1918.)

1. WILLS §322—CONTESTS—MENTAL INCOMPETENCY—EVIDENCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

In a will contest on ground of testator's mental incompetency, the range of time before and after the execution of the will within which evidence as to his mental condition is admissible is discretionary with court.

2. WITNESSES §322—CROSS-EXAMINATION—WITNESS WHOM PARTY IS COMPELLED TO CALL.

In a will contest, it is within the discretion of the court to allow cross-examination of a witness which proponent is obliged to introduce.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1048(6)—HARMLESS ERROR—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Error is not shown in allowing contestant in will contest to take answers from witnesses not in the line of strict cross-examination, where the admission of such testimony did not result in surprise or prejudice to proponent's case.

4. WITNESSES ¶240(2)—LEADING QUESTIONS—DISCRETION.

It is within court's discretion to allow leading and suggestive questions to witnesses in a will contest.

5. EVIDENCE ¶474(4)—OPINION—MENTAL INCOMPETENCY.

On issue of mental incompetency of decedent, opinion of a trained nurse who took care of decedent until his death was admissible, though she had not previously known decedent.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶926(3)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the record does not show that a foundation is not laid for a question asked at the trial, it will be assumed that such foundation was laid.

7. EVIDENCE ¶471(2)—OPINION—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

In a will contest, based on decedent's mental incapacity, it was not error to ask proponent whether at the time the will was drawn her conduct was such that the scrivener was justified in asking for a separate room wherein to draw the will, such evidence not constituting an opinion on propriety of scrivener's action.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶232(2)—OBJECTIONS BELOW—NECESSITY.

In a will contest, where evidence by decedent's widow as to a contract with decedent was objected to below on the ground that a party to the contract was dead, but the objection on appeal was that the statute did not allow one spouse to testify to a conversation with the other, neither point will be considered.

9. TRIAL ¶133(6)—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a will contest, where proponent's counsel asked her a question which was objected to and then explained his position, whereupon the court ruled the question out, a further explanation of counsel's purpose, made in good faith, was not improper, and did not need to be withdrawn, the court instructing the jury to disregard it.

10. WILLS ¶53(1)—CONTEST—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a will contest, based on decedent's mental incapacity, evidence that decedent formerly had confidence in the business ability of proponent's sister, and that such confidence changed, was admissible as showing failing mentality.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶690(3)—RECORD—REVIEW.

In a will contest, where the record fails to show enough facts to determine whether testimony admitted was admissible or inadmissible, an exception thereto will not be sustained where no harm is shown.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶926(5)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

In a will contest, where transcript of a witness' testimony before the probate court was received below on the ground that witness was unable to attend, it will be presumed that he was too ill to do so.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶920(3)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

In a will contest, where complimentary statements by witness as to contestant's care of decedent were admitted, it will be assumed that such testimony was made admissible by evidence not shown, the record not showing such evidence to have been erroneous.

14. WILLS ¶322—CONTEST—EVIDENCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

In a will contest, where evidence was admitted, but was objected to too late, and the court treated it as a motion to strike out, it was within the court's discretion to hold the proponent to the waiver, or to strike the testimony out.

15. EVIDENCE ¶550(2)—EXPERT TESTIMONY—SANITY.

In a will contest, it was prejudicial error to allow a doctor to predicate an opinion of decedent's sanity on all the evidence he had heard in the case, where such evidence was conflicting.

16. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1048(3)—HARMLESS ERROR—OPINION OF EXPERT.

Allowing doctor to predicate an opinion of decedent's sanity on all the evidence he had heard in the case, where such evidence was conflicting, was necessarily harmful.

17. TRIAL ¶110—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

In a will contest, counsel's statement when a question was objected to that there was a disposition on the part of the other side to interfere with the examination was error.

18. WILLS ¶53(9)—CONTEST—EVIDENCE.

In a will contest, the naturalness or unnaturalness of the will may be considered in determining the testator's mental capacity.

19. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶232(2)—OBJECTIONS BELOW—SCOPE.

Where a specific objection is taken below to the admission of evidence, such objection cannot be extended on appeal.

Exceptions from Windsor County Court; Zed S. Stanton, Judge.

Proceedings to probate the will of Alonzo A. Martin. Verdict for contestant, and proponent excepts. Reversed and remanded.

Davis & Davis, of Windsor, and Pingree & Pingree, of White River Junction, for proponent. W. Batchelder, of Woodstock, C. Batchelder, of Bethel, and Frank Plumley, of Northfield, for contestant.

POWERS, J. On January 26, 1916, Alonzo A. Martin executed an instrument purporting to be his last will and testament. The validity of this instrument is here in question, and the only ground of contest is that he was then of unsound mind and incompetent to make a will. The trial below was by jury and resulted in a verdict against the instrument. The case comes up on exceptions saved by the proponent.

[1] Witnesses for the contestant were allowed, subject to the proponent's exception, to relate facts and observations covering an extended period prior to the execution of the instrument in question, and subsequent thereto down to Mr. Martin's death, and thereon to predicate opinions that he was not of sound mind. We cannot say that such evidence was not material. The factum probandum was, of course, his mental condition on January 26, 1916. But when the issue of testamentary capacity is raised, the inquiry is conducted under liberal rules of procedure (In re Esterbrook's Will, 83 Vt. 229, 75 Atl. 1), and it is competent, as bearing on this question, to show the person's mental condition at any reasonable time before or after the testamentary act (In re Wheelock's Will, 76 Vt. 235, 56 Atl. 1013). Just how wide a range is permissible in a given case depends upon the character of the alleged unsoundness and other circumstances, and rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. 3 Elliott, Ev. § 2602. We are not convinced that too much latitude was here allowed.

[2] One of these witnesses was E. D. Ainsworth, one of the subscribing witnesses to the will, and it is claimed by the proponent that the contestant was allowed to examine him under the rules governing a cross-examination, and it is insisted that this was error. The argument is that the law required the proponent to introduce this witness, and that such a witness is not vouched for by the party introducing him; that there is no cross-examination of such a witness in the ordinary sense of the term; and that it was unfair and prejudicial to allow it in this case. It is plain from the record that the court treated the matter as a cross-examination, but it is equally plain that it allowed it to thus proceed as a matter of discretion. So if any wrong ground was suggested for the ruling, the ruling itself was right, and no error appears. Fairbanks v. Stowe, 83 Vt. 155, 74 Atl. 1006, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1074.

[3] The contestant was allowed to take answers from some of the witnesses which were not in the line of strict cross-examination, and the proponent excepted. But no error is shown. It is not made manifest that the admission of this testimony in this way resulted in any surprise, or prejudice to the proponent's case, and it was therefore within the discretion of the court to allow it. Slack v. Bragg, 83 Vt. 414, 76 Atl. 148; State v. Pierce, 87 Vt. 144, 88 Atl. 740. The fact that in some respects this was to anticipate the contestant's case is of no consequence. In re Mason's Will, 82 Vt. 160, 72 Atl. 329.

[4] The contestant was allowed, subject to exception, to ask leading and suggestive questions to certain witnesses. This, too, was within the discretion of the trial court. Berry v. Doolittle, 82 Vt. 471, 74 Atl. 97.

[5] The opinion of the decedent's mental condition given by Mary Hope, the trained nurse who took care of him from February 15, 1916, to his death on March 6th of the same year, was not inadmissible. It is true that the witness had not previously known the decedent, and that he was then very weak and sick; but these facts only affected the weight of her testimony, and not its admissibility. Foster's Ex'rs v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233, 24 Atl. 253. Here, again, the law does not lay down a hard and fast rule, and the question whether the witness has had an adequate opportunity of observation, in circumstances calculated to result in an inference helpful to the jury, is largely one of administration, and within the discretion of the trial court. 3 Chamb. Ev. § 1912.

[6] Mrs. Martin, the widow of the decedent and the real contestant, was a witness. In her direct examination she was asked by her counsel if there came a time when it appeared to her that her husband became suspicious that she was trying to beat him in money matters. Subject to exception, she replied in substance that there did come such a time, and that it was in 1915. The only point now made in support of this exception is that no foundation was laid by showing the particular facts from which this inference was drawn. A sufficient answer is that the record does not show that such a foundation was not laid, and therefore we will assume that it was. Sargent v. Burton, 74 Vt. 24, 52 Atl. 72.

[7] It appears that Gov. Pingree drew the will in question, and went to the decedent's residence for that purpose. He testified that while he was there, Mrs. Martin's conduct was so strenuous and the scene she made so stormy that he asked for a room where he could have Mr. Martin alone to complete the business. When Mrs. Martin was on the stand, her counsel asked her if her conduct on that occasion was such that there was any reason for Gov. Pingree's asking for a separate room. To this the proponent objected; and, subject to exception, the witness was allowed to answer that she might have been a little bit excited, but that she was not strenuous, nor loud, nor quarrelsome. The argument of the proponent assumes that the witness was allowed to express an opinion on the propriety of Gov. Pingree's action. But this is not what the witness did; she simply stated the facts as she claimed them to be. This is just what counsel then said they were willing she should do, and just what she could properly do.

[8] Mrs. Martin was allowed to testify to a conversation had with her husband in the fall of 1897, which resulted in an arrangement whereby she took on the management of the business at Martinsville. To this the proponent excepted. The objection below was specific. It was that Mr. Martin being dead, the living party "shouldn't be allowed to come in here and swear contracts onto the dead one." The only point here made is that the statute does not allow one spouse to testify to a conversation with the other, and that the death of the latter does not affect the question. Here, then, is a new objection not made below. In these circumstances neither point is considered. Jewell v. Hoosac, etc., R. Co., 85 Vt. 64, 81 Atl. 238; Goslant v. Calais, 90 Vt. 114, 96 Atl. 751. Exactly the same situation exists regarding the conversation about the keys to the box of securities, and for the same reason the exception is overruled.

[9] During Mrs. Martin's examination, her counsel asked her a question which was objected to. Thereupon counsel explained his position in regard to the question, and the court ruled it out. Contestant's counsel then (apparently in good faith) made a further explanation of his purpose, but the ruling was adhered to. The proponents claimed an exception to this further explanation, unless it was withdrawn. Counsel refused to withdraw it and an exception was allowed. The court then turned to the jury and cautioned them against trying the case upon statements by counsel, and admonished them to be guided only by the evidence admitted. The exception is not sustained. However it might have been if the record showed that counsel had attempted to get something improper before the jury by his statement to the court; or, however it might have been if the matter had not been adequately handled by the court, it must be held on this record that the remarks were not improper, and that there was no obligation to withdraw them.

[10, 11] Clara Dole, a sister of Mrs. Martin, was a witness for the contestant. She gave testimony tending to show that formerly Mr. Martin had confidence in her business ability and intrusted certain business matters to her charge, but that from and after the winter of 1914-15 his opinion of and mental attitude toward her business ability materially changed. This evidence was properly admitted. It was the theory of the contestant, and her evidence tended to show that a decided change came over Mr. Martin at or about this time. That such a change is evidence of failing mentality is well recognized. The testimony of Mrs. Dole was confirmatory of this claim and admissible as a manifestation of the change referred to. This witness also testified that when she was at the Martin place there was money in the purse. There is not enough shown by the record to make this testimony admissible, nor is there enough shown to make it inadmissible. No harm is shown and the exception is not sustained.

[12] Michael Ryan was a witness before the probate court when the issue here was there tried out, and his testimony was taken by a stenographer. A transcript of that testimony was offered below, and the only objection made to its admission was that Mr. Ryan was then in the state, and that it was only when the witness had gone out of the jurisdiction that such evidence was admissible. The court found the fact to be that Mr. Ryan was within the state, but unable to attend court as a witness or to give a deposition. The rule regulating the use of the former testimony of an unavailable witness differs in different jurisdictions. The one generally obtaining is that in a civil case, the testimony of a witness given at a former trial between the same parties may be introduced if the witness has since died or become insane, is sick and unable to testify, is out of the jurisdiction, or has been kept away by the other party. Some well-recognized rules are laid down for the guidance of the trial court in determining the preliminary questions of fact, and in the absence of any showing to the contrary we assume that these were duly observed. So, too, we assume that the finding that this witness was "unable" to attend court or give a deposition means that he was too ill to do so. This afforded a sufficient reason for admitting his former testimony. 10 R. C. L. 966; 2 Chamb. Ev. § 1846; 2 Wig. Ev. § 1406; Stephen's Dig. 159 et seq; Chase v. Springvale Mills Co., 75 Me. 156; Perrin v. Wells, 155 Pa. 299, 26 Atl. 543.

[13] When the transcript of Mr. Ryan's testimony was presented, certain questions and answers were stricken out by agreement of counsel, and the remainder was read to the jury. The proponent excepted to the failure of the court to strike out certain statements therein made by the witness complimentary to the contestant and her care of the decedent. It is quite probable that the admission of these statements violated the rule laid down in Turner v. Howard, 91 Vt. 49, 99 Atl. 236, and Adams v. Cook, 91 Vt. 281, 100 Atl. 42, but the record before us is too incomplete to show it. As we have seen, the testimony is not before us. All intendments are in favor of the ruling. We cannot say that this testimony could not be admissible in any state of the evidence, and we must, therefore, assume that it was made admissible by evidence not here shown. Tenney v. Harvey, 63 Vt. 520, 22 Atl. 659. Nor can we say that the statement of Mary A. Durphy as to a conversation between W. D. Martin and the decedent was inadmissible. There is not enough shown to make error appear. What W. D. Martin said, standing alone, may not have been important; but the fact that his remark brought no reply from the decedent may have been of significance. The record is too meager to warrant sustaining the exception.

[14] Mrs. Durphy testified to a conversation between Mr. and Mrs. Martin, which we understand to have taken place at the Lake Sunapee camp. She was asked if she said anything, and replied that she did; she was asked what she said, and replied that she told Mrs. Martin that she had better go home and stay for a while, for "it was getting on her nerves so that she was going to break down under it." Then she was asked if, in pursuance to this talk, she (Mrs. Martin) did go home, and at this point objection was made. The court recognized the fact that the objection came too late, treated it as a motion to strike out, allowed the testimony to stand, and gave the proponent an exception. The evidence came in without objection, and all right of objection was waived. It was within the discretion of the court whether to hold the proponent to this waiver or strike out the testimony.

[15, 16] Dr. Grout was a witness for the contestant. He had heard all the evidence in the case and was allowed to predicate an opinion of Mr. Martin's sanity thereon. This was excepted to on the ground that there was a conflict in the testimony given by the witnesses, and that the witness was allowed to consider the opinions expressed by them. If there was no conflict in the evidence as to any of the material facts detailed by the witnesses, and the opinions were excluded, the course taken with Dr. Grout was permissible. State v. Hayden, 51 Vt. 296. But we think that it sufficiently appears from the record that there was such a conflict. It is true that the transcript is not referred to, and we can only consider what expressly appears in the bill of exceptions. But when the ruling was made, counsel for the proponent strenuously insisted that there was such a conflict, and this does not appear to have been disputed by the contestant. Moreover, it appears that witnesses for the proponent gave evidence of Martin's "actions, doings and sayings," and predicated thereon opinions that he was sane; while witnesses for the contestant gave similar evidence, and predicated thereon opinions that he was insane, and that some of such evidence related to the same occasions. It would be hardly possible that such evidence would be entirely free from conflict; and the only fair inference from the record is that each group of witnesses testified to facts supporting his opinion. So, when the evidence related to the same occasions it must have been conflicting; otherwise it would not have tended to support the conflicting opinions. Besides, the witness was allowed to take into consideration all that the witness had said "of and concerning" the acts and sayings of the decedent, which must have left him free to consider what was said "concerning" such acts as indication of sanity or insanity. And finally the court itself in making the ruling recognized the existence of such a conflict by suggesting that the question asked did not eliminate the conflicting testimony, but included it all. From the whole record it is plain that the court appreciated that there was a conflict such as the proponent claimed, and understandingly admitted Dr. Grout's opinion based in part upon the opinions expressed by the witnesses who had preceded him. This was error, and was necessarily harmful, and requires a reversal.

[17] Dr. Keyes was a witness for the contestant. In his direct examination he was asked a question to which the proponent's counsel objected. Thereupon counsel for the contestant remarked, "I'll put a new question, inasmuch as there's a disposition on the part of the other side to interfere with the examination." To this the proponent excepted. The remark was unwarranted, and to allow it to go unwithdrawn and unrebuked was error. But in view of the fact that the case is to be reversed on another point, it is unnecessary to determine whether it was prejudicial or not.

[18, 19] The court charged the jury that it might consider the naturalness or unnaturalness of the will in determining the question of mental capacity. To this the proponent excepted. There was no error in this instruction. Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398;

Crocker v. Chase, 57 Vt. 413. The proponent complains that no definition of the term "naturalness" was given the jury. But that was not the point made below. The exception taken was specific, and cannot here be extended beyond the precise point there made. Graves v. Waitsfield, 81 Vt. 84, 69 Atl. 137.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

(32 Vt. 388)

GLOBE GRANITE CO. v. CLEMENTS.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Washington.
May 17, 1918.)

1. PLEADING ¶238(4)—AMENDMENT OF PLEA.

On hearing on referee's report, the transcript being referred to, court had right to avail itself of that in determining whether defendant's offered amendment to his plea was allowable, and had a general right to inquire dehors the record to ascertain the real counterclaim sought to be established by the amended plea in offset.

2. PLEADING ¶259—ACTION FOR PRICE—AMENDMENT OF PLEA—BREACH OF WARRANTY.

In action for price of monument, though defendant nowhere designated claim in offset as for breach of warranty, but had stated it so that plaintiff recognized its character, and twice applied to it its technical name, court properly permitted defendant to amend plea, by adding averments of express warranty.

3. REFERENCE ¶58—PLEADINGS—AMENDMENT.

When cause is referred, pleadings are to be treated as adapted to facts found, when no new cause of action is thereby brought in, and formal pleadings may be treated as amended or may be actually amended accordingly before judgment.

4. ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF ¶19—SPECIAL COUNT—GENERAL OR COMMON COUNT.

A special count in assumpsit may be for the same cause of action as a general or common count.

5. SALES ¶442(6, 7)—REMEDIES OF BUYER—BREACH OF WARRANTY—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

Though in general buyer's damages for breach of warranty are difference between value of goods as they were and as they were warranted, price paid for monument discovered to be cracked might properly have been taken as evidence of value of monument, had it been as warranted, and cost of making it as warranted would be evidence to show how much its value fell short of value as warranted.

6. SALES ¶445(2)—EXPRESS WARRANTY—WRITTEN CONTRACT—QUESTION FOR COURT.

Where instrument evidencing contract of sale is in writing, question whether it embodied express warranty is one of construction for the court.

7. SALES ¶261(4)—EXPRESS WARRANTY.

Written contract for sale of a monument for the dead, providing it should be sound and free from cracks, carried an express warranty against specific defects, and was not a mere description of the monument to be furnished.

8. SALES ¶428—REMEDIES OF BUYER—BREACH OF WARRANTY.

Warranty of goods sold being express and absolute, buyer had right of action for breach, which he could assert, in independent suit or by way of offset in any action on contract of sale brought against him by seller, by proving warranty and breach, without more.

Exceptions from Washington County Court; Stanley C. Wilson, Judge.

Action by the Globe Granite Company against Charles Clements. To a judgment for plaintiff in the larger of two amounts alternatively found by the referee, defendant excepts. Judgment for the larger sum reversed, and judgment ordered for plaintiff.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Theriault & Hunt, of Montpelier, for plaintiff. John W. Gordon, of Barre, for defendant.

HASELTON, J. This is an action of contract, in the form of general assumpsit. The plaintiff filed a specification, of a skeleton character, referring to various contracts for monuments, and claiming a balance of $449. The defendant, among other pleas, filed a plea in offset in the general counts in assumpsit, and the cause was referred. Before the referee the defendant filed a specification under his plea in offset. This specification was also of a skeleton character. It contained a claim with reference to a certain contract 39888, so called, not one of the contracts to which the plaintiff's specification related. On hearing before the referee, the plaintiff's specification was conceded to be correct, and the entire controversy was over the defendant's claim in offset with reference to contract 39888, which was a contract for a granite monument. The defendant ordered this monument of the plaintiff, and the order specified that it should be from sound stock and free from cracks. The plaintiff accepted the order and constructed and forwarded the monument. Before the defendant had opportunity to inspect the monument, he, at the request of the plaintiff, sent a check in payment therefor. In a letter accompanying the check, the defendant said that the check was sent with the understanding that the work was according to agreement.

The defendant was a dealer in monuments, and sold the work in question to Williams & Bowers of Cortland, N. Y., who procured it for a customer there, one Rowley. The monument was set up in a cemetery, and afterwards, when lettering was being done, a crack was discovered, upon the die, extending across the lettering. This crack had until then been invisible to and undetected by any one who had inspected the monument or had to do with setting it up. The crack in fact existed in the die when the stone was shipped by the plaintiff. It was caused by a blast when the stone was quarried. There is no room for doubt, on the facts reported, that, in view of the nature of the work as a monument to the dead, the crack constituted a substantial defect, and rendered the die worthless for the purpose for which it had been furnished. Williams & Bowers had given their note to the defendant in payment for the monument, but on account of the defect refused payment of the note. The defendant insisted that the plaintiff furnish a new die, but the plaintiff claimed that the die already furnished complied with the contract and was perfect, and refused to replace it, and never consented that it should be replaced at its expense. Finally the defendant replaced the die at an expense of $340.26. The referee reported to the court in the alternative, making the amount recoverable by the plaintiff to depend upon the allowance of the above sum as an offset to the balance otherwise due the plaintiff.

At the hearing on the referee's report, and before judgment, the defendant obtained leave of court to file, and did file, an amendment to his plea in offset, by adding thereto averments of an express warranty in the contract in question and of a breach of such warranty in consequence of the crack in the die by reason of which the defendant was damaged to the amount of the offset conditionally reported by the referee. To the action of the court in allowing this amendment the plaintiff objected, and excepted on the ground that the amendment "introduced a new and different cause of action and claim in offset, distinct from and inconsistent with the claim in offset tried before the referee."

[1, 2] The transcript was referred to, and the court had a right to avail itself of that in determining whether the amendment offered was allowable, and had a general right to inquire de hors the record to ascertain the real counterclaim sought to be established by the plea in offset, and we think that the ruling of the court allowing the amendment should be sustained. From the transcript it appeared that, while the defendant had nowhere designated his claim in offset as for a breach of warranty, he had, practically at the outset, stated his claim in such a way that the plaintiff recognized its character, and twice applied to it its technical name. The court had ample ground for the finding which it impliedly made that the right to an offset for a breach of warranty was tried out before the referee, and was in effect the counterclaim of which the defendant sought to avail himself by pleading in offset in the common counts in assumpsit.

[3, 4] When a cause is referred the pleadings are to be treated as adapted to the facts found when no new cause of action is thereby brought in, and the formal pleadings may be treated as amended, or as here may be actually amended, accordingly before judgment. McDonald v. Place, 88 Vt. 80, 85, 90 Atl. 948; Camp v. Barker, 87 Vt. 235, 237, 238, 88 Atl. 812, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 451; Van Dyke v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 84 Vt. 212, 78 Atl. 958, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 640; Gordon's Adm'r v. Hotchkiss, 82 Vt. 479, 74 Atl. 74. The plaintiff argues, in effect, that, as assumpsit in the common counts will not lie for a breach of warranty, the amendment to the defendant's counterclaim necessarily brought in a new cause of action. But our best-considered cases prior to the practice act indicate that this claim is unfounded, show that a special count may be for the same cause of action as a general or common count. Patterson's Adm'r v. Modern Woodmen of America, 89 Vt. 305, 95 Atl. 692; Lamb v. Zundell, 78 Vt. 232, 62 Atl. 33; Lyndon Granite Co. v. Farrar, 53 Vt. 585; Dana v. McClure, 39 Vt. 197. And under the practice act the fallacy of the plaintiff's claim in the respect under consideration is obvious.

[5-8] On the question of the scope of the real issue tried by the referee the plaintiff calls attention to the fact that the amount found conditionally for the defendant was simply the cost of replacing the cracked die, and says that from this it appears that no issue of breach of warranty was made, since in the case the damages must have been the difference between the value of the monument as it was and the value it would have had, if it had been as warranted. Let it be assumed that this general rule applies to a case of this sort. Nevertheless, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, the price paid for the monument might properly have been taken as evidence of its value had it been as warranted, and then the cost of making it as warranted would be evidence tending to show how much its actual value fell short of the value of the warranted monument. Houghton v. Carpenter, 40 Vt. 588, 596; Melby v. Osborne, 33 Minn. 492, 24 N. W. 253; Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Thompson, 83 Kan. 491, 6 Pac. 902; Showen v. Owens Co., 182 Mich. 264, 148 N. W. 666. With the claim of an express warranty in the case as a claim in offset, the court disallowed the claimed offset and rendered judgment for the plaintiff to recover the larger sum reported by the referee. To this judgment the defendant excepted, on the ground that the offset should have been allowed and judgment rendered for the smaller sum reported. Under this exception the substantial question raised and argued is whether there was in the contract in question an express warranty surviving such acceptance as the report here shows. That the contract was by way of an undertaking to comply with a written order is here immaterial. And, since the instrument evidencing the contract is in writing, the question of whether it embodied an express warranty is one of construction for the court. Hobart v. Young, 63 Vt. 363, 21 Atl. 612, 12 L. R. A. 693; Unadilla Silo Co. v. Hull, 90 Vt. 134, 96 Atl. 535. Now, considering the subject-matter of this contract, it cannot be said that the positive provision that the monument should be sound and free from cracks was merely descriptive of the kind of a monument to be furnished. This positive provision was an express warranty against specific defects, as much so as a sale of a horse, with a positive representation that it is without a spavin, embodies an express warranty that the horse is without such unsoundness. Hobart v. Young, 63 Vt. 363, 21 Atl. 612, 12 L. R. A. 693; Franklin & Co. v. Lamson & Co., 189 Mass. 344, 75 N. E. 624; Unadilla Silo Co. v. Hull, 90 Vt. 134, 96 Atl. 535. Since here was an express warranty, the discussion by counsel of an implied warranty, its character and incidents, need not be noticed. And since the warranty was express and absolute, the defendant had a right of action which he could assert in an independent suit, or by way of offset to any action founded on contract brought against him by the plaintiff, by proving the warranty and the breach, without more. Hobart v. Young, 63 Vt. 363, 21 Atl. 612, 12 L. R. A. 693; Pennock v. Stygles, 54 Vt. 226; Richardson v. Grandy, 49 Vt. 22; Pinney v. Andrews, 41 Vt. 631; G. L. 1808.

The offset should have been allowed, but the case requires no remand. The referee's report furnishes the necessary basis for a judgment adjusting the entire controversy here, such judgment as the trial court should have rendered by way of giving effect to the salutary principles underlying the whole law of offsets. Stewart v. Knight, 83 Vt. 201, 208, 75 Atl. 12. As the plaintiff points out, had judgment been rendered for the plaintiff for the smaller sum reported by the referee, interest thereon should have been brought down to the date of the judgment, which was August 3, 1917, making the amount that the plaintiff was entitled to recover as of that date $176.00.

Judgment for the larger sum reported reversed, and judgment for the plaintiff to recover as of August 3, 1917, the sum of $176.00, with costs below. Let the defendant's costs in this court be deducted.

(92 Vt. 396)

RAYMOND v. SHELDON'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Rutland. Opinion Filed June 21, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ¶4—IMPLIED CONTRACTS.

An implied contract must contain all the elements of an express contract and only differs from an express contract in its proof.

2. CONTRACTS ¶29—IMPLIED CONTRACTS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action on implied contract, each element depending upon questions of fact, if there is any substantial evidence fairly and reasonably tending to establish such contract, question must be submitted to jury.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶927(7)—MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT—REVIEW.

In reviewing denial of defendant's motion for a directed verdict, evidence must be viewed in light most favorable to plaintiff.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶256(7)—IMPLIED CONTRACTS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action against estate on implied contract to pay for services rendered deceased, whether valuable services were rendered under such a contract held for jury.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶256(7) —IMPLIED CONTRACT—EVIDENCE.

In action against estate for services rendered deceased, testimony of a witness that he had seen plaintiff go to deceased's house very frequently was admissible; it being claimed that directions were given and part of services were performed at the house.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶256(7) —EVIDENCE.

In action against estate of deceased for services rendered deceased in going on errands, among other things, testimony by witness that she saw plaintiff buy postal cards and gifts for deceased's children and some little lace and ribbons, was competent as bearing upon extent of services performed.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶992—EXPERT TESTIMONY—REVIEW.

Where testimony of witness tended to show that she had some means of knowing and did know what price was for services rendered in shopping for another, a ruling of court admitting an opinion of the witness as to value of certain services in that line is not revisable on appeal.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1048(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

An exception to a question which was not answered is not available on appeal.

9. NEW TRIAL ¶76(1)—EXCESSIVE VERDICT.

Motion to set aside a verdict as excessive is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶979(5)—MATTERS REVIEWABLE—DISCRETION.

Motion to set aside a verdict as excessive is not reviewable, unless trial court failed to exercise its discretion, or abused it.

Exceptions from Rutland County Court; Stanley O. Wilson, Judge.

Claim by Emma Raymond against the Estate of Caroline E. Sheldon, deceased. Judgment on appeal to the county court in favor of complainant, and defendant brings exceptions. Affirmed and cause ordered certified to the probate court.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HAS-ELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Webber & Leamy, of Rutland, for defendant. Lawrence, Lawrence & Stafford, of Rutland, for plaintiff.

MILES, J. This case came to the county court on an appeal by the plaintiff from the disallowance of her claim against the estate of Caroline E. Sheldon, and it comes here upon the defendant's exception to the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict in his favor, to the reception of certain evidence, and to certain portions of the court's charge.

[1, 2] The ground of the exception to the court's refusal to direct a verdict in the defendant's favor is that there was no evidence in the case tending to prove a promise implied in fact on the part of Mrs. Sheldon. It is true, as argued by the defendant, that the implied contract, such as here under consideration, must contain all the elements of an express contract, and that it only differs from an express contract in its proof. 6 R. C. L. 587, p. 6. Each depends upon questions of fact, and if there is any substantial evidence fairly and reasonably tending to establish such contract, that question must be submitted to the jury. Fitzsimons v. Richardson, 86 Vt. 229, 84 Atl. 811; McGaffey v. Mathie, 68 Vt. 403, 35 Atl. 334; Kelton v. Leonard, 54 Vt. 230.

[3] In reviewing the denial of defendant's motion for a directed verdict, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Hazen v. R. R. Railroad, 89 Vt. 94, 94 Atl. 296. Applying these well-established rules to what appears in this case, we examine the evidence to see if it reasonably and fairly tends to show an implied promise on the part of Mrs. Sheldon to pay the plaintiff what her services were reasonably worth, and from that examination we think it does so show.

[4] The evidence of one witness was to the effect that during the time covered by the plaintiff's bill against Mrs. Sheldon's estate, the witness had on frequent occasions received requests over the telephone from the Sheldon house to ask the plaintiff to call there; that when the witness was at work for Mrs. Sheldon, the plaintiff would call there and Mrs. Sheldon would ask her on those occasions why she, the plaintiff, had not called, stating to the plaintiff that she wanted her to do something for her; that she knew of the plaintiff's bringing to Mrs. Sheldon articles purchased at the store for her; that at one time Mrs. Sheldon said to the witness that she could not pay the plaintiff for what she had done for her. There was other similar evidence in the case which had a tendency to prove that the plaintiff's services were performed at the request of Mrs. Sheldon. This was enough to entitle the plaintiff to go to the jury if the services were valuable. It is said in 40 Cyc. 2810:

"Where valuable services are rendered, or material furnished, by one person for another at the latter's request, in the absence of circumstances showing that the services or material were intended to be rendered or furnished gratuitously, the former is entitled to recover for such services or material, although there was no express contract for remuneration."

To the same effect is 6 R. C. L. supra. Indeed such contracts are of daily occurrence, and no question is made as to their legal and binding force.

An examination of the transcript discloses that the evidence tended to show that the services were valuable; that the plaintiff did washings weekly and special washings twice a year for Mrs. Sheldon; that the washings were not the general washings, but the washings of such things as Mrs. Sheldon's wearing apparel, her bureau covers, towels, napkins, and blankets. There was no error in overruling the motion for a directed verdict. The exception to the charge raises the same question that is raised by the motion for a verdict, and the disposition of that question makes it unnecessary to consider the exception to the charge.

[6] The defendant excepts to a question asked Georgie Davis, which was received subject to the objection that it had no tendency to prove either a contract or service, and an exception was noted for the defendant. The witness had testified without objection that she had seen the plaintiff go into Mrs. Sheldon's house, and to the question, "How frequently?" answered, "Very frequently, perhaps every day with the exception of Sunday." This evidence was material to show that the plaintiff went to Mrs. Sheldon's house, where it was claimed that much of the services of the plaintiff were performed, and where the plaintiff claimed she went for direction in regard to the errands. The evidence was properly received.

[8] The defendant objected to another question asked this witness upon the same grounds as those stated to the other question. The witness had testified without objection that she had seen a number of things which Mrs. Sheldon told her the plaintiff had purchased for her, and the question objected to was as follows: "What were those articles, do you recall?" The answer was: "I remember postal cards, and the gifts she gave the children, and some little lace and ribbons; that is all I can recall now." The evidence had a bearing upon the extent of the services performed in the matter of doing errands for Mrs. Sheldon, and while the evidence was not very weighty, it has a tendency to prove that the plaintiff did more errands for Mrs. Sheldon than getting the Christmas presents, which the witness had already testified that Mrs. Sheldon had told her that the plaintiff had purchased for her. There was no error in receiving this testimony.

The witness Cecile Bradchaud was asked, "Won't you tell how frequently she called, and what the nature of the purchases were?" referring by the word "she" in the question to the plaintiff. The question was objected to on the same ground as that urged in the objection to the questions asked Mrs. Davis. The witness answered, "Some weeks she came every day and some weeks twice a day; the nature of the purchases would be in the line of dry goods, buttons, laces, ribbons, anything in the nature of household goods, underwear." The witness testified without objection that the purchases made by the plaintiff would not be completed on the first trip of the plaintiff; that on the first trip samples were sent out for approval; and that when the purchase was finally made the goods were sometimes delivered to the plaintiff and sometimes delivered to Mrs. Sheldon by their delivery team, and that the goods so delivered were charged to and paid by Mrs.

Sheldon. This evidence was material as tending to show the extent of services in the line of errands performed for Mrs. Sheldon by the plaintiff. This exception was not well taken.

[7] This witness being recalled later in the trial was asked, "What do you say is a fair and reasonable price for work that I have suggested?" The work suggested was that of buying dress goods and shopping in the city of Rutland where Mrs. Sheldon lived when the alleged services were performed. The witness answered, "Twenty cents an hour." The ground of the objection to this question was that the witness was not qualified to express an opinion. The witness testified that she was acquainted or familiar with the price that was paid for work of buying dress goods and shopping, etc., in the city of Rutland. The testimony of the witness tended to show that she had means of knowing and did know what the price was for such services. There being some evidence of qualification, the finding of the trial court is not revisable. Griffin v. B. & M. Railroad, 87 Vt. 278, 89 Atl. 220.

[8] Octave George Chamberland was asked, "From that time on how frequently did you see Mrs. Raymond in your store trading there?" The question was not answered, and the exception, therefore, is not available to the defendant. Fraser v. Blanchard et al., 83 Vt. 136, 73 Atl. 995, 75 Atl. 797.

[9, 10] The next and last exception briefed is that the verdict was excessive, and should have been set aside on the defendant's motion. Such a motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and is not reviewable, unless it appears that the court refused or failed to exercise its discretion, or abused it. Lincoln v. C. V. Railway Co., 82 Vt. 187, 72 Atl. 821, 137 Am. St. Rep. 998. It does not appear that the trial court did refuse or failed to exercise its discretion, or that it abused it. There was no error in overruling the motion.

Judgment affirmed, and cause ordered certified to the probate court.

(32 Vt. 371)

HUTCHINS v. GEORGE et al.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Washington.
May 17, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE ¶43(3) — JUDICIAL NOTICE — JUDGMENT AND PROCEEDINGS IN OTHER CASE.

As a rule, judgment and proceedings in a case other than that on trial, even between the same parties, will not be taken notice of by the court of its own motion.

2. EVIDENCE ¶43(3) — JUDICIAL NOTICE — RECORDS OF COURT.

When former judicial proceedings between same parties in same court are offered in evidence, they prove themselves, since a court takes judicial notice of the authenticity of its own records.

8. TRIAL ~~¶~~39—FORMER JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS—OFFER IN EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff's request, that court notice former judgment and specification on which it was based in prior action in same court by defendant against him, in effect was offer of former judicial proceedings in evidence.

4. JUDGMENT ~~¶~~622(2) — JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—FAILURE TO DECLARE ON CLAIM.

Plaintiff in general assumpsit, as to items accruing before judgment by default against him in defendant's prior action, is not precluded by the judgment against him since, under P. S. 1507, it was not obligatory upon plaintiff in the prior suit to declare on the claim for which he now sues.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ~~¶~~907(3) — PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING TRIAL COURT—SUPPORT OF RULING.

In absence of transcript, Supreme Court will assume in support of a ruling against defendant that it was based on such showing or lack of showing, or upon such offer or lack of offer of evidence, as the case presented.

6. JUDGMENT ~~¶~~595 — CLAIM UNDER RUNNING ACCOUNT—INDIVISIBLE CHARACTER.

Claim under running account covering considerable time in general is regarded as single cause of action, not to be split up by separate suits upon separate items.

Exceptions from City Court of Montpelier; E. M. Harvey, Judge.

Action by Francis B. Hutchins against F. J. George and trustee. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants except. Affirmed.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

William C. White, of Northfield, for plaintiff. F. J. Marshall, of Montpelier, for defendants.

HASELTON, J. This is an action of contract in the form of general assumpsit brought before the city court of Montpelier. The defenses were the general issue, or denial, and set-off. Trial was by the court, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff to recover $22.82, as damages and costs. The defendant brings a bill of exceptions.

[1-3] The writ in this case was dated December 7, 1916. The defendant had previously brought an action in the form of general assumpsit against the plaintiff. That action had been returnable, to the court that tried this, November 13, 1916, and, the defendant there, the plaintiff here, not having appeared, judgment in that action had been rendered on his default for damages $10.50 and costs. On the trial of this case a certified copy of the record of the former judgment was not offered by either party, but the files therein were at hand in the possession of the court, and at the request of the plaintiff the court took notice of the former judgment and the items of the specification therein, and considered them in the determination of this case. To this action of the court the defendant excepted on the sole ground that a court has no right to take judicial notice of its own judgments. As a rule the judgment and proceedings in another case than that on trial, even between the same parties, will not be taken notice of by the court of its own motion. Otherwise matters might be considered that a party has no opportunity to meet and explain. 15 R. C. L. 1114. But when former judicial proceedings between the same parties in the same court are offered in evidence, they prove themselves, since a court takes judicial notice of the authenticity of its own records, and, where such former proceedings are relevant and are seasonably offered, they are, without more, properly in the case. Here the request of the plaintiff, that the court take notice of the former judgment and the specification on which it was based, was in effect an offer, and nothing appears to indicate that it was not seasonably made, and no question of relevancy raised. Therefore, so far as appears, the matters noticed by the court were properly before it for consideration. State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 160, 50 Atl. 863; Armstrong v. Colby, 47 Vt. 359, 361, 364.

[4] Some or all of the items of the specification of the plaintiff in this suit, Hutchins v. George, were for indebtedness claimed to have accrued prior to the bringing of the former action, George v. Hutchins, in which Hutchins did not appear but suffered judgment to go against him by default. These items were considered by the court, against objection and exception on the ground that Hutchins was precluded as to such items by the judgment against him in the suit in which he suffered default, the respective claims of the parties being such that in that suit Hutchins might have declared in effect on the claim for which he now brings suit. But, under our statute, it was not obligatory upon him to do so. He could fail to exercise his privilege in that regard without prejudice to his own claim in a suit brought by him. P. S. 1507, now G. L. 1806; Kezar v. Elkins, 52 Vt. 119, 120, 121; Davenport v. Hubbard, 46 Vt. 200, 206, 14 Am. Rep. 620; Carver v. Adams, 88 Vt. 500.

We note that, had the former action been book account, the matter of costs might have been affected by the course taken. P. S. 2084, now G. L. 2312; Scott v. Niles, 40 Vt. 573.

In this action the defendant George, under his plea in offset already mentioned, filed a specification in which he included items of account that had accrued before the bringing by him of his action against Hutchins. The court took into consideration such items so far as they went in payment of the plaintiff's charges.

[5] Other items the defendant "claimed" were omitted from his specification in the former action by mistake, and still others "were treated by him" as in offset to items of the plaintiff's specification. Except as above stated, the court excluded from consideration the defendants' items in offset, ruling that, as matter of law, the defendant was precluded as to them. To this ruling the defendant excepted. We have no transcript of the case, and we assume, in support of the ruling, that it was based upon such showing or lack of showing or upon such offer or lack of offer of evidence as the case presented. But the bill of exceptions gives us no information in that regard. It informs us only what the defendant claimed and how he treated or regarded the items.

[8] It appears that here were mutual dealings and a running account covering a considerable period of time. One's claim under such an account is, in general, regarded as a single cause of action not to be split up by one suit upon this item, another upon that, and still other suits upon still other items; the suits running on indefinitely according to the course of the mutual dealings back to the beginning of the account. 1 R. C. L. 356, 357.

If the defendant relied upon any exception to the principle announced by the court, he should, at least, have made a definite offer of evidence calculated to take his claim as to the items in question out of the general rule. It does not appear that any such offer was made. On the bill of exceptions brought by the defendant no sufficient reason is shown for disturbing the judgment against him, and, accordingly, it is affirmed.

(132 Md. 626)

ADAMS EXPRESS CO. v. WHITE. (No. 26.)
(Court of Appeals of Maryland. May 8, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS ⇨76 — ACTIONS FOR LOSS OF GOODS—PARTIES ENTITLED TO SUE.

An action against a carrier for loss of goods should be brought by the owner or one having a beneficial interest in the property.

2. CARRIERS ⇨132 — ACTIONS FOR LOSS OF GOODS—PRESUMPTION OF OWNERSHIP.

The presumption that the consignee has the necessary ownership to sue a carrier for the loss or conversion of goods is not conclusive, but may be rebutted.

3. CARRIERS ⇨76 — ACTION FOR LOSS OF GOODS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO SUE.

Where calculating machines returned by a prospective purchaser as unsatisfactory were shipped to a consignee as agent of the owner and seller, the consignee had no beneficial interest entitling him to sue carrier for failure to deliver, regardless of whether he was selling on a commission basis or working on a salary.

4. CARRIERS ⇨132 — ACTIONS FOR LOSS OF GOODS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where goods were delivered to a carrier for shipment, the bill of lading containing no statement of their condition when receipted for, the presumption arises from the receipt of the goods without objection noted in the receipt that they were in good condition as far as apparent on ordinary inspection.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1051(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

Where a carrier's shipping receipt recited that two boxes of machines were delivered to it, and proof showed that but one was received by the consignee, admission of hearsay evidence by the consignee as to how he knew two machines were shipped was immaterial.

6. CARRIERS ⇨135 — LOSS OF GOODS — DAMAGES.

Where calculating machines sent to a prospective purchaser on trial were returned to the agent but lost by the carrier in transit, in an action by the agent as consignee, the carrier was entitled in determining damages to have commissions plaintiff would have earned if he had sold the machines, deducted from the selling price at destination.

Appeal from Superior Court of Baltimore City; John J. Dobler, Judge.

Action by C. Ridgely White against the Adams Express Company, an unincorporated joint-stock association. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

William S. Thomas, of Baltimore, for appellant. W. Lentz, of Baltimore, for appellee.

CONSTABLE, J. The appellee was, at the time of arising of the cause of action herein sued upon, the Baltimore agent of the Marchant Calculating Machine Company of California. He shipped from Baltimore to the Blackwood Coal & Coke Company at Blackwood, Va., one of the machines on trial, and understood that the company also sent one to the same party from California. The machines proving unsatisfactory, the Blackwood Company delivered to the appellant, according to the receipt given to the consignor, the Blackwood Company, "two boxes calculating machines," with a value warranted by the shipper to be $500, and "consigned to C. R. White, representative Marchant Calculating Machine Co., Baltimore, Md." The box containing the machine originally shipped from Baltimore was duly received by White, but the second box was never received. It was because of failure to deliver that machine that this suit was instituted by White in his individual character, and resulted in a judgment of $250, the selling price of a machine of this kind when new.

The case was tried before the court without the aid of a jury, and five exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court, four to questions of evidence, and one to the refusal to grant the two prayers offered by the defendants. The plaintiff offered no prayer. The only witness examined by either party was the plaintiff.

[1, 2] The first prayer of defendant sought to direct a verdict for it upon the theory that under the evidence White, as consignee, was not a proper party plaintiff. There seems some confusion among the authorities in actions against carriers for loss or conversion of goods intrusted to them for delivery, but it seems to be fairly established that the rule is that the action should be brought by the owner or one having a beneficial interest in the property. Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) §§ 1304-1320; Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) § 1692; Thompson on Negligence, vol. 6, §§ 7420-7424; 6 Cyc. 510. The consignee is presumed to possess the necessary ownership to sue, but this presumption is not conclusive, and may be rebutted. 10 Corpus Juris, 351; Ray, Carrier of Freight, 1006; Griffith v. Ingledew, 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 429, 9 Am. Dec. 444; Smith v. Lewis, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 229; Arbuckle v. Thompson, 37 Pa. 170; Pennsylvania Co. v. Poor, 103 Ind. 553, 3 N. E. 253; Lawrence v. Minturn, 17 How. 100, 15 L. Ed. 58.

Mr. White produced and offered in evidence the appellant's receipt, which, as above noted, showed that the property was shipped, not to C. R. White individually, but to him as the representative of the Marchant Calculating Machine Company. He also testified that he was the agent of the machine company, and that they owned the machine sued for, and it was being returned after it had failed to satisfy the prospective purchaser.

[3] Whether the appellee was selling on a commission basis, or employed on a salary, could not give him any right which he was entitled to protect by bringing suit in his own name, for no commission had been earned. We are of the opinion that the undisputed evidence shows that the appellee had no beneficial interest in the property, and that therefore he had no right to maintain this suit, and that there was error in refusing the defendant's first prayer.

[4] The second prayer asked that a verdict be returned for it, because there was no evidence to show the condition of the machine when it was delivered to the defendant. The refusal of this prayer was correct. There is a well-established rule that in cases of this character a presumption arises from the fact of the receipt of the goods by the carrier without objection or exception noted in the shipping receipt that as far as the condition was apparent on ordinary inspection the goods were in good condition. See 10 Corpus Juris, 371, and long list of cases under note 65. The bill of lading, or shipping receipt, contained no statement as to the condition of the machines when receipted for. Neither did the evidence in the record rebut in any way the presumption.

[5] The first exception occurred during the taking of the testimony of the plaintiff, and referred to how the witness knew that the machine company had two machines at Blackwood. In answer to a question, he replied that he knew it from the fact that the machine company had written to that effect. The appellant objected to this as being hearsay testimony. This exception is immaterial, since the shipping receipt recited that two boxes of these machines were delivered to the carrier, and the proof shows that but one was received. N. Y. & Balto. Trans. Co. v. Baer, 118 Md. 73, 84 Atl. 251.

[6] The second, third, and fourth exceptions present the same legal question, and bear upon the proper measure of damages. The plaintiff testified that the selling price of the machine was $250. The defendant attempted to show that out of the selling price, if the plaintiff had sold them, he would have received a commission. The court, upon objection, refused to allow these three questions to be answered. The questions were asked upon the theory that, since the shipment was from an "on trial" purchaser to an agent without a prospect of sale, there could be no recovery for unearned commissions. In other words, the contention was that, under the circumstances of this shipment, the carrier was entitled to have the amount of the commissions the plaintiff would have received, if he had sold the goods, deducted from the amount of the selling price at the point of destination. We are of the opinion that this contention is correct, both upon reason and principle. The appellee relies upon the case of Kyle v. Laurens, 10 Rich. 382, 70 Am. Dec. 231, in opposition to this contention. This was a case concerning a consignment of cotton to a factor for sale and lost in transit, and the court there held that the measure of damages was the market value of the cotton at the place of destination, without deducting the factor's commissions. We think the present case is clearly distinguishable from that case. The goods in that case consisted of staple goods for which there was a ready and prompt market, and upon the receipt of them the factor could have readily earned the commission which had been agreed upon between him and the owner, while in the present case there was no ready market such as there is for staple articles like cotton, grain, and the like, and in fact they were not consigned to him for sale at all, but were merely returned to him as not satisfactory under the agreement of sale with the consignor. There was no immediate prospect of sale, and therefore no commission expected, if, indeed, he was selling upon a commission basis. We think that the appellant was entitled to show, if possible, that the appellee was selling upon a commission basis, and, if so, to have an instruction eliminating the amount of the commission from the selling price.

We will therefore reverse the judgment, and remand the case in order that the pleadings may be amended or to permit a new suit to be brought in the name of the proper parties.

Judgment reversed and new trial awarded, with costs to the appellant.

(133 Md. 31)

EVANS v. BALTIMORE, C. & A. RY. CO.
(No. 17.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. May 1, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS — 307(4) — GRADE CROSSINGS — DUTY TO WARN TRAVELERS.

The law does not impose the obligation upon a railroad company to station persons at every crossing of a public road to warn travelers of the approach of trains.

2. RAILROADS — 346(6) — INJURIES TO TRAVELERS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where plaintiff, in action for injuries when struck by railroad train at crossing, testified to the effect that there was no material obstruction preventing him from seeing the train, he had the burden of showing, not only the railroad's negligence, but his own freedom from contributory negligence.

3. RAILROADS — 348(8) — INJURIES TO TRAVELERS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — EVIDENCE.

In action for injuries when struck by railroad train at crossing, where plaintiff's testimony showed that there was no material obstruction between him and the railroad, indicating that, had he looked, he must have seen the approaching train, his mere testimony that he looked and did not see it did not establish freedom from contributory negligence.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Queen Anne's County; Philemon B. Hopper and W. H. Adkins, Judges.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Edward S. Evans against the Baltimore, Chesapeake & Atlantic Railway Company. Judgment on directed verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

T. Alan Goldsborough, of Denton (J. H. C. Legg and Thomas J. Keating, both of Centerville, on the brief), for appellant. Henry R. Lewis, of Denton (Lewis & Knotts, of Denton, and J. Frank Harper, of Centerville, on the brief), for appellee.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. The record in this case presents for the consideration of the court a suit for personal injuries received by the plaintiff, Edward S. Evans, as the result of a collision between a Ford machine, which he was driving, and a train of the Baltimore, Chesapeake & Atlantic Railway. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence the defendant offered a prayer to withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury, upon the theory that no negligence of the defendant had been shown, sufficient to entitle the appellant to recover. This prayer was rejected by the court, and in lieu of it, at the suggestion of the court, a prayer was framed, offered, and granted, directing a verdict for the defendant, upon the ground of the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. This action of the court constitutes the sole bill of exceptions upon which this appeal was taken.

At the trial below there was a diagram upon the blackboard for the purpose of showing the relative positions of various objects testified to by the witnesses. As they gave their testimony, it is frequently punctuated with the word "indicating," and, as that drawing does not appear in the record, it is a little difficult to place precisely some points testified to by the witnesses. Enough does appear to remove all difficulty in determining the rules of law applicable to the case, rules which have been frequently announced by this court in a series of decisions.

On the 26th of June, 1916, the plaintiff and Mr. Calvin Richardson, who had been riding through the county that day, were returning to their home at Pittsville, by a road which crossed the track of the Baltimore, Chesapeake & Atlantic Railway Company at or nearly at right angles. As the road approached the railroad there was a slight rise in the grade, and the road was sandy. The Ford machine which the plaintiff was driving was running on low gear, at a rate variously estimated from 4 to 7 miles per hour. It was still light, so that there was no serious difficulty in observing conditions, and the plaintiff asked Mr. Richardson to look in one direction for approaching trains; it being his idea apparently to look in the other. There was some conversation to the effect that there was no train due there at or about that time. Unfortunately a train, known as the Ocean City Special, had been put in service a couple of days before, and was approaching this crossing at a high speed, at the same time that the auto containing the plaintiff and Mr. Richardson approached it upon the highway. Mr. Richardson, who had been looking to the eastward, turned and, looking to the west, discovered the approaching train, only a short distance away, and in some manner, just how he is unable to tell, managed to get out of the machine, while Mr. Evans, who was at the steering wheel, remained, and the machine was struck about the front by the locomotive, practically demolishing the auto, throwing Mr. Evans out, and severely injuring him.

The evidence as to the surroundings of the crossing and the visibility of approaching trains is that of the plaintiff and his witnesses, and is uncontradicted. From this it would seem that the nearest house to the railroad at this crossing was distant 100 feet, that after passing this house there was 20 feet of entirely clear and unobstructed vision, and that for the remaining distance there was a garden, containing some small shade trees, rose bushes, and a patch of butter beans, the height of none of which is given by any witness. These apparently interfered but little, if any, with the opportunity for seeing objects approaching upon the railroad tracks. The witness Richardson testified that he lived almost opposite the butter bean patch, but he was apparently unaware of the existence of the patch at the time of the accident, for he says:

"Like any other garden in town, I never had been interested in that particular garden; but after we were down there, looking at that range of vision, I wondered why we didn't see the train."

And the witness Evans testified, in answer to the question:

"When did you first know there was a butter bean patch there? A. I did not know till Mr. Parsons called my attention to it, after I was able to go around."

In view of this testimony, it is impossible to see how there was any serious physical obstruction between the plaintiff and Richardson and the approaching train.

[1] The plaintiff apparently relies strongly for the negligence of the defendant upon the fact that at the time of the accident there was no flagman, and no warning sign to apprise the plaintiff of possible approaching danger; but "the law does not impose the obligation upon a railroad company to station persons at every crossing of a public road to warn travelers of approaching trains." Foy v. Railroad Co., 47 Md. 85; Cowen v. Dietrick, 101 Md. 46, 60 Atl. 282, 4 Ann. Cas. 292. And in this case both the plaintiff and Richardson had lived in Pittsville several years and were thoroughly familiar with this crossing and its immediate surroundings. Both the plaintiff and Richardson testified that they heard no sound of the approaching train, that no whistle was blown or bell rung, and that, though they looked, they saw nothing of the approaching train in time to have stopped the machine.

[2, 3] The case, therefore, falls directly within the principle announced in Helm's Case, 84 Md. 515, 36 Atl. 119, 36 L. R. A. 215, where the court said:

"By the well-settled law applicable to the class of cases to which this belongs, it is not enough for the plaintiff to prove the negligence of the defendant and the injury which followed; but he is bound also to establish by satisfactory proof, before he can recover, that he was himself free from negligence, and exercised ordinary care to avoid the consequences of the defendant's negligence. The right to recover depends upon two distinct propositions of fact: First, the negligence of the defendant; and, second, the exercise of due and ordinary care by the plaintiff, and if he fails to prove negligence on the part of the defendant, or if it appears from his own evidence that he was guilty of negligence directly contributing to the injury, he cannot recover."

And in Md. Elec. Ry. v. Beasley, 117 Md. 270, 83 Atl. 157, Judge Pearce said:

"It has been repeatedly held in this state that when one who can see and hear says he looked and listened, but did not see or hear an object, which if he had really looked and listened he must have seen or heard, such testimony is unworthy of consideration. B. & O. v. Roming, 96 Md. 80, 53 Atl. 672; Phillips v. W. & R. Ry. Co., 104 Md. 458, 85 Atl. 422, 10 Ann. Cas. 334. And this is now declared in 1 Elliot on Evidence, § 127, to be the general rule."

See, also, N. C. Ry. Co. v. Medairy, 86 Md. 168, 37 Atl. 796; N. C. Ry. Co. v. McMahon, 97 Md. 487, 55 Atl. 627; Sullivan v. Smith, 123 Md. 546, 91 Atl. 456. And the entire subject has been so thoroughly considered in the two recent cases of Glick v. C. & W. Elec. Ry. Co., 124 Md. 308, 92 Atl. 778, and Cullen v. N. Y. P. & N. R. R. Co., 127 Md. 651, 96 Atl. 809; that it does not seem necessary to further prolong this opinion, either by a re-statement of familiar rules or more elaborate citation of authorities.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

(123 Md. 685)

VANNORT v. COMMISSIONERS OF CHESTERTOWN. (No. 1.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 26, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 818(1) — PERSONAL INJURY — SIDEWALKS — NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In action by one injured through defect in sidewalk, evidence held sufficient to warrant a finding that municipality was negligent.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 768(3)—DEFECTS IN SIDEWALK—LIABILITY.

Where bricks in sidewalk were torn up, and a depression two inches deep was left for several weeks, and the municipality knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care should have known, of the defect, such municipality was liable to one injured by reason of the depression.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 821(24) — DEFECTS IN SIDEWALK—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

One using a sidewalk at night, when street lights were out, with knowledge that two weeks before the bricks had been torn up in the walk, leaving a depression two inches deep, was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in not carrying a lantern.

4. NEGLIGENCE — 136(26) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The question is not whether the court, if it was sitting as a jury, would find a plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence, but whether it can properly say that the evidence so conclusively shows such negligence that under the law plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 821(26) — INJURIES ON SIDEWALK — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action by person injured on sidewalk, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not using another street or crossing to the opposite side of the street held for the jury.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 817(1)—INJURIES ON SIDEWALK—NOTICE OF DEFECT.

In action for injuries on sidewalk, caused by removal of bricks, plaintiff must show that the municipality had notice, actual or constructive, of the defect in the walk.

7. NEGLIGENCE — 122(4) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—PROOF.

It is not necessary for defendant to offer evidence of contributory negligence, for, if plaintiff's evidence discloses it, defendant can rely on it before the jury, or to take case from the jury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Queen Anne's County; Albert Constable, W. H. Adkins, and Philemon B. Hopper, Judges.

Action by William J. Vannort against the Commissioners of Chestertown, a body corporate. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, URNER, and STOCKBRIDGE, JJ.

S. Scott Beck and William W. Beck, both of Chestertown (Thomas J. Keating, of Centerville, on the briefs), for appellant. John D. Urie, of Chestertown, for appellee.

BOYD, C. J. This is a suit to recover damages for injuries sustained by the appellant (plaintiff) by reason of the alleged negligence on the part of the defendant (appellee) in permitting a sidewalk in Chestertown to be out of repair and in an unsafe condition. The court rejected four prayers offered by the plaintiff and granted the defendant's first prayer, which instructed the jury that:

"There is no evidence in this case legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and their verdict must be for the defendant."

This is an appeal from a judgment entered on a verdict rendered in accordance with that instruction, and the only exception taken was to the granting of that prayer, and to the rejection of the plaintiff's prayers.

The plaintiff was 81 years of age at the time of the accident. About 7:30 o'clock on the evening of December 13, 1916, he was going from his home in Chestertown to the post office, and stepped in a hole in the sidewalk on Queen street, which caused him to fall, resulting in the injuries complained of. The pavement had been dug up for the purpose of laying a pipe to a property abutting on the sidewalk, and the earth had been put back in the place excavated, but the bricks had not been relaid, and the ground had apparently sunk. The plaintiff claimed that it had been in the condition complained of for several weeks; the witnesses differing as to the precise time, but most of them saying three or four weeks. In bad weather it became muddy, and some one had placed a few bricks in it for pedestrians to step on. The excavation was made through the entire width of the sidewalk, was from 2½ to 3 feet wide, and was several inches deep near the bricks, getting somewhat deeper towards the center. Several witnesses testified that it was a dangerous place. A bricklayer, who was employed by the contractor to replace the bricks after the pipe had been laid and the hole filled, gave as his reason for not having done so that the winter weather had interfered. He said that he measured the space the following spring, and the depth at the deepest point was about 2 inches; but he did not see it during the winter, and there was evidence that it had been filled up after the accident to the plaintiff. It had snowed some the day of the accident, and it was a stormy, dark night. The electric lights on that street were not burning, and there was no light, except such as came from the houses. The plaintiff testified that:

"This opening was covered with snow. It was soft and mushy. I trod on it, and when I found myself, I was thrown on my face on the pavement, partly unconscious."

In another place he said that he supposed his foot slipped and he fell. He laid on the pavement some time, and to use his language, "I scrambled up and steadied myself and walked to the doctor."

[1, 2] We will first consider the defendant's prayer. It does not in terms instruct the jury that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover by reason of his contributory negligence, but that is what was relied on at the argument. It could not have been granted on the ground that there was no legally sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, for the defect was such that, if the defendant knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of it in time to have remedied it before the accident, the municipality was liable (Keen v. Havre de Grace, 93 Md. 34, 48 Atl. 444), unless the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The appellee contends that the admission by the plaintiff when on the stand that he had known for two or three weeks that the hole was there, and that he stopped using that side of the street a week or ten days before the accident because he thought it was dangerous, when taken in connection with the age and physical condition of the plaintiff, the character of the night, and the fact that the evidence shows that he could easily have avoided the place where the injury occurred, either by taking another route or crossing over to the opposite side of Queen street, was sufficient to preclude a recovery, on the ground of contributory negligence. But while he was an old man, and had received a wound during the Civil War, and was injured in a collision between an automobile and a vehicle in which he was riding, his testimony shows that his sight was reasonably good before the accident, and he was apparently quite active for one of his age. He lived on the corner of Maple and Water streets. In going to the post office, he could either go a square on Water street to High street, and then on High (crossing Queen street) to the post office (which was on High street), or he could go a square on Maple to Queen, and then a square on Queen to High, and from there to the post office. He could have either crossed over to the north side of Queen, or could go on the south side from Maple to High, which he started to do. Upon being asked why he did not either cross to the north side of Queen street or use the other route on Water to High, etc., he testified that he supposed that the commissioners had by that time done their duty and repaired the sidewalk. This appears in his cross-examination:

"Q. Why, with this dark, stormy night, should you go on the only pavement that you say was dangerous that night? A. I didn't say it was dangerous that night. I say this: That I was under the impression that with three town commissioners sworn to do their duty that place was filled up. That was my belief, that that hole was filled up, and it was not dangerous then. Q. Why did you pick out a dark night, when you couldn't see, to find that out? A. I didn't pick it out; going up there might be a force of habit. Q. You got in the habit of going up that street? A. Sometimes I did. Q. A little while ago you said you quit going up there ten days before? A. I said that side. Q. You went up the north side, instead of the south side? A. Yes, sir. Q. This dark, stormy night, with no lights, you started up a street where you knew there was a dangerous spot a week or ten days before. A. Yes, sir. Q. Why did you do that? A. I was under the impression the commissioners had done their duty and had filled that hole up."

[3] It was suggested, rather than argued, that he should have taken a lantern, as the street lights were out, so he could see whether the way was safe; but the evidence shows that Queen street, with one exception, was the most frequented street in the town, and it could hardly be contended that it could be held as a matter of law to have been contributory negligence not to have taken a lantern at half past 7 o'clock in the evening to go over those two squares and part of another to the post office of a town of the size of Chestertown. The case of Commissioners of Allegany County v. Broadwaters, 69 Md. 533, 16 Atl. 223, would seem to be a sufficient answer to that contention. On pages 535 and 536 of 69 Md., on page 224 of 16 Atl., it is said:

"The second prayer of the defendants was also properly refused. It announces, as a legal principle controlling the case, that the plaintiff could not recover in the action if, knowing the condition of the road, he failed to carry a light. It has been decided in a number of cases that neither the failure to carry a light on a dark night by one acquainted with the road nor a knowledge of its defective condition is conclusive evidence of contributory negligence."

Nor could it be said that because there was another route he should have taken that, and, not having done so, cannot recover. In County Commissioners v. Gibson, 36 Md. 229, the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that if they found:

"That the alleged bad road, on which the plaintiff's wagon was broken, could have been avoided by using another road leading to said wharf, which was in good condition and but a short distance further, and had been used by the public for upwards of 20 years, then the plaintiff did not use due care and diligence and is not entitled to recover."

The court first said that the prayer was defective in not submitting to the jury to find knowledge on the part of the plaintiff that the one road was dangerous and the other safe, but added:

"Apart from this the prayer is radically wrong. It is no excuse for the defendants, if damage was sustained in the manner set out in the prayer of the plaintiff, to say that another road could have been traveled without accident."

In Charles County v. Mandanyohl, 93 Md. 150, 48 Atl. 1058, the court said:

"The road upon which the plaintiff was traveling was not impassable and not in such condition that accident must necessarily result from an attempt to use it. The plaintiff had a right to use it and was justified in so doing. All that the law exacted of him was that he should use it with due care; and if the jury found that he was so using it, and that he did not by his own negligence directly contribute to the happening of the accident that produced his injury while so using it, then, in the language of this court in the case of County Com'rs of Calvert Co. v. Gibson, 36 Md. 229, 'it is no excuse for the defendants * * * to say that another road could have been traveled without accident.'"

As to the knowledge of the plaintiff of the defect in the highway, the case of County Commissioners of Prince George's County v. Burgess, 61 Md. 29, 48 Am. Rep. 88, is applicable. It was there sought to shift the burden as to contributory negligence on the plaintiff because he had knowledge of a defect in the bridge. The court declined to adopt the defendant's contention, and, after referring to a number of cases, said:

"The extent to which the road or bridge is out of repair is always a material question, and upon that depends the effect of a plaintiff's knowledge upon his right to recover. If the defect was so extensive as to make any attempt to cross reckless, and the plaintiff so knew, and still endeavored to cross, we have said already that in such state of proof the case should be withdrawn from the jury; but ordinarily it would be a question for the jury under instructions respecting their duty if they found a particular state of facts. In this case the knowledge of the plaintiff was some evidence of negligence proper to go to the jury, to be considered by them in conjunction with the condition of the bridge of which he had knowledge, and to be found a bar only in case they found the bridge from the proof to be wholly unfit for use, and that he knew its true condition. His knowledge was not necessarily conclusive against his right to recover unless the defect was such that no reasonably prudent man would have ventured an attempt to cross."

[4, 5] The question is not whether the court, if it was sitting as a jury, would find the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence, but whether it can properly say that the evidence so conclusively shows such negligence that under the law he was not entitled to recover. It is not always easy to draw the line between such cases, but we are of the opinion that this case as presented by the record should have been submitted to the jury, and hence the court erred in granting the defendant's prayer. In addition to the authorities we have cited, the testimony of the plaintiff quoted above as to why he adopted the route he did was for the consideration of the jury. Such a defect in a sidewalk on a street used as this is might reasonably be presumed to be repaired in a week or ten days, for even if the brick could not be relaid, on account of the weather, a few cinders could be used, as was done after the accident.

[6] Of course, when the court granted the prayer of the defendant, it followed that those of the plaintiff would be rejected. As the case will be remanded for a new trial, it is proper to briefly refer to them. His first and second prayers were defective, in not submitting to the jury the question of notice, actual or constructive, to the defendant. Keen v. Havre de Grace, supra, Baltimore City v. Walker, 98 Md. 637, 57 Atl. 4 (which distinguishes that case from Keen's Case), Annapolis v. Stallings, 125 Md. 343, 93 Atl. 974, and Commissioners of Delmar v. Venable, 125

Md. 471, 94 Atl. 89, are amongst the many in this state on the subject.

[7] In view of our conclusion as to the defendant's prayer, we see no objection to the theory of the third prayer of the plaintiff, although the form of it might be changed to prevent misleading the jury. It is not necessary for the defendant to offer evidence of contributory negligence, for, if the plaintiff's evidence discloses it, the defendant can rely on it before the jury, and, of course, can do so in order to take the case from the jury, when the evidence justifies that action. The plaintiff's fourth prayer is practically the same as the one approved in Annapolis v. Stallings, supra, and would doubtless have been granted if the case had been submitted to the jury. It follows from what we have said that the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and new trial awarded; the appellee to pay the costs.

(133 Md. 19)

GUYER v. SNYDER et al. (No. 16.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland.
April 26, 1918.)

1. TRIAL. ¶191(4) — INSTRUCTIONS — ASSUMPTION OF FACTS.

In a claimant's suit, a prayer to rule as a matter of law that defendants had offered no evidence legally sufficient to show that the property levied on by the sheriff was the property of defendant, and therefore verdict must be for plaintiff, was properly refused, as assuming the fact of ownership.

2. EXECUTION. ¶194(1) — CLAIMANT'S SUIT — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a claimant's suit, after a levy by a sheriff, the claimant has the burden of establishing his claim of ownership of the property.

3. EXECUTION. ¶197 — CLAIMANT'S SUIT — INSTRUCTIONS.

In claimant's suit, prayer to rule that the mere possession of the property levied upon was no evidence of title was properly refused; such possession being at least sufficient evidence of title to cast on plaintiff the burden of showing a superior right.

4. TRIAL. ¶86 — RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE — REOPENING CAUSE.

In a claimant's suit, where plaintiff had omitted to prove the judgment, it was within the discretion of the court to reopen the case and permit the introduction of such testimony.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR. ¶970(4) — DISCRETION OF COURT — REOPENING CAUSE FOR FURTHER EVIDENCE.

Discretion of court in reopening cause for further evidence will not be reviewed on appeal.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR. ¶1050(1) — HARMLESS ERROR.

A party who could not have been prejudiced by the admission of testimony could not complain of its admission.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Frederick County; Glenn H. Worthington, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Claimant's suit to property levied on by writs of fieri facias by Albert S. Guyer against J. O. Snyder and others, as administrators of Daniel or David Long, deceased, William C. Roderick as sheriff and others.

Judgment on verdict for defendants, and claimant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

John L. G. Lee, of Baltimore (Albert S. Brown and Arthur D. Willard, both of Frederick, on the brief), for appellant. Beno S. Harp, of Frederick, for appellees.

BRISCOE, J. This is a claimant's suit, asserting title to certain personal property which had been seized and levied upon by the sheriff of Frederick county under and by virtue of ten writs of fieri facias issued out of the circuit court for Frederick county, at the suit of the plaintiffs in the judgment cases, against the goods and chattels, rights and credits, of Charles H. Goetz and Katie A. Goetz, the defendants in the cases, and two of the appellees, on the record, now before us. The property taken in execution consists of personal property and is appraised at the sum of $1,354. The claimant's petition is in the usual form, and asserts that the property levied upon is the property of the claimant, Albert S. Guyer, and was not the property of the defendant Goetz. The case was tried before a jury, in the circuit court for Frederick county, and from a judgment on a verdict in favor of the defendants, the claimant has appealed.

At the trial of the case, the plaintiff claimant reserved certain exceptions to the rulings of the court upon the prayers and to the admissibility of certain evidence which was permitted to be introduced after the conclusion of the evidence on both sides, but before the case was submitted to the jury, and these exceptions form the basis of the appeal.

The main contention upon the part of the appellant is that the court below committed an error in refusing to grant the plaintiff's first and second prayers, and for these reasons it is urged the judgment should be reversed. The plaintiff's first prayer asked the court to rule, as a matter of law, that the defendants in the case had offered no evidence legally sufficient to show that the property levied on by the sheriff belonged to and was the property of the defendant Charles H. Goetz, and therefore their verdict must be for the plaintiff for the property claimed. By the second prayer, the court was asked to instruct the jury that under the pleadings and evidence in the case the mere possession of the property levied upon by the plaintiff was no evidence of title to the property in the said Charles H. Goetz, at any time. There was no error in the refusal of the court to grant either of these prayers.

[1] The first prayer was clearly erroneous because it assumed the fact that the property levied on by the sheriff belonged to and was the property of the defendant, instead of leaving to the jury to find whether there was sufficient proof, in support of the claimant's contention, as to this fact.

[2] The burden of proof clearly rested upon the claimant to establish his claim and ownership of the property, and the court could not take away from the jury the finding of this fact. In Peterson v. Ellicott, 9 Md. 52, it is said there is no principle better established than that which denies to the court the right of assuming any fact, in aid of a prayer when the onus of proving such fact rests upon the party asking the instruction, no matter how strong and convincing his proof on the subject may be. And to the same effect are the cases of McCooker v. Banks, 84 Md. 292, 35 Atl. 935; Consolidated Ry. Co. v. O'Dea, 91 Md. 506, 46 Atl. 1000; Calvert Bank v. Katz, 102 Md. 58, 61 Atl. 411; Lemp Brewing Co. v. Mantz, 120 Md. 188, 87 Atl. 814.

[3] The second prayer was also properly refused. As offered, it asked the court to say to the jury that the mere possession of the property levied upon by the plaintiff was no evidence of title to the property in the defendant Goetz at any time. While the possession of the property by the defendant at the time it was levied upon by the sheriff was not conclusive evidence of ownership, it was at least, as said by this court in Lemp Brewing Co. v. Mantz, 120 Md. 184, 87 Atl. 814, some evidence of title, and sufficient to cast upon the plaintiff the burden of showing a superior right. In Greenleaf on Evidence, 84, it is said, as men generally own the personal property they possess, proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership. Cole v. Berry, 42 N. J. Law, 815, 36 Am. Rep. 511; Miller & Sons Piano Co. v. Parker, 155 Pa. 208, 26 Atl. 308, 35 Am. St. Rep. 873.

The second, third, and fourth exceptions bring up for review the rulings of the court in reopening the case for further testimony after the evidence on both sides had been closed and the prayers submitted, and in submission of proof of the judgments upon which the executions had been issued. The testimony that was offered and introduced, it will be seen, was clearly admissible, and was necessary for a proper consideration of the case.

[4, 5] The plaintiff had omitted to prove the judgments in the course of the trial, and it was entirely within the discretion of the court to grant the application and to permit the additional testimony to be introduced. In 2 Poe's Pleading and Practice, vol. 2, it is said that cases may arise when the purposes of justice may seem to require that the application ought not to be denied, and accordingly it is not a reversible error to permit the case to be reopened for such purpose. The matter rests in the discretion of the court, and from its action, granting or rejecting the application, no appeal will lie. State v. Duvall, 83 Md. 123, 84 Atl. 831; Dalley v. Grimes, 27 Md. 446.

[6] The nature and character of the evidence, set out in the exceptions and which was permitted to be introduced, could not have prejudiced the claimant's case, and he was not thereby injured by its admission.

Without stopping to review the testimony or stating it in detail, it is sufficient, to say the case was one that presented a state of facts for the consideration of the jury, and not for the court to decide or determine, as a matter of law.

Finding no reversible error, in the rulings of the court, the judgment will be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

(123 Md. 905)

STATE v. WINGERT et al.

WINGERT et al. v. WINGERT et al.

(Nos. 55, 56.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 11, 1918.)

1. TRUSTS \Leftrightarrow 83—RESULTING TRUSTS—EXCEPTION.

When price of land is paid by one person, and title is taken in name of another, there is presumption of fact that a resulting trust in favor of first arises, except when person purchases land and pays the consideration with his own money, but causes title to be placed in name of one for whom he is under a natural or moral obligation to provide.

2. TRUSTS \Leftrightarrow 62—RESULTING TRUSTS—INTENTION.

In all species of resulting trust, intention is an essential element.

3. TRUSTS \Leftrightarrow 89(1)—RESULTING TRUST—PURCHASES BY CHILDREN.

Evidence held to show that purchases of land by decedent's brothers and sisters were paid for by them, not with intention that they should be considered as gifts to the mother, in whose name title was placed, but with intention the equitable title should be in them, so that the mother held on resulting trust.

4. TENANCY IN COMMON \Leftrightarrow 29(2)—IMPROVEMENTS BY HEIRS.

If two of seven children erected houses and improvements on their father's land after his death in possession of fact that their brother owned as great an interest as either of them, improvements would inure to benefit of all the children.

5. STATES \Leftrightarrow 191(1)—SUIT TO ENJOIN COLLECTION—STATE AS PARTY.

Since Acts 1820, c. 210, repealing Acts 1788, c. 53, the state, without its consent, by reason of its prerogative as a sovereign, and on grounds of public policy, cannot be made party to suit, as suit by heirs to enjoin administrators from collecting and paying over to register of wills for state collateral inheritance tax due.

Appeals from Circuit Court, Washington County; M. L. Keedy, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Proceedings to fix and ascertain the collateral inheritance tax on the real estate of

P. Hager Wingert, deceased. From decree passed on bill filed to restrain the administrators, Henry F. Wingert and others, from enforcing the collection of the tax, also enjoining the State, the State and heirs at law, Martha A. Wingert and others, appeal. Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and cause remanded.

Argued before BOYD, O. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Ogle Marbury, Asst. Atty. Gen. (Albert O. Ritchie, Atty. Gen., and Omer T. Kaylor, State's Atty. for Washington County, of Hagerstown, on the brief), for the State. Harvey R. Spessard, of Hagerstown (Miller Wingert of Hagerstown, on the brief), for Martha A. Wingert and others.

CONSTABLE, J. The property about which these cross-appeals are concerned has been before this court on four former appeals, this being the fifth. The former cases are reported in 125 Md. 536, 94 Atl. 166, 127 Md. 80, 95 Atl. 1055, 129 Md. 28, 98 Atl. 224 and the last to be reported in 132 Md. —, 103 Atl. 437. The present appeals were taken from a decree passed upon a bill filed to restrain the administrators of P. Hager Wingert from enforcing the collection of collateral inheritance tax on certain real property mentioned in the bill in paragraphs 4 and 5 thereof.

The court below ordered that the administrators aforesaid and the state of Maryland show cause on or before a certain day why the injunction should not be issued, and pending the determination of the relief as prayed issued a preliminary injunction restraining the administrators from collecting or attempting to collect the tax. On the hearing the court decreed that as to the property described in the fourth paragraph the preliminary injunction be made perpetual upon the administrators and the state, but as to the property described in paragraph 5 decreed that the preliminary injunction be dissolved. An appeal was taken by the state from that part of the decree perpetually enjoining the state and the administrators from collecting the tax on the property mentioned in paragraph 4, and the heirs at law, excepting the administrators, appealed from the portion refusing the injunction as to the property mentioned in paragraph 5 of the bill.

The bill alleged that the administrators were attempting to collect collateral inheritance tax on certain property of which it was claimed that P. Hager Wingert died seised and possessed, intestate, unmarried, and without issue, leaving as his heirs at law six sisters and brothers. The property mentioned in the fourth paragraph of the bill, upon which it was claimed by the complainants that no tax was due or collectible, was property for which the record title stood in the name of Eliza J. Wingert, the mother of

P. Hager Wingert, and who had died intestate, leaving seven children, including P. Hager Wingert, surviving her as her only heirs at law, and to whom the property descended in equal shares if owned by her. The property mentioned in the fifth paragraph of the bill was property in which it was alleged there was no record title in P. Hager Wingert, nor in the name of any of the antecedents of P. Hager Wingert, through whom he could have inherited, nor any other title which would subject the property to the payment of the collateral inheritance tax.

The only question presented as to the properties in the fourth paragraph of the bill are whether Eliza J. Wingert at the time of her death absolutely owned the properties, or, although the legal title stood in her name, as a fact did she hold the same as trustee for her six children to the exclusion of P. Hager Wingert. If she owned the properties absolutely, or held them for the benefit of all her children, including P. Hager, then, of course, at her death intestate P. Hager was entitled to a one-seventh interest, and upon his death intestate, unmarried, and without issue, and seised and possessed of said interest in the properties, the collateral inheritance tax would be payable by his heirs at law.

It was upon the theory that Mrs. Wingert held the properties as trustee for the benefit of six of her children, not including P. Hager, and that he held no interest whatever in them, that the bill was filed.

[1] The real question then is: Did Mrs. Wingert hold the legal title to the properties with a resulting trust for the benefit of six of her children? Very recently has the question of what is essential to effect such a trust been so carefully and so exhaustively considered by this court, where, in the opinion by Judge Burke in Dixon v. Dixon, 123 Md. 45, 90 Atl. 846, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 616, practically all of the decisions of this court were reviewed, together with many other authorities, that we deem it idle to review them further than to state the conclusion as to the rules of law therein reached by this court:

"The general rule is well settled that, when the purchase price is paid by one person and the title is taken in the name of another, a resulting trust arises in favor of the person paying the purchase money, and the holder of the legal title becomes a trustee for him. There are, however, exceptions to this general rule: Thus, where a person purchases land and pays the consideration with his own money, but causes the title to be placed in the name of one to whom the purchaser is under a natural or moral obligation to provide, such as in the case of parent and child, or husband and wife, no presumption of a resulting trust will arise, but it will be regarded prima facie as a gift or an advancement for the benefit of the nominal purchaser. In either case the presumption is one of fact, and not of law, and the real intention of the parties to the transaction may be shown, and the court will give it effect if it does not contravene some rule of property or the policy of the law. If a husband purchases real estate in his own name with money furnished by his wife from her separate estate, a resulting trust in her favor arises by implication of law. The authorities are practically unanimous in support of these propositions."

P. Hager Wingert died in July, 1913. His father, Philip H. Wingert, had died in 1898. After the death of the father the children, other than P. Hager, began to purchase properties in the city of Hagerstown and farms in Washington county, until they had acquired six properties in all. P. Hager Wingert for a period of 30 years prior to and until his death had been a helpless invalid, unable to attend to business of any kind whatever and without knowledge of the purchases. Eliza J. Wingert was also a great invalid, and knew nothing of the purchases nor that the properties had been placed by the actual purchasers in her name for matter of convenience. The whole scheme of placing the properties in the name of the mother seems to have originated from the fact that one of the sons wished to buy a property adjoining a property which belonged to the estate of the father, Philip H. Wingert. There was a right of way over a portion of an alley between the properties, attached to the property wished to be acquired. One of the sons was about to take title to it in his own name when it was suggested that, if the titles were unified, the easement would be gotten rid of, and for that reason the title was taken in the name of Eliza J. Wingert. From this beginning it followed that all the titles were similarly placed.

It appeared from the testimony clearly that not only did Mrs. Wingert not know that the titles had been so placed, but that she received no benefits from the properties by way of rents, etc., and in fact claimed none. The purchase money for the same, the testimony plainly shows—the canceled checks for the purchase money being produced—was furnished by the children, other than P. Hager Wingert. It is true that some of the checks were drawn upon the bank account standing in the name of Philip H. Wingert's heirs, and although it is admitted that P. Hager Wingert had an interest in this fund, yet it is proven that any money that was his under these payments was returned to his estate through an agreement made with the state's attorney for Washington county, and subjected to the collateral inheritance tax. But, as we have said, he knew nothing of the purchases, and, of course, could not have known of the placing of the titles in the name of his mother.

[2] In all species of resulting trusts, intention is an essential element. Walsh v. McBride, 72 Md. 45, 19 Atl. 4.

[3] Without discussing in detail the purchase of each separate property, we are satisfied that the proof is clear and convincing that these purchases were made and paid for by the six sons and daughters, not with any intention upon their part that they should be considered as advancements or gifts, but with the intention that the equitable title should be in them.

Being of the opinion that P. Hager Wingert had no interest in the properties, it follows that no collateral inheritance tax could be collected from the holders of the Wingert heirs.

[4] In reference to the property mentioned in the fifth paragraph of the bill, we have reached a contrary conclusion. The testimony as to it shows that there is no record title to it in any of the Wingerts, but it does appear that the elder Wingert took possession of and occupied this property by adverse possession for at least 40 years, and that upon his death it descended through this title to his seven sons and daughters, and that up to the present they have continued to so hold it. Prior to the death of the father and afterward two of the sons erected, without his knowledge, houses upon this property, paying for a portion of the materials out of their father's income. There can be no question that, if these sons erected these houses and improvements in full possession of the facts that P. Hager Wingert owned as great an interest as either of them in the land, the improvements would inure to the benefits of all the owners of the fee. Therefore the one-seventh interest P. Hager Wingert had in this property would descend to his heirs at law, and they should pay the collateral inheritance tax on the appraised one-seventh value of the property.

[5] By section 132 of article 81 of the Code it is made the duty of every administrator or executor to collect and pay over to the register of wills, for the use of the state, the collateral inheritance tax due. The bill in this case evidently proceeded upon this theory, for the only prayer of the bill was to enjoin the administrators from collecting the tax. They did, however, join the state as a party defendant. The lower court in granting the preliminary injunction only enjoined the administrators, but did require the state to show cause why the injunction should not be issued. After the hearing, the court, in its decree, did enjoin both the administrators and the state from collecting the tax on the properties described in paragraph 4 of the bill. Therefore, although, as we have said above in this opinion, the tax was not payable on the properties, nevertheless it was not proper to enjoin the state nor to make it a party defendant.

The state, without its consent, cannot be made a party to a suit, by reason of its prerogative as a sovereign and on grounds of public policy, since Acts 1820, c. 210, which repealed Acts 1786, c. 53. State v. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 34 Md. 344. The administrators will be protected from any action taken against them by the state in the future for failure to collect the tax on properties in paragraph 4 by reason of the injunction issued against them, but the injunction against the state must be revoked.

Decree affirmed in part, and reversed in part, and cause remanded for further proceedings; the costs to be paid out of the estate of P. Hager Wingert.

(129 Md. 594)

AMERICAN COLONIZATION SOC. v. LATROBE et al. (two cases).

STATE v. AMERICAN COLONIZATION SOC. et al. (two cases).

(Nos. 40-43.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)

1. ESCHEAT \S 4—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ESCHEAT.

Where after death of grantor trust is declared void as perpetuity, the trustee having legal title and being competent to hold land, and the grantor having died leaving a will and heirs, the land does not escheat to the state.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 150(1)—RIGHT TO APPEAL—INTEREST IN SUBJECT-MATTER.

Where it has been held that land did not escheat to state, an appeal by the state complaining of the distribution account of the rent and profits from the land will be dismissed; the state having no interest in the land.

3. TRUSTS \S 135—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATE OF TRUSTEE.

Where land is conveyed to trustees who were directed to pay the net rent to the beneficiary, and who, as trustees, were required to collect rent, attend to taxes, insurance, repairs, and make permanent improvements in connection with care of five or six warehouses, the legal title vested in trustees, and will not be transferred to beneficiary; such having been intention of grantor.

4. TRUSTS \S 81½—INVALIDITY OF TRUST—ESTATE OF TRUSTEE.

Where a deed is executed to trustees and after death of grantor the trust is declared void, the invalidity of the trust will not affect the legal estate vested in the trustees.

5. TRUSTS \S 315(3)—COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEES.

Where for a number of years trustees sent beneficiary statement showing charge of 10 per cent. commission, beneficiary by failing to object to such commission and by failing to apply for statement of account in court is estopped from objecting thereto when statement is rendered to court.

6. TRUSTS \S 227—ACCOUNTING—COUNSEL FEES.

The allowance by court of $4,000 counsel fees held no abuse of discretion where services rendered involved two hearings before circuit court and the argument of two appeals before Court of Appeals.

Appeals from Circuit Court of Baltimore City; H. Arthur Stump, Judge.

Actions by the American Colonization Society against Ferd. C. Latrobe, Jr., and others, and proceedings by the State of Maryland against the American Colonization Society and others. In former action plaintiff appeals from order sustaining defendants' demurrer and dismissing petition and from order overruling exceptions to items in an account. In latter action State appeals from order sustaining demurrer to its petition and from order overruling exceptions filed to an account. Appeal from order last mentioned dismissed. Other orders appealed from affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

William G. Johnson, of Washington, D. C., and D. K. Este Flaheer, of Baltimore, for American Colonization Soc. Philip B. Perlman and Ogle Marbury, Asst. Attys. Gen. (Albert C. Ritchie, Atty. Gen., on the brief), for the State. Eugene O'Dunne, of Baltimore, for trustees.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. This case has been so recently before this court in two previous appeals that any recital of the facts out of which it arises is unnecessary. All of the essential facts will be found in the very full opinion filed in the case of American Colonization Society v. Robert Soulsby et al., 129 Md. 605, 99 Atl. 944, L. R. A. 1917C, 937, and the second of which appeals, decided less than a year ago will be found in full in the Daily Record of July 21, 1917.

The present record contains four separate and distinct appeals, all of which raise questions of law rather than questions of fact, so that a brief statement will suffice, as these are successively considered.

The appeals numbered respectively 41 and 43 are appeals by the state of Maryland, the one from an order of court sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed on behalf of the state by which it was sought to have the property involved in the case declared escheated to the state, as the result of the decision in this court in the case in 129 Md., and the second on the appeals now to be considered is from the action of the circuit court in overruling the exceptions filed on behalf of the state to the auditor's account, by which a balance of money in the hands of the trustees was audited to be paid to the American Colonization Society. It will tend to simplify the case now before the court to dispose of these two appeals before considering the others.

As appears from the prior history of this litigation, Caroline Donovan executed a deed to certain named trustees of fee simple property in the city of Baltimore for purposes in that deed fully set forth. She also executed a will disposing of the property of which she died seised and possessed. Long after the execution of the deed, and after her death, proceedings were instituted by her heirs to have the deed of trust set aside because by the terms of that deed it was claimed that the instrument violated the rule of perpetuities.

By the opinion of Judge Pattison, speaking for this court, in the case of 129 Md., that contention was sustained, and the deed set aside, but a recovery of the property was refused to the heirs, because of the uninterrupted adverse possession of the trustees for a period in excess of 20 years. The state of Maryland then intervened, and by its petition sought to have the property in question declared escheated to the state. This petition was demurred to, the demurrer sustained, and petition dismissed, and this presents the question involved in the appeal in No. 41.

A number of cases have been cited by the Assistant Attorney General to support the state's contention, but they are for the most part without any application in the present instance, for the reason that they are based on statutes adopted in the states where those cases have arisen, and the courts were called on to deal with a claimed escheat upon the basis of a proper interpretation of the statute. In this state there is practically no statute which is applicable, the section in article 57 of the Code having to do mainly with a question of limitations, and the provisions contained in article 93 relating only to personal property. But there have been numerous adjudicated cases in this state dealing with the subject of escheat, wherein the subject has been fully considered. These are to be found as early as Casey v. Inloes, 1 Gill, 430, 39 Am. Dec. 658, and Hammend's Lessee v. Inloes, 4 Md. 133, Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. 443, and as late as the case of the George's Creek Co. in Liquidation, 125 Md. 595, 94 Atl. 209.

The general doctrine which has become the accepted rule of law in this state is that laid down in the case of the Rockhill College v. Jones, 47 Md. 17, and a careful examination of the cases discloses insurmountable obstacles against any recovery by the state of the property conveyed by Mrs. Donovan to her trustees, for two reasons: In the first place she did not die without heirs; and, in the second place, she did leave a will by which all of the rest and residue of her estate was devised and bequeathed.

The rule of escheat in this state is approximately that of the common law, and is clearly set out in 10 R. C. L. 604, in part as follows:

"In a strict sense escheat at common law is applicable only to that which can be the subject of tenure, for the reason that it represents the reversionary interest or right of the lord to take for want of a tenant. * * * In a trust estate the trustee holds the legal title, and is competent to perform the necessary services; therefore, upon the death of the cestui que trust intestate and without heirs, the trustee takes the absolute title clear of the trust, and this right to take for his own use extends to the heir of the trustee."

[1] This summary is a deduction from the English cases upon the subject, and in its concluding part is not entirely in harmony with the rule as recognized in this state in Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. 443. It therefore follows that under the common law the trustees were competent to receive and hold the property as against the state, because they could render the service required by the feudal principle of tenure; that Caroline Donovan left heirs and did not die intestate, and therefore the essential requirements for a reversion of the property to the state of Maryland by way of escheat are lacking in this case, and the order appealed from must in this particular be affirmed.

[2] Having reached the conclusion that the property cannot be escheated to the state, it necessarily follows that the state has no present interest therein, and, not having a present interest in the property, it has no standing to object to the distribution account disposing of the money now in the hands of the trustees. Wagner v. Freeny, 123 Md. 24, 90 Atl. 774, and cases there cited. The appeal in No. 43 therefore should be dismissed.

The appeal numbered 40 is the one which presents the greatest difficulty. This is the appeal of the American Colonization Society against the trustees from the action of the court in sustaining a demurrer of the trustees to a petition of the appellant, and dismissing that petition.

The attitude of the Colonization Society at this point is somewhat anomalous. For a long series of years the American Colonization Society had made no claim to any interest in the property involved in this litigation, other than that of a beneficial use, as the cestui que trust, under the terms of the deed of Mrs. Donovan. As such it had received quarterly remittances from the trustees named in Mrs. Donovan's deed, and their successors, without any question of any character, so far as is disclosed by the records in the several appeals, which have come to this court.

When the provisions of that deed were declared void, the attitude of the Colonization Society immediately changed, and the claim now put forth in its behalf is that the trustees named by Mrs. Donovan were its agents; that the property belonged to it, or at any rate that there was only a bare legal title in the trustee, which the society at its will and pleasure is entitled to have transferred to it, working a merger of the legal and beneficial title; that the trust upon which the property was held involved no active duties to be performed on the part of the trustees, and for that reason as well the trustees should be required to transfer to the society the legal title held by them. As a statement of an abstract legal principle, without reference to the facts of a particular case, there is ample law to support most of the argument advanced on behalf of the Colonization Society.

The difficulty arises, however, when an attempt is made to apply these principles to the facts, as they have developed and exist in the present case. In most instances in interpreting a trust courts endeavor to seek out the intent of the creator of the trust, and, when it is ascertained, to give effect to it as far as is compatible with the language employed.

There can, of course, be no pretense that it was the purpose of Mrs. Donovan to transfer the entire corpus of the estate conveyed by her to the American Colonization Society. If that had been her intent, it would have been a far simpler matter to accomplish than to endeavor to create a trust of the character which she did. So far as any intent upon her part was concerned, it is manifest that what she had in mind was the creation of a legal estate, and a beneficial estate in the same property, but without their coalescing. But Mrs. Donovan's purpose is not now the controlling element involved in this proceeding. This court has already declared her deed to be void because transgressing a fundamental rule of the policy of this state. From this it follows that the petitioner, the American Colonization Society, can gain no assistance whatever from the fact that it was named as beneficiary in the Donovan deed, nor any right accrue to it, legal or equitable, because of that deed, and therefore the present contention of the society, carried to its logical result, would exclude the American Colonization Society from any benefit whatever because of the deed of Mrs. Donovan to Latrobe and Harvey as trustees.

The deed did convey to them a legal estate. The vice of the deed lay rather in the beneficial interest sought to be created under it. Messrs. Latrobe and Harvey were not trustees by virtue of any appointment of the American Colonization Society. If they had been, there would have been more ground for the present contention of that society. The trustees were not in any proper sense the agents of the society. They derived their appointment, their power with regard to the property, their authority for its management, from Caroline Donovan, not from the society. Hence their possession of the premises was in no manner the possession of the petitioning society. So far as they were accountable, their accountability was to the court or courts exercising equity jurisdiction in the city of Baltimore, an entirely different matter from what would have been the case had they derived their powers from, and been made accountable to, the American Colonization Society.

The cases of Lee v. O'Donnell, 95 Md. 538, 52 Atl. 979, and Potomac Lodge v. Miller, 118 Md. 417, 84 Atl. 554, relied on by the petitioner, both turned on the intent of the creator of the trust, which as already stated, cannot be given controlling effect in the present case. The first of these two cases leads up, however, to the other contention of the petitioner, that the estate of the trustees is a bare legal title, without active duties to be performed, and that the cestui que trust, or individual or corporation which had received the benefit of the trust, is entitled to a transfer of the legal title.

In the case of Lee v. O'Donnell this was held to be true, for the reason that the sole duty in that case to be performed was the selection of a house, and, when selected, the house was to vest in fee in the children of the testator. The trustee was not instructed to rent the property, or told what use should be made of it.

There is a long line of cases in this state dealing with the question of coalescing of legal and equitable estates, by reason of no active duties to be performed by the trustees. Warner v. Sprigg, 62 Md. 14, Thompson v. Ballard, 70 Md. 10, 16 Atl. 378, Brillhart v. Mish, 99 Md. 447, 58 Atl. 28, Raffel v. Safe Dep. & Tr. Co., 100 Md. 141, 59 Atl. 702, and In re Hagerstown Trust Co., 119 Md. 224, 86 Atl. 982, are but illustrations of them.

[3] The case of Johnson v. Safe Dep. & Tr. Co., 79 Md. 18, 28 Atl. 890, in which the opinion was prepared by the late Chief Judge McSherry, was a case in which under the terms of a will there were created coextensive legal and equitable estates for the benefit of the testator's daughters. By the terms of the will the trustees were authorized to hold the property and pay the rents and profits thereof equally to and for the benefit and use of the daughters. In that case the question of the intent of the testator was largely controlling of the conclusion reached. If now in the present case we could have regard to the intent of Mrs. Donovan, it will be noted that the trustees were directed to pay the net rents. The use of this expression "net rents" would carry with it as a necessary implication that it was the purpose of the grantor that the trustees should continue to hold the legal title of the property, attend to its upkeep, and pay over the income which remained, and that is exactly what the trustees in this case did. The duties performed by them cannot be characterized as nominal merely. They involved the rental of some five or six warehouses, attending to the taxes, insurance, repairs, the installation of an elevator, the rebuilding of a front wall, and other similar duties which were more than mere incidental repairs, and went to the permanent betterment of the property, and was reflected by the increase in the rentals derived by them. In so far as the contention made in the petition now under consideration rests upon the lack of active duties to be performed, it must fail.

[4] It is presented for the consideration of the court that, since the deed of Caroline Donovan has been declared null and void, because offending the rule against perpetuities, the legal estate, as well as the beneficial, must fail. Such a proposition is unsupported by the authorities in this state. Grove v. Congregation of Disciples of Jesus Christ, 33 Md. 451; Gump v. Sibley, 79 Md. 165, 28 Atl. 977; Trustees of Zion Church v. Hilken, 84 Md. 170, 35 Atl. 9; Regents v. Calvary

Church, 104 Md. 635, 65 Atl. 398; Dickerson v. Kirk, 105 Md. 638, 66 Atl. 494; Mills v. Zion Chapel, 119 Md. 510, 87 Atl. 257; Novak v. Trustees of Orphans' Home, 123 Md. 161, 90 Atl. 997, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1067. In each of the cases mentioned a conveyance of certain property had been held void; nevertheless the legal title in the trustees was sustained, for the reason stated in Gump v. Sibley, supra, that:

"The deed, even if void, could not be less than color of title, and the entry under it would constitute adverse possession to the extent of the boundaries contained in it; and a continuance of this possession for 20 years would perfect the title against all persons not under legal disabilities."

In all of these cases the court had to deal with the question of the legal title, and confirmed it as being in the trustees, without reference to the effect on the equitable or beneficial title. Following these cases, therefore it is clear that the title of the trustees to these several lots of ground and improvements is unassailable as against all persons not under legal disability.

It follows from what has been said that the order of the circuit court sustaining the demurrer to the petition of the American Colonization Society, to require a transfer to it of the legal title, and dismissing that petition will be affirmed.

No. 42. This appeal is from the action of the court overruling the exceptions of the Colonization Society to certain items appearing in the auditor's account. The important ones to consider are the objections now made to the allowance to the trustees of commissions at the rate of 10 per cent. on $85,520.51; to the allowance to the attorneys for the trustees of a fee of $4,000; and to the amount audited, at the suggestion of the counsel for the trustees, to the American Colonization Society, $2,074.26. The account to which these objections are made covers a period of 13 years, a fact which must be taken into consideration in passing upon these exceptions.

The appellant relies apparently for its objection to the commissions on the case of Abell v. Brady, 79 Md. 94, 28 Atl. 817. The facts of that case were quite different from those presented in this record. It appeared there that the estate upon which the trustees were to receive commissions was in receipt of an annual income of approximately $160,000. In this case the commissions asked, and which by the action of the court were allowed, were at about the rate of $600 per annum during the period covered by the account, or a difference between $8,000 and $600 per annum, as commissions to the trustees for the service performed by them. The opinion of Chief Judge Robinson in the Brady Case held, not as a question of law, but as a question of fact, that considering the size of the annual income of the estate, 5 per cent. thereon was a fair commission to be paid to the two trustees. In so finding he used this language:

"It is a matter largely in the discretion of the court, its reason and judgment, taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances surrounding the trust."

In other cases it has been held that 6 per cent., 8 per cent., and even 10 per cent. was not an unreasonable compensation to trustees for the services performed.

[8] When, how, or by whom a rate of 10 per cent. as commissions to the trustees was first established in this case does not appear, but it is shown that quarterly statements of account have been regularly rendered by the trustees to the American Colonization Society, in which commissions were deducted at the present proposed rate, and no objection has been raised to such allowance by the Colonization Society, or any one representing it, until the statement of the auditor's account herein. The trustees may have been lax in permitting so long a period as 13 years to elapse without a statement of account in the court, but it was within the power of the Colonization Society at any time during that period, by proper application, to have had the trustees render to the court a statement of account. This, however, they did not do, nor even raise an objection to this allowance when it was brought to its attention each quarter, by the accounts furnished by the trustees. It would be most inequitable now to permit it to be heard to object, when by a long continuous course of conduct the trustees had every reason to believe that such an allowance was entirely acceptable to the Colonization Society. No better condition of facts could be presented than is done by this record for the application of the maxim, "Vigilantibus non dormientibus leges subveniunt."

It will not do to take the total commissions allowed for a period of 13 years, and then, because they seem large, to say that the charge is an improper one, when the services which have been rendered have extended over the same period of time, and involved permanent betterments to the property, which have been paid out of the income instead of the corpus, with a permanent benefit to the estate and a resultant increase of the annual revenue. During the period covered by the account there has been paid to the American Colonization Society, in the quarterly payments mentioned, $41,006.89, or, if we add to this the sum now audited to it by the present account, the total payments to that society will be $43,081.15.

The imputation in the brief of the exceptant of the great disproportion between the amount of the rents collected and the amounts paid over to the society is hardly warranted by the facts of the case. Thus no account is taken of $15,528.08 paid in taxes and assessed street benefits, or of $5,200.50 paid for insurance, or of $1,002.28 paid for water rent, or $2,273.85 paid for the permanent betterments, which total $24,004.11; and if there then be added to this sum the amount paid to and audited to the society there has been expended from the $85,520.51 of collections $67,085.26, which leaves a difference of $18,435.25, used in making of current repairs on the several warehouses during a period of 13 years, the payment of commissions and counsel fees to which the estate has been subjected. When all of these elements are taken into consideration, as was pointed out in the case of Abell v. Brady, supra, should be done, the allowance for the commissions is not so extravagant that this court can say that the circuit court of Baltimore city abused its discretion in overruling the exceptions taken upon this ground.

The counsel fee, which forms another ground of exception, was of $4,000. Some comparatively recent cases have dealt directly with allowances of counsel fees under somewhat similar circumstances, and but little need be said beyond referring to them. See Griffith v. Dale, 109 Md. 700, 72 Atl. 471, and Taylor v. Denny, 118 Md. 124, 84 Atl. 369. In the last of these cases Judge Boyd reviews the adjudicated cases in this state upon the subject with his accustomed thoroughness and acumen, and after quoting at considerable length from the Griffith v. Dale Case he says:

"It may be stated as a general proposition that the right of a trustee to employ counsel and pay him out of the trust fund is thoroughly established, when the court can see that it is necessary for the proper administration of the trust for the trustee to have legal advice or the aid of an attorney. Of course, that right includes cases where it is necessary, or proper, for the trustees to be represented in court in the defense of the estate, or some part of it."

Counsel for the society lay special emphasis upon the fact that, when the petition was filed on behalf of the Donovan heirs, they offered the trustees to undertake the conduct of the case and bear all the expenses, and that therefore it was unnecessary for the trustees to be represented by counsel, and at all events it was unnecessary for them to be so represented upon the appeals which were taken to this court. While conceding the value of the services rendered by the counsel to the trustees, the intimation is that the trustees should regard the employment as in the nature of a luxury, to be paid for out of the private purse of the trustees, and not chargeable against the income or corpus of the estate in their hands. It must be borne in mind in considering this exception that the employment of counsel and the taking of an appeal by the trustees had received antecedent authorization by the court in which jurisdiction was being exercised over the fund.

In their petition the heirs of Mrs. Donovan endeavored to entirely break down and destroy the trust which she had attempted to create, to dispossess the trustees, and to secure to themselves the property which had been conveyed by her deed. Under such circumstances it was not only proper but the plain duty of the trustees to avail themselves of apt legal means to sustain the then existing trust. Not to have done so would have been a dereliction of duty upon their part. It was not merely a contest between two parties to settle their rights inter sese, but one which had for its object the annihilation of the trust in toto. Nor at that time was it possible for the trustees to know what might be the attitude of persons claiming to be interested in the property, nor even who might ultimately be held entitled to the property. Such a claim might even extend, as does that of the present petitioner, the American Colonization Society, to the destruction of the trust, and the appropriation, not merely of the income of the estate, but the corpus as well. As to all parties, therefore, the trustees had a clear duty to perform, which could only be performed by the aid of able and experienced counsel.

The case of Warburton v. Robinson, 118 Md. 24, 77 Atl. 127, cited by the appellant in this appeal, is hardly in point, as the appeal in that case was dismissed for technical reasons, incident to the delay in the transmission of the record, and the facts disclosed in the record were entirely dissimilar from those appearing in this case.

No more delicate duty is ever presented to a court to perform than the determination of what is a reasonable counsel fee to be allowed. Much necessarily depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. In this case we have the certificates of four members of the bar of recognized ability and high standing as to the proper fee to be allowed. As opposed to this is an attempt to invoke a rule of the Baltimore city court to the effect that, the case having been set for hearing on bill and answer, the allegations of the answer, not being controverted by evidence, are to be taken as true, and for that reason any claim for a fee chargeable against the fund in the hands of the trustees should be disallowed. This objection is entirely technical.

[6] Some of the evidence taken at the hearing was intended to support the appellant's contention that it, through its chosen attorneys, took the lead in the contest. But it is not perceived how any injury will be done to either party by taking the record as it is, and considering both the testimony and the certificate of counsel. The services rendered involved at least two hearings, one of them quite lengthy, before the circuit court, and the argument of two appeals in this court. While the fee allowed seems large, its reasonableness and propriety must depend upon the amount of labor which the conduct of the litigation in which the services were rendered entailed. As compared with the allowances which have been approved in the Heating Co. v. Whitelock, 120 Md. 408, 87 Atl. 820, Title Co. v. Burdette, 104 Md. 671, 65 Atl. 341, and the case of Friedenwald v. Burke, 123 Md. 511, 91 Atl. 461, the allowance of the fee was not so excessive as to amount to an abuse of the discretion which rests with the trial court in such cases.

The order from which this appeal is taken will accordingly be affirmed.

Objection was made by the counsel for the American Colonization Society to the incorporation into the record in this case of certain papers. There is but one of those papers mentioned in the memorandum which was in fact so incorporated, namely, the colloquy between counsel and the court, which is attached to and preceded the testimony included in the record. It is impossible to accept the view presented by the solicitor for the American Colonization Society. The evident purpose of the colloquy was to clarify and narrow, as closely as possible, the issues to be presented to the court. That was in large measure accomplished, and has been of most material assistance to the court in disposing of the present appeal. The cost of its inclusion will therefore be treated as part of the costs of these cases.

Orders appealed from affirmed in Nos. 40, 41, and 42, and appeal in No. 43 dismissed; the costs to be paid by the trustees out of the income now in their hands.

(79 N. H. 63)

CROWTHER v. WHITE MOUNTAIN FREEZER CO.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Hillsborough. June 29, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶286(10)—INJURY TO SERVANT—DEFECTIVE SAWING MACHINE—JURY QUESTION.

In employe's action for negligence, the question of whether sawing machine on which employe worked was defective at time of injury was for jury, where jury had viewed machine in same condition as at time of injury.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶980(1)—REVIEW—VERDICT.

In reviewing sufficiency of evidence to support a verdict for plaintiff, evidence will be construed most favorably for the plaintiff.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶278(5) — INJURY TO SERVANT — DEFECTIVE MACHINE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In employe's action for injuries caused by defective sawing machine, evidence held sufficient to support jury finding that machine was defective at time of injury.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1050(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In employe's action for injuries caused by defective sawing machine, on which two saws were used, testimony that one saw ran well and the other badly was harmless, where witnesses could not remember which saw was on machine on day of accident.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Hillsborough County; Marble, Judge.

Action by William Crowther against the White Mountain Freezer Company. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Case for negligence, brought under the Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation Act (Laws 1911, c. 163), to recover damages for injuries received while splitting blocks on a splitting saw in defendant's mill. The defendant had not accepted the provisions of the act. Trial by jury, and verdict for the plaintiff. The jury took a view of the sawing machine on which the plaintiff was injured. The plaintiff's claim is based upon lack of proper instructions and that the sawing machine upon which he worked was defective. The defendant excepted to the submission to the jury of the latter question, and to the portion of the charge relating thereto. The defendant excepted to evidence of the plaintiff referring to the defective condition of the sawing machine.

Doyle & Lucier, of Nashua (A. J. Lucier, of Nashua, orally), for plaintiff. Streeter, Demond, Woodworth & Sulloway, of Concord (Jonathan Piper, of Concord, orally), for defendant.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant's exceptions to the action of the court in submitting to the jury the issue as to whether the sawing machine was defective, and to the charge of the court relating thereto, raise the questions for determination whether there was any evidence upon which the jury could find that the machine was defective, and, if so, did that defect cause or contribute to cause the accident? It is claimed by the plaintiff that the saw arbor of the sawing machine at the time of the accident was so loose in its bearings that the saw did not run true and even, but wobbled to such an extent as to render it defective, and that such defect was instrumental in causing his injury.

The evidence of the officers of the defendant showed that an eighth of an inch play of the saw arbor in its bearings was too much; that with such an amount of play the saw would not go so steady and would be more likely to bind. While they did not admit that the saw wobbled, the character of their testimony was such that it had some tendency to prove that it did. At the view of the machine taken by the jury, it appeared that the saw arbor was so loose that it could be lifted up in its bearings until it rattled up and down. The machine was in the same condition at the time of the accident as it was when the view was taken. The plaintiff testified that he was sawing a block eight inches in length, holding it in a vertical position, and that the accident occurred as follows:

"Q. Well, tell the jury what happened. A. Why, I just pushed the block up to the saw, when there was a jarring sound, and the saw stopped, and then started again, and all I could see was blood. Q. State whether or not the saw did anything to that block that you were holding, except to cut it. A. Why, I have an idea that it must have twitched it into the saw—must have twitched it around into the saw."

It is doubtful if the jury could find affirmatively on the issues here presented upon the oral evidence in the case, but that supplemented by the evidence furnished at the view might warrant such a finding.

[1] The defendant contends that the jury would not have sufficient knowledge, without expert testimony, to determine that the sawing machine was defective, or that a defect such as claimed would contribute to cause the accident. We do not think this contention is tenable. Sawing machines are not intricate or complicated in their construction or operation, and they are in common use in nearly every community. The jury, composed of intelligent, experienced men taken from the ordinary walks of life, and engaged in various pursuits, would have a general knowledge of the use and operation of sawing machines. The view may have furnished a vital part of the evidence, and apparently did. This court does not know how strong and convincing that evidence was; but the jury were fully informed of its character, and therefore this is peculiarly a case where their judgment and experience should be invoked to determine the issues involved. Lyman v. Railroad, 66 N. H. 200, 20 Atl. 976, 11 L. R. A. 364; Whitcher v. Railroad, 70 N. H. 242, 248, 46 Atl. 740.

[2-4] Construing the evidence most favorably for the plaintiff (Lyman v. Railroad, supra) it cannot be said that there was no evidence upon which the jury could find for the plaintiff. Two of the men employed, the defendant's employes who worked on the saw were called by the plaintiff and allowed to testify. Their testimony, in substance, was that there were two saws used upon the sawing machine, one being used while the other was sharpened, that one of them ran well and the other badly and that the one which run badly would bind and wobble. But they could not remember which saw was on the machine on the day of the accident. One of them, however, stated that he sawed a few blocks that day, and that the saw did not bind, and he had no trouble with it then. To this evidence the defendant excepted. The evidence of one of these witnesses was immaterial for any purpose. It was clear that he did not remember which saw was on the machine on the day of the accident, and he made no statement that would warrant any inference as to whether the saw that run well or badly was in use. His evidence was valueless for either party. The testimony of the other witness was immaterial, so far as furnishing any proof that would aid the plaintiff in securing a verdict. On the other hand, it did tend to prove, as claimed by the defendant in its brief, that the saw which run well was on the machine at the time of the accident. It cannot be asserted that this evidence was prejudicial to the defendant, for it furnished some proof to sustain its claim, and none to support that of the plaintiff. This exception does not afford any ground for disturbing the verdict. Parsons v. Wentworth, 73 N. H. 122, 59 Atl. 623; Bunker v. Manchester Real Estate & Mfg. Co., 75 N. H. 131, 71 Atl. 866; Proctor v. Blanchard, 75 N. H. 186, 72 Atl. 210.

An exception of the defendant bearing upon the rights of the plaintiff, if he were found to be a volunteer at the work he was engaged in at the time of the accident, has not been referred to in the defendant's brief or oral argument, and is not understood to be relied upon.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 59)

BARRETTE v. CASUALTY CO. OF AMERICA et al.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Hillsborough. June 29, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE §—128(1) — PRELIMINARY INSURANCE—"COVER."

Where employer, applying for employers' liability insurance, was advised by insurer's authorized general agent that insurer would "cover" him, he was insured against liability for accidents to his employes for a time at least; for by the term "cover" it was intended that the company would protect the applicant and insure him against liability to his employes for all injuries they might sustain which were caused by the usual and ordinary risks of the business named in the application unless and until the company notified him that it declined to underwrite them.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Cover.]

2. INSURANCE §—148—OPERATION OF POLICY —ESTOPPEL.

Where, after applicant for employers' liability insurance had been advised by insurer that it would "cover" him, the insurer's local agent, in delivering the policy, gave insured to understand that the policy protected him from all liability to employes, and insured did not read the policy at that time, insurer was estopped, when an employe was killed riding on a material hoist, an ordinary risk of insured's business, to set up that the policy in fact excepted risks of such character.

Transferred from Superior Court, Hillsborough County; Allen, Judge.

Bill in equity by Louise Barrette, administratrix, against the Casualty Company of America and another. Decrees in favor of plaintiff and defendant Dubray against the Casualty Company, and the Casualty Company excepted. Transferred from superior court. Exceptions overruled.

Bill in equity. Hearing by the court. Decrees for the plaintiff and for the defendant Dubray. The plaintiff's intestate, who was one of Dubray's employes was killed October 2, 1915, by the fall of a hoist or elevator on which he was riding, and she has recovered a judgment against him, which she is seeking to enforce against the defendant company in this proceeding. Dubray applied to the company for insurance against liability to his employes in April, 1915; but the policy, which was issued a month later, excepted risks like the one in question from its operation. The court found the company was estopped to deny that the policy covered this risk, and the company excepted.

Taggart, Wyman, McLane & Starr, of Manchester (L. E. Wyman, of Manchester, orally), for plaintiff. Streeter, Demond, Woodworth & Sulloway, of Concord, and Cyprian J. Belanger, of Manchester (Jonathan Piper, of Concord, orally), for defendants.

YOUNG, J. [1] Dubray, who had contracted to take down an old building and erect a new one, applied to the defendant company's local agent for insurance against liability to his employes while doing this work. The local agent transmitted his application to the company's general agent, who informed him (the local agent) that the company would "cover" Dubray. By that was intended that the company would protect Dubray or insure him against liability to his employes for all injuries they might sustain which were caused by the usual and ordinary risks of the business named in the application, unless and until the company notified him (Dubray) that it declined to underwrite them. The court has found that the general agent had authority to make this agreement, and that the risk incident to using a material hoist is one of the usual and ordinary risks of the business. Dubray, therefore, was insured against liability for accidents to his employes for a time at least. Whether this insurance had terminated at the time of the accident in question depends on whether the delivery of the policy was notice to Dubray that the company declined to underwrite the risk incident to his employes' riding on a material hoist, for no one contends that the company did anything else to notify him of that fact, and the court has found that he did not read the policy until after the accident. The test to determine whether the delivery of the policy was such notice is to inquire whether he was in fault for not reading it.

[2] In other words, the questions of law raised by the company's exceptions to the court's finding that it is estopped to deny it insured Dubray against liability for the accident in question are whether there is any evidence to warrant the court's finding (1) that the company was in fault for not notifying him that it would not underwrite the risk in question; and (2) that he was not in fault for not ascertaining it. The evidence relevant to the first issue tends to the conclusion that the company did absolutely nothing to notify Dubray. The evidence relevant to the second issue tends to the conclusion that, when the company's local agent delivered the policy, he gave Dubray to understand that it protected him from all liability to his employes while he was doing the work in question. It cannot be said that Dubray was in fault for relying on the agent's representation, or that the ordinary man in his situation would have read the policy to ascertain whether it evidenced the contract he made with the company; and there is no rule of law, written or unwritten, which provides either in terms or by reasonable implication that one who buys insurance is bound by the terms of a policy the company subsequently delivers to him, both when it does and when it does not evidence the contract he made with it. In other words, the evidence warrants the findings that the company was, and that Dubray was not, in fault for his not knowing of the exception in the policy, and these findings warrant the further finding that the company is estopped to deny that it insured Dubray against liability to the plaintiff for the death of her intestate.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 57)

ROCKWELL v. HUSTIS.

HOLDEN v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Hillsborough. June 29, 1918.)

1. TRIAL \S 165—MOTION FOR NONSUIT—EFFECT.

On motion for nonsuit, where several grounds for recovery are argued, if one of them is sufficient, the others need not be considered.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT \S 228(1)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—FELLOW-SERVANT DOCTRINE.

In an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665) for injuries to a servant, the fellow-servant doctrine has no application.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT \S 278(18)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to warrant finding that foreman in charge of section crew was guilty of negligence proximately contributing to plaintiff's injuries.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT \S 270(13)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—CUSTOM.

In action for injuries when section hand was drawn under wheels of motor car, derailing the car and injuring other servants, evidence that the company had other cars with smaller wheels, which would not draw men under them, was competent, not to show custom, but to show the company's knowledge that the car in question was not reasonably safe.

Transferred from Superior Court, Hillsborough County; Marble, Judge.

Two actions, by Dearborn S. Rockwell and by Henry Holden, against J. H. Hustis, receiver of Boston & Maine Railroad. The cases were tried together, and resulted in verdicts for plaintiffs, and a denial of defendant's motions for nonsuit and directed verdict, subject to exceptions. Cases transferred; exceptions overruled; judgments on verdicts.

Doyle & Lucier, of Nashua (A. J. Lucier, of Nashua, orally), for plaintiffs. Jones, Warren, Wilson & Manning, of Manchester (Geo. H. Warren, of Manchester, orally), for defendant.

WALKER, J. The evidence tended to show the following facts: The plaintiffs were employed by the defendant as section hands, and were engaged in that employment when they received the injuries on account of which these suits were brought. They were riding upon a motor-driven section car with six other employes, and on account of the size of the car they were obliged to sit close together upon a narrow seat running lengthwise of the car, four facing in one direction and four in the other. Upon the floor were various tools used by them in their work, which prevented them from placing their feet firmly upon the floor. There was an iron rail two or three inches high upon the sides of the car, upon which they put their feet to support themselves. The car was going at the rate of 10 or 12 miles an hour on a curve in the track of about four degrees. One of the men, Thompson by name, who was sitting at the front end of the car on the left-hand side, for some reason lost his balance, his feet came in contact with the forward wheel of the car, and he fell or was drawn under the wheel, which passed over his body, inflicting fatal injuries. As a result the car was derailed, and the other men were thrown from the car. In this way the plaintiffs received their injuries.

[1, 2] Several grounds upon which a recovery is sought have been argued. But upon a motion for a nonsuit, if one of them is in law sufficient, the others need not be considered. No exceptions were taken to the charge of the court. The claim is made that the foreman of the crew who operated the car managed it in a negligent manner, which caused Thompson to be thrown or pulled under the wheel, and consequently that his negligence was the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' injuries. As it is conceded that the action is governed by the federal statute (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 U. S. Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665]) the fellow-servant doctrine has no application. Topore v. Railroad, 78 N. H. 311, 100 Atl. 153. The contention of the defendant is that there is no sufficient evidence of negligence by the foreman in operating the car.

[3] An examination of the evidence leads to the conclusion that the jury were warranted in finding that the plaintiff's injuries were due in part at least to the foreman's negligence. It is not disputed that Thompson's fall or sliding out onto the wheel occurred when the foreman either increased or decreased the power. It was also in evidence that at that instant of time the car "jumped," or "twisted," or "lurched," and that that sudden movement threw Thompson off. This evidence, in view of the circumstances, is amply sufficient to account for the accident.

But it is necessary to consider whether the foreman was negligent in the way he managed the car. It seems to have been his custom, known by the other section men, to reduce the speed before or at the time of reaching the curve, while in this instance he was half way around the curve when he regulated the speed. It was an unusual place for him to perform that act, the men were not anticipating he would attempt it at that place, and the jury may have believed that it was a dangerous thing to do—such a thing as reasonably prudent men would not do upon a curvature of that character. While the speed of the car may not have been excessive, it was competent for the jury to find that it was sufficient at that place, when changed by the foreman by increasing or decreasing the power, to cause the car to suddenly sway and throw Thompson upon the wheel. Further evidence of negligence was unnecessary to support the verdicts. Boucher v. Larochelle, 74 N. H. 483, 68 Atl. 870, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 416; Castonia v. Railroad, 78 N. H. 348, 100 Atl. 601.

[4] Subject to exception, the plaintiff introduced evidence that upon another line of its road 12 motor cars were in use in which the wheels did not extend above the floor of the car, as they did in the car in question, and that for that reason they would not carry or pull one under the car, whose feet happened to reach over the side of the car. The evidence was not introduced to prove a custom of railroad companies to use cars of that construction, as argued by the defendant, but to prove the knowledge of the defendant that the car the plaintiffs were employed to use was not a reasonably safe car, and that the defendant was negligent in this respect. The competency of the evidence cannot be doubted. Warburton v. Company, 75 N. H. 592, 72 Atl. 826.

Other exceptions to the evidence are without merit and do not require extended consideration.

Exceptions overruled; judgment on the verdicts. All concurred.

(89 N. J. Eq. 336)

THOMSON MACH. CO. v. BROWN et al.
(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 11, 1918.)

1. INJUNCTION §=136(2) — PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—STRIKERS—BOYCOTT.

A preliminary injunction will be issued restraining strikers from denominating employer as "unfair to labor" and its employees as "scabs" by means of a posted placard, cards handed out to prospective employees, and communications to users of the machine manufactured by employer and to labor unions whose members work thereon and in repair thereof.

2. INJUNCTION §=136(3)—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—GROUNDS FOR DENIAL—LACK OF INJURY TO COMPLAINANT.

A preliminary injunction will be issued restraining strikers from continuing to commit illegal acts in the prosecution of the strike, where continuance thereof would undoubtedly injure employer, although at the time of the issuance of the injunction no actual injury had been done.

3. INJUNCTION §=22 — PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—GROUNDS FOR DENIAL.

An injunction restraining continuance of unlawful practices by strikers will not be denied because of the discontinuance of such practices shortly before issuance of injunction, where, strike still being in progress, recurrence of unlawful acts is probable.

4. INJUNCTION §=21 — PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—STRIKERS—GROUNDS FOR DENIAL—REFUSAL OF EMPLOYER TO MEDIATE.

Equity will not deny issuance of injunction restraining continuance of unlawful practices by strikers because of refusal of employer to mediate.

Suit by the Thomson Machine Company against Harvey W. Brown and others. Application by complainant for preliminary injunction pending the suit. Injunction granted.

Addison Ely, Jr., of Rutherford, for complainant. Harry Unger, of Newark, for defendants.

LANE, V. C. (orally). The application is for a preliminary injunction restraining, pending the suit, respondents, some of whom are striking employees of complainant and others members of International Association of Machinists, a labor union, from committing unlawful acts in connection with a strike which has been on at the plant of complainant since December, 1917. That some of the acts committed by respondents were unlawful is undoubted. They maintain in close proximity to the plant of complainant a shanty upon which are placarded posters calling attention to the strike, denominating complainant as "unfair to labor," and referring to employees of complainant as "scabs." There was also posted upon the shanty a black list containing the names of those who worked for complainant, and there were handed to prospective employees of complainant cards containing similar statements to those placarded upon the shanty and other statements of similar nature. In an attempt to enforce their demands by coercion, the respondents, or some of them, communicated with users of the machines manufactured by complainant (machines used in bakeries) and also with labor unions whose members worked with the machines and on the repair thereof indicating that complainant was unfair. The result was that various officials of other unions communicated with complainant. A fair idea of the purpose of these letters is indicated by one received by complainant from Minneapolis purporting to be signed by the president and secretary of the Bakers' Union. It contained the following statement:

"As there is many of your machines used in the bakeries in the Twin Cities we hereby urge you to straighten up the machinists organization, before we are compelled to take any active actions against your machinery in this locality."

And one received from Springfield, Mass., from the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International Union of America, which contains the following statement:

"Hoping that the friendly relations between your company and the organized machinists and union labor in general, will again be resumed in the near future, and that it will be possible for the bakers to again work with union-made Thomson machinery."

One received from the local of the same union containing the following statement:

"Therefore it was voted, that the baker of Local 317 refuse to work with a Thomson machine, or co-operate with the Thomson Machine Co."

It is impossible to read the letters without reaching the conclusion that it was the purpose of the respondents to coerce complainant by refusal of customers to buy its product and refusal of employees of customers to work with the product or to repair it. In the affidavit of respondent Brown there is a denial that any one was notified that complainant's product was unfair and that no union labor should use or work with said product. When counsel's attention was brought to this statement and the fact that it was in direct conflict with the written evidence, the only reply was that the affiant meant that in so many words the statements were not made. Assuming that the entire affidavit of Brown is drawn in the same spirit, it is entitled to but little, if any, weight. Indeed, it is still a question in my mind as to whether proceedings should not be instituted to punish for perjury. No serious argument is made by respondents that the acts hereinbefore referred to were not illegal. They insist, first, that it does not appear that complainant is being injured. The free flow of labor is being obstructed, the complainant is being harassed in its business. If the threats, open and implied, of the various users of the machinery and workers thereon, are carried out, there will unquestionably be injury. This court does not wait until there is actual injury; it protects against anticipated injury. Second, respondents insist that the unlawful acts are not now being performed. So far as the placards are concerned, even after this court ordered their removal, they were retained until a few days ago. So far as written communications are concerned, there is one as recent as April of this year. The strike is still on, and I think it reasonable to assume that unless restrained the unlawful practices will be continued. Third, it is argued that complainant refuses to agree to mediation, and that for that reason this court ought not to interfere in its behalf. As I previously stated in this case, whatever the personal feelings of the court may be, it has no power to coerce an employer into mediation. If coercion be proper in any event, it is not the function of the court to apply it. There is a sharp line of division between complainant and respondents as to the reasons which induced complainant to refuse to submit to mediation or arbitration. Complainant is operating an open shop, and it charges that the union insisted, before agreeing to mediate, that complainant should agree to unionize its shop. This proposition complainant rejected. Respondents do not in terms deny that this was a condition precedent; but, even if such a denial may be gathered from their papers, there is a question of fact which it is not for this court, in dealing with the legal and equitable rights of the parties, to settle. The broad question of public or governmental policy which respondents seek to inject into this issue is one which must be left to some one tribunal.

[1-4] There will be an injunction against the continuance of the unlawful practices heretofore referred to. With respect to picketing, there is not sufficient evidence now before me on that subject to warrant me in acting. Leave will be reserved to complainant to apply at any time for such relief as it may be advised is proper with respect to this. It seems to me that the injunction prayed for has clear support in George Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Blowers' Ass'n, 77 N. J. Eq. 219, 223, 79 Atl. 262, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 445, and Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 38 Sup. Ct. 65, 62 L. Ed. 260, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461.

(91 N. J. Law, 661)

DORAN et al. v. CITY OF ASBURY PARK et al.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 19, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 404(4)—ACTION FOR DAMAGE TO LAND—JOINDER OF PLAINTIFFS.

Property owners, whose land is damaged by city's erection of detritus tank, flume, and straightway, made under New Practice Act, § 4, could sue for their damages in one action; there being a common question of law and fact arising out of the same transaction.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR — 273(5)—GENERAL EXCEPTION TO CHARGE.

A mere general exception to the charge, failing to point out with any degree of specific-ness what proposition of law was erroneous, will not be considered.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 388—DAMAGE TO PROPERTY.

If a city by building detritus tank, flume, and straightway damaged land of private owner, it was liable for the damages; the mere fact that the work was a public work of necessity being no defense.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 404(8) — DRAINS—DAMAGE TO PROPERTY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The mere fact that damage resulted to property owners from building of detritus tank, flume, and straightway by city was some evidence of negligence sufficient to warrant submission to the jury.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR — 991 — REVIEW — FINDINGS OF FACT.

In action for damages by diversion of lake waters, the court on appeal cannot review the question whether damage was caused by natural flow of waters, which was for the jury under evidence.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Monmouth County.

Action by Mary J. Doran and others against the City of Asbury Park and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Durand, Ivins & Carton, of Asbury Park, for appellants. Ward Kremer, of Asbury Park, for appellees.

KALISCH, J. The plaintiffs below, five in number, joined in one action, against the city of Asbury Park and Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the defendants below, to recover damages, resulting from water being backed up on their premises and into their cellars through the erection, by the defendants, of a detritus tank, flume, and straightway, at the head of Wesley Lake, when laying out a new road from Bond street in Asbury Park, to Main street, in front of Ocean Grove. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs and assessed the damages as follows: In favor of Mary J. Doran and John Doran, $300; Elizabeth Woehrer, executrix, $80, individually, $160; Frederick Woehrer, $60; and Louis Weldman, $157.32. A judgment was entered upon this verdict, from which an appeal has been taken to this court.

[1] The plaintiffs were entitled to join in the action under section 4 of the new practice act (P. L. 1912, p. 377), there being a common question of law and fact arising out of the same transaction.

Although there are 13 grounds of appeal set forth in the record, the only two relied on and argued in the brief of counsel for appellants relate to and challenge the legal propriety of the rulings of the trial judge in refusing appellants' motion for a nonsuit at the close of the plaintiffs' case, and for a direction of a verdict for the defendants at the close of the entire case.

[2] As both of these motions involve the same legal question, they will be considered together. Before doing so, it may be well to mention that an effort is made to raise the like legal question on an exception taken to the charge of the trial judge; but, as the exception taken is too broad and failed to point out with any degree of specificity to the trial judge what particular proposition of law laid down by him was erroneous, it will not be considered. It will not, therefore, avail an appellant to take a general exception to the charge of the trial judge. In order to have the exception considered by the appellate tribunal it must appear that the attention of the trial judge was specifically called to the matter challenged as erroneous. Kargman v. Carlo, 85 N. J. Law, 632, 90 Atl. 292; Miller v. Del. River Trans. Co., 85 N. J. Law, 700, 90 Atl. 288, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 165.

[3] The contention of counsel for appellants is that the defendants cannot properly be held liable for damages sustained by them by reason of the overflow and backing up of the waters on their property and into their cellars, because the building of the detritus tank, flume, and straightway, by defendants, at the head of Wesley Lake, which caused the waters of the lake to be diverted from their natural flow, was the prosecution of a public work necessary to be done. This position is untenable and in direct conflict with the settled law of this state. Mr. Justice Trenchard, in Kehoe v. Rutherford, 74 N. J. Law, 559, 85 Atl. 1046, 122 Am. St. Rep. 411, speaking for this court, on page 661, states with clearness and accuracy the legal principles which must control the situation presented by the facts of the case sub judice. He says:

"But it is also a rule of law of equal importance that the exemption of a municipal corporation from actions by individuals suffering special damage from its neglect to perform or its negligence in performing public duties, whereby a public wrong is done for which an indictment will lie, does not extend to actions where the injury is the result of active wrongdoing chargeable to the corporation" (citing cases). "It is also the settled law of this state that a municipality has no right, by artificial drains, to divert surface water from the course it would otherwise take and cast it, in a body large enough to do substantial injury, on land where, but for such artificial drain, it would not go" (citing cases).

[4] The fact that the defendant municipalities had performed a lawful and necessary work in a manner not injurious to the public does not relieve them from liability to persons injured from active wrongdoing; and, since there was testimony in the present case tending to show that the work done by the defendants caused a diversion of the waters of the lake and to overflow to the special injury of the plaintiffs, it was at least some evidence of active wrongdoing, and hence sufficient to warrant the refusal of the trial judge to take the case from the consideration of the jury.

[5] Whether the waters which backed up on the plaintiffs' lands and flowed into their cellars was the natural flow of surface water, as claimed by defendants, presented a question of fact for the decision of the jury, and is not reviewable here.

Judgment is affirmed, with costs.

(32 N. J. Law, 253)

NAYLOR v. KNAPP et al.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

REPLEVIN — 119 — BOND — LIABILITY — LIEN FOR REPAIRS.

Where plaintiff in replevin obtains possession of a motorcar and has the same repaired, and judgment goes for defendant, defendant is entitled to the possession of the car without paying for the repairs, and in an action by defendant on the bond it is no defense that there is a lien on the automobile for the repairs.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by Edward Naylor, Sr., against George H. Knapp and Albert Mathias. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. V. Dawes, of Hightstown, for appellants. James J. McGoogan, of Trenton, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover damages for breach of condition of a replevin bond in not returning an automobile awarded to defendant in replevin, who is plaintiff in this action. The automobile was not reclaimed by defendant in replevin suit, and was delivered to plaintiff in that suit, and while in his possession he caused it to be repaired. After judgment awarding return of the goods to Naylor, the plaintiff in this suit, Mathias, the obligor in the bond and the defendant below, tendered a return upon payment of the bill for repairs, claiming that the car was subject to a garage lien for them. This Naylor refused to pay, and thereupon the car was retained by the defendant in this action.

The plaintiff recovered in the district court, and its judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court. We think the judgment should be affirmed upon the ground that the tender of the car was not unconditional, but subject to a claim for payment for repairs, without which no delivery would be made.

The Supreme Court determined that there was a valid lien, and therefore the car was not returned as required by the condition of the bond. It is not necessary to determine in this case whether a legal lien can be created by one who holds an automobile taken by virtue of a writ of replevin, or whether any lien existed in this case, and in affirming this judgment we do not express any opinion on that question.

The plaintiff's right to recover had a sufficient basis if rested on the fact that the tender was not unconditional but subject to a demand for payment. The condition of the bond requires a return of the chattel, and a tender of the character present in this case is not a return of the goods awarded.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs.

(93 N. J. Law, 229)

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND v. BROCK'S GARAGE, Incorporated.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §106(9), 120(7)—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—ACCEPTANCE OF PAYMENT—KNOWLEDGE—JURY QUESTION.

When one appoints an agent to collect money, the agent cannot take merchandise in payment. But testimony is competent and material to prove knowledge on the part of the principal, as to the course of business being done by the agent, regarding payments with merchandise or supplies, that the agent was authorized to receive such payments. Thus, in this case raising a question of fact for the jury.

2. COSTS §260(1)—DOUBLE COSTS—AFFIRMANCE OF JUDGMENT.

2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 2296, § 43, providing for double costs, does not apply to a case commenced in the Supreme Court, in which the plaintiff had a verdict and on plaintiff's appeal to the Court of Errors and Appeals the judgment being affirmed. The rule under which costs are recovered is stated in the case of Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McFarland, 44 N. J. Law, 674.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland against the Brocks Garage, Incorporated. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph L. Bodine, of Trenton, for appellant. Hervey S. Moore and John A. Hartpence, both of Trenton, for appellee.

BLACK, J. The suit in this case was brought to recover premiums on four accident policies of insurance written by the appellant. The trial resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff-appellant for $517.12, the amount admitted to be due by the defendant. The plaintiff below brings the appeal, alleging twenty-three grounds of appeal. Seventeen are directed to the admission of testimony, for the most part to the testimony of two witnesses John L. Brock and J. Chauncey Van Horn; four to the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, and two to alleged errors in the charge of the trial court to the jury. We have examined these grounds of appeal, with the result that we find they are all without any legal merit. It would serve no useful purpose to discuss them seriatim. Two, however, may be referred to briefly—the testimony objected to was both competent and material. It tended to prove knowledge on the part of the appellant as to the course of business between the parties, the appellant's agent, the Van Horn Company, and the defendant, regarding the payment of premiums with merchandise or supplies, and the jury by its verdict has found that was the effect of such testimony.

[1] The trial court quite correctly stated the rule to be that, when one appoints an agent to collect money, the agent cannot take merchandise or personal property in payment. 2 Corp. Juris, p. 599, par. 234; page 630, par. 270. A bare power to collect can be exercised in no manner short of an actual collection of the money. 31 Cyc. p. 1375. But the testimony objected to tended to prove, and did prove, that the appellant's agent, the Van Horn Company, did receive, and the appellant knew of such receipt of, payments for the premiums, with supplies and merchandise. This testimony raised a jury question, which the trial court properly submitted to them. We find no error on this branch of the case. The only other point that need be referred to is the appellant's criticism of the action or the statement of the trial court, when the court said during the cross-examination of Mr. Brock, in reference to items made or taken from the books of the Brock Company:

"Then I will exercise the prerogative of the court, and strike—or I may rather strike out the testimony as to these books, which will leave you without any testimony, as incompetent (referring to the books as 'incompetent' doubtless). Mr. Bodine: I consent to Mr. Moore proceeding with the examination of Mr. Brock. The Court: All right."

We fail to see how this statement of the trial court is error, or even the subject of criticism as a departure from proper judicial action.

[2] The respondent asks for an affirmance with double costs, under paragraph 43, 2 C. S. p. 2296. It is sufficient to say that this statute does not apply to this case; a case in which the statute was applied is International Watch Co. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 82 N. J. Law, 459, 82 Atl. 730.

The rule under which costs are recovered in a court of errors is stated in the case of Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McFarland, 44 N. J. Law, 674.

The judgment of the Supreme Court will be affirmed, with costs.

(93 N. J. Law, 304)

ANCONA PRINTING CO. v. WEISBAUGH CO.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT §291(18)—HOLDING OVER—PENALTIES.

In an action to recover double the yearly value of premises which the tenant holds and refuses to surrender to the landlord after expiration of his term, and written demand for possession, the annual rent for the expired term is not conclusive as to yearly value, and therefore a request to direct a verdict for plaintiff for double the rent paid under the lease for the expired term was properly refused, as the yearly value may be more or less than the prior rent paid.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT §291(14, 16) — HOLDING OVER — PENALTIES — DEFENSES — INSTRUCTION.

A belief of the tenant that he has a right to hold over must, in order to avoid the penalty of double yearly value, be an honest one, based on reasons sufficient to induce a jury to believe he had a right to remain in possession after written demand therefor; the mere statement that he believed he had such right is not sufficient, and an instruction to the jury that, if the tenant believed that he had such a right, the holding over was not willful, and the plaintiff's case failed, was erroneous.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT §291(16) — HOLDING OVER — REMOVAL OF FIXTURES — JURY QUESTION.

Whether the removal of fixtures by a tenant was within a reasonable time, or so delayed as to amount to a willful holding over, is a question for the jury.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by the Ancona Printing Company against the Welsbach Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wescott & Weaver, of Camden, for appellant. Bleakly & Stockwell, of Camden, for appellee.

BERGEN, J. This action was brought against a tenant to recover double the yearly value of the demised premises for a period during which, it is alleged, the tenant willfully held possession after the expiration of its term, and is based on section 27 of our statute entitled "An act concerning landlords and tenants" (3 C. S. pp. 3065, 3076), which enacts that if any tenancy for any term of life or lives, year or years, or those who shall come into possession under, or by collusion with any such tenants, shall willfully hold over after the determination of such terms, and after demand made and notice in writing given for the delivering of the possession thereof by the landlord or the reversioner, "such person or persons so holding over, shall, for and during the time he, she or they shall so hold over, or keep the person or persons entitled out of the possession of said lands," pay, to the party so kept out of possession, "at the rate of double the yearly value of the lands," for so long a time as the same are detained. In order to have the benefit of this act the plaintiff must prove that the tenancy has expired, a demand for possession, and that the tenant willfully holds over.

Sections 27 and 28 of the statute are substantially counterparts of those of 4 Geo. II, c. 28, § 1, and 11 Geo. II, c. 19, § 18, respectively—the latter providing that where the tenant gives notice of his intention to quit, and does not comply, he shall pay double the rent he would have paid, the distinction being that if the tenant holds over after his notice to quit he shall pay double rent, but if the tenant holds over after demand of possession by his landlord he is liable, not for double rent, but for double the yearly value. In this case the suit is for double the yearly value, and the testimony shows that the tenant's term, as expressed in its lease, had expired June 30, 1916, and it was bound to surrender the premises on that day, or within such reasonable time thereafter as would permit the removal of reserved fixtures; that the landlord demanded delivery of possession July 6, 1916; that defendant did not surrender until December 30, 1916; and therefore, if the holding over was willful, the plaintiff was entitled to double the yearly value of the premises from July 6, 1916, to December 30th following, as was held in Cobb v. Stokes, 8 East, 357, the willfulness beginning with the written demand. The jury found for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals, relying principally upon the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict for plaintiff, and an alleged error in the instruction of the jury by the court.

[1] The refusal of the motion to direct for the plaintiff for double the amount of the rent reserved in the lease was proper. This, being a penal statute, is to be strictly construed, and it does not fix as a penalty double the rent for the previous year, as in section 28, where the tenant holds over after giving notice that he will quit the premises, but double the yearly value, and this distinction in penalty between the two sections indicates that the Legislature intended a different penalty for the violation of the respective sections; one being double rent, and the other double the yearly value. We are of opinion that what is the yearly value is a jury question, and, while the prior rent is some evidence of the yearly value, it is not conclusive, for such value might be more or less than the previous rent, and the determination of that fact is essentially a jury function. It was not error to refuse a direction for the plaintiff for double the rent reserved for the previous year as requested.

[3] The consideration of the second ground of appeal, which relates to instructions given to the jury, requires a short résumé of the facts. The plaintiffs, by a written agreement dated September 26, 1904, and a supplemental one dated March 14, 1905, let to defendant the premises which this controversy involves, for a term expiring June 30, 1915. On March 7, 1914, another agreement was entered into by the plaintiff and defendant by which the original letting was extended from June 30, 1915, to June 30, 1916, upon the same conditions, except an increase in the rent from $6,750 and taxes, as reserved in the original and supplemental leases, to $10,000 and taxes. Under this agreement the defendants were to surrender possession on June 30, 1916, subject to the right to remove, at the termination of the term, all fixtures, gasworks, holders, and appurtenances erected on the lands by defendant during the term, the buildings erected to become the property of the lessor. In September, 1915, in reply to an offer by the defendant, the plaintiff wrote it a letter offering to extend the lease for five years at an annual rent of $15,000, stating, however, that the property was not for sale. To this defendant replied, under date of October 6, 1915, that if the property was not for sale it was no longer necessary to "consider a further lease of the premises." There were subsequent attempts by defendant to purchase the property, and also an offer, made June 26, 1916, to lease at $12,000 a year; but these negotiations did not result in any agreement, and on July 6, 1916, plaintiff demanded in writing possession of the property. Between that time and December 30, 1916, the defendants remained in possession, removing their machinery and other fixtures which they were entitled to remove, but with extreme deliberation, as a jury might find, and in the meantime using each machine for manufacturing purposes until it was moved from the premises. Whether the fixtures were removed within a reasonable time, or so delayed for the convenience of the defendant as to amount to a willful holding over, was a jury question.

[2] The president of the defendant company testified that he had an honest belief that his company did not have to surrender possession as demanded, because he had every reason to believe that the plant would be sold or leased to his company, notwithstanding the demand for possession on July 6, 1916, and their previous inability to agree upon terms, as well as the fact that defendant had commenced the removal of its fixtures before the expiration of the lease to another location, which it was preparing for the continuance of its business. Such a belief, to be available, must be an honest, bona fide one, based on facts from which such an inference can be drawn. "A tenant cannot relieve himself by the mere statement that he believed he had a right to hold the premises. He must furnish reasons sufficient to induce a jury or court hearing the case to believe he had a right to remain in possession." 16 R. C. L. § 692, p. 1171, and cases cited. Instead of submitting to the jury the question whether, under the facts, the defendant was justified in his alleged belief, the jury was instructed:

"If they [defendants] did not have the right, did they believe that they had such a right? If they did, why then the plaintiff's claim goes for nothing, because the statute is based upon willful action."

This amounted to an instruction to find for the defendant, if defendant believed it had a right to hold over, and entirely ignored the right of the jury to find whether any reason for such belief existed in the proofs. We think there was no evidence to justify, under the rules of law, any such belief, and the jury might have so found, except for the instruction that defendant was not liable for holding over if it believed that it had a right to do so, although in fact the right did not exist, as the jury might have found under the evidence. This was an erroneous instruction, and injurious to the plaintiff, for, while the English cases hold that the holding over must be willful and contumacious (Swinfin v. Bacon, 6. H. & N. 184), a refusal to deliver possession after written demand is willful and contumacious, unless it be of right, or there be shown some reason for an honest belief that it is justified.

We have not been referred to a case, nor can we find any, which holds that the mere statement of such a belief is a sufficient excuse. Reasons for the belief must appear, and the jury are entitled to find whether they are sufficient to justify it, and it was clearly error to limit the jury in the present case to the question of defendant's belief, for it was their province to say whether it was an honest belief, based upon facts which would reasonably justify it.

The judgment below is reversed.

(92 N. J. Law, 216)

GUMAERD LEAD & ZINC CO. v. ERIE
R. CO. (No. 57.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ACTION \Leftarrow 27(1) — RAILROADS \Leftarrow 72(2, 8) —
CONSTRUCTION — RETAINING WALLS — ACTION FOR DAMAGES — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a covenant as follows: "The party of the second part [defendant] covenants and agrees that in case it shall make any excavation upon the adjoining land, which shall interfere with the natural support of the surface of such parcel, it will construct and maintain such retaining walls or other devices as may be necessary to prevent its slopes from encroaching on said parcel." The defendant made the excavation contemplated by the covenant, but failed to protect the adjoining land, upon which plaintiff conducted a mining enterprise, until after the damage to plaintiff's shaft had resulted. Held, that the covenants contemplated a protective construction, by defendant, to the plaintiff's land and enterprise, which would serve to prevent resulting damage; that the failure to construct the necessary device gave the plaintiff a right of action on the covenant for damages; that the action was ex contractu, and not ex delicto; and that the question whether there was a breach, and the resulting damage, were jury questions.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by the Gumaerd Lead & Zinc Company against the Erie Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Collins & Corbin, of Jersey City, for appellant. Thomas S. Woodruff and Coult & Smith, all of Newark, for appellee.

MINTURN, J. Plaintiff was owner of a tract of land in Orange county, N. Y., which contained certain ores, which it was engaged in mining, and, as a necessary requisite for the work, sunk a shaft not far from the defendant's right of way. The defendant, for the purpose of acquiring a right of way across the plaintiff's adjoining land, instituted condemnation proceedings in Orange county, which proceedings were compromised by an agreement which resulted in the execution of a deed by the plaintiff to the defendant containing, inter alia, this covenant:

"The party of the second part [defendant] covenants and agrees that in case it shall make any excavation upon the adjoining land, which shall interfere with the natural support of the surface of such parcel, it will construct and maintain such retaining walls or other devices as may be necessary to prevent its slopes from encroaching on said parcel."

The testimony makes it apparent that, in making the excavation required for railroad purposes, the retaining wall or other device contemplated by this covenant was not constructed, the result of which was that the shaft upon plaintiff's land was forced out of alignment, and became useless for the purpose for which it was constructed. This suit, based upon the breach of the covenant, was thereby instituted, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, from which this appeal has been taken.

There were two trials of the case. The first resulted in a venire de novo upon a rule to show cause by the Supreme Court, upon which rule the right of the plaintiff to recover was judicially declared, and the case was sent back upon the legal impropriety of the rule of damages applied at the circuit. The second trial produced a similar result, and a rule to show cause, reserving certain exceptions, was allowed. That rule was discharged, and an application for a reargument was also denied. The exceptions reserved upon the latter rule are limited to the inquiry whether there was evidence, sufficient to go to the jury, as to the alleged breach of the covenant, and whether the action is maintainable on the covenant, both of which inquiries were raised on the motions to nonsuit and to direct a verdict.

It is primarily insisted that the court below was in error in refusing a nonsuit, and also in refusing to direct a verdict, upon the ground that the testimony failed to show a breach of covenant. The rationale of the defendant's construction of the covenant is in effect a contention that it was the intention of the parties, as evidenced by the covenant, that the proposed wall or other device was not to be of a preventive nature, but rather remedial in character; in other words, that its building by defendant might follow after the construction of the slope, and meet the situation then existing, regardless of the damage which might accrue to the plaintiff, pending completion of the slope construction, and that the construction of what may be termed a post hoc wall or device relieved the defendant of the necessity of accounting for the intermediate damage, resulting from the actual working of the slope construction. We do not agree with this construction of the covenant, but think its terms, fairly construed, required the defendant to anticipate by the construction of a reasonable wall or device the damages which might result, and which in fact presents the basis for this suit. In this respect the covenant is clear and unambiguous, and reduces the status of the parties entirely to one ex contractu, and not ex delicto. Such an action at common law was in covenant, and not in case. Jones v. Clark, 45 N. J. Law, 437.

The fact that the defendant, after the damage was done, erected a retaining wall in accordance with its conception of the effect of the covenant, cannot serve to deprive the plaintiff of the contractual rights it is entitled to demand, as the legal and logical, the direct and natural, result of the defendant's failure to adhere to the terms of its covenant. We think the exceptions presented as to the charge of the court are not reserved by the rule, and are not before us here; but, if the fact were otherwise, we think the disposition here made of the fundamental proposition presented by the case is equally dispositive of such exceptions.

We think the resulting questions as to the fact of the breach of the covenant, and the damage resulting to the plaintiff therefrom, were properly submitted to the jury, and that the judgment below should be affirmed, with costs.

(30 N. J. Eq. 531)

EUGSTER v. EUGSTER.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 18, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §151(2)—RIGHT TO APPEAL—"AGGRIEVED PERSON."

Where wife sued husband for accounting of profits of a business arranged before marriage, and the existence of a partnership was disputed, the decree declaring that a partnership existed and immediately dissolving it did not make complainant an aggrieved person (one whose pecuniary interests are injuriously affected), and she could not appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Aggrieved.]

2. PARTNERSHIP §297—EQUITABLE PARTNERSHIP—DISSOLUTION.

A partner suing for dissolution could not object to award of share of profits to the other on the ground that there was an equitable partnership terminable at the option of either, and that the filing of her complaint terminated it, and defendant thereafter had no right to share in the profits.

3. JOINT ADVENTURES ⇐1 — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION.

Antenuptial contract by which wife was to purchase land, erect and equip a factory, and the husband was to operate the business, and after making certain payments the profits were to be divided equally between the parties, constituted a joint adventure, and the wife could not urge against allowance of profits to husband, that she could not be held to pay for the husband's services.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Joint Adventure.]

4. TRUSTS ⇐108(3)—TRUST EX MALEFICIO.

Antenuptial contract by which wife was to purchase land, erect and equip a factory, and the husband was to operate the business, and after making certain payments the profits were to be divided equally between the parties, did not make the husband a trustee ex maleficio for the wife.

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Suit by Marie A. C. Eugster against Jean B. Eugster. From the decree rendered, complainant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Emil Walscheid, of Town of Union, for appellant. Queen & Stout, of Jersey City, for appellee.

GUMMERE, C. J. The complainant and defendant, at the time of the filing of the bill in this case, were wife and husband, their marriage occurring on the 23d of November, 1910. Before their marriage they entered into an agreement for the establishment and carrying on of an embroidery business at West Hoboken, by the terms of which the intended wife was to purchase the necessary land, and erect and equip the embroidery factory upon it, Mr. Eugster on his part was to operate the business (in which he was an expert), and, after making certain payments provided in the agreement, the net profits were to be divided between the parties. In 1912 the relations of the husband and wife, both matrimonial and business, having ceased to be harmonious, Mrs. Eugster filed the bill in this case praying for an accounting by her husband of the profits made out of the business, and the appointment of a receiver. Pursuant to the prayer of her bill the Court of Chancery directed an accounting to be taken between the parties before Special Master Asper, and this officer of the court, after hearing the parties and their witnesses, and examining the exhibits submitted to him, reported that the net assets or profits of the business up to the date of the making of the order of reference (approximately) amounted to $6,243.20, and that one-half of these net assets or profits belonged to each of the parties. Upon the coming in of this report Vice Chancellor Lewis, after hearing counsel for both parties, affirmed it, and thereupon advised a decree adjudging that the parties had been copartners in the business; that the partnership "be and the same is hereby dissolved"; that the embroidery business, and the premises upon which it was carried on, together with all machinery and other appurtenances and appliances located therein, were the property of the complainant, subject, however, to a lien for the payment of the debts of the business, and the sum found to be due to the defendant on the accounting. From the decree entered upon the advice of the Vice Chancellor, the complainant has appealed.

The first ground of appeal is that the evidence does not warrant a finding that a business partnership existed between the complainant and the defendant.

[1] Whether the business arrangement between these parties entered into prior to their marriage constituted them partners, and, if it did, whether the partnership relation was terminated by their subsequent marriage, we do not find it necessary to consider. Conceding the contention of complainant's counsel to be sound in law, she is not legally aggrieved by the adjudication upon this point, and for this reason the adjudication declaring the existence of a partnership had no effect until it was pronounced; that is, no partnership existed in fact until the Court of Chancery declared otherwise. In conjunction with this declaration was a further adjudication that the partnership which was then created "be and the same is hereby dissolved." The net result of the judicial action complained of, therefore, was to leave the complainant and the defendant, so far as a partnership between them was concerned, in exactly the position which she claims they were in from the beginning. Relief by appeal from chancery is only for "persons aggrieved" by the order or decree appealed from. Beckhard v. Rudolph, 68 N. J. Eq. 749, 63 Atl. 708. And a party aggrieved is one whose personal or pecuniary interests, or property rights, have been injuriously affected by the order or decree. Swackhamer v. Kline's Adm'r, 25 N. J. Eq. 503; Parker v. Reynolds, 32 N. J. Eq. 290; Andress v. Andress, 46 N. J. Eq. 528, 22 Atl. 124.

The next ground of appeal is that the contract between the parties relative to the operation of this embroidery business is not enforceable in equity, for the reason that it does not express the free and uncontrolled intention of the parties, or, rather, of the complainant. The question thus raised is one purely of fact; the Vice Chancellor determined it against the complainant, and our examination of the proofs sent up with the appeal satisfies us that he was entirely justified in so doing.

[2] It is next asserted as a ground for appeal that the evidence did not warrant a finding that the defendant was entitled to $3,190.77 by way of profits. The ground upon which this contention is based is thus stated in the brief of counsel:

"If there was an equitable partnership under which defendant was entitled to profits, and if either party had a right to terminate it, such termination must be inferred, from the filing of the bill of complaint, and from that time forward, at least, defendant must be considered a trespasser in the business."

No argument is submitted in support of this contention, and we are unable, without the assistance of counsel, to discover any merit in it.

[3] The fourth ground of appeal is based upon the following proposition, viz. a married woman cannot enter into a business partnership with her husband, nor can she be held to pay him for service. What we have already said upon the question of the partnership between these two litigants is dispositive of this point. Moreover, there is nothing in the case to show any agreement on the part of the complainant to pay the defendant for his services. On the contrary, there was a joint adventure, and an agreement to divide the profits of it between the parties to it.

[4] Lastly, it is contended that the defendant held the property of the complainant as a trustee ex maleficio, and, consequently, is not entitled to compensation. The answer to this proposition is twofold: (1) Upon the proofs submitted there was no ground for holding the defendant to be a trustee for the complainant; (2) there was no allowance to him of any compensation, but a mere division of the profits between him and his wife as ascertained by the accounting which she sought by her bill.

The decree below will be affirmed, with costs.

(91 N. J. Law, 563)

DRUMMOND et al. v. HUGHES.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶362(2) — RESERVATION OF GROUNDS—FORM.

A ground of appeal embracing a large part of the charge, and including several distinct propositions, cannot be considered.

2. CONTRACTS ¶320—BUILDING CONTRACTS—SUBSTITUTION OF MATERIAL.

Where a contractor has so improperly plastered a dwelling house as to necessitate replastering, the owner has no right to substitute patent plastering for the plaster provided for in the specifications.

3. CONTRACTS ¶320—BUILDING CONTRACTS—COMPLIANCE WITH SPECIFICATIONS.

Where a building contractor has improperly plastered a dwelling house, necessitating replastering by the owner, the owner is entitled to have the defective plastering replaced with the plaster under the terms of the specifications as contemplated by the original contract, and to be paid a reasonable sum therefor.

4. CONTRACTS ¶323(3) — BUILDING CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action by the owner of a dwelling house against a contractor for negligent plastering, an instruction leaving it to the jury whether certain cracks in the plastering were consistent with a workmanlike job was proper.

5. TRIAL ¶234(2) — INSTRUCTIONS — REFERENCE TO FACTS.

It is not legal error to fail to call attention in an instruction to a fact which one of the parties thinks important; the judge being under no obligation to state one fact rather than another.

6. CONTRACTS ¶320—BUILDING CONTRACTS—COMPLIANCE WITH SPECIFICATIONS.

Where an owner of a dwelling house has undertaken to remedy improper work done by the contractor, he is not entitled to erect a better house than that provided in the specifications, and to recover therefor.

7. CONTRACTS ¶199(1) — BUILDING CONTRACTS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where a building contract required the contractor to remove from premises within 24 hours after notice all material condemned by the architect, specifications calling for "approved brand of lime" contemplated a brand approved by the architect.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by Isaac Drummond and another, executors of the estate of one Wise, against Richard H. Hughes. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Action by the executors of Wise to recover damages for the failure of Hughes to perform properly a contract for the building of a dwelling house. The dwelling was completed in June, 1912, and occupied some time before that by Wise's family. The architect, pursuant to the contract, gave a certificate for the final payment September 28, 1912, and the executor made the payment October 9, 1912. During the interim between the completion of the house and the final payment there was a continuous dispute about the plaster. This continued after the payment, and in 1915 the defendant seems to have been willing to bear part of the expense of making some small repairs. The plaintiffs, however, proceeded to put on new plastering, and in 1916 brought this action.

Durand, Ivins & Carton, of Asbury Park, for appellants. Wilbur A. Helsley, of Newark, for appellee.

SWAYZE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. The first ground of appeal cannot be considered. It embraces a large part of the charge, nearly two printed pages, including several distinct propositions. The reason for condemning that practice is as strong under our present procedure as it was when the method of review was by writ of error. As to bills of exception, see Oliver v. Phelps, 21 N. J. Law, 597; Associates of Jersey Co. v. Davison, 29 N. J. Law, 415; and as to the application of the rule to assignments of error, see Fivey v. Penna. R. R. Co., 67 N. J. Law, 627, 636, 52 Atl. 472, 91 Am. St. Rep. 445; Defiance Fruit Co. v. Fox, 76 N. J. Law, 482-491, 70 Atl. 460.

[2, 3] 2. The second ground of appeal is that the judge erred in charging that the plaintiffs had no right to substitute patented plaster for plaster provided for in the specifications. If we take the charge in its literal terms, the proposition is correct. The plaintiff had no such right. His right was to make good his damage, if he had suffered any; but this was very far from a wholesale substitution of patented plaster for that put on in accordance with the specifications. If, however, we discard this literal construction, and take the charge as it was intended, and as the jury must have understood it, the judge only meant to say, as he immediately did say, that "the plaintiffs could not recover for the reasonable cost of the patented plaster"; that they could not adopt such a plaster (i. e., one "which had never been contemplated by the specifications"), and require the defendant to pay for it. He then charged the legal rule correctly as follows:

"If there was defective work with respect to the plastering performed by the contractor, the defendant in this case, the plaintiffs were entitled to have that replaced with the plaster under the terms of the specifications, in order to make the work good as contemplated by the original contract, and to be paid by the defendant, or to claim of the defendant, a reasonable sum for the expense so incurred."

[4] 3. The third ground of appeal is that the judge erred in charging that cracks are not inconsistent with a good and workmanlike job. This is a misstatement of the charge. What the judge said was:

"You may as men of common sense reach the conclusion under the evidence that those cracks were no evidence of defective work; in other words, that they were the ordinary and customary cracks that appear in a new construction, due to causes for which the contractor cannot be in fact held responsible. In other words, you may conclude that such cracks are not inconsistent with a good and workmanlike job."

We know of no reason why this question might not properly be left to the jury, as the judge in fact left it.

[5] 4. It is no legal error to fail to call attention to a fact which one of the parties thinks important. The judge is under no obligation to state one fact rather than another. There was no legal error in the omission complained of.

5. The fifth ground of appeal is that the judge erred in charging that if Rockland lime was used by the direction of the architect, and proved to be unsatisfactory, defendant was not responsible. This is an inaccurate statement of what the judge said. What he charged was:

"If Rockland lime was used by the direction of the architect, no criticism can be made of the defendant by the plaintiffs. They were bound by the architect's direction in that respect."

We do not know how the judge could have charged otherwise under the terms of the contract.

[6] 6. The sixth ground of appeal is that the judge erred in charging that the defendant was obliged to follow the plans and specifications, even though the materials or work called for by such plans and specifications were defective, and would not give a good, workmanlike job. This again is an inaccurate statement of what the judge said. He charged:

"If the sagging of the walls and the falling of the plaster was due to insufficient support through joists or timbers, even though the defendant put them in, but if the specifications called for them, this defendant cannot be held responsible in this case. In other words, if the defendant simply complied with the terms of the specifications, and the architect, through a mistake, provided for timbers in the specifications which were insufficient to properly carry the weight of this building where it was necessary to have such support, and as a result, the natural and proximate cause of those insufficient timbers, the cracks occurred and the plaster fell, then this defendant is not responsible in the law, and no verdict can go against him."

In short, the plaintiff was entitled to the house he bargained for, and not a better house. If the contract and specifications are not to be the builder's guide, he has none, and the owner may contract for a $1,000 house and demand a $10,000 house. A good workmanlike job is a job properly executed; whether the result is what it should be depends on the plans and specifications.

[7] 7. The seventh ground of appeal is that the judge erred in charging that the approved brand of lime called for in the specifications contemplated a brand of lime approved by the architect, instead of an approved brand of lime or brand approved in the trade. With this may be coupled the eighth ground of appeal, that the judge failed to charge that the defendant was required to procure an approved brand of lime for the building, without regard to the approval of the architect. It is enough to say that the contract required the defendant to remove from the premises, within 24 hours after receiving written notice from the architect, all materials condemned by him. This necessarily involved the use of materials which had the approval of the architect, and, when the words "approved brand of lime" were used, they necessarily meant approved by the architect, who had the power to condemn. The Rockland lime was bought by the architect's orders and inspected by him.

We find no error. Let the judgment be affirmed, with costs.

(91 N. J. Law, 424)

FIRST NAT. BANK OF FREEHOLD v. RUTTER.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 5, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE — 161 — MARRIED WOMAN'S NOTE — ESTOPPEL TO DENY VALIDITY — "BENEFIT."

Defendant, a married woman, executed a promissory note for the benefit of her brother and which he discounted at the plaintiff bank. It bore the words "value received, for my own use and benefit," on the face; but in fact she received no benefit of it and the bank officials, as the jury could find, knew this before advancing money on it. Held: (1) That there was no basis for a claim that defendant was estopped from denying that her separate estate was benefited; (2) that the hope of bettering her brother's financial affairs by the proceeds of the note, so that he might perhaps repay other moneys that he owed her, was not the "benefit" to her, contemplated by the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Benefit.]

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Monmouth County.

Action by the First National Bank of Freehold against Abbie M. Rutter. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

Vredenburg & Vredenburg and Samuel C. Cowart, all of Freehold, for appellant. John S. Applegate, of Red Bank, for respondent.

PARKER, J. Defendant is a married woman. The action is upon a promissory note signed by her and made to the order of her brother John T. McChesney, to whose credit the proceeds were placed, defendant not getting any of the money so raised. The jury found a verdict for defendant and plaintiff appeals.

The special facts of the case are as follows: Defendant is a married woman running a little business of her own. Her brother, McChesney, wished to borrow money from the plaintiff bank, which refused to discount his note. Then he asked the bank people if they would lend on his sister's note, and they said they would. The note was drawn with defendant as maker, to the order of McChesney and indorsed by him and discounted to his account. The assistant cashier said in his testimony that he knew Mrs. Rutter was not getting the proceeds of the note at the time they were placed to McChesney's credit. The bank people, knowing the dangers of a married woman's paper, wrote on the note after the words "value received," the further words "for my own use and benefit." Mrs. Rutter swore that she saw those words, but that she received no benefit from the making of the note, that it was purely for her brother's accommodation, and that the statement on the note was false. It was a jury question on the evidence whether the bank people knew or had reason to know that she was receiving no benefit from the note.

In this condition of things the question of law raised at the trial was whether she was estopped by the statement on the note from denying that she received any benefit for the use of her separate estate. Defendant claimed that she, being disabled by law from contracting for her brother's sole benefit, could not enable herself by any false statement of fact, and, admitting that she could, plaintiff knew the actual facts, and hence no estoppel arose. The trial judge left it to the jury to say whether the bank was deceived by the words on the note or put them there only to make the paper apparently good; and the jury evidently found that the bank officers knew that she was only an accommodation maker. So the question whether she could estop herself is one that in this case we need not pass upon, for if the bank officers knew the words were false, they were not entitled to advance money on her account as if they believed them true. It is suggested that she did get some benefit for her separate estate by the signature because she knew her brother was in financial difficulties and would be in a better position to look after his debts, including one that he already owed her. But this, in our judgment, is altogether too remote and shadowy to be considered as coming within the description of "money, property, or other thing of value for her own use, benefit or advantage of her separate estate" that the statute mentioned. In fact it is against just such transactions as this that the law is intended to guard.

This disposes of the fundamental points in the case. The other minor points discussed in the brief are either not properly before us, or are not such as to require special mention. We find no error properly brought up that should lead to a reversal, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

(89 N. J. Eq. 116)

BRUNETTI v. GRANDI et al. (No. 43/245.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. May 9, 1918.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS §113(2) — NOTICES OF CLAIM—EFFECT AS ASSIGNMENTS.

Notices of the claims of mechanics lienors, served under Mechanics' Lien Act, § 3, operate as assignments pro tanto of the moneys due from the owner to the contractor, to the extent necessary to pay the claims.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS §113(2) — NOTICE TO OWNER—ACTION BY NOTICING CLAIMANT.

Action at law will lie by noticing claimant of mechanic's lien against owner, but it is necessary for claimant to prove there is a sum due from owner to contractor under all terms of contract.

3. INTERPLEADER §11—UNDER MECHANICS' LIEN LAW.

Where several notices of claim of mechanic's lien are served on owner, and there is question of priority or validity, or dispute as to amount due from owner to contractor, general practice is for the owner to seek relief in equity on bill of interpleader, or in nature of interpleader.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS §113(2) — STOP NOTICES—ACTION BY CONTRACTOR.

Where there is a dispute between contractor and owner, amount due must be fixed; the approved practice being to permit contractor to proceed to judgment, though mechanic's lien claimants have filed stop notices with owner.

5. MECHANICS' LIENS §198 — ATTORNEY'S LIEN—"CAUSE OF ACTION"—PRIORITY.

Though stop notices have been served by mechanic's lien claimants on the owner, the contractor suing owner had a "cause of action" against him within attorneys' lien statute in his own right, or in right of noticing claimants, so that amount due his attorney is lien prior to liens of noticing claimants.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Cause of Action.]

Interpleader suit by Nicholas Brunetti against Antonio Grandi and Francesco Criscitelli and others. Decree for one Themistocles Mancusi-Ungario, a defendant.

Gaetano M. Belfatto, of Newark, for complainant. Osborne & Astley, of Newark, for Rome Stone Cutting Co. Stallman, Van Liew & Peck, of Newark, for Bockovan Bros. Co. Henry H. Dawson, of Newark, for Tomkins Bros. Charles G. Giffonello, of Newark, for Joseph Occhicone, Essex Mosaic Tile Co., and West Side Iron & Steel Works. Carl F. Hinrichsen, of Newark, for Cook & Genung. Kessler & Kessler, of Newark, for East Side Molding & Lumber Co., Herman Mass, Rising & Thorne, and Max Abramson. Themistocles Mancusi-Ungario, of Newark, pro se.

LANE, V. O. This is an interpleader suit brought by the owner of property against whom there had been obtained a judgment by a contractor for the balance due him for work performed under the terms of a filed contract for the construction of a building. On January 13, 1915, suit was brought at law by the builder against the owner. Judgment was obtained for $3,516.62. The case was taken to the Supreme Court and the Court of Errors and Appeals, and the judgment was finally affirmed on the 15th day of March, 1916. Prior to the institution of suit notices had been served under the third section of the Mechanic's Lien Act (3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 3204) by subcontractor, and materialmen. The amounts admitted to be due to the noticing claimants exceed the amount of the judgment. The claimant, Themistocles Mancusi-Ungario, was the attorney for the contractor in the suit at law. Immediately after the entry of judgment he obtained an assignment thereof to secure his fees and disbursements, which was duly recorded. He now claims priority over the noticing claimants for his costs and disbursements and a reasonable fee for his services rendered. There is no dispute as to the validity or priority of the claims of the respective noticing claimants, nor is there any dispute as to the amount that should be allowed the attorney, if he is entitled to priority, and the only question in the case is whether or not this priority exists.

[1-4] Prior to the adoption of the statute giving attorneys' liens (Laws of 1914, p. 410) the law seems to have been that a lien of attorneys for compensation arose only after judgment recovered, or after the proceeds of a compromise or settlement had come to the actual possession of the attorney. Magie, Chancellor, in Weller v. Jersey City, Hoboken & Paterson St. R. Co., 66 N. J. Eq. 11, 57 Atl. 730, citing Terney v. Wilson, 45 N. J. Law

(16 Vr.) 282; Philips v. Mackay, 54 N. J. Law (25 Vr.) 319, 23 Atl. 941; Barnes v. Taylor, 30 N. J. Eq. (3 Stew.) 467; Middlesex Freeholders v. State Bank, 38 N. J. Eq. (11 Stew.) 36. After the entry of judgment or decree, the defendant after notice of a claim of lien might not pay the amount due without making himself liable for the amount due the attorney for services and disbursements. Barnes v. Taylor, 30 N. J. Eq. (3 Stew.) 467. Nor could the client substitute an attorney, where there was a fund within the control of the court without satisfying the attorney's lien. Hudson Trust & Savings Inst. v. Carr-Curran Paper Mills, 44 Atl. 638. The statute (P. L. 1914, p. 410) provides that:

"After the service of a summons and complaint in any action at law, * * * the attorney, solicitor or counselor-at-law who shall appear in said cause for such party instituting the action at law, or suit, * * * shall have a lien for compensation, upon his client's cause of action, * * * which shall contain [sic] and attach to a verdict, report, decision, decree, award, judgment or final order in his client's favor, and the proceeds thereof in whosoever hands they may come."

The contention of the noticing claimants is that at the time of the service of summons the contractor had no cause of action upon which an attorney's lien could attach because the notices served theretofore had operated as assignments pro tanto of the moneys due from the owner to the contractor to the extent necessary to pay the claims. It has been held that notices served under the third section do operate as assignments pro tanto. Wightman v. Brenner, 26 N. J. Eq. 489; Kirtland v. Moore, 40 N. J. Eq. 106, 2 Atl. 269; Kreutz v. Cramer, 64 N. J. Eq. 648, 54 Atl. 535. An action at law will lie by a noticing claimant against the owner. Craig v. Smith, 37 N. J. Law, 549; Wightman v. Brenner, supra; Reeve v. Elmendorf, 38 N. J. Law, 125. In such an action it is, however, necessary for the plaintiff to prove that there is a sum due from the owner to the contractor. Such an action will not lie until the amount is due under all of the terms of the contract. Booth v. Kiefer, 60 N. J. Eq. 57, 47 Atl. 12. Where there are several notices served and there is a question of priority or validity, or where there is a dispute as to the amount due from the owner to the contractor, the general practice is to seek relief in a court of equity on bill of interpleader or in the nature of a bill of interpleader. Superintendent, etc., v. Heath, 15 N. J. Eq. 22; Aleck v. Jackson, 49 N. J. Eq. 507, 23 Atl. 760; English v. Warren, 65 N. J. Eq. 30, 54 Atl. 860; Kirtland v. Moore, supra; Hall v. Baldwin, 45 N. J. Eq. 858, 18 Atl. 976. The danger to which the owner may subject himself by permitting suits brought by stop noticing claimants to go against him before seeking relief in a court of equity by a bill of interpleader, or in the nature of a bill of interpleader, is well illustrated by the case of Pusakowski v. Woodward Lumber & Supply Co., 87 N. J. Eq.

665, 103 Atl. 194. Where the dispute is as to the amount from the owner to the contractor, the practice as to the method of determination has not been uniform. In Aleck v. Jackson, the contractor was permitted to proceed with his suit against the owner to final judgment. In that case it appeared that the amount admitted to be due by the owner to the contractor was less than the aggregate of the amounts claimed by the noticing claimants. Although the term "assignment pro tanto" has been applied to the effect of these notices, the served notices have not all the qualities of assignments, for the owner cannot, in an action brought by the contractor against him, claim credit for the amount claimed by any of the notices, unless he shall have in fact paid the amount claimed to be due. Wightman v. Brenner, supra. Notwithstanding, therefore, the service of notices the contractor retains either in his own right, or in the right of the noticing claimants, a sufficient cause of action to warrant a judgment in a law court for the full amount due from the owner under the contract. It seems to me that the holdings that the effect of the service of notice is to assign pro tanto, and that the owner has no right to credit until payment, and that the contractor may recover after the service of notice from the owner the full amount due on his claim, must necessarily result in the holding that when the contractor brings his suit against the owner he represents the claims of the noticing claimants and their causes of action. Where there is a dispute, as in this case, between the contractor and owner, it is necessary that the amount due should be fixed and determined, and an approved practice is to permit the contractor to proceed to judgment. Aleck v. Jackson, supra. A court of equity, upon bill of interpleader, or in the nature of a bill of interpleader, will not permit more than one suit to be brought for the purpose of establishing the amount due.

In the case at bar the noticing claimants brought no suit against the owner. They had knowledge of the suit of the contractor. By silence at least, they acquiesced in his prosecuting the suit to judgment. The fund in court represents the proceeds of that suit, and its existence is due to the labors of the attorney.

[5] I conclude, therefore, that the contractor had a cause of action within the meaning of the statute of 1914, either in his own right or in the right of the stop-noticing claimants, and, if in their right, then that he acted as their agent by force of the statute, and that the amount due to the attorney constitutes a lien upon the cause of action, and is entitled to be first satisfied.

This case was rather informally tried. No testimony was taken. Upon the hearing the amount, validity, and priority of the respective claims were agreed to, in open court. The amount due to the attorney if he had a lien was agreed to. My recollection is that it was also agreed that the stop-noticing claimants had notice of the bringing of the suit by the contractor, and that none of them brought suits upon their stop notices. If there is any question but that the facts above stated are correct, then testimony must be taken to establish them before the signing of a final decree. If the case goes up without the taking of further testimony, it must go up with the facts in these conclusions admitted.

Settle decree on two days' notice.

(89 N. J. Eq. 99)

POSTAL TELEGRAPH CABLE CO. OF
NEW JERSEY v. DELAWARE, L. &
W. R. CO. et al. (No. 41/648.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 13, 1918.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES \Leftrightarrow 20(2) — EASEMENT IN POST ROAD — CHANGE OF GRADE — RIGHT OF ACTION.

Telegraph company maintaining poles in post road crossed by railroad at grade cannot enjoin township and county from changing grade of road because it would interfere temporarily with poles, or recover cost of changing location of poles, and of restoring them to former location; easement being subject to public rights in highway.

2. RAILROADS \Leftrightarrow 99(2) — TELEGRAPH LINE — CHANGE IN GRADE OF POST ROAD — EXPENSE OF SHIFTING POLES.

Work of changing grade of post road at railroad crossing, under agreement between township and county authorities and railroad, with legislative sanction, held not for railroad's sole benefit to render it liable to telegraph company for expenses of temporary relocation of poles in post road during work.

3. RAILROADS \Leftrightarrow 99(2) — TELEGRAPH LINE —
SHIFTING POLES — CHANGE IN GRADE OF POST ROAD.

Where township and county had right to change grade of post road at railroad crossing, under agreement with railroad having legislative sanction, railroad, which did work, was not liable to telegraph company for cost of shifting poles temporarily, railroad standing toward municipalities in relation of contractor and employé.

Suit by the Postal Telegraph Cable Company of New Jersey against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company and others. Decree dismissing the bill advised.

Vredenburgh, Wall & Carey, of Jersey City, for complainant. W. J. Larrabee, of New York City, for Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. F. W. Van Blarcom, of Paterson, for Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Passaic. W. B. Gourley, of Paterson, for Township of Acquackonk.

GRIFFIN, V. C. This cause is submitted upon the pleadings and a stipulation of facts, from which it appears that the River road in the township of Acquackonk in the county of Passaic is a public highway which was crossed by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad at grade; that said River road is a post road within the meaning of the act of Congress, within the lines of which the complainant had erected its telegraph poles carrying wires for the transmission of messages. The railroad company and the township and county authorities entered into an agreement to change the grade of the River road to abolish the grade crossing, under Laws 1903, p. 661, §§ 30, 31, Comp. Stat. p. 4234 (section 30 amended P. L. 1915, p. 98, 1 Supp. Comp. Stat. p. 1299). In doing the work it became necessary to temporarily remove the telegraph poles and wires of the complainant to a point outside the lines of highway, anticipating which the complainant filed its bill to restrain this disturbance, and obtained an order to show cause, with restraint, upon the hearing of which an order was entered on the 19th day of June, 1916, on motion of the solicitors of all the parties, which, after permitting the work to be proceeded with, ordered as follows:

"Further ordered, that the question, which of the parties shall be liable for the cost and expense of such relocation or reconstruction and the restoration of said poles and lines to within the lines of said River road upon the completion of said improvement, and the costs on said order allowed June 3, 1916, abide the final decree of this court."

The complainant thereafter removed its poles, wires, etc., outside the lines of the road, and restored the same after the change of grade was completed, at an expense of $1,137.63.

The question now presented is which of the parties should bear this expense. First, are the municipalities liable?

[1] If the complainant sought to enjoin the municipalities from changing the grade of the road because it would interfere temporarily with the maintenance of its poles in the locus in quo, or if it sued to recover the cost of changing the location of its poles during the improvement and restoring them to their former location after its completion, it is quite clear it would fail in both instances, because its easement is subservient to the rights of the public in the highway, from which it follows that the cost of all changes of location in the highway, made necessary to the use of the dominant right of the public in the highway, must be paid by the owners of what might be termed the subordinate easement. Jersey City v. City of Hudson, 13 N. J. Eq. 420; Erie R. R. Co. v. Public Utilities Com'rs, 89 N. J. Law, 57, 98 Atl. 13, affirmed 90 N. J. Law, 372, 673, 103 Atl. 1052.

Second, is the railroad company liable?

[2, 3] The complainant insists that even though the municipalities are not liable, the railroad company is. Its view is that the change of grade was made for the sole benefit of the railroad company. With this I do not agree, and do not deem it necessary to pass upon what the situation would be if this contention were true. The change of grade was made with legislative sanction, which authorized municipalities and the railroad companies to enter into agreements to abolish grade crossings—a thing clearly beneficial to both—and fixing the portion of the expense to be borne by the municipalities. This is precisely what defendants did. In the sixth paragraph the municipalities agreed to take the necessary official, or other action, etc., to carry out the provisions of the agreement, etc. In the fifth paragraph the municipalities agreed (among other things) to secure the removal and relocation of the poles in question, where rendered necessary to perform the work contemplated. This paragraph was evidently inserted to bind the municipalities to exercise their rights to compel the removal or relocation of the poles during the work, so that the same might not be impeded. The railroad company assumed no liability under this paragraph.

The complainant, as I understand it, makes the point, which is combated in defendants' brief, that, as the railroad did the work (which is true), coupled with the assertion that it was for the railroad's sole benefit (which I have found to be untrue), a legal or equitable right arises in favor of the complainant against the railroad company to reimbursement. I do not deem it necessary to pass on this compound contention, if it is so urged, because the element of sole benefit to the railroad company is missing; and, as to the fact that the railroad company did the work, that fact alone does not render the railroad company liable, because, in doing it, it stood toward the municipalities in the relation of contractor and employé. Clark v. Elizabeth, 61 N. J. Law, 565-577, 40 Atl. 616, 737.

Being of the opinion that the defendants are not liable to reimburse the complainant, a decree will be advised dismissing the bill.

(89 N. J. Eq. 91)

FREILE et al. v. RUDIGER et al.

(No. 39/46.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. May 20, 1918.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES — 495 — LIABILITY OF INDORSER—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Burden is on an indorser of note to show contract different from that raised by indorsements.

2. DISCOVERY — 15 — ACTION ON NOTE—PARTIES INTERESTED.

Where holder of note on failure of maker to pay applied to payee, who had a claim against the holder for an amount equal to note, for payment, and it was agreed that holder would pay such amount if he could collect note from intermediate indorser, and payee wrote "without recourse" after his indorsement, and holder sued intermediate indorser, the real party in interest was the payee, and he could be brought in as defendant by the intermediate indorser on bill of discovery.

3. BILLS AND NOTES §301—INDORSEMENTS—DISCHARGE OF INDORSERS.

Where payee of note on being presented note for payment wrote "without recourse" after his indorsement, failure of the holder to disavow the alteration after knowledge thereof was a ratification of a material alteration which operated as discharge of subsequent indorsers.

Bill by William Freile and others against Joseph H. Rudiger and others. Decree for complainants.

Randolph Perkins, of Jersey City, for complainants. Treacy & Milton, of Jersey City, for defendant Rudiger. McDermott & Enright, of Jersey City, for defendants Schatzkin and Oetjen.

GRIFFIN, V. C. The bill in this cause is filed for discovery in aid of a suit at law against the complainants, William Freile, Anthony Michel, and P. Edward Wisch, upon a promissory note made by Orpheum Amusement Company (upon which the complainants are indorsers subsequent to the defendant Rudiger, who is payee and first indorser), and for a perpetual injunction against the suit at law, and for a decree that the note be delivered up for cancellation, and for other relief. The note, at maturity, was protested for non-payment by Schatzkin, the holder thereof. It seems that after the note had been protested, Schatzkin delivered the same to Rudiger, the payee and first indorser, to hand to his (Schatzkin's) attorneys for collection, under circumstances hereinafter stated. Rudiger, who was a director and vice president of a bank who knew the order of liability between indorsers, wrote after his name the words "without recourse" and handed the note to the attorneys of Schatzkin. The bill contains numerous prayers for discovery, one of which called on the defendants Rudiger, Schatzkin, and Oetjen to discover what interest either of them had in the note, and what interest Schatzkin or Rudiger had in the suit at law. The defendant Rudiger, answering this prayer, denied that "he is the beneficial owner of the note," or "that neither at this time nor at any other time has he had any interest in said note and the suit instituted thereon by the said Henry A. Oetjen."

The joint answer of Schatzkin and Oetjen denies that Rudiger has any right, title, or interest in said note, but does not state whether he has any interest in the suit at law. These answers, in the respects above stated, are not strictly true, because Mr. Rudiger was the one most vitally interested in the suit at law. Schatzkin and Oetjen also filed an answer by way of cross-bill against the complainants and Rudiger, praying that the words "without recourse" be stricken from the indorsement of Rudiger, and that the complainants and Rudiger be decreed to pay to them the amount due upon the note.

Three questions are presented for consideration: First, was there an agreement between the complainants and the defendant Rudiger that complainants should be liable on the note prior to Rudiger? Second, was the suit at law instituted for the benefit of Mr. Schatzkin, or Mr. Rudiger, the payee? Third, was there such a material alteration made in the note after its delivery to Schatzkin that, under the Negotiable Instruments Act, (3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 3732), it is void as to the complainants?

[1] First. Was there an agreement between the indorsers that the liability of the complainants should be prior to that of the defendant Rudiger? In Polhemus v. Prudential Realty Corporation, 74 N. J. Law, 570-577, 67 Atl. 303, 306, the Court of Errors said:

"When there are several parties to a bill or note who have become such for the benefit of another, their status, not only as to the holder for value, but inter sese, is, in the absence of relevant proof to the contrary, that which is shown by the paper upon which they have placed their names."

In the present case, the evidence offered for and against an agreement varying the contract raised by the order of indorsement is so vague, indefinite, and contradictory that the court cannot find that such contract existed; and, as the burden of proof is on Rudiger to show a contract different from that raised by the indorsements, and as he has not sustained that burden, he fails.

[2] As to the second and third questions: Schatzkin says that when the note was not paid he demanded payment of Rudiger, and then an arrangement was entered into between them, which, in answer to a question of his counsel, Schatzkin explained as follows:

"A. Mr. Rudiger had a claim for an even amount of $2,500 for some insurance, which he came to me and tried to collect; and I told him, I said, 'You owe me $2,500 for the note; deduct the amount you owe me on the note, $2,500, to cover one amount for the other;' he said, 'Well, I suppose I will be responsible anyway, if it cannot be collected from them,' and we had an understanding that if I can't collect the note from Mr. Wisch or the other indorsers, then I shall deduct it from the amount due him; and in case I do collect the note, then I shall have to turn him over the $2,500 for the claim he had. Q. At any rate, it was a $2,500 debt? A. Yes, which nominally I owe him now, and I hold him responsible on the note. That was understood between us, that one should offset the other; if I collect here, I pay him his money, and if not, it should be deducted."

Pursuant to this agreement the note was delivered to Rudiger to take to Schatzkin's attorneys for collection. Rudiger thereupon wrote, under his indorsement, the words "without recourse" and delivered it to an attorney connected with Schatzkin's attorneys, at the same time advising him that he had written the words "without recourse" after his signature. Schatzkin assigned the note to one Oetjen, a clerk in said attorneys' office, for the purpose of suit only. Oetjen had no beneficial interest either in the note or the moneys collected thereon. Oetjen sued on the note in the Supreme Court. Rudiger was not made a party defendant. After the commencement of the suit at law Schatzkin learned of the alteration, but did not object until his answer was filed herein.

On the foregoing facts, it is quite apparent that Mr. Schatzkin and Mr. Rudiger, in answering the above prayers for discovery, were untruthful. It is quite plain that Mr. Schatzkin was only nominally interested; that the real plaintiff and the one for whose benefit the suit was brought was Rudiger; and that his purpose in writing the words "without recourse" after his name was to avoid the liability imposed on him by law according to the order of indorsement.

[3] If Schatzkin should be regarded as the person beneficially interested in the suit at law, and he failed, after knowledge of the facts, to disavow the alteration, he ratified Rudiger's act; and the alteration being material, changing the rights and liabilities of the indorsers, inter sese, operates as a discharge of the complainants from liability. Bodine v. Berg, 82 N. J. Law, 662-669, 82 Atl. 901, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 65, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 721; Gray v. Williams (Vt.) 99 Atl. 735; Crawford's Annot. Neg. Inst. Law, p. 196, § 120, and cases cited.

The parties having gone to hearing, and having stated on the record that they desired the whole controversy to be decided, the court, in its discretion, will retain jurisdiction and decide the issues. Lehigh Zinc & Iron Co. v. Trotter, 48 N. J. Eq. 185-204, 7 Atl. 650, 10 Atl. 607; Van Horn v. Demarest, 76 N. J. Eq. 386-391, 77 Atl. 354; Knikel v. Spitz, 74 N. J. Eq. 581-584, 70 Atl. 992; Varrick v. Hitt, 66 N. J. Eq. 442-444, 57 Atl. 406; Mertens v. Schlemme, 68 N. J. Eq. 544-548, 59 Atl. 803; Coast Co. v. Spring Lake, 56 N. J. Eq. 615-627, 36 Atl. 21.

The decree will be for complainants, the form of which may be settled on notice. What decree Mr. Schatzkin may be entitled to against Mr. Rudiger may then be considered.

(92 Vt. 319)

CHARLES BIANCHI & SONS v. MONTPELIER & W. R. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Washington. May 8, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS §180(3)—BILL OF LADING—CONSTRUCTION—PRIVATE SWITCHES.

That a railroad may put goods on a siding does not make it other than private within bill of lading that carrier shall incur no liability for goods received from or delivered on private sidings, where such place of delivery was fixed by the bill, with the making of which the terminal carrier had nothing to do.

2. CARRIERS §149½ — BILL OF LADING — VALIDITY.

A provision in a bill of lading that property when received from or delivered on private sidings shall be at the owner's risk while on such sidings is reasonable and valid.

3. CARRIERS §49—PROVISIONS IN BILL OF LADING—PRESUMPTION.

The law presumes that a shipper agreed to be bound by a provision in bill of lading that the carrier would not be liable for property received from or delivered on private siding except when attached to train.

4. CARRIERS §175—CONNECTING CARRIERS—DELIVERY AT PRIVATE SIDING—NOTICE TO CONSIGNEE.

Where under a nonnegotiable bill of lading property was delivered on private siding, the terminal carrier had a right to act upon the basis that the shipper, who was also consignee, still held the bill of lading, and the property could be placed upon the siding without receipt of the bill of lading and without notifying the consignee.

5. CARRIERS §142—DUTY AS WAREHOUSEMEN.

Where carrier places goods on private siding, and its duty as carrier has ceased, if it still has any duty as warehouseman, it is only bound to use ordinary care in keeping the goods safe.

6. CARRIERS §146—DUTY AS WAREHOUSEMAN—NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of proof is on a shipper to show negligence of a carrier in its relation as warehouseman.

7. CARRIERS §143—DUTY AS WAREHOUSEMAN.

Assuming that carrier was not relieved of its common-law duty as warehouseman after placing property on private siding, a monument from its very nature was not improperly allowed to remain in a car on a siding.

8. CARRIERS §146—DUTY AS WAREHOUSEMAN—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether carrier was guilty of negligence in its relation as warehouseman in leaving property in a car on a switch, held, under the evidence, a question of fact for the trial court.

Exceptions from Washington County Court; Stanley C. Wilson, Judge.

Action by Charles Bianchi & Sons against the Montpelier & Wells River Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring exceptions. Affirmed.

The trial of this case was by court. It is found that on the 3d day of September, 1915, the plaintiffs delivered to the defendant at Barre, this state, the monument in question, manufactured by them for the Norman Monument Company of St. Louis, Mo., and received of the defendant a bill of lading which is made a part of the findings. The monument consisted of four pieces, each of which was boxed and marked "Chas. Bianchi & Sons [the plaintiffs], St. Louis, Mo." The bill of lading reads: "Consigned to C. Bianchi & Sons. Destination, St. Louis, Mo., L. H. Tieman switch on Mo. Pac." The bill of lading had printed across its face the words, "Not negotiable."

The terminal carrier, the Missouri Pacific Railroad, at the point of destination, without the production of the bill of lading, delivered the car containing the monument onto the Tieman switch mentioned in the bill of lading. The monument was unloaded from the car by Tieman and held on wagons for 20 days, when it was delivered to him to the Norman Monument Company at Mt. Sinai Cemetery, and was afterwards set up there in a family lot.

The L. H. Tieman mentioned lived at St. Louis, and had had the switch in question built by the Missouri Pacific Railroad for his convenience, it being understood that he should be responsible for the freight charges on all shipments placed on that switch. The switch or siding named abutted on Tieman's land, and no one except Tieman and the railroad company could have goods placed thereon without the former's consent. The plaintiffs lived in Barre, this state, and had no expectation of receiving the monument personally at St. Louis. They had previously shipped monumental work to the Tieman switch. No notice was ever given to Tieman of the arrival of the car containing the monument in question upon the switch, except that he found it there on the tracks of the switch. He unloaded the car because Mr. Norman, of the Norman Monument Company, had told him that he was expecting it; but Norman had not told Tieman who the shipper was.

The bill of lading was never assigned to any one by the plaintiff, and was always in their possession until it was delivered in court at the time of the trial of this case. The plaintiffs never gave any order for the delivery of the monument to any one; nor have they ever paid the freight for its transportation, though it was paid to the delivering railroad by some one, but by whom it did not appear. The plaintiffs have never received pay for the monument, nor have they ever received the monument from the terminal railroad, unless the delivery onto the Tieman switch was in law a delivery to them as consignees.

It is stated in the finding of facts that there was no evidence of any loss, misdelivery, or conversion of the monument by any of the carriers unless the facts recited constitute such, and that there was no evidence of any neglect or shortage or duty on the part of the defendant unless the facts recited constitute such.

The judgment below was for the defendant, and the plaintiffs excepted.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HAS-ELTON, POWERS, and TAYLOR, JJ.

Richard A. Hoar, of Barre, for plaintiff.
H. C. Shurtleff, of Montpelier, for defendant.

WATSON, C. J. The bill of lading stipulated the Tieman switch as the place of delivery. The contract was controlling in this respect, and the monument was delivered by the terminal carrier at that place accordingly.

[1] The facts found show that the Tieman switch is a private siding built for the convenience of Tieman, who, by reason thereof, became responsible for freight charges on all shipments placed thereon. The fact that the railroad may put goods on that siding did not make it other than private in this instance where the place of delivery was fixed by contract, with the making of which the terminal carrier had nothing to do.

[2, 3] The bill of lading contains a provision as follows:

"Property, * * * when received from or delivered on private or other sidings, wharves, or landings, shall be at the owner's risk until the cars are attached to and after they are detached from trains."

This provision is reasonable in the eye of the law, and not inconsistent with public policy; and the law presumes that the plaintiffs assented thereto and agreed to be bound by it. Davis v. Central Vermont R. Co., 66 Vt. 290, 29 Atl. 813, 44 Am. St. Rep. 852; Leavens v. American Express Co., 86 Vt. 842, 85 Atl. 557, Ann. Cas. 1915O, 1188.

[4] When the car containing the monument was delivered on the Tieman switch specified, and was detached from the train, and the consignees were given a reasonable opportunity to inspect the monument and take it away, the responsibility of the carrier, as such, ceased. Stone v. Waitt, 31 Me. 409, 52 Am. Dec. 621; Michigan Southern, etc., R. Co. v. Day, 20 Ill. 375, 71 Am. Dec. 278; Schumacher v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 207 Ill. 199, 69 N. E. 825; Kingman, St. Louis Impl. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 133 Mo. App. 317, 112 S. W. 721; Gulf Compress Co. v. Alabama Great Southern R. Co., 100 Miss. 582, 56 South. 666; 10 O. J. 233; 4 R. O. L. 833. It is urged, however, that the placing of the car upon the side track, as per bill of lading, without notice of its arrival being given to the consignees, and the bill of lading surrendered, was not such a delivery as will relieve the carrier from liability. But this position is unsound so far as surrendering the bill of lading is concerned, for that was not negotiable, and the property was delivered at the place stipulated therein. The terminal carrier had a right to act upon the basis that the consignees still held the bill of lading and were the owners of the property until it was notified to the contrary. National Bank v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 90 Md. 661, 59 Atl. 134, 105 Am. St. Rep. 321. By the law of this state the carrier was not bound to give notice to the consignees of the arrival of the property at the place of destination, in order to relieve it, as such, from liability. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402, 91 Am. Dec. 349. On facts of record, there is no ground upon which the defendant can be held liable in its capacity as a common carrier.

[5-8] The question then is whether the defendant is liable in its relation of a warehouseman. Assuming that the provisions quoted above from the bill of lading do not relieve the carrier from its common-law duty in this respect, have the plaintiffs made out a case? In this relation the carrier is bound only to use ordinary care and diligence in keeping the goods safely. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, cited above. And the burden of proof is with the plaintiffs. The record states that there was no evidence of any neglect or shortage of duty on the part of the defendant unless the facts recited constitute such. The nature of the goods was such that in the performance of its duties as warehouseman the terminal carrier might very properly let the goods remain in the car on the siding (where it was required to be placed by the bill of lading), instead of putting them in a storehouse. Schumacher v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., cited above. The carrier delivered the monument to no one other than the plaintiffs, nor did it authorize its removal from the car or from the siding by any one except the plaintiffs. The facts recited do not, as matter of law, constitute neglect or shortage of duty by it, and there was no error in the judgment.

Since liability on the part of the defendant is not established, the questions argued touching the amount of damages are immaterial.

Judgment affirmed.

MILES, J., did not sit.

(32 Vt. 330)

WELLS v. BLODGETT.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Caledonia.
May 8, 1918.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §47—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—LOCATION.

Location of property is not indispensable in description of property in chattel mortgage.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §49(1)—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY—DETERMINATION.

In testing sufficiency of description to give purchaser constructive notice of chattel mortgage, it will not be assumed that mortgagor had more than the one red and white cow four years old described in the mortgage; that he had being a matter of defense.

3. TRIAL §178—DIRECTED VERDICT.

In trover for alleged conversion of a cow on which plaintiff held a mortgage from his purchaser, defendant's seller, in which defendant set up insufficient description to give constructive notice, a binding instruction could not be granted unless the court could say, as a matter of law, that description was insufficient.

4. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §47—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY IN GENERAL.

As to third persons having constructive notice only, description in a chattel mortgage must be such that property can be identified by reference to the mortgage itself aided by such inquiries as may be indicated or directed thereby.

5. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §49(1)—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—PRIMA FACIE VALIDITY.

The general rule is that a description in chattel mortgage of animals by sex, age, and color is sufficient to give the description prima facie validity.

6. TRIAL §178—DIRECTED VERDICT—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—PRESUMPTION.

In determining sufficiency of description of cow in chattel mortgage to give defendant subsequent purchaser constructive notice, it will be assumed for purpose of defendant's request for a binding instruction that cow was truly described as to color.

7. TRIAL §178—DIRECTED VERDICT—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY IN MORTGAGE.

In determining the sufficiency of description of cow in chattel mortgage to give subsequent purchaser constructive notice, facts disclosed in evidence of which subsequent purchaser must be deemed to have had notice will be taken into account.

8. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §49(1) — CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Description "one red and white four years old" in chattel mortgage describing 12 cows was prima facie sufficient, and question whether it was sufficient to create a lien against defendant purchaser from mortgagor was for jury.

9. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §229(1) — PURCHASERS' RIGHT.

Where plaintiff mortgagee was relying upon three mortgages, two of which were executed after a time which evidence tended to show was after sale of the property by the mortgagor to defendant, the court erred in refusing to instruct that plaintiff could not recover by virtue of any mortgage executed after defendant's purchase and possession.

10. TRIAL §253(3) — SUBMISSION OF CASE UPON ERRONEOUS THEORY.

In trover for conversion of a cow, disputed fact being accuracy of description in mortgage, submitting case upon theory that determinative issue was identity of cow mortgaged was inadequate.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR §1067—FAILURE TO CHARGE IN ACCORDANCE WITH ISSUE—REVERSAL.

In trover for conversion of a cow, disputed fact being accuracy of description in mortgage, failure to charge that, if color of cow was as described, description was sufficient, otherwise not, was error requiring reversal.

Exceptions from Caledonia County Municipal Court; George O. Frye, Judge.

Trover by Joseph L. Wells against Roy E. Blodgett. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings exceptions. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Searles & Graves, of St. Johnsbury, for plaintiff. Porter, Witters & Harvey, of St. Johnsbury, for defendant.

TAYLOR, J. The action is trover to recover for the alleged conversion of a certain cow on which the plaintiff claimed to hold a mortgage. The trial was by jury, with verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. There was evidence tending to show that the defendant purchased the cow of one Cushman; that Cushman had previously bought the cow from the plaintiff; that he had given the plaintiff three chattel mortgages covering this cow and other personal property; that the mortgage liens were still in force; that before this suit was brought the defendant had sold the cow to one Gilman. The plaintiff produced in evidence three chattel mortgages from Cushman to himself, one executed in September, 1913, and the other two in October, 1914, on which he based his right of recovery.

The principal issues at the trial were as to the color of the cow in question and the date of her purchase by the defendant. By a special verdict the jury found that the purchase was in June, 1914. It was not claimed that the cow purchased by the defendant was not the one the plaintiff sold Cushman; but the defendant relied upon the claim that the description in the mortgage was insufficient to create a lien against a third person, among other things, in that the color of the animal was not truly stated. It did not appear whether the defendant had or did not have notice of an incumbrance other than such constructive notice as the record of the mortgages would impart; but no claim has been made that the rights of the parties are affected thereby.

The plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the cow was still in Cushman's possession when the last mortgage was executed, and that she was a red and white grade Durham, four years old at the time of the original mortgage; while the defendant's evidence tended to show, as the jury has found, that she was sold and delivered to the defendant in June, 1914, before the two last mortgages were executed, and that she was not in color red and white, but a gray or Jersey color, with no distinct markings.

The chattel mortgage of September, 1913, so far as is material, described 12 cows, giving the color and age of each, including "one red and white, 4 yrs.," and concluded, without more, "All above-described cows are grade Durhams and Holsteins." The location of the mortgaged property is not given in the description. There was evidence tending to show that the cows described in this mortgage were at the time of its execution in Cushman's possession on his farm in St. Johnsbury, and were the only cows then on said farm.

[1] By certain requests the defendant asked for a binding instruction that as to the cow in question the mortgage was of no force, because of an insufficient description. It is urged, citing Joslyn v. Moose River Lumber Co., 83 Vt. 50, 74 Atl. 385, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1067, 21 Ann. Cas. 1024, as a ground of insufficiency, that the location of the property sought to be mortgaged is not given. It was said in the case cited that one of the most important elements in the description of mortgaged chattels is a statement of their location and the one thing which the draftsmen of a mortgage should never omit. These remarks were cautionary and are of force at the present time. They were specially significant in that case, where an erroneous location of the property was suggested. However, it was not held that location of the property is indispensable to a sufficient description. It will always aid in identifying the property, and may often render a mortgage otherwise indefinite and uncertain sufficiently certain by making the mortgage itself indicate where the property may be found on inquiry.

[2] It is also said in support of the claimed insufficiency that it does not appear from the mortgage, but that the mortgagor at the time owned either cows answering the description. But in testing the sufficiency of the description it will not be assumed that he may have had more than one red and white cow 4 years old. That fact would be a matter of defense in impeachment of the mortgage. Shum v. Claghorn, 69 Vt. 45, 59, 87 Atl. 236.

[3, 4] The requests for a binding instruction could not be complied with unless the court could say as a matter of law that the description was insufficient. As a general proposition, to be sufficient against third persons having constructive notice only, the description in a chattel mortgage must be such that the property can be identified by reference to the instrument itself, aided by such inquiries as may be indicated or directed thereby. 5 R. C. L. 484; Rogers v. Whitney, 91 Vt. 78, 99 Atl. 419; National Bank of Chelsea v. Fitts, 67 Vt. 57, 30 Atl. 697.

[5] It is the well-settled general rule that the description of animals by sex, age, and color is sufficient to give the description prima facie validity. Shum v. Claghorn, supra; Rogers v. Whitney, supra. However, this rule is subordinate to the rule stated above. The ultimate question is whether the description in the particular case is such as to enable a third person to identify the property by its aid, together with the aid of such inquiries as the instrument itself suggests. See Parker v. Chase, 62 Vt. 206, 20 Atl. 198, 22 Am. St. Rep. 90, and cases cited above.

[6-8] For the purposes of a request for a binding instruction (the equivalent of a motion for a directed verdict) we must assume that the cow in question was truly described. We must also take into account the facts disclosed in the evidence, of which the defendant must be deemed to have had notice. The record of the mortgage charged him with notice that Cushman, from whom he was about to purchase a red and white grade Durham cow, had in September, 1913, mortgaged to the plaintiff 12 cows all grade Durhams and Holsteins, including a red and white cow, then four years old. It would be presumed in aid of the description that Cushman was then the owner of the cows. Shum v. Claghorn, 69 Vt. 45, 50, 87 Atl. 236. Inquiry would have disclosed that Cushman had in his possession when the mortgage was given, on the farm where this cow was in June, 1914, 12 cows answering the description of mortgage, and no more, and would have identified the cow he was purchasing as one of this number. With this information the defendant could not well have had any doubt that the mortgage covered this particular animal. In the circumstances the description was prima facie sufficient, and the case was for the jury.

[9] The court erred in refusing to comply with the defendant's first request, which was that the jury be instructed that the plaintiff could not recover by virtue of any mortgage executed by Cushman to him after the defendant had purchased and taken possession of the cow (in question). The plaintiff was relying upon three mortgages, two of which were executed after a time when there was evidence tending to show Cushman had parted with the property. The jury found for the defendant on this issue, and should have been told that in case they so found the mortgages subsequently executed could not be considered as a basis of recovery.

There were other requests to charge which need not be specifically noticed. They present abstract questions of law, and are not applicable to the facts in issue in this case.

[10, 11] The charge of the court is challenged by several exceptions. The case was submitted upon the theory that the determinative issue was the identity of the cow, whether the cow mortgaged by Cushman to the plaintiff was the same cow that Cushman sold the defendant. As the case was tried this was an inadequate submission of the disputed fact. The jury was told that the description by age, sex, and color was prima facie sufficient, and that the question for their consideration was the identity of the cow; while, as the case was made up, they should have been charged that whether or not the mortgage was binding against the defendant depended upon the accuracy of the description; that, if the color of the cow was as described in the mortgage, the description was sufficient to give the mortgage validity as against the defendant; otherwise not. This fault was sufficiently pointed out and requires a reversal.

The defendant moved the court to set aside the verdict and excepted to the overruling of his motion. As the defendant prevails on other exceptions, it is not necessary to consider the questions presented by this motion.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

(92 Vt. 335)

WRIGHT v. LINDSAY.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Orleans. May 8, 1918.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES \Leftrightarrow 47 — CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

Description in mortgage, "One Ford touring automobile, model T, serial No. 621120, being the same automobile purchased of Wright November 2, 1915," was sufficient to charge the purchaser from mortgagor with knowledge, since automobile could be identified by reference to recorded mortgage.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES \Leftrightarrow 102—CONSTRUCTION.

Provisions of chattel mortgage must be so construed that every part may be effectual.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR \Leftrightarrow 219(2)—FAILURE TO PROCURE FINDINGS.

Defendant, having failed to procure findings that take away prima facie effect of description in chattel mortgage, cannot complain on appeal of judgment for plaintiff based on finding that description was sufficient to give defendant constructive notice.

Exceptions from Orleans County Court; Fred M. Butler, Judge.

Replevin by William Wright against W. C. Lindsay. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings exceptions. Judgment affirmed.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Porter, Witters & Harvey, of St. Johnsbury, for plaintiff. J. W. Redmond, of Newport, for defendant.

TAYLOR, J. The action is replevin for an automobile. The plaintiff claims the property as mortgagee and the defendant as vendee of the mortgagor. The trial was by the court with judgment for the plaintiff on the facts found. The defendant excepted to the judgment on the findings, which is the only question presented for review.

On November 2, 1915, the plaintiff sold and delivered to one Baldwin the automobile in question and took a chattel mortgage to secure a note for the purchase price. The mortgage was duly recorded on November 9, 1915. The note was payable six months after date, and still remains in part unpaid. The description in the mortgage is as follows:

"One Ford touring automobile, model T, serial No. 621120, being the same automobile purchased of W. A. Wright November 2, 1915; one brown mare eight years old, weight about 1,000 pounds; one Babcock open buggy and one driving harness—all said property being now in the possession of said Baldwin in Newport, Vt., and being the only property of like kind now owned by said Baldwin."

The defendant purchased said automobile of said Baldwin on November 10, 1916, and took it into his possession, where it was found when replevied. Demand was made of the defendant for the automobile before service of the writ of replevin, who refused to deliver it on the ground that there was no sufficient description of the automobile in the chattel mortgage, and that there was no mortgage on the automobile.

On the trial the defendant denied the plaintiff's right to the automobile on the ground that the description contained in the chattel mortgage does not describe the automobile in question and is not such a description as would charge him with knowledge of said mortgage. The serial number given in the description was the serial number on the engine. There were at least five different serial numbers of principal parts on this automobile. There was a plate on the dash of the car on which were the words, "Mfg.'s number of this car is 593350." It is found that the latter number was commonly used by the manufacturers, repair shops, insurance agents, and by the Secretary of State to identify the Ford car, until the year 1916, when such cars began to appear in this section without such number plate on the body; that sometimes the engine number is used for the purpose of identification, and that usually the manufacturer's number is employed to identify the assembled units. The defendant did not claim that there was any universal rule as to the use of any particular number for the purpose of identification. The automobile replevied was the one sold by the plaintiff to Baldwin on November 2, 1915, and was the one intended to be mortgaged. The court found that its identity could have been easily established by inquiries suggested in the description contained in the mortgage.

[1, 2] In view of the findings there seems to be little room for doubt as to the validity of this mortgage against third persons, when we apply the well-recognized test in such cases that the description is sufficient if such that the property can be identified by reference to the instrument, aided by such inquiries as it suggests. Wells v. Blodgett, 104 Atl. 146, and cases there cited. The only room for doubt arises from the designation of the automobile by a number which, at the most, would not ordinarily be employed for the purposes of identification. But this alone is not enough to nullify the notice that the mortgage would impart. The instrument must be construed together in view of all its parts so that every part may be effectual. 5 R. C. L. 422.

The number used actually appeared upon the car and was one sometimes employed for identification. So far as appears, the defendant was not misled thereby. However, the inquiries suggested by the instrument would correct any misapprehension that the number could have created and afforded ample basis of identification, notwithstanding the confusion which may have been occasioned by the presence of other numbers.

The defendant's construction of the findings savors too much of special pleading. It is said that it is not found that the car was a "Ford touring automobile," nor that it was a "model T." To be sure, the expressions are not used in the findings; but the car is termed a "Ford automobile," and its identity with the car intended to be mortgaged is expressly found. The identity being established, the only question is the sufficiency of the description to give the defendant constructive notice that this particular automobile was mortgaged.

[3] The defendant was bound to know from the record of the mortgage that a Ford touring automobile of a certain model and number, purchased by Baldwin of the plaintiff on a certain day, then in Baldwin's possession, and, being the only automobile that he then owned, was the same day mortgaged to the plaintiff. Aided by the inquiries which this description suggests, the defendant would certainly have been able, upon reasonable investigation, to ascertain that the automobile he was about to purchase of the mortgagor was the one that had been mortgaged to the plaintiff. This is all that is required to give the description prima facie validity. Having failed to procure findings that take away the prima facie effect of the description, the defendant is not in a position to question the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

(361 Pa. 11)

DOLAN et al. v. SCHOEN et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 18, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS \S 330(2)—CONTRACTS—ADVERTISEMENT FOR BIDS—STATUTE — "NECESSARY REPAIRS OR INCIDENTAL EXPENSES."

Under Third Class City Act (Act June 27, 1913 [P. L. 568, 578]) art. 4, § 5, providing that all work and materials required by city shall be furnished, and that the printing, advertising, and other work, except ordinary repairs, shall be performed under contract given to the lowest bidder, and that the council may by ordinance provide a contingent fund for necessary repairs or incidental expenses, which may be expended without advertising for bids, contracts for improvements to a city hall, amounting to a permanent alteration and remodeling, including new heating, lighting, and pumping systems, new partitions, stairways, windows, entrances, etc., must be let as provided by the act, and cannot be paid out of the contingent fund without competitive bidding, as such claims could not be included under the term "necessary repairs or incidental expenses"; and while some of the work might be classed as ordinary repairs, it was so blended with the other work that it could not be the basis of a separate claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Necessary Repairs; First Series, Incidental Expenses.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS \S 244(2) — MUNICIPAL CONTRACTS—CHARTER.

Where the Charter Act of a city prescribes the method or formal mode of making municipal contracts, it must be observed, and, if not executed in conformity therewith, the contract is not enforceable against the municipality.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Schuylkill County.

Bill in equity for an injunction by Hugh Dolan, for himself and for other taxpayers becoming parties, against Jacob B. Schoen and others, councilmen, and others. From a decree awarding an injunction on the final hearing, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

E. P. Leuschner and James B. Reilly, both of Pottsville, for appellants. E. D. Smith, of Pottsville, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is a taxpayer's bill to restrain the expenditure of public money. Pottsville is a city of the third class; and, at the beginning of 1916, its councilmen decided to remodel and improve the city hall. For such purpose $2,500 were included in the general appropriation ordinance for that year. An architect was employed to prepare plans and specifications, and thereafter, upon due advertisement, bids were submitted for different parts of the work, a tabulation of which showed that the improvement would cost nearly $2,000 more than the sum appropriated, and the bids were rejected. Then the council transferred the $2,500 to a contingent fund. Hiram S. Davies, a member of council, was superintendent of parks and public property, and as such took a leading part in this matter. He consulted with some who had submitted bids and with others, took them to the city hall, and verbally explained what was to be done in the different branches of the work; secured new bids on such explanations without advertising, and ignoring the original plans and specifications. The mayor and council let contracts on such new bids, and the work was proceeded with. The improvement as so made cost about $2,000, and included new heating, lighting, and plumbing systems; also new partitions, stairs, doors, windows, etc. It also included some excavation and the construction of a new drain in the basement, and the removal of the tower; also plastering, painting, papering, etc. As stated by the court below:

"It consisted in the remodeling of the city hall; new rooms were added; bathrooms put in; staircases changed; hall built. In fact, the interior of the building was completely changed."

So far as appears, the work was well, economically, and honestly done, and no fraud is alleged. However, plaintiff filed this bill to enjoin the city authorities from paying and the contractors from collecting for the same, on the ground that the work had been illegally done. A preliminary injunction was granted as prayed for, which the court below made permanent after final hearing. Defendants appealed.

[1] We are all of the opinion that the decree was right under the law. Section 5 of article 4 of the Third Class City Act of June 27, 1913 (P. L. 568, 576), known as the Clark Act, provides, inter alia:

"All stationary, paper, and fuel used in the council and in other departments of the city government, and all work and materials required by the city, shall be furnished, and the printing, advertising, and all other kinds of work to be done for the city, except ordinary repairs of highways and sewers and other public improvements, shall be performed, under contract to be given to the lowest responsible bidder, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by ordinance. * * * Council may by ordinance provide a contingent fund for necessary repairs or incidental expenses, not otherwise provided for in the general appropriations, and such funds may be expended without advertising for bids."

The work here was not done under contract given to the lowest responsible bidder. In fact all the competitive bids had been rejected, and these contracts were let by private arrangement on different conditions.

The claims cannot be sustained under the exception as to ordinary repairs, for the chancellor properly finds that the improvements in question were not ordinary repairs. Neither can they be included under the term "necessary repairs or incidental expenses." Council evidently did not regard the improvements to the city hall as necessary repairs to be made from the contingent fund without advertising for bids, as they embraced that expense in the general appropriation ordinance and advertised for bids. True, as the chancellor finds, some of the work may properly be classed as ordinary repairs, but as that is blended with the other it cannot be made the basis for a separate claim. To hold that a contingent fund created to meet incidental expenses and necessary repairs could be used for the permanent alteration and remodeling of public buildings would practically abrogate this section of the statute. Council might have changed their plans and readvertised for bids, but they could not evade the law by the attempted creation of a contingent fund and by denominating the improvement necessary repairs. New partitions, new stairways, new windows, new entrances, etc., cannot pass as necessary repairs. While here no actual loss resulted, yet the statute requiring important municipal work to be open to competition is a valuable protection to the public, and cannot be ignored.

[2] The provision stated in the above-quoted section is not new to the statutes of this commonwealth. It appears in the Wallace Act of May 23, 1874 (P. L. 230), and in subsequent legislation, and has been construed by this court. In Mazat v. Pittsburgh, 187 Pa. 548, page 561, 20 Atl. 608, page 697, it is held:

"It cannot be doubted that the true intent of the act of 1874, and the ordinance passed in pursuance thereof, regulating the awarding of public contracts, is to secure to the city the benefit and advantage of fair and just competition between bidders, and at the same time close, as far as possible, every avenue to favoritism, and fraud in its varied forms."

See, also, Louchheim v. Philadelphia, 218 Pa. 100, 66 Atl. 1121. In considering a similar provision relating to cities of the second class in the very recent case of Philadelphia Company v. City of Pittsburgh, 253 Pa. 147, page 151, 97 Atl. 1063, page 1064, our Brother Mestrezat in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"We have uniformly held in numerous decisions, and it may now be regarded as the general rule in this state, that where the charter act of a city prescribes the method or formal mode of making municipal contracts, it must be observed, and, if not executed in conformity therewith, a contract is not enforceable against the municipality."

The assignments of error are overruled, and the decree is affirmed, at the costs of the appellants.

(260 Pa. 576)

SHRADER v. COMMERCIAL COAL MINING CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 18, 1918.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS §70(1)—CONSTRUCTION OF LEASE—SHARE OF PROFITS—DEDUCTION OF LOSSES.

A mining company leased to another company coal mines known as No. 2 and No. 5, the lease providing that, during the life of mine No. 2, the lessee should apply two-thirds of the net profits to the reduction of the indebtedness of the lessor, and, on cancellation thereof, that share should be paid to the lessor, and that the net profits of mine No. 5 should be applied until payment in full of the costs of equipping and putting in condition for operation, with interest at 6 per cent. to the payment thereof, and be applied monthly, and that after such indebtedness was liquidated, in consideration of the assignment of the lease and the use of the lessor's machinery and equipment, the lessee should pay the lessor one-half of the net profit from that mine, and one-half of the net profit from operation of lands leased or purchased by the lessee in the operation of plant, payable quarterly during the lease, and that a statement and application of profits should be made to the lessor every three months. Held that, after the profits had been ascertained for a certain period, they could not be diminished because of losses sustained during the previous period.

2. MINES AND MINERALS §70(1) — MINING LEASE—EQUIPMENT—CHARGE.

Where such agreement required the lessee to develop and equip one of the mines, and stipulated that expenditures for machinery and development should include only labor and cost of material purchased, without charge for general superintendence, and that the total expenditure to be made should not exceed $25,000, all renewals to be charged to the cost of production, and the lessee equipped the mine at a cost of about $20,000, and thereafter re-equipped it for operation by electric power at a cost of $37,000, the entire expense of the new equipment and the old equipment could not be charged against the cost of operation, as it did not come within the provision as to renewals.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill in equity for an accounting for money due under a coal lease by James F. Shrader, trustee in bankruptcy of the Black Lick Mining Company, against the Commercial Coal Mining Company. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHIZSKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

William A. Glasgow, Jr., of Philadelphia, Evans & Evans, of Ebensburg, and Samuel Scoville, Jr., and Chester N. Farr, Jr., both of Philadelphia, for appellant. H. B. Gill and W. B. Linn, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Defendant appeals from a decree ordering it to account to plaintiff, trustee in bankruptcy of the Black Lick Mining Company, for the net earnings of two coal mines operated by defendant under agreement with the Black Lick Company.

[1] The Black Lick Mining Company operated a coal mine, known as No. 2, under a lease from the estate of Charles McFadden, deceased, and, being largely indebted, entered into a contract with the Commercial Coal Mining Company, the defendant, whereby the latter company agreed to operate the mine and finance the indebtedness of the former company, in consideration of one-third the net profits of the undertaking. The contract remained in force approximately three years, until January 12, 1917, when it was superseded by the agreement now before the court for construction. This agreement, after reciting that the Black Lick Mining Company was about to procure from the estate of Charles McFadden, deceased, a lease of an additional mine, known as No. 5, provided that such lease should be assigned to the Commercial Coal Mining Company, and that the latter would continue to operate mine No. 2, and also provide the necessary capital to "develop and equip and put in condition for operation" mine No. 5; the Black Lick Company to afford the Commercial Company "free use of all sidings, tipples, building, power plants, machinery and equipment" of mine No. 2 with right to use them in connection with the operation of No. 5, and to remove the same to the latter mine upon the former becoming exhausted. The Commercial Company also agreed to finance the remaining indebtedness of the Black Lick Company, amounting to $21,723.77, until that sum was paid out of the share of the profits of the mines becoming due and payable to the Black Lick Company.

The principal question in dispute, under the agreement, is the method of computing the compensation the Black Lick Company is entitled to receive. It is first provided that, during the life of mine No. 2, the Commercial Company shall apply annually two-thirds of the net profits of that mine to the reduction of the indebtedness of the Black Lick Company, and, upon cancellation of such indebtedness, the share shall be paid to the Black Lick Company, and further as follows:

"11. The net earnings or profits from the operation of mine No. 5 shall be applied as follows: Until the payment in full of the cost of equipping, developing, and putting in condition for operation of said mine No. 5, with interest at the rate of six (6) per cent. per annum, the same shall be applied to the reduction and payment thereof, the same being applied monthly so far as the same will suffice such payment or reduction. After said indebtedness is liquidated and paid in consideration of the assignment of said lease and use of the machinery and equipment of the Black Lick Company, the Commercial Company agrees to pay to the Black Lick Company during the life of this agreement a sum equal to one-half of the said net profit derived from the operation of said mine No. 5, and also of one-half of the net profit derived from the operation of the adjoining tracts leased or purchased by the Commercial Company in the operation of which the plant and machinery of the Black Lick Company is utilized. This sum shall be paid to the Black Lick Company quarterly in each year during the continuance of this agreement.

"12. The amount of the profits shall be ascertained and applied as herein provided, at least once in every three months, and a statement thereof rendered by the Commercial Company to the Black Lick Company at that time, and in the month of January in each year during the continuance of this agreement a full statement shall be rendered of the entire operation and transactions hereunder up to the 31st of December preceding. It is understood that the monthly and quarterly statements rendered as herein provided shall be for the purpose of the information of the parties merely and shall not be binding or conclusive. With respect to the annual statement rendered in January, the Black Lick Company shall have the right to have the accounts to which the said statement relates audited within sixty (60) days of the time of the rendition of said statement, and, if not so audited, the same shall be conclusive upon both the parties hereto."

A subsequent paragraph of the agreement requires the Commercial Company to pay the Black Lick Company $125 on the 20th day of each month "during the continuance of this agreement," such payments to be "charged against its account and to be deducted from the profits which may become due the Black Lick Company," the payments, however, to cease "whenever the earnings from No. 5 mine amount to a sufficient sum to pay the Commercial Company for their expenditures for equipment and development." This provision was apparently inserted to assure the Black Lick Company a certain and steady income or return from the mines during the existence of the old indebtedness and while the profits from mine No. 5 were being applied to the cost of its equipment and development.

The contention of plaintiff is that under the foregoing provisions of the contract, upon ascertaining the profits for the monthly, quarterly, or annual period, no deduction should be made for losses occurring in the preceding period, but such losses should be borne by the Commercial Company. On the other hand, the latter contends the general rule applicable to a division of profits of a partnership should be applied, and losses resulting during one period carried over and deducted from profits earned during a subsequent period, notwithstanding the fixing of a regular time for their calculation and distribution.

In the first place the contract is more in the nature of a lease of coal in place in consideration of a share of profits in lieu of royalties than a partnership agreement. In fact, it accompanied an assignment of a coal lease from the estate of Charles McFadden, deceased, to the Black Lick Company, made pursuant to an oral agreement between McFadden, in his lifetime, and the Black Lick Company, which had been partly carried out before McFadden's death; and to complete the transfer the orphans' court subsequently directed his executors to make a lease afterwards assigned to the Commercial Company with the consent of the trustee of the Mc-Fadden estate. The assignment being absolute the agreement was necessary to secure the Black Lick Company a proper revenue from its mining rights, which were of considerable value, but which the company, owing to its lack of capital, was unable to properly develop. No liability with reference to the operation of the mine is imposed on the Black Lick Company, and until the happening of a particular event it is entitled to receive $125 a month, chargeable against the "sum equal to one-half the profits," payable by the Commercial Company. The Black Lick Company reserved the right to terminate the agreement and retake possession of the mines and equipment in case of failure on the part of the Commercial Company to perform the covenants contained therein, and further provided that "nothing in this agreement contained shall be construed as creating or attempting to create a partnership between the parties hereto or as imposing any of the liabilities thereof." Under these circumstances it is difficult to see how a liability for losses can be fastened upon the Black Lick Company in the absence of a provision to that effect in the contract.

Paragraph 11 of the contract, quoted above, contemplates two different plans of applying profits derived from mine No. 5: First, a monthly payment until the cost of equipping and developing the mine is paid; second, after such debt is canceled to pay to the Black Lick Company quarterly "a sum equal to one-half" the net profits. On the other hand, paragraph 8 required the earnings of mine No. 2 to be applied yearly, though there is an apparent conflict between this provision and paragraph 12, which requires the profits to be "ascertained and applied as herein provided at least once in every three months, and a statement thereof rendered" at that time, and a "full statement" made in January of each year. This requirement of paragraph 12 refers generally to the matter of accounting, and must yield to the more specific provisions of paragraph 8, covering the application of profits. The further provision that "It is understood that the monthly and quarterly statements rendered as herein provided shall be for the information of the parties merely, and shall not be binding" is not conclusive of an intention to carry losses to subsequent months throughout the year, but indicates only that particular items of the monthly and quarterly accounts shall not be held indisputable in the final account at the end of the year. The information was evidently needed for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of profits to be credited to the Black Lick Company, as well as the amount of royalties due the McFadden estate, the original lessor; it being provided in the lease that royalties shall be paid monthly and a full account rendered every three months. The monthly accounts between the parties to this action are provided for in paragraph 9 of the agreement, as follows:

"The Commercial Company shall, on or before the 20th day of each month during the continuance of this agreement, furnish to the president of the Black Lick Company a true and accurate report of the cost of the operation, showing in detail all the expenditures made or indebtedness incurred in said operation during the preceding calendar month. At the same time, also, the Commercial Company shall make a full and accurate report of all coal shipped from No. 2 and No. 5 mines during the preceding calendar month and price received for same. The accounts of sales of coal from No. 2 and No. 5 mines shall be kept separate and apart from each other, and separate and apart from the sales of coal from other mines operated by the Commercial Company, so that the quantity produced and sold from each mine may be ascertained."

Nothing is found in the above provisions, or in other parts of the contract, to indicate the Black Lick Company shall share the losses. If, however, we adopt appellant's theory of construction of the contract, the further question arises: At what time should the profits be finally ascertained, and for what period should the right to apply future profits to past losses continue? There is no more reason under the contract for taking a yearly than a monthly period. Under the partnership theory, since the parties contemplated the contract to last until the exhaustion of the mine, a final accounting is not possible until that time. The terms of the agreement, however, do not warrant such construction, and the parties expressly provide to the contrary. We agree with the court below, and hold the profits should be computed and divided at the periods stated, without deduction for losses sustained in the preceding period.

[2] The next question to be considered is whether the cost of a new electrical equipment for mine No. 5 is properly chargeable as an operating expense. Paragraph 10 of the agreement requires the Commercial Company to develop and equip the mine and provide the necessary funds for that purpose, and stipulates that:

"The expenditure for said machinery and the cost of the development of the said mine No. 5 . . . shall include only labor and cost of material and personal property purchased for that purpose, and there shall be no charge for general superintendent, management, or supervision. The total amount of the expenditure to be made and indebtedness incurred for the purpose aforesaid shall not exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000). All renewals or replacements of original equipment under this clause shall be charged to the cost of production."

Paragraph 13, after stating in detail the expense to be included in the cost of operation, provides that:

"In addition, there shall be charged against the cost of operation the cost of all renewals or replacements of machinery as hereinbefore provided, including as well renewals or replacements of the equipment, machinery, and property of the Black Lick Company loaned hereunder, as that purchased by the Commercial Company."

In paragraph 17 it is provided that:

"If during the life of this agreement any new machinery or new equipment is added, not replacing the old machinery or equipment, the cost of the same being charged to the cost of coal as hereinabove provided, the same shall be valued by three disinterested parties, one to be appointed by the Black Lick Company, one by the Commercial Company, and the two so appointed to choose the third."

Following the statement that both parties shall be given an opportunity to purchase at the appraised value, it is provided that, if neither desire to purchase, the property shall be sold and the proceeds divided equally between them.

The court below found that mine No. 5 had been fully equipped in 1909 by defendant company at an expense of about $20,000, and the company later decided to re-equip the mine for operation by electrical power to be purchased from a local electric company, and conformably to such plan abandon the boiler house and dynamos then in use, and erect a new substation and install new machinery and equipment at a total cost of $37,000. The entire expense of the new equipment as charged against the cost of operation, making a total outlay of $57,000, notwithstanding the expense for this purpose was specifically limited to $25,000. The term "renewals and replacements," specified in paragraph 10 as a proper charge against cost of operation, contemplates replacements from time to time to take the place of defective or worn parts, and refers only to machinery purchased for that purpose. An expenditure to replace machinery or equipment not unfit for use, but abandoned pursuant to a plan to change the method of operation, is not contemplated by the agreement. Considering the new electrical equipment a "replacement of original equipment" under paragraph 10, the amount chargeable to the cost of production is limited to $25,000. The property in question was not purchased to replace worn out machinery, but because the Commercial Company believed a more economic operation of the mine would result from the change and it contends results justified the expenditure. While this may be true, the question was one of business policy and a matter for it to decide, and if a saving resulted it received the benefit. While it is true the Black Lick Company also derived a benefit this was one of the incidents of carrying out the agreement of the Commercial Company. In view of the express restrictions in paragraph 10, the parties did not intend to place within the power of the Commercial Company, without limitation, to charge against profits the cost of an entire change in the equipment of the mines.

The remaining question included in the statement of questions involved is whether E. R. Norton, an assignee of the interest of the Black Lick Company in the contract, should have been made a party to the proceeding. On January 24, 1913, the Black Lick Company assigned to Norton its interest in the contract with the Commercial Company as collateral security for the payment of certain notes. On August 6, 1914, Norton presented a petition to the United States District Court in the bankruptcy proceedings against the Black Lick Company, to have this assignment specifically enforced. The referee found the Black Lick Company was insolvent at the time the transfer was executed, and dismissed the petition and ordered Norton to surrender the assignment, which order was subsequently affirmed by the court. No claim is made under this transfer, but, on January 27, 1916, the Commercial Company was notified that Norton held an assignment dated November 26, 1912, also securing the payment of certain specified notes and indebtedness, and it is on this earlier dated assignment that Norton's position as a party is based. Charles McFadden, who executed the transfer on behalf of the Black Lick Company, testified he personally prepared and forwarded an executed assignment to Norton, dated November 26, 1912, which was, however, not satisfactory to the latter, who then had his counsel prepare the one dated January 24, 1913, which was subsequently executed. In view of the testimony, and of the finding of the court below to the effect there was no delivery of the earlier assignment, but the latter one which was declared void by the bankruptcy court, discussion of the question is unnecessary.

The decree of the court below is affirmed.

(7 Boyce, 125)

STATE v. FRONT & UNION ST. RY. CO.

(Court of General Sessions of Delaware. Kent. July 5, 1918.)

CORPORATIONS. §896—ANNUAL REPORTS—FAILURE TO FILE—MISDEMEANOR.

General Incorporation Law, § 152, making it misdemeanor for corporation to fail to file annual report, applies to corporation created by special act prior to passage of the General Incorporation Act, especially in view of Const. art. 9, §§ 1, 2, 4, and General Incorporation Law, § 8.

Indictment No. 18, February term, 1916. Argued at the April term, 1918.

Front & Union Street Railway Company was indicted at the February term, 1916, for failing to file with the Secretary of State a copy of its annual report, under section 152, c. 65, Rev. Code 1915 (section 2066) of the General Incorporation Law. On motion to quash the fourth count in the indictment on the ground that the defendant, having been incorporated prior to the passage of the General Incorporation Law, was not bound by the provisions thereof. Motion to quash refused.

Argued before PENNEWILL, C. J., and BOYCE, J.

David J. Reinhardt, Atty. Gen., for the State. Andrew C. Gray, of Wilmington, for defendant.

PENNEWILL, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court:

The Front & Union Street Railway Company was indicted at the February term, 1916, of the Court of General Sessions in New Castle county for "failing to file with the Secretary of State of the state of Delaware, within fifteen days from the expiration of its said fiscal year, to wit, within fifteen days from the thirty-first day of December, A. D. 1914, a certified copy of an annual report to the stockholders of said company * * * as the said company was required to do by the provisions of section 152 of chapter 65 of the Revised Code of the state of Delaware (which formerly was section 122, chapter 394, volume 22, Laws of Delaware, as amended by chapter 190, volume 27, Laws of Delaware)."

No copy of its annual report was filed by the company with the Secretary of State, and the question presented to the court is, whether the defendant company, which was created by a special act of the Legislature prior to the passage of the General Incorporation Act under which this indictment was found, was required to file such report.

The defendant company was incorporated February 20, 1877, by an act of the General Assembly (15 Del. Laws, pt. 2, c. 432). Some time after 1897 it accepted the provisions of the present Constitution, and on June 15, 1910, amended its charter pursuant to the General Corporation Law as found in section 1940 of the Revised Code.

The provisions of the Constitution more or less pertinent to the question before the court may be stated as follows:

Section 1, article 9: No corporation shall hereafter be created, * * * nor shall any existing corporate charter be amended, renewed or revived by special act, but only by or under general law.

Section 2: No corporation in existence at the adoption of this Constitution shall have its charter amended * * * without first filing * * * an acceptance of the provisions of this Constitution.

Section 4: The rights, privileges, immunities and estates of * * * corporate bodies, except as herein otherwise provided, shall remain as if the Constitution of this state had not been altered.

The provisions of the General Incorporation Law material to the present inquiry are the following:

Chapter 65, § 8 (Code, § 1917): In addition to the powers enumerated in the second section of this chapter, every corporation * * * shall possess and exercise all the powers and privileges contained in this chapter, and the powers expressly given in its charter or in its certificate under which it was incorporated, so far as the same are necessary or convenient to the attainment of the objects set forth in such charter or certificate of incorporation; and shall be governed by the provisions and be subject to the restrictions and liabilities in this chapter contained, so far as the same are appropriate to and not inconsistent with such charter or act under which such corporation was formed; and no corporation shall possess or exercise any other corporate powers, except such incidental powers as shall be necessary to the exercise of the power so given.

Section 152 (Code, § 2066): It shall be the duty of every * * * corporation created under the provisions of this chapter, as well as every corporation operating a railway line under this chapter, to make an annual report to the stockholders. * * * If it be a railway corporation created under the provisions of this chapter, but which has leased or in any manner transferred its property and rights to operate its railway line to another corporation, such report shall state. * * * The secretary * * * shall within fifteen days from the expiration of its fiscal year file a certified copy thereof [said report] with the Secretary of State.

A failure to file such annual report with the Secretary of State within the time stated is made a misdemeanor by said statute.

The state contends that the defendant company was subject to the provisions of section 152 because it "was a railway corporation possessing property and rights to operate a railway line in the city of Wilmington, New Castle county, and did on July 1, 1910, lease its said property and rights to the Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company."

The defendant insists that it is not liable to the penalty provided for in said section 152 because that section has reference only to those corporations that were created under the provisions of the incorporation law.

We think the question involved in this case has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of this state in two cases, viz.: Bay State Gas Co. v. Content & Co., 4 Pennewill, 238, 56 Atl. 1114, and another between the same parties reported in 4 Pennewill, 497, 56 Atl. 1120.

In the first case the question raised was whether sections 48 and 29 of the General Corporation Law, which provided respectively for the service of legal process, and the keeping of a duplicate stock ledger in the state were applicable to a corporation created by a special act of the Legislature prior to the enactment of the General Incorporation Law. In the second case the question was whether the duty imposed upon the officers of the company by section 23 of the General Incorporation Law applied to a corporation created by special act. In sections 48 and 29 the duty or requirement in question was imposed upon corporations "organized under this act" or "created under this act," and the court held that under section 3, above quoted, sections 48 and 29 were applicable to corporations created by special act before the passage of the General Incorporation Law.

In the first case the court said:

"It seems to us to be manifest from a mere reading of section 3, that it was intended to apply to previously existing corporations, as well as to corporations created under the General Corporation Law; and that no argument is needed, or reason required, for such a construction, beyond that found in the plain and natural meaning of the very words of the section." By section 8 the Legislature "intended that every corporation, whether formed under the General Corporation Law, or previously formed under any law of the state, should be subject to the restrictions and liabilities of section 48, as well as other sections of said Corporation Law, so far as the same are appropriate to, and not inconsistent with, the act of incorporation under which the previously existing corporation was formed."

In the second case it was said:

"We are unable to perceive any substantial difference in principle between the requirement of section 23 and that of section 29 in respect to its applicability to pre-existing corporations. If section 3 makes section 29 applicable to pre-existing corporations, it would make section 23 equally so."

And so in the present case, the court are unable to see any difference in principle between the requirements of section 152 and those of sections 48 and 29 in respect to its applicability to pre-existing corporations. It is clearly not inconsistent with the act of incorporation under which the defendant corporation was formed.

The only difference that can be found between the Bay State Case above referred to and the case now before the court is that this is a criminal case.

The defendant very properly says that:

"A penal statute must be strictly construed, and nothing can be taken by intentment against one charged under the act; it will not be extended by implication or construction, but construed strictly according to its language; the intent to make a defendant liable will not be deemed established in case of mere doubt, or an ambiguous state of facts."

But if the liability depends upon the applicability of section 152 to the defendant corporation, we think there can be no doubt or uncertainty after the Supreme Court has decided in two cases similar in principle to the present one that said section does apply. It requires no construction by this court.

The motion to quash is refused.

(7 Boyce, 128)

FOX et al. v. DERRICKSON et al.

(Superior Court of Delaware. Kent.

July 5, 1918.)

1. DISCOVERY § 97(1) — PRODUCTION OF WRITINGS—APPLICATION—SHOWING NECESSITY FOR PRODUCTION.

Where application is made for order requiring adverse party to produce books or writings pertinent to the issue, under Rev. Code 1915, § 4228, it must appear from application that documents sought contain material evidence pertinent to issue.

2. DISCOVERY § 89—PRODUCTION OF WRITINGS—RIGHT TO INSPECTION—MATERIALITY.

Under Rev. Code 1915, § 4228, providing that court, upon application of party to an action, may order production of writings or books in possession of adverse party, papers and books will be ordered whenever court can fairly suppose facts disclosed by them can be in any way material to cause of action or defense; it being unnecessary that such facts shall in themselves constitute cause of action.

Action by Charles Y. Fox and another, trading and doing business as a copartnership under firm name and style of Githens, Rexsamer & Co., against Joshua W. Derrickson and another, trading and doing business as a copartnership under the name, firm, and style of Derrickson & Martin. On motion by plaintiffs for the production and inspection before trial of certain books and writings in possession and control of defendants. Order made for production of all the books and writings asked for, except invoices.

Argued before PENNEWILL, C. J., and BOYCE, J.

W. Watson Harrington, of Dover, for plaintiffs. Henry Ridgely and Arley B. Magee, both of Dover, for defendants.

On written motion of counsel for plaintiffs, supported by his affidavit, after due notice, for the production and inspection, before trial, of certain books and writings in the possession and control of defendants. Motion granted and order made.

The statute under which the application was made provides:

"At any time during the pendency of actions at law, the court, on motion and due notice thereof, may order a party to produce books or writings in his possession or control, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, under circumstances in which the production of the same might be compelled by a court of chancery. * * * Rev. Code 1915, § 4228.

The method of procedure for the production asked for conformed to the requirement of the statute and practice of the court.

The books and writings sought are those kept by the defendants in their business as packers of tomatoes, viz. those (1) showing the number of cases, or the number of cans of tomatoes packed in the year 1916, at their factories at Little Creek and Woodside, Del., and of each of them, and the size of cans in which they were packed; (2) showing the number of cases, or the number of cans of tomatoes of the pack of 1916 that they contracted to sell, and did sell, to any person, firm or corporation, on contracts made prior to the beginning of the packing season of the year 1916, and the date of such contracts and the number of cases or cans, and the size of cans in which they were packed, covered by each of them; (3) showing the number of cases, or the number of cans of tomatoes of the pack of 1916, sold by them, which were not covered by contracts of sale made prior to the beginning of the canning season of the year 1916, the date of any such sales, and the number of cases or cans, and the size of the cans, covered by each sale; (4) showing the number of cases or the number and size of cans of tomatoes packed by the defendants in the year 1916, in excess of those which they had contracted to sell by contracts made subsequent to June 1, 1916; (5) showing the number of baskets and cans of raw tomatoes shipped by them to Snyder & Co., Greenwood, Del., and the Atlantic Canning Company, at Rehoboth, Del., in the months of August, September, October and November of 1916; and (6) the bills of lading and invoices, or copies thereof, for any tomatoes of the pack of 1916, sold or shipped in the year 1916, or the year 1917.

Counsel for defendants, in opposing the application, contended that books or writings which may be ordered produced under the statute are those "which contain evidence pertinent to the issue"; that is, such as are evidential, and not those which may furnish a clew to evidence, or may merely enable a party to find out whether he has a cause of action. Falco v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 161 App. Div. 735, 146 N. Y. Supp. 1024; Walsh v. Press Co., 48 App. Div. 333, 62 N. Y. Supp. 833; Brownell v. Nat. Bk., 20 Hun (N. Y.) 517.

It was objected that the books and writings desired for inspection are not concerning transactions between the parties, but between the defendants and third persons, and are not such as would be admissible in evidence at the trial; also that the application overlooks the fact that it is the powers of chancery as to the production of books and writings only that is contemplated by the statute, and that from the nature of the pending action the books and writings sought do not come within the circumstances under which a court of chancery would compel their production. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 142; Eschbach v. Lightner, 81 Md. 528.

Counsel for the plaintiffs, in reply, insisted:

That the books and writings asked for contain evidence pertinent to the issue, and especially so since the action is for breach of contracts for the delivery of canned tomatoes, containing clauses under which evidence may be introduced in defense, viz.:

"Subject to conditions beyond our control."
"Provided we are able to pack."

That although some of the books and writings relate to transactions with third persons, they tend to show shipments by the defendants of both raw and canned tomatoes to other persons than the plaintiffs during the period covered by the contracts.

That equity will grant discovery where the evidence asked to be discovered is to be used in an action at law; if it be in any way material to the issue. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 191, 192, 196, and 197; Peck v. Ashley, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 478; Arnold v. Pawtuxet Valley Water Co., 18 R. I. 189, 26 Atl. 55, 19 L. R. A. 602; Faircloth v. Jordan, 15 Ga. 511.

That the right to discovery of documents is as extensive as the right to discovery by oral testimony. Reynolds v. Fibre Co., 71 N. H. 332, 51 Atl. 1075, 57 L. R. A. 949, 93 Am. St. Rep. 535.

That the right afforded by the statute extends to all books and papers relating to the merits of the action or defense. Townsend

v. Lawrence, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 458; Peck v. Ashley, supra; Lawrence v. Ocean Ins. Co., 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 245; Williams Mower, etc., Co., v. Raynor, 88 Wis. 182.

BOYCE, J., delivering the opinion of the court:

This is an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover damages for alleged breach of contracts, entered into between the parties in the year 1916, for the sale and delivery of canned tomatoes.

[1] The application now before the court is for the production and inspection of certain books and writings before the trial, after declaration and pleas filed. Books or writings that may be ordered produced under the statute are those "which contain evidence pertinent to the issue." The statute and procedure thereunder contemplate evidence, and the fact that the documents sought contain material evidence pertinent to the issue must sufficiently appear so that the court may understand the necessity for their production.

The statute cannot be used, as it has been said for the purpose of "a fishing examination"; for such a purpose is altogether outside of the scope of the statute, so that the inquiry must be, does the application sufficiently show that the books and writings asked for contain evidence pertinent to the issue between the parties to the action? The contracts of sale averred in the declaration contain these, or similar, clauses, viz.:

"Subject to conditions beyond our [defendants'] control." "Provided we [defendants] are able to pack."

Obviously these provisions reserved by the defendants were for their protection, that is, they were intended to safeguard them against unforeseen casualties or happenings that might prevent their packing the quantity of tomatoes which they contracted to deliver to the plaintiffs.

[2] It seems to the court, after a careful consideration of this application, that while the books and writings asked for may not be pertinent in the first instance to support the plaintiffs' cause of action, they do contain evidence material to the merits of the case. It is only necessary within the purview of the statute, the same as in a bill for discovery of evidence, that the evidence to be produced may in any way be pertinent and material in support of plaintiffs' right of recovery. If for any purpose the evidence sought may be introduced at the trial that is sufficient to require its production. In an application of this kind, the statute does not confine a party to evidence contained in books and papers, in itself constituting the cause of action, but it embraces all documents relating to the merits of the case. Indeed production of books and papers will be ordered whenever the court can fairly suppose that facts disclosed by them can be in any way material to the cause of action or defense. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 191; Thomas et al. v. P. R. R. Co., 2 Pennewill (Del.) 411, 47 Atl. 880. Except as to the invoices which are not presumed to be in the possession of the defendants, sufficient is shown, we think, to enable the court to fairly understand the necessity for the books and writings sought, as containing evidence pertinent and material to the merits of plaintiff's action.

An order will be made for the production of all the books and writings asked for, except the invoices.

(79 N. H. 521)

HOLDEN v. LOVERIN.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Coos. June 29, 1918.)

1. LOGS AND LOGGING — § 8(7) — STUMPAGE CONTRACT—DUTY TO CLEAR LAND.

Contract of sale of trees on two tracts, with right to remove them from one tract in three years and from other in six years, modified by extension of a year for first tract, provided buyer cuts all but cedar trees from other tract in same time, does not bind buyer to clear the land.

2. LOGS AND LOGGING — § 8(1) — STUMPAGE CONTRACT—AGREEMENT TO CLEAR LAND.

Mere suggestion by buyer of stumpage to seller to use refuse in manufacture of oil, and promise to investigate the matter, does not amount to contract to clear the land.

Transferred from Superior Court, Coos County; Kivel, Judge.

Action by Ellen D. Holden against Myer Loverin. Nonsuit order, and case transferred on plaintiff's exception. Exception overruled.

Assumpsit, for breach of an alleged contract to clear the plaintiff's land of brush and bushes. At the close of the plaintiff's evidence the court ordered a nonsuit, and transferred the case upon the plaintiff's exception from the September term, 1917, of the superior court. The plaintiff was the owner of land in Colebrook and Columbia, and in July, 1912, conveyed to the defendant "all the trees of fir, spruce, poplar, and cedar standing and growing" thereon, with the right to cut and remove the same from the land in Colebrook until May 1, 1915, and from the land in Columbia until May 1, 1918, with certain reservations. In April, 1915, the defendant had not completed his operations in Colebrook, and he then made an additional contract with the plaintiff as follows:

"This is to certify that I, Ellen D. Holden, have this day received from M. Loverin $100 for the extension of time in the town of Colebrook from May 1, 1915, to May 1, 1916, provided he, M. Loverin, cuts all trees of fir, spruce, poplar, and cedar, except cedar as mentioned in deed of sale to M. Loverin July 11, 1912, in both towns of Colebrook and Columbia, in the above-mentioned time."

The plaintiff testified that the defendant talked with her about getting a Mr. Bell to put up a mill to make cedar oil from the brush and bushes, and offered to give her one-half the proceeds; that she told him she would be glad to have the stuff cleaned off without pay, as it was a nuisance in the pasture; that the defendant never did anything about it, except to speak to Bell. The defendant was called as a witness by the plaintiff, and testified that the project was abandoned, after his talk with Bell, because it would not pay.

Horace J. Holden, of Colebrook, and George F. Rich, of Berlin, for plaintiff. Drew, Shurtleff, Morris & Oakes, of Lancaster, Leon D. Ripley, of West Stewartstown, and E. C. Oakes, of Lancaster, for defendant.

PEASLEE, J. [1] Neither the original contract nor the supplemental agreement binds the defendant to clear the plaintiff's land. The parties made, and afterwards changed the time limit in, an ordinary contract for the purchase and sale of stumpage. The provision in the supplemental agreement that the defendant should cut "all trees of fir," etc., before May 1, 1916, was evidently inserted to make it plain that he agreed therein to a shortening of the time given by the original contract for cutting on the part of the land situated in Columbia.

[2] The plaintiff claims further that her dealings with the defendant show that they understood that he was to clear the land. If it were conceded that the plaintiff could thus vary the plain meaning of the written agreements, or if the negotiations as to the brush and bushes were to be treated as additions thereto, the result would be the same. On the plaintiff's own testimony all those negotiations came to was that the defendant suggested using the cedar refuse in the manufacture of cedar oil and promised to investigate the matter. This promise he fulfilled by interviewing the oil manufacturer. Finding that the expense would be too great, the project was abandoned. There is no evidence of any promise being made and broken, or of any understanding conflicting with the written evidence of their agreement.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 67)

KIER v. PARKS.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Coos. June 29, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR \Leftarrow 854(1)—EXCEPTIONS—FORM OF QUESTION—RE MOTENESS.

No question of law is raised by exception to court's action in excluding question, where it could properly be excluded on the ground that in the form in which it was put the question was too remote, and the record tended to show that was the ground of decision.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Coos County; Kivel, Judge.

Action by Alexander D. Kier against Norman Parks. On plaintiff's bill of exceptions. Exceptions overruled.

Bill of exceptions. The action was case for negligence, tried before Kivel, O. J., and a jury, with verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff went to the defendant's garage for repairs to his automobile. While searching for a workman in the darkness, he stepped between two cars, which were being repaired and were standing over an open pit, fell into the pit, and was injured. The following question, asked upon direct examination of a witness called by the plaintiff, was excluded, subject to exception:

"Now, what is the practice in the garages where you have been employed, where you have seen pits, with reference to their being guarded or covered?"

Plaintiff's counsel then asked the following question:

"Well, is there any practice or custom in the garages where you have worked, and where you have noted pits in the floors of garages, with reference to how they are taken care of?"

This question was also excluded, no exception being taken; the court remarking that the question was not framed properly. Counsel then said he was asking whether or not there was such a custom; the court replying:

"I don't think that is the form to put your question."

The witness then was asked:

"How are pits in garages where you have worked, and where you have observed pits constructed?"

—and answered without objection:

"Well, there are some of them made of wood, where there are wood floors; others, a cement floor, and the pits are of cement, and there is a groove along the edge of the pit, so that when the pits are not in use, why, they are covered over with plank, I should say two inches thick."

Edgar M. Bowker, of Whitesfield, for plaintiff. Drew, Shurtleff, Morris & Oakes and E. C. Oakes, all of Lancaster, for defendant.

PARSONS, O. J. The record shows that the question excluded, subject to exception, was not excluded because its subject-matter was not considered relevant, but because of the form of the inquiry. The court may have found the witness competent to testify to common practice in the matter, and considered he should have been interrogated upon that point, and not as to the practice of particular individuals. Sancier v. Spinning Mills, 72 N. H. 292, 56 Atl. 545. It may be the question was thought too indefinite, as failing to distinguish between construction and operation, and in not asking the practice under circumstances like those disclosed at the trial. As to construction and care when the pits were not in use, the witness was permitted to exhaust his knowledge. He was not inquired of as to operation in a situation like that in the case on trial. The question, in the form in which it was put, could be excluded upon the ground of remoteness. The record indicates it was excluded upon that ground. Consequently no question of law is raised by the exception. Challis v. Lake, 71 N. H. 90, 95, 51 Atl. 260; Reagan v. Railway, 72 N. H. 298, 56 Atl. 314; Proctor v. Freezer Co., 70 N. H. 3, 4, 45 Atl. 713; Nutter v. Railroad, 60 N. H. 483, 485. Whether the evidence was otherwise incompetent is not considered.

Exception overruled. All concurred.

(117 Me. 288)

STATE v. HOLLAND.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 8, 1918.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS. \S 231—SALES—MEDICINES—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution against an apothecary for keeping liquors for sale, but which he claimed were medicines allowed to be sold by him as included in the United States Pharmacopœia, Dispensatory, and National Formulary, authorized by Rev. St. 1916, c. 20, \S 17, it was error to exclude the edition of the Pharmacopœia of 1905 and the National Formulary of 1907; they being the editions intended by the statute.

2. STATUTES \S 147—RE-ENACTMENT—EFFECT.

When a statute is incorporated in a general revision and re-enacted with other statutes, its purpose and effect are not changed, in the absence of some compelling change in the language.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Cumberland County.

William A. Holland was convicted of maintaining a tenement for the illegal sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquor, and he excepts. Exceptions sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Carroll L. Beedy, of Portland, for the State. William C. Eaton and W. C. Whelden, both of Portland, for respondent.

MORRILL, J. The respondent stands convicted of keeping and maintaining a tenement situated in Portland, used for the illegal sale, and keeping for sale, of intoxicating liquors. The evidence on the part of the state disclosed that the respondent had in his possession, on the 7th day of January, 1917, within the period covered by the indictment, in a building owned and operated by him as a drug store, about four gallons of whisky. He introduced evidence tending to show that during the period covered by the indictment he was a duly examined and registered apothecary, as provided by the laws of the state, and, being such registered apothecary, he claimed the right, under section 17 of chapter 20 of the Revised Statutes, to keep "all medicines and poisons authorized by the United States Pharmacopœia, Dispensatory, and National Formulary, as of recognized medicinal utility," and that whisky was among the medicines and poisons so authorized.

In support of this contention his counsel offered in evidence two books, one stated by counsel in making the offer to be "Dispensatory of the United States of America and the National Formulary in one volume, issued in 1894, 7th Edition," and the other likewise stated to be the "Pharmacopœia of the United States of America, 8th Decennial Revision, published in 1905." The respondent's counsel claimed that the United States Pharmacopœia and National Formulary, recognized as official in 1907, should be received in evidence; the justice presiding ruled that the revisions of those works in force at the time of the enactment of the Revised Statutes of 1916 would govern, and excluded the evidence. To which ruling the respondent has exceptions.

We think the exceptions must be sustained. The United States Pharmacopœia is a book compiled by or under the supervision of an organization of pharmacists and druggists, and is recognized as authority; it is revised from time to time, perhaps decennially, if we may be permitted to so infer from the offer of the book. The National Formulary is a similar publication, also revised from time to time.

The statute in question (R. S. 1916, c. 20, \S 17) was first enacted in 1877 (Laws 1875-77, c. 204, \S 5) in the form in which it appears in Revised Statutes 1903, c. 30, \S 18. It was amended by P. L. 1907, c. 74, \S 8, and given the form in which it now appears.

[1] We think that, when the Legislature of 1907 referred to the United States Pharmacopœia and National Formulary for the guidance of registered apothecaries in this state, it must have referred to the compilations known by those names, then recognized as authority among apothecaries. It is not to be supposed that the Legislature intended to adopt compilations not then made and of whose contents, as affecting the law of this state against the illegal sale and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, it could have no knowledge. It knew what the books then recognized as authority included; it could not know what the revisers of later editions might include or exclude. If the Legislature intended to adopt the later revisions of the works referred to, as they should be made from time to time, that intention should have been made clear by apt words, as was done in Food and Drug Act of 1911, c. 119, \S 11, in which the standard of strength, quality, or purity of a drug is that laid down in the United States Pharmacopœia and National Formulary "official at the time of investigation." R. S. 1916, c. 36, \S 12.

Moreover, the statute, if construed according to the ruling to which exception is taken, may be open to the objection that it is an unauthorized delegation of legislative power, to the revisers of the future editions, as suggested in State v. Emery, 55 Ohio St. 364, 45 N. E. 319; upon that point we express no opinion. It may be noted that in the particular referred to, the language of United States Food and Drug Act of June 30, 1906, c. 3915, \S 7, 34 Stat. 769 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 8723), is the same as appears in R. S. 1916, c. 36, § 12.

[2] The adoption of the specific language in the later act strongly indicates that the construction which we place upon the earlier act is the true one, and accords with the legislative intention. The re-enactment of the law as amended in 1907, in the revision of 1916, does not affect its construction. "When a statute is incorporated in a general revision of all the statutes, and re-enacted along with the re-enactment of other statutes, its purpose and effect are not changed unless there be some compelling change in the language. Usually a revision of the statutes simply iterates the former declaration of legislative will." Cummings v. Everett, 82 Me. 264, 19 Atl. 456; Martin v. Bryant, 108 Me. 256, 80 Atl. 702.

Exceptions sustained.

(117 Me. 314)

G. H. BASS & CO. v. WILTON WOOLEN CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 12, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT ¶585(2)—RES JUDICATA.

A decree in an action to enjoin the use of water when it was above the top of a dam until it was $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet below the top was res judicata in an action between the same parties, involving a construction of the same deed, to enjoin the use of the water from the time it reached the top of the dam until it was $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet below the top.

2. DEEDS ¶95—CONSTRUCTION.

Words used to give expression to a deed should be construed according to the common meaning of the language.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ¶156(6)—CONVEYANCE OF RIGHT—"UNTIL."

A deed granting the right to use a certain amount of water "until" the water reaches $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet below the top of a dam limits the right of the grantee, but not the right of the grantor (quoting Words and Phrases, Until).

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Franklin County, in Equity.

Bill by G. H. Bass & Co. against the Wilton Woollen Company. On report. Bill dismissed.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, and PHILBROOK, JJ.

Frank W. Butler, of Farmington, and William M. Bradley, of Portland, for plaintiffs. O. N. Blanchard, of Wilton, and E. E. Richards, of Farmington, for defendant.

SPEAR, J. On report. This case involves a controversy over water rights. In December, 1912, the Wilton Woollen Company, defendant in the present case, brought a bill in equity against the present plaintiff, to which an answer was duly filed. In May, 1913, the present plaintiff filed a cross-bill against the present defendant, to which an answer was also duly filed. The Woollen Company bill was sustained, and a decree filed. The Bass Company cross-bill was dismissed. The defendant contends that the present bill is concluded by the rule of res adjudicata; the whole matter, as it claims, having been determined or open to determination under the former bill and cross-bill. We think this contention must prevail.

The facts involved under the bill and answer are found in Bass & Co. v. Woollen Co., 112 Me. 483, 92 Atl. 612. Briefly rehearsed they are as follows: In 1898 F. J. Goodspeed, of Wilton, was the sole owner of all the water rights and privileges now involved. November 12, 1898, he conveyed certain rights to Gardner C. Fernald. This deed is not now involved. January 15, 1903, Goodspeed conveyed to the Wilton Woollen Company all his land, water rights, and privileges. In September, 1903, the Woollen Company conveyed to the present plaintiff the rights and privileges, upon which his bill is now brought. This deed is as follows:

"The sawmill at outlet of Wilson Lake and yard, subject to any rights of way hitherto reserved, or other reservations or restrictions of use of land heretofore made, and being the same mill described in deed by R. O. Fuller and George R. Fernald to Hiram Holt by deed of Sept. 13, 1883, and of record Book 98, page 352, in Franklin registry, with the following water power and privilege and none other, to wit: The right to draw from Wilson Lake water sufficient to furnish forty (40) horse power with latest improved water wheels, after a reasonable development of the privilege, until the water reaches a point four and one-half ($4\frac{1}{2}$) feet below the top of the dam as now used; but when the water has reached said point his right to use water is limited to one hundred square inches and he is to have that [water] right, and in case the dam furnishing said power is raised, or the power from said lake is in any way increased, the said Bass shall be entitled to his full proportionate benefit. In case at any time when the water is below the four foot and one-half mark, and the grantee is not using the full one hundred square inches of water thereof, the grantor reserves the right to draw sufficient water through its own private waste gate to make up the full one hundred inches including that used by the grantee. Said grantee is to bear one-half of the expense of keeping in repair and maintaining canal on land herein conveyed, headgates and dam."

It will be seen, by comparison, that this is the identical deed, the terms and provisions of which were in controversy in the case reported in 112 Me. 483, 92 Atl. 612. All the other facts are precisely the same. The present defendant was using the water, in 1903, which he conveyed to Bass & Co., just as it was when the former bill and cross-bill were filed, and determined, and as it is now. The dam, the flumes, the flowage rights, are precisely the same. The parties are the same so far as the former and present controversies between the Woollen Company and Bass & Co. are concerned; Fernald not having had at any time any interest in the matter. The plaintiff, however, contends that the point it now raises was not decided, nor necessarily in issue, in the former cases. The point now is that under the phraseology of the deed, "after it [the water] ceases to run over the top of the dam and before it reaches a point four and one-half feet below the top of the dam," the defendant must cease to draw any more water for his mills below, so that the water may be conserved and prolonged to the use of the plaintiff while it is falling between the top of the dam and the $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot limit. It claims that the decision in 112 Me. 483, 92 Atl. 612, covered only the question as to who was entitled to the excess of the water after the uses carved out and conveyed by the deeds. But we think the very point now raised was put in issue by the pleadings and discussed in 112 Me. 483, 92 Atl. 612. The court say:

"The great contention between the parties, however, arises during the period before the $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot limit is reached. That is the burden of the cross-bill brought by Bass & Co., in which they claim that the Woolen Company is not entitled to any water before that limit, that they are entitled to it all, except the Fernald grant, and they ask for an injunction to restrain its use by the Woolen Company. This claim assumes that the Woolen Company retained no water rights after the Bass deed was given, and that assumption we have already shown to be groundless. The maximum ownership of Bass & Co. until the $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot level is reached is 40 horse power, and all the power in excess of that (excepting of course the Fernald 100 square inches) belongs still to the Woolen Company, and can be used by it in connection with its plant still further down the stream. No other reasonable construction can be given to the deed, viewed in the light of all the facts and circumstances."

The court say "the burden of the cross-bill" was that the Woolen Company is not entitled to any water before that limit— $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot limit.

By comparison it will be seen in the cross-bill in the former case that Bass & Co. claimed, even though the water was above the top of the dam, that the Woolen Company were not "entitled to draw any water before that limit" ($4\frac{1}{2}$ feet below) was reached. In the present case, Bass & Co. claim that the Woolen Company is not entitled to draw any water "after it ceases to run over the top of said dam and before it reaches a point $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet below the top thereof." The material prayers in the two sets of bills are identical in meaning and nearly so in phraseology. Prayer 1 of the present bill prays:

"That said court will grant a permanent injunction restraining the said Wilton Woolen Company, its officers, agents, servants and employes from opening said waste gate and withdrawing from said pond, through said canal, any water contained in said reservoir after it ceases to run over the top of said dam and before it reaches a point $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet below the top thereof."

Prayer 2 of the former cross-bills prays:

"That a permanent injunction issue restraining the said Wilton Woolen Company, its officers, agents, servants, and employes, from opening said waste gate and withdrawing from said canal any water, until such time as the water in said pond reaches a point $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the top of said dam as now constructed."

[1] In fact, as the construction of the same deed is the foundation of all the bills, it is evident that all the clauses of the deed were, or might, by proper pleading, have been, put in issue. Accordingly the only difference in the present and the former claim is that then the Woolen Company should not draw any water from any height until the $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot limit was reached, and that now it shall not draw any water, after it reaches the top of the dam, until the $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot limit is reached. It should be here noted that "the power in excess," referred to in the part of the opinion quoted, included the disposition of all the water from the top of the dam, or a higher level, to the $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot limit below. But the greater includes the less, and the claim in the former case, that the Woolen Company should not draw any water when the water was above the top of the dam, included the claim that they should not draw any water when the water was below the top of the dam. Accordingly the issue now raised was clearly placed before the court in the pleadings in the former bill and cross-bill, and under the well-settled rules of law is res adjudicata.

[2, 3] There is another interpretation of the language of the deed which, we think, concludes the rights of the plaintiff. It is a cardinal rule that words used to give expression to an instrument should be "construed according to the common meaning of the language." The language of this deed confers the right of plaintiff to draw water to furnish 40 horse power "until the water reaches a point $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet below the top of the dam as now used." The controlling term here used is the word "until." "Until" is defined in Words and Phrases as follows:

"'Until' is a restrictive word; a word of limitations. The word 'until' is a word of limitations, used ordinarily to restrict what immediately precedes it to what immediately follows it. Its office is to point out some point of time, or the happening of some event, when what precedes it shall cease to exist or have any further force or effect. The word 'until,' whether found in a contract or in a statute, is the same, and in either case must depend upon the intention of those using it, as manifested by the context, and considered with reference to the subject to which it relates."

Cyc. defines it as a "restrictive word; a word of limitation."

The word "until" does not negative or limit any right of the Woolen Company to use the water. It does, however, manifestly limit the rights of Bass & Co. after the water has reached the $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot limit. The use of the water by the Woolen Mill and by Bass & Co. is a continuing use, expressed by the word "until," which carries them both, not to the top of the dam, but to the $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot point; then Bass & Co. are reduced to 100 square inches; and the purpose as well as the effect of the limiting word was to accomplish this reduction. We think this word, when fitted into the background of the transaction, as it must be to give it a fair interpretation, fully warrants the above conclusion. It is almost inconceivable, if the parties understood the matter as the plaintiff now says, that they would have employed the language used in this deed to give expression to their purpose, when a single sentence properly phrased would have expressed exactly the meaning for which it now contends. It is further inconceivable that the defendant company, having full power to protect its own business, would intentionally deprive itself, for the indefinite time the water might fluctuate between the top of the dam and the 4½-foot limit, of the use of sufficient water to operate its own mills, and thus leave them idle and unproductive.

Bill dismissed, with costs.

(117 Me. 318)

STATE v. SLORAH.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 14, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW §1023(3)—ORDERS APPEALABLE.

Exceptions should not be sent to the law court from an order directing a continuance in a criminal case until the case is fully disposed of.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, York County, at Law.

John C. Slorah was indicted for murder. From an order directing a continuance, the accused brings exceptions. Exceptions dismissed.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Guy H. Sturgis, Atty. Gen., and Franklin R. Chesley, Co. Atty., of Saco, for the State. Emery & Waterhouse, of Biddeford, for respondent.

MORRILL, J. The respondent was indicted for the crime of murder at the September term, 1917, of the Supreme Judicial Court, in York county; on the sixth day of the term he was arraigned and pleaded not guilty; his counsel gave written notice that a plea of insanity would be entered, and filed a motion that the respondent be committed to Augusta Insane Hospital for observation; the motion was granted.

At the January term, 1918, the respondent was placed at the bar for trial and a jury was duly impaneled. On motion of the respondent's counsel, and with the consent of counsel for the state, a view of the premises where the alleged crime was said to have been committed was granted. Upon the return of the jury, respondent, and counsel to the courtroom, the Attorney General made known to the presiding justice, in open court, that the respondent fell down on the piazza of the house where the view was to be taken, and in the presence and in close proximity to the jury made something in the nature of a groan, wept, and made the remark: "My God! Take me away from here, or I shall be insane again." It further appeared that this incident occurred as the jury was about to enter the house, and that thereupon the respondent was taken by the officer in charge to another house and was not present during the remainder of the view.

The presiding justice, being of the opinion that, if the trial were to continue, it would result in a mistrial, made the following order:

"By order of court, and by reason of incidents arising during the view granted by the court, on motion of respondent's counsel, consented to by the state, such incidents being, in the judgment of the court, prejudicial to an impartial trial of the case before this jury, and it being inexpedient to summon another jury at this time, the report of such incidents having been made in open court through the counsel and officer in charge of the prisoner, such report being made a part of this order, it is ordered that this jury be excused from further consideration of this case, and that the respondent be remanded to await trial at the May term of this court in Alfred."

To the foregoing order directing a continuance of the case, the respondent has exceptions, which have been presented and argued by his counsel at the present term of the law court. The respondent was therefore not tried at the term to which the continuance was ordered.

We are of the opinion that the exceptions have been prematurely presented. Exceptions should not be sent to the law court until the case is fully disposed of in the trial court. In accordance with the opinion in State v. Brown, 75 Me. 456, which rules this case, the entry must be:

Exceptions dismissed from this court.

(88 Conn. 24)

HAMILTON v. PICKETT.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. July 23, 1918.)

1. INSANE PERSONS §64—LIABILITY FOR DEBTS—PURCHASES BY WARD'S WIFE.

A merchant, selling goods to the wife of an aged man, when neither the husband nor his conservator were present, could not recover their value from the conservator, who had made a proper allowance, notwithstanding Gen. St. 1902, § 240, requiring the conservator to apply so much of the net income or the principal of the estate to support the family as may be required.

2. INSANE PERSONS §64—CONSERVATORS—ACTIONS—DEBTS.

One selling goods to wife of aged man, when neither he nor his conservator were present, could not recover their value from the conservator, who had made a proper allowance, notwithstanding Gen. St. 1902, § 739, providing that actions may be maintained against an executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee for claims against the estate which should justly be paid therefrom, since the statute cannot be invoked in a suit to which the conservator is not a party, and since the relationships of conservator and of guardian and ward are similar, the action should have been against the ward, and not the conservator.

3. COURTS — 214 — CITY COURT — ACTIONS AGAINST CONSERVATORS — APPEALS.

A conservator of an aged man, against whom a judgment is rendered in the city court of New Haven, has no right of appeal to the court of common pleas for New Haven county.

Appeal from City Court of New Haven; Samuel E. Hoyt, Judge.

Action by William H. Hamilton against Edwin S. Pickett, as conservator of Jerome H. Owens. Judgment on verdict for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment set aside, and new trial ordered.

The principal question which is controverted before this court by the defendant in the present case is whether the trial court erred in properly applying the law in denying the defendant's motion to set aside the verdict as against the evidence. The most that the evidence of both sides tended to prove was that the appellant is the conservator of Jerome H. Owens, a man over 80 years old, who since the spring of 1916 has been under a conservator. This defendant succeeded a prior conservator, and was appointed March 12, 1917. In January, 1917, Mr. Owens, the incompetent, married a lady considerably younger than himself. He was living with his wife, and receiving support for himself and wife from the defendant conservator, when the purchases in question were made. Between March 24 and April 6, 1917, the wife of Mr. Owens personally purchased from the plaintiff various articles of merchandise, the dates, prices, and descriptions of which are set forth in the bill of particulars as follows:

1917.
Mar. 24.	House gown	$ 2.95
	House gown	1.25
	Bath robe	10.50
	Waist	1.95
26.	Gown	30.00
29.	N. gown	1.49
	Chemise	1.49
	Chemise85
Apr. 2.	N. gown	1.95
	Petticoat	2.95
6.	Changes on gown	3.00
	Gown and changes	23.50
		$81.98
Apr. 8.	Credit bath robe	10.50
		$71.48

When these goods were purchased, the wife was not accompanied, either by her husband or his conservator. It also appears that these goods were bought by the wife without the knowledge or approval of the conservator. It was conceded that the amount and value of Mr. Owens' estate at this time was about $14,000. The conservator was making an allowance of $15 per week to Mr. Owens and his wife for their support. This amount was fixed by Mr. Owens, and it does not appear that either Mr. Owens or his wife claimed to the conservator that this allowance was not sufficient for their proper maintenance and support. Neither was it shown that Mrs. Owens actually needed the goods which were purchased, or that the conservator had failed to furnish her or Mr. Owens with necessary wearing apparel or means to provide it.

Edwin S. Pickett, of New Haven, for appellant. Sidney C. Rosenberg, of New Haven, for appellee.

RORABACK, J. (after stating the facts as above). The disposition of this case as it now presents itself to this court in part depends upon the construction of section 240 of the General Statutes of 1902, the material portion of which reads as follows:

"The conservator shall return an inventory, under oath, of the estate of the incapable person, and shall manage all such estate and apply so much of the net income thereof as may be required, and, if necessary, any part of the principal of the estate, to support him and his family, and to pay his debts, and may sue for and collect all debts due to him."

[1] It would be a novel construction of this statute and of pernicious tendency to sustain the plaintiff's claim upon the facts before us. It appears that this bill was contracted by the wife of an incompetent person, whose estate was under the management of a conservator, without his knowledge or approval, and when it was not shown that the conservator had withheld from his ward or his wife necessities suitable to their fortune and condition in life. To allow such a claim would be to defeat one of the principal objects for the appointment of a conservator, which is to prevent an incompetent from making reckless and unnecessary expenditures of his money.

[2] The legal obligations and the duties of a conservator are in some respects similar to those of a guardian. An action will not lie against a guardian on a contract made by the ward, but must be brought against the ward, and may be defended by the guardian. 1 Parsons on Contracts, § 136, p. 148. In this case there are no elements of contract, express or implied, as the conservator was not directly or indirectly a party to this transaction.

The plaintiff places reliance upon the provisions of section 739 of the General Statutes of 1902, which provides that actions may be maintained against an "executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee," for claims growing out of moneys paid or services rendered for the estate in his hands and which should justly be paid from said estate. In the construction of this statute, then section 1049, Rev. 1888, this court held that:

"If the statute applied to conservators at all, it could not be invoked in a proceeding to which the conservator was in no way a party." Merwin's Appeal, 72 Conn. 167, 43 Atl. 1055.

In this case (72 Conn. 172, 43 Atl. 1037) we also stated that this is a claim—

"for the reasonable value of necessities furnished to the ward, in the expectation of compensation out of her estate and with the knowledge and assent of the conservator. If its averments can be read as importing that the conservator neglected to make any other provision for watching and nursing her, they are a sufficient foundation for the claim."

In the present case the jury held that the defendant was liable, although it was shown that the purchases in question were made without the assent or approval of the conservator, and when it did not appear that the conservator had acted without due regard to the ward's necessities and liabilities. Such a conclusion could not have been reasonably reached by the jury from the evidence. It follows, therefore, that the defendant's motion to set aside the verdict should have been allowed.

[3] Other questions presented by the appeal do not require consideration, except that we ought to observe that there was no error in the court's denial of the defendant's right of appeal from the judgment rendered to the court of common pleas for New Haven county.

There is error, the judgment is set aside, and a new trial is ordered. The other Judges concurred.

(92 Conn. 964)

McEVoy v. CITY OF WATERBURY et al.
(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §821(20) — STREETS—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

In action for injuries from falling over telegraph pole lying in gutter, where person injured was walking at reasonable gait and it was raining slightly and the weather was misty, whether the injured person was negligent is a jury question.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §124—PERSONAL INJURY ACTION—NEGLIGENCE.

Where action is brought against city for injury from falling over telegraph pole lying in gutter, and the company owning pole was subsequently made a codefendant, the action as to the company was barred by limitations, where it was not made a defendant within one year from the date of the injury.

3. JUDGMENT §585(3)—MERGER AND BAR—DISTINCT CAUSES—CITY'S RIGHT OF ACTION FOR INDEMNITY.

In action against city and telegraph company for injuries from pole lying in gutter, direction of verdict for company because action was barred by limitations does not preclude city, on recovery of judgment against it, from suing company for indemnity; plaintiff's cause of action against city being different from city's right of action against company.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §56(2) — CITY'S ACTION FOR INDEMNITY—PERSONAL INJURY.

Where, in action against city and telegraph company for injuries from falling over telegraph pole lying in gutter, judgment is against city alone because the action against the company is barred by limitations, the barring of plaintiff's action against the company does not bar city's action over against the company, city's right of action over not accruing until final judgment is rendered against it.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; William L. Bennett, Judge.

Action by Nicholas McEvoy, administrator, against the City of Waterbury and others, to recover damages for personal injuries to the plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendants; verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for $1,200 as against the defendant City of Waterbury, and in favor of the other defendants, from which said city appealed. No error.

Francis P. Guilfolle, of Waterbury, for appellant City of Waterbury. William E. Thoms, of Waterbury, for appellee McEvoy. Lawrence L. Lewis, of Waterbury, for appellee Postal Telegraph Company.

WHEELER, J. The plaintiff's intestate was injured on July 15, 1915, by falling over a telegraph pole which lay in the gutter near the curb of a sidewalk in a street of the defendant city of Waterbury. The city supports its assignment of error for the denial of its motion to set aside the verdict against it principally upon the ground that the plaintiff's intestate by her own negligence materially contributed to her injuries, since she should, in the exercise of reasonable care, have known of the existence of the pole and safely passed over it.

[1] There was evidence from which the jury might reasonably have found that the plaintiff's intestate was walking at a reasonable gait; that it was raining slightly and the weather was misty. Under these circumstances we think that, even though the jury found she knew of the existence and location of this pole, she was not, as a matter of law, herself negligent in falling over it. The issue of contributory negligence was, under all the surrounding circumstances, one of fact for the jury to find. The court directed a verdict in favor of the defendant Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, upon the second defense of its answer, the statute of limitations. The facts upon which this verdict was directed were these: This action was brought by writ dated October 4, 1915, and came to trial in December, 1916. The Postal Telegraph Company was named as codefendant, but on the trial it developed that the owner of the pole was not this defendant, but was the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company. This company was subsequently, on December 15, 1916, made a codefendant, and it appeared and pleaded, among its defenses, the statute of limitations, because the action against it was not begun within one year from the date when the plaintiff's intestate received her injuries. The direction of the verdict in favor of the Postal Tel-

Telegraph-Cable Company upon the ground stated in this defense is the remaining reason of appeal requiring consideration.

[2] The action by the plaintiff against this defendant was not begun within one year from the date when the plaintiff's intestate received her injuries; and, under the statute, the defense of the statute of limitations was good, and the verdict upon this ground in favor of this company properly directed.

[3] The city of Waterbury contends that the effect of the court's action in directing this verdict was to deny the city its action over against this company. This cannot be true. The cause of action in the plaintiff's case against the city or against the Telegraph-Cable Company is a totally different action from that of the city against the Telegraph-Cable Company. The latter action had not accrued when the accident occurred. Until the final judgment was obtained by the plaintiff against the city, it could not have been known with certainty that the city would ever have a cause of action over against the Telegraph-Cable Company.

[4] The statute of limitations in the action by the plaintiff against the company did not bar the action of the city against this company, since no statute of limitations as to this cause of action began to run in favor of the Telegraph-Cable Company until the final judgment against the city and the right of action over against the Telegraph-Cable Company accrued. The statute of limitations does not begin to run until the accrual of the action. Hull v. Thoms, 82 Conn. 647, 652, 74 Atl. 925; Gay's Appeal, 61 Conn. 445, 451, 23 Atl. 829.

The authorities upon the precise question are not numerous, but those which we have seen support the conclusion that any cause of action of the city of Waterbury against the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company could not accrue until the final judgment against the city was entered. Lincoln v. First National Bank of Lincoln, 67 Neb. 401, 405, 93 N. W. 698, 60 L. R. A. 923, 108 Am. St. Rep. 690; Ashley v. Lehigh & W. B. Coal Co., 232 Pa. 425, 431, 81 Atl. 442; Louisville v. O'Donoghue, 157 Ky. 243, 245, 162 S. W. 1110; Veazle v. Penobscot R. Co., 49 Me. 119, 127; Wood on Limitations of Actions (4th Ed.) § 179; Ruling Case Law, § 130.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

(92 Conn. 663)

GRIPPO v. DAVIS.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER §215—TRANSFER OF CONTRACT—EQUITABLE INTEREST.

An agreement to purchase land, followed by payments upon the purchase price, gave the purchaser an equitable interest to which a transferee of the contract succeeded.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER §187—INSTALLMENTS—WAIVER.

Where seller under contract to sell land, providing for weekly payments, accepted payments in varying amounts and at irregular times through a long period, he waived the provisions for weekly payments during such time.

3. TRIAL §136(1)—QUESTIONS OF FACT—"WAIVER."

Waiver must be found as a fact, since the intentional relinquishment of a known right is the foundation of a waiver, but when the intent, though not expressly found, is the necessary inference from the facts found, the intent may be inferred as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Waiver.]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER §187—INSTALLMENTS—WAIVER.

Although seller under contract of sale of land, providing for weekly installments, accepted payments at irregular times in varying amounts, and waived weekly payments during a long period of time, yet the provision of the contract was not abrogated, and the seller could at any time insist upon the resumption of this provision, but only upon reasonable notice.

5. TENDER §16(1)—NECESSITY.

It is not necessary to make a tender where the other party's conduct makes it clear that it would be a useless act.

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE §102—REMEDIES OF PURCHASER.

Where seller under contract for sale of land refused to accept an installment on the ground that buyer was in default, fact being seller had waived provisions as to time of payments, buyer could either wait a reasonable time for defendant to withdraw her rescission, or insist upon his right to carry out the agreement according to its terms, or tender in full the amounts due under the agreement.

7. INTEREST §16—WHEN DUE.

Whether interest on overdue payments shall be added to the principal depends upon the circumstances of the case.

8. PLEADING §127(2)—ISSUE—ADMISSIONS.

Where defendant in the pleadings admits that there was a tender of the "entire balance of the purchase price agreed upon," he cannot insist that the tender was inadequate because not including interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; William S. Oase, Judge.

Action by Gaetano Grippo against Susan L. Davis, to secure a conveyance of land from the defendant, under a contract made with her, or for damages. Judgment rendered for the defendant, and appeal by the plaintiff. Error. Judgment reversed, with directions to enter judgment in accordance with prayer for relief.

The plaintiff succeeded to all rights which his father secured by virtue of an agreement with the defendant for the purchase of certain lots of land on June 26, 1906, and of another agreement with the defendant for the purchase of other lots on May 15, 1907. Both of these agreements contained substantially identical terms except as to the purchase price and as to the terms of payment. Each provided for the payment of the purchase price by weekly payments and for execution of a warranty deed to the buyer when the purchase price was paid in full. The agreement of June 26th provided that: "If the weekly payments shall be more than four weeks delinquent, * * * the seller may at his option either declare the entire balance of the purchase price due and collectible, or he may rescind this contract to sell and convey said lots and take possession thereof at his option."

The agreement of May 15th had a similar provision, except that the period of delinquency was two weeks instead of four. The father made payment during his lifetime at irregular intervals and in varying amounts, and not in accordance with these agreements, and these were accepted and receipted for by the defendant. After the transfer to the plaintiff payments were made by him and accepted by the defendant, not in accordance with the agreements, but, as a rule, once a month, in payments of $10 each. The plaintiff made a payment as usual of $10 in January, 1916, and on February 1, 1916, tendered the defendant $10, which she declined to receive, and at this time orally notified him that she rescinded the contract and offered to return the gross amount, $732, paid to her by the plaintiff and his father, with an additional sum of $100, but the plaintiff declined this offer. On February 1, 1916, there was due on these contracts $693, and both contracts were long in default of their final payments under their terms. On April 8, 1916, the plaintiff tendered payment to the defendant of $693, which was all that was due the defendant under these contracts. The defendant declined the tender, and refused to give the plaintiff a deed of the premises. After this tender the defendant in writing gave the plaintiff notice of her intention to rescind the contracts.

Arthur B. O'Keefe, of New Haven, for appellant. Charles Cohen and Barnett Berman, both of New Haven, for appellee.

WHEELER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The principal grounds of error assigned in the appeal are the overruling of the plaintiff's claims of law that: (1) The defendant had waived the provisions of the agreements as to payments; (2) the acceptance of the payments other than as provided in the agreements amounted to a substitution payment for the payments of the original agreements; (3) the defendant did not have the right to rescind the agreements; (4) the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for specific performance.

[1] The agreements to purchase the defendant's lots, followed by payments upon the purchase price, gave the plaintiff's father an equitable interest in these lots, to which the plaintiff succeeded. Miller v. Grussl, 90 Conn. 555, 557, 98 Atl. 90.

The plaintiff, ever since acquiring this interest, and his father for a long period, failed to make the weekly payments as provided in the agreements.

[2] The provision for weekly payments was one which the defendant might waive. This she might do by express declaration, or by a course of conduct equivalent to such a declaration. The receipt of payments by the defendant on account of the purchase price, in varying amounts and at irregular times through a long period, continued during the period of interest of the plaintiff until the refusal to accept the payment tendered on February 1, 1916, constituted a waiver of the provision for weekly payments during this time.

[3] As a general rule, a waiver must be found as a fact since the intentional relinquishment of a known right is the foundation of a waiver, and this intent to be found must be proved. But when the intent, though not expressly found, is yet the necessary inference from the facts found, as in this case, the intent may be inferred as matter of law. Hartford First National Bank v. Hartford Life Insurance Co., 45 Conn. 22, 44.

[4] While we are of the opinion that these payments constituted a waiver of the provision for weekly payments so long continued, we do not think they abrogated this provision of the agreements and substituted the practice of payments for those provided.

The defendant was at liberty at any time to insist upon the resumption of this provision. Before she could do this she must in fairness give the plaintiff notice of her intention so to insist and a reasonable opportunity to comply. Black on Rescission and Cancellation, vol. 2, pp. 1395, 1396. Having received for so long a time payments of substantially $10 a month, she was not at liberty to decline to receive the payment tendered on February 1st without prior notice of such intent. She had the right at this time to give notice of her intent to thereafter insist upon the weekly payments. This she did not do. On the contrary, she refused the payment tendered, and orally gave notice that she rescinded the contract. Since the defendant had waived the weekly payments by accepting, substantially, monthly payments, and had accepted a payment made in January, 1916, and given no notice of her intention to resume the provision for weekly payments, the plaintiff was not in default on February 1st, when the last tender of payment was refused. Much less was the plaintiff in default for four or two weeks, conditions precedent by the terms of the agreements to her right to rescind.

[5] The defendant's attempt to rescind was wholly nugatory. Neither then nor at any time in the future did the defendant notify the plaintiff of her purpose to require the weekly payments. Her refusal to accept the usual payment and her abortive attempt to rescind the contract relieved the plaintiff from the necessity of subsequently tendering the weekly payments. The plaintiff was not compelled to make this tender, since the defendant's conduct made it clear that this would be a useless act.

[6] In this situation three courses of action were open to the plaintiff. He might wait a reasonable time for the defendant to withdraw her rescission, or insist upon his right to carry out the agreements according to their terms by making the weekly payments therein provided, or he might tender in full the amounts due under the agreements. He chose the latter course, and made tender of $693, which sum, the complaint alleged, was the entire balance of the purchase price agreed upon, and the answer admitted this. Having done this, he had done all that he could do. The defendant has an erroneous view of the situation. The plaintiff was not in default on February 1st, nor at any time since. By his attempted rescission the defendant had signified his understanding that the agreements were at an end and his purpose to act upon that understanding, and this relieved the plaintiff from making tender of the weekly payments.

[7, §] Assuming that the plaintiff had the right to make a tender of the amount due, the defendant insists that the tender was inadequate because it failed to include interest upon the overdue payments. Whether interest shall be added to a principal sum depends upon the circumstances. These may negative such a claim. The admissions of the pleadings in this case recite that the tender was of the entire balance of the purchase price agreed upon. It could not have been this if in addition to this balance a substantial sum by way of interest ought to be added. In view of this admission we think the question of the addition of interest to the weekly payments due did not arise, and that the tender must be held to be adequate. The time of performance was waived by the acceptance of the payments.

There is error; the judgment is reversed, with direction to the superior court to enter judgment in accordance with prayer for relief, upon payment to defendant of $693. The other Judges concurred.

(132 Md. 491)

BALTIMORE CAR FOUNDRY CO. v. RUZICKA. (No. 33.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §380—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—EXTENT OF LIABILITY—"WILLFUL MISCONDUCT."

Employé of car manufacturing concern, who crosses track between two cars after being warned not to cross track because cars were to be coupled, although negligent, is not guilty of "willful misconduct" within Workmen's Compensation Law (Code Pub. Civ. Laws, vol. 3, art. 101, as amended by Laws 1916, c. 597, § 1) § 46; no act being willful unless intentional.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Willful Misconduct.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §375(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—"ARISING OUT OF AND IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT."

Where shop employé was killed immediately after day's work while walking toward shop exit, his death arose out of and in course of employment, although on way out of shop he was not using board walk intended to be used by employes going to and from work; there being no enforced rule requiring use thereof.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Anne Arundel County; Robert Moss, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Law for death of Frank J. Ruzicka by Sophia Ruzicka, opposed by the Baltimore Car Foundry Company, employer. From a judgment of the circuit court, affirming an award of the State Industrial Accident Commission, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, and STOCKBRIDGE, JJ.

Edward Duffy, of Baltimore, for appellant. Edward J. Colgan, Jr., of Baltimore (Frank J. Piatner, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

URNER, J. Upon this appeal from a judgment of the circuit court for Anne Arundel county, affirming an order of the State Industrial Accident Commission, the main question to be decided is whether the death of Frank J. Ruzicka, to whose widow an award was made by the commission under the Workmen's Compensation Law (Code Pub. Civ. Laws, vol. 3, art. 101, as amended by Laws 1916, c. 597, § 1), was the result of his "willful misconduct" within the meaning of that statute, which by its forty-sixth section provides that:

"No employé or dependent of any employé shall be entitled to receive any compensation or benefits under this Act, on account of any injury to or death of an employé caused by self-inflicted injury, the willful misconduct, or where the injury or death resulted solely from the intoxication of the injured employé."

Ruzicka was crushed and killed while attempting to pass between two cars on a track in the car erecting shop of the Baltimore Car Foundry Company, in which he was employed as a maker of decks or platforms for the cars there in course of construction. The accident occurred in the evening as the day's work was closing and Ruzicka was starting to leave the shop on his way to his home. The cars between which he tried to pass were two of a number of finished cars, standing at intervals on the track, and ready to be coupled together and drawn out of the shop by an engine which had been brought to the end of the building for that purpose. A trainman had passed along the track, notifying all the workmen that the cars were about to be coupled and moved. At a distance of about 80 feet from the place where Ruzicka had been working there was a board walk over the track referred to, and others parallel with it, which was intended for the use of the workmen in crossing the tracks in going to and from their work. There does not appear to have been any enforced rule, requiring the employ  s to use the board walk alone in passing from one side of the building to the other, and they could, if they chose, in going home, cross the tracks at other points. When the trainman, who gave warning as to the the coupling and removal of the cars, passed Ruzicka's place of work, the latter was in the act of putting on his coat. It was about five minutes later that the engine, on signal from the trainman, began the movement by which the cars were coupled. An employ   who saw the accident testified that he told Ruzicka, as he was about to go between the cars, that he ought not to do so, because they were ready to be moved, but Ruzicka said: "That is all right, I will go through before they start." If he had passed on promptly, he would have crossed in safety, as the cars were not moved during the next five minutes, but as he reached the track he was engaged in conversation by another workman for about the period just mentioned, and then, as he was passing between the couplers, which were three or four feet apart, the movement of the cars was begun, and he was crushed to death.

[1] It is, of course, perfectly clear that the fatal accident we have described was the result of Ruzicka's own negligence. But we agree with the court below and the State Industrial Accident Commission in the opinion that the highly imprudent act which caused the unfortunate man's death is not properly to be characterized as willful misconduct. It lacked the element of intentional impropriety which those words imply. It was a thoughtless and heedless act, but not a willful breach of a positive rule of conduct or duty.

In Bradbury's Workmen's Compensation Law (3d Ed.) p. 531, where numerous decisions on the subject are collected and discussed, it is said:

"No general rule of law can be established defining accurately what constitutes willful misconduct. The question is one of fact, and must be determined by the facts presented in each particular case. The conduct must be willful, which means that it must be intentional, that is, deliberate, with an exercise of the will as opposed to accident, negligence, inadvertence, and thoughtless acts on the spur of the moment or an error of judgment."

On the appeal to the House of Lords in Johnson v. Marshall Sons & Co., 94 L. T. 828, Lord Chancellor Loreburg, in defining "serious and willful misconduct," as used in the British Workmen's Compensation Act, said that the word "willful" imports that "the misconduct was deliberate, not merely a thoughtless act on the spur of the moment."

In discussing a provision in the California Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279), similar to the one with which we are here concerned, the Supreme Court of that state said:

"Willful misconduct involves something more than negligence, and it does not even include every violation of a rule." U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 174 Cal. 616, 168 Pac. 1013.

The contention in that case, which the court overruled, was that the injured employ  s, who were suffocated in a wine vat, were guilty of willful misconduct in entering the vat without previously testing it for noxious fumes according to the customary method of observing that precaution. It was held in Gignac v. Studebaker Corporation, 186 Mich. 574, 152 N. W. 1037, that a checker of automobile shipments whose foot was crushed between the bumpers of freight cars over which he was climbing, without knowing whether the train was about to move, was not, as a matter of law, guilty of such "intentional and willful misconduct" as would defeat recovery under the Michigan Workmen's Compensation Act (Pub. Acts 1912 [Ex. Sess.] No. 10). In Nickerson's Case, 218 Mass. 158, 105 N. E. 604, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 790, it was decided that the act of a painter in working near machinery while it was in motion, contrary to an order that the painting be done during the noon hour when the machinery was stopped, should not be regarded as "serious and willful misconduct," within the provisions of the Massachusetts Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1911, c. 751, amended by St. 1912, c. 571); the court observing that willful misconduct "is a very different thing from negligence, or even from gross negligence," and "the fact that the injury was occasioned by the employ  s disobedience to an order is not decisive against him. To have that effect, the disobedience must have been willful."

Other illustrative cases on this subject are cited in an elaborate annotation on workmen's compensation laws in L. R. A. 1916A, 75, 243.

In the present case it is evident that the death of Ruzicka was due to his erroneous assumption that there was sufficient time for him to pass between the cars before they were moved. There was in fact ample time for that purpose when he started to cross, but when, after his progress had been interrupted by the conversation in which he became engaged with another workman, he resumed his forward movement, he apparently failed to realize how long he had been delayed. This was a very serious lapse of memory and judgment. It led him into an imminent peril which he could readily have avoided by ordinary attention. But in thus neglecting to have proper regard to his safety he was not, in our opinion, guilty of willful misconduct within the purview of the Workmen's Compensation Law, which, except in cases of injury produced by such misconduct, or self-inflicted, or due to intoxication, provides compensation for the disability or death of employ  s resulting from accidental personal injury arising out of and in the course of the employment "without regard to fault as a cause of such injury."

[2] It was argued that Ruzicka's death did not arise out of and in the course of his employment, since he was killed while leaving the car shop by a route other than the board walk which led to the place of exit. As we have already stated, the workmen were not required to use the board walk, but they could pass elsewhere over the tracks, in going to and from their working places, and we think that the accident, which resulted in Ruzicka's death, and which occurred while he was on the employer's premises and immediately at the close of the day's labor, should be regarded as arising out of and in the course of the employment. This conclusion is fully in accord with the general trend of the many decisions upon questions of this nature which are cited in the annotation heretofore referred to in L. R. A. 1916A, 40, 232.

The specific exceptions in the record were taken to the refusal of the lower court to rule that the death of the plaintiff's husband was caused by his willful misconduct, and to reverse the decision of the State Industrial Accident Commission, which overruled that defense and awarded compensation to the widow on the statutory basis. In our judgment the rulings excepted to were correct.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

(133 Md. 615)

BUCKNER v. CRONHARDT et al. (No. 59.)
(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 25, 1918.)

1. MORTGAGES §504—REMEDIES OF MORTGAGOR—RESTRAINING SALE—CONDITIONS.

A bill by a mortgagor to restrain a sale under the mortgage, which fails to allege that the amount admitted to be due has been paid into court, is insufficient under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 66, § 16, requiring such payment as prerequisite to the injunction.

2. MORTGAGES §504—RESTRAINING SALE—SCOPE OF INQUIRY.

Where the mortgagor brings a bill to restrain a sale under the mortgage, and as required by Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 66, § 16, pays into court the amount admitted to be due, the question of credits claimed by him must be adjusted on a statement of the account, but cannot be invoked to affect the power of sale.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §100(2)—ORDERS APPEALABLE.

An order dissolving an injunction to restrain the sale under a mortgage is an appealable order within Code, art. 5, § 27.

Appeal from Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City; H. Arthur Stump, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Petition by Louis Buckner against Charles Cronhardt, Jr., executor, and Jacob M. Mitnick, trustee. From an order adverse to petitioner, he appeals. Affirmed, and cause remanded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

David Ash and Louis Hollander, both of Baltimore, for appellant. S. S. Field, of Baltimore, for appellees.

BRISCOE, J. On the 27th of August, 1912, the plaintiff obtained a decree, in the circuit court of Baltimore city, against the defendants for the sale of certain fee-simple and leasehold property in the city of Baltimore, which had been conveyed by way of mortgage to secure an indebtedness of $16,600 and interest thereon, with certain credits, appearing from a statement of the mortgage debt filed in the mortgage foreclosure proceedings.

On the 24th of February, 1913, the defendant, Louis Buckner, filed a petition in the case, wherein among other things it is alleged that eleven other mortgage foreclosure proceedings under consent decrees for the sale of mortgaged property were filed and instituted simultaneously with this case, as will more fully appear by reference to the dockets of the court. The petition is quite a lengthy one, and the relief sought thereby is stated in the prayer thereof as follows: (1) That the decree of sale in the mortgage foreclosure suits may be stricken out as improvidently and inadvertently granted; (2) that the plaintiff be required to file his mortgage claim in each of the remaining cases on the docket within 15 days after service of a copy of the order; (3) that an injunction be issued enjoining and restraining the plaintiff and the trustee named in the decrees from advertising the property for sale or proceeding with the foreclosure sale of the property; (4) that the plaintiff be required and compelled to make an accounting of the moneys deposited in trust; and (5) for other and further relief.

Upon the allegations of the petition and exhibits the court below, on the 24th of February, 1913, ordered a writ of injunction in the usual form to be issued upon the filing of a bond in the penalty of $1,000, reserving the right to the defendants to move for a rescinding of the order and for a dissolution of the injunction at any time after the filing of answers, on giving the petitioner 5 days' previous notice of the motion. The injunction was issued as directed, and on the 10th day of April, 1913, the plaintiff appeared and answered the petition, denying the material allegations thereof.

The answer also denied that the petitioner was entitled to a credit in excess of $22,000 on the various mortgages, but avers that the true amounts owing on the mortgages in the proceedings are correctly shown by the statements of the mortgage claims in each of the cases herein, and filed at the time of the answer. The answer further denies that the petitioner is ready, willing, and able to pay the amount due under the several mortgages, and since the petitioner admits that the mortgages are overdue, and the mortgagee is in default, he is not entitled to the intervention of a court of equity to stay the mortgage sales, without paying or bringing into court the principal and legal interest due thereon, in excess of the credits claimed. The answer then asked that the petition be dismissed, the order be rescinded and discharged, and the injunction as granted be dissolved.

Subsequently, on the 26th of September, 1913, certain exceptions to the answer were filed, which upon hearing were overruled by the court, and the petitioner was directed to proceed further with the case within 10 days. Thereupon the petitioner joined issue on the matters alleged in the answer, so far as the same may be taken to deny or avoid the allegations of the petition. Nothing further appears to have been done in the case until the 8th of May, 1917, when upon application of the plaintiff leave was granted to the parties to take testimony in open court, and at this hearing on the 16th of November, 1917, the following order of court appears to have been passed:

"The matter of the petition filed by Louis Buckner, one of the defendants in the above-entitled case, on February 24, 1913, and the answer filed by Charles Cronhardt, Jr., thereto on April 10, 1913, and the replication thereto, coming on for final hearing in open court under the thirty-fifth rule, and before taking of any testimony, the matter of the failure of the petitioner to pay into court the balance of the mortgage debt and interest over and above the credit claimed by the petitioner was suggested by the solicitor for the mortgagee, and, being argued by counsel for the respective parties, it is thereupon this 16th day of November, 1917, ordered by the circuit court of Baltimore city that the said Louis Buckner, within 60 days from this date, bring into this court the balance of the mortgage debt and interest due under the various mortgages mentioned in the petition, over and above the credit claimed by the petitioner, and to pay the same into this court into the hands of the clerk thereof to the credit of the said Charles Cronhardt, Jr., executor, the interest whereon shall be subject thereafter to the further order of court; and that in default of such payment by the petitioner the injunction heretofore issued in this case shall be and it is hereby dissolved."

From this order the petitioner, Louis Buckner, on the 8th of January, 1918, directed this appeal. The appeal, it will be seen, is from an order of court dissolving an injunction upon failure of the defendant to bring into court within 60 days from its date the balance due on certain and various mortgages set out in the case, over and above the credits claimed by the petitioner. While the order is unusual in form, and the proceeding somewhat irregular, it, in effect, gave the defendant 60 days from its date to bring into court the balance due on the mortgage debts, over and above the credits claimed by him, and in default of such payment it was provided the injunction heretofore issued in the case shall be and it is hereby dissolved. The single question presented on the appeal is whether this order was properly passed, and whether the objections urged against it can be entertained upon the state of the record now before us.

[1] It is quite clear that the averments of the defendant's petition were not sufficient to entitle him to the relief sought against the plaintiff, and that the order for an injunction on the 24th of February, 1913, was improperly passed. The petition not only fails to allege that the mortgages are not in default, or that the entire amount of the mortgage debt and interest has been paid, but admits that the mortgage debt and interest amounts in excess of $40,000, but claims a credit in excess of $22,000. It is well settled upon all the authorities that the mortgagor must pay the amount admitted to be due into court before the court will grant an injunction to restrain the sale upon a default in the mortgage. Revised Charter of Baltimore, § 721; Code, art. 66, § 16; Powell v. Hopkins, 38 Md. 1; Neurath v. Hecht, 62 Md. 221; Thrift v. Bannon, 111 Md. 803, 73 Atl. 660.

[2] The question of credits relied upon by the defendant could be adjusted and settled upon a statement of the account and a distribution of the fund between the parties by the auditor of the court, but cannot be invoked to affect the power of sale under the mortgage. Walker v. Cockey, 38 Md. 75; Roberts v. Loyola Bldg. Ass'n, 74 Md. 1, 21 Atl. 684.

The case was heard in open court upon petition, answer, and replication, and was argued by counsel for the respective parties. The question of the payment of the admitted debt into court before the injunction could have issued was relied upon as a defense in the eleventh paragraph of the answer. And by the twelfth paragraph the court was asked to rescind the order as passed, dissolve the injunction, and to dismiss the petition.

By section 164 of article 16 of the Code, it is provided:

"And the defendant shall be entitled in all cases, by answer, to insist upon all matters of defense in law or equity, to the merits of the bill, of which he may be entitled to avail himself by a demurrer, or plea in bar."

It is difficult to see upon what legal or equitable principle, under the facts and circumstances of this case, that the appellant can complain of the order of court below dissolving the injunction, or in what respect he is injured thereby. He admits there is a large balance due upon the mortgages and both the interest and the credits claimed by him are reserved for the further consideration of the court. The court gave him 60 days from the date of the order to bring in the money before a default, and before a dissolution of the injunction would become effective, but he not only failed to avail himself of his rights under the order, but waited until within a few days of the expiration of the 60 days, and then took this appeal. To permit the appellant's contentions to prevail in this case and at this stage of the proceeding would be, as stated by this court in Belt v. Blackburn, 23 Md. 227, "to grant not only an indulgence unreasonable in itself but to encourage vexatious delays in the prosecution of suits, but it would be manifestly unjust to the" parties in interest.

[3] The motion to dismiss the appeal will be overruled. Treating the order of the 16th day of November, 1917, as an order dissolving the injunction, it is clearly an appealable order, under section 27 of article 5 of the Code.

It follows, from the conclusion we have reached, that the order of the circuit court of Baltimore city, dated the 16th day of November, 1917, dissolving the injunction, which had been granted on the 24th of February, 1913, will be affirmed. Cherbonnier v. Goodwin, 79 Md. 55, 28 Atl. 894; Equitable Ice Co. v. Moore, 127 Md. 324, 96 Atl. 444; Carrington v. Bassahor, 121 Md. 76, 88 Atl. 52.

Order affirmed, and cause remanded, with costs to the appellee.

(122 Md. 511)

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. TAYLOR. (No. 39.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §383—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS—INSURANCE.

Where plaintiff insured "all" defendant's employes, both believing that employes in different work in a different county were not covered, the policy stating that the work was in one county only, defendant thinking no insurance for the different work was required, but the Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation to such a workman and required plaintiff to pay it, plaintiff could recover the amount from the employer.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §383—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS—INSURANCE.

Where master took insurance limited to servants employed in one county, and afterwards began new work in a different county and a new servant was awarded compensation to be paid by the insurer, who sued to recover it from the master, the master could not take advantage of policy clause permitting adjustment of premium for new risk by pleading willingness to pay the increased premium.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §383—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS—INSURANCE.

Where plaintiff insured "all" defendant's employes, both believing that employes in different work in a different county were not covered, the policy stating that the work was in one county only, defendant thinking no insurance for the different work was required, but the Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation to such a workman, the policy nevertheless, as between plaintiff and defendant, did not cover the workman injured.

4. TRIAL §136(3)—CONSTRUCTION OF WRITING—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In insurer's action to recover amounts paid as compensation under order of the Industrial Accident Commission, it is for the court to construe the policy and determine the meaning of the clauses relied on, and not for a jury or for the court sitting as a jury.

5. TRIAL §386(4)—TRIAL BY COURT.

On trial without a jury, prayers should specifically refer to statements submitted to consideration of the court, and not require it to look through the pleas to discover the grounds for the prayers.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT §383—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS—INSURANCE.

A master having two separate and distinct occupations, both of which require insurance under the Workmen's Compensation Act, may take out two policies, each covering one occupation and not the other.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Calvert County; B. Harris Camaller and Fillmore Beall, Judges.

Action by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company against Frederick Taylor. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

John B. Gray, Jr., of Prince Frederick, and Edgar Allan Poe, of Baltimore (John B. Gray, of Prince Frederick, and Bartlett, Poe & Claggett, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. L. Allison Wilmer, of Leonardtown (J. Frank Parran, of Prince Frederick, on the brief), for appellee.

BOYD, C. J. While Charles E. Briscoe was in the employ of the appellee, who was engaged in road construction work in St. Mary's county, Md., he was killed. The appellant had issued to the appellee a compensation insurance policy which the appellant and the appellee understood did not cover and protect Briscoe, but his widow, Margaret Briscoe, filed a claim for compensation before the State Industrial Accident Commission, and after a hearing the commission passed an order that the appellee, employer, and the appellant, insurer, pay to her, until the further order of the commission, compensation at the rate of $3.60 per week, payable weekly, for the period of eight years from the 21st of July, 1915, and such further sum, not to exceed $75, as the widow had paid for funeral expenses. The appellee and the appellant appealed from the order and the award of the commission, and the appellant further appealed, independently and on its own behalf, to the superior court of Baltimore city, but that court confirmed the decision of the commission.

The appellant had paid the $3.60 weekly, up to the time of bringing this suit, and also $47 for funeral expenses, and it sued the appellee to recover the payments so made by it. There are five counts in the narr., the first being for money paid by the plaintiff for the defendant at its request, and the other four being special counts. The defendant (appellee), in addition to the general issue pleas, filed a special plea to each of the five counts; but as the questions before us are presented by the rulings on the prayers and a demurrer to the plea to the fifth count, we will not set out the pleadings at length.

The theory of the plaintiff (appellant) is that, although by reason of certain provisions in the Workmen's Compensation Law (Laws 1914, c. 800), which is now article 101 of volume 3 of the Code, and in the policy issued by it in conformity with that law and the requirements of the State Industrial Accident Commission, it was liable to the widow of Briscoe under the award of the commission, affirmed by the superior court of Baltimore city on appeal, it was not liable to the appellee, and hence is entitled to recover from him what it has paid by reason of the award of the commission. It denies any attempt to impeach that award, but claims that, as it was not intended to insure such employes as Briscoe, and that was so understood by the appellee, he should be required to return to it what it has paid to Briscoe's widow, who was his only dependent.

The record shows that the appellee was about to have awarded to him a contract for road construction work in St. Mary's county, when an agent of the appellant called upon him and proposed to insure him in that company against loss on account of accidents to his employes under that contract. The appellee replied that his road construction work was not of such a hazardous nature as to require him, under the law, to take out insurance. The agent told him that he was satisfied that the work was such as to require insurance, but the appellee insisted that it was not, and said that he would not take out insurance for that, but he told the agent that he was the owner of a number of automobiles which he was operating in Calvert county, in transporting the mail and passengers, and that he would take a policy from the plaintiff company for protection against accidents to his employes in that enterprise.

The premium was adjusted upon the basis of the number of employes of the defendant engaged in the automobile business, and was paid, and a policy dated January 20, 1915, was issued.

The appellee did not begin the road work until the following April. He testified that he did not think it was of such nature as to require him to insure, and had no intention when the policy was taken out, nor after he commenced the road work, of insuring against accidents to his employes on that work; and he thought he was not insured against accidents to such employes by the policy mentioned in the declaration until the decision of the commission, but when the commission and the court said he was so insured he accepted the decision.

Briscoe was at the time he was killed at work on a gravel pit, used in connection with the road construction work, which seems to be covered in terms by section 32, subsec. 19, of article 101, as an "extrahazardous employment." In the policy the company agrees with the employer "as respects personal injuries sustained by employes, including death at any time resulting therefrom," as follows:

"Compensation. 1. To pay in the manner provided by chapter 800 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, 1914, and all amendments thereto (hereinafter called 'Maryland Workmen's Compensation Law') any sum due or to become due from the employer because of any such injuries or death, and the obligation for compensation therefor imposed upon the employer by such law," etc.

"Liability. 2. To indemnify the employer against loss by reason of the liability imposed upon the employer by law for damages on account of such injuries or death."

"Employes Covered. 6. This policy shall cover all employes of the employer, legally employed."

There are also certain conditions which the policy is subject to, amongst which are the following:

"Condition A. The premium is based upon the entire remuneration earned during the term of the policy by all employes of the employer. * * * If there shall be any change in or extension of the employer's trade, business, profession or occupation, the earned premium therefor shall be adjusted at the company's manual rates respectively applicable thereto. If the earned premium thus computed is greater than the advance estimated premium paid, the employer shall immediately pay the additional amount to the company; if less, the company shall immediately return the unearned premium to the employer."

"Condition M. The employer, by the acceptance of this policy, declares the statements in items numbered 1 to 11, inclusive, in said declaration to be true, except such as are declared to be matters of estimate only; and this policy is issued in consideration thereof and the provisions of the policy as respects its premium and the payment of such premium; provided, however, that nothing in this condition and no default on the part of the employer with respect to any of the provisions or conditions of this policy, shall in any way affect the right of any employe, or his dependents, to recover from the company the compensation provided for in the Maryland Workmen's Compensation Law and intended to be insured hereunder."

In the declaration, which was made a part of the policy, there are eleven items numbered from 1 to 11, as referred to in Condition M, above. Item 8 is as follows:

"Location of all factories, shops, yards, buildings, premises or other work places of the employer, by town or city, with street and number: Calvert County, Maryland."

Then, under a column of "Divisions of Operation," there are a number of classifications lettered from (a) to (i) inclusive. Opposite these are three columns for "Estimated Pay Roll of Employes for Policy Term," "Manual Premium Rate per $100 of Employes' Pay Roll," and "Estimated Advance Premium." The only one filled up is "(g) Chauffeurs and Helpers, Wherever Engaged," and the figures "1200," "1.79," "21.48" are in the three columns just referred to. Item 4 states:

"The estimated pay roll as stated above included the entire remuneration of whatsoever kind earned by all persons employed in the service of the employer in connection with the employer's trade, business, profession or occupation, as provided in Condition A, to whom remuneration of any nature in consideration of service is paid, allowed or due, except that the remuneration of officers of a corporation whose duties or practices do not expose them to any operative hazards of the business may be excluded."

Item 9 is:

"No operations of any nature not herein disclosed will be conducted by the employer, except as follows: No exceptions."

"Calvert County, Maryland," at the end of Item 8, and "No exceptions," at the end of Item 9, were the answers of the employer. (Italics ours.)

We have thus set out at some length the provisions of the policy, including the conditions and declarations, which are a part of it, which seem to be most applicable to the questions involved in this case; but the provisions of the Maryland Workmen's Compensation Law are expressly made a part of the policy "so far as they apply to compensation for any personal injury or death covered by this policy while it shall remain in force"—being a part of paragraph 1 as to compensation, quoted in part above. Under section 15 of article 101 of the Code, the employer is required to secure compensation to be paid his employes in one of the three ways: (1) By insuring in the state accident fund; (2) by insuring with a stock corporation or mutual association authorized to transact the business of the workmen's compensation insurance in this state; or (3) with the approval of the commission, insuring the payment of compensation himself. Ample provision is made for the protection of employes when the third plan is adopted, which was doubtless authorized for the benefit of railroads and other companies or persons who employ a great many employes, and concerning whose ability to pay the commission can readily determine. In this case the employer adopted the second plan. The form of such policy is approved by the commission; indeed, no company or association can enter into such policy of insurance until it obtains from the insurance commissioner of Maryland a license for the purpose, "and until the form of such policy shall have been approved by the State Industrial Accident Commission." Section 29 of article 101.

This case is a very peculiar one, and we have not been referred to any decision that is very apposite. So far as the liability of the appellant to the widow for the compensation is concerned, there can no longer be any question. That was determined by the commission and affirmed by the superior court of Baltimore city, no appeal having been taken to this court. In its opinion the commission referred to the contention of the insurance company that the "coverage provisions" were limited by the "declarations" of the employer contained in his application for insurance, which declared that he employed no other employes except chauffeurs and helpers, and that therefore only such employes were covered by the policy, and said:

"If the rights of third parties were not involved, we might accept this view as correct; but, however the terms of the application and the declarations of the employer may affect the question as between the insurer and the employer, they cannot affect the right of the injured employe, or his dependents, in case of death, to the security of payments of compensation stipulated in paragraph 1 of the policy, and this is so because of Condition M, of the policy."

After quoting Condition M, the opinion went on to say that:

"The proviso clause in this condition of the policy was inserted by the commission for the express purpose of defeating any such contention as that now made by the insurance company, and we are of the opinion that it does have that effect, and that, notwithstanding the 'declarations' of the employer, the policy is effective in securing the payment of compensation to which the employe, or his dependents, may be entitled, regardless of the statements or declarations made by the employer in his application for insurance."

[1] That is practically the position now taken by the appellant; and, after giving the matter thorough consideration, we have reached the conclusion that the appellant is not barred by the award of the commission, but is entitled to recover from the appellee the payments it has made, and is required to make by reason of the award. There are two distinct obligations upon the insurance company; one to secure payment of the compensation to the employe, and the other to indemnify the employer against loss for the liability imposed upon him by law for damages on account of such injuries or death. By reason of the provisions of Condition M, the company cannot rely on the statements of the employer in the items in the declaration, so far as they affect the right of an employe or his dependents, to recover compensation; but that ought not and does not prevent it from requiring the employer to live up to his declarations and the terms of the policy, in so far as the rights between them are concerned. As we have seen, by Item 8, he expressly said that the location of all of his work places was in Calvert county and limited his operations to "chauffeurs and helpers, wherever engaged." The estimated payroll of the employer was with reference to that occupation, and the premium was paid accordingly.

It is true that at the time the policy was issued the appellee had not commenced the road construction work in St. Mary's county, but he further declared in declaration 9 that:

"No operations of any nature not herein disclosed will be conducted by the employer, except as follows: No exceptions." (Italics ours.)

That is in accordance with what was intended and what he believed, as he testified that he did not think that it was necessary to insure his employes engaged on the road construction work, did not intend to do so, and thought that he was not so insured until the commission held otherwise. But the commission only held that he was insured so far as the rights of the employes were concerned, and it did not and could not change his rights as between the insurance company and himself, but it made the insurance company security for the compensation he had to pay.

[2] But the appellee contends that Condition A relieves him. In the first place, it might well be contended that the language, "If there shall be any change in or extension of the employer's trade, business, profession or occupation, the earned premium therefor shall be adjusted at the company's manual rates respectively applicable thereto" was only intended to apply to a change, etc., of the business named in the policy, and would not be applicable to some other business or occupation, in another county and not in any way connected with that mentioned in the policy. But, at any rate, if the earned premium thus computed was greater than the advance estimated premium paid, the employer was required to pay it immediately. The evidence shows that the estimated pay roll for the road construction work was very much more than for his automobile business, and it would be in a different classification. In the defendant's fifth plea, he said that he had been ready and willing at all times since the decision of the commission, and was still ready and willing to pay the earned premium, adjusted at the company's usual rates, as set forth in Condition A; but that would not answer. We know of no authority which would excuse an insured and authorize him to come in after a decision of the question and get the benefit of the policy by coming into court and offering to pay, etc. These statements were very material, and the agent of the company was in no wise responsible for them. The appellee cited section 213 of article 23 to show that no misrepresentations or untrue statement in an application, made in good faith, by the applicant, should effect a forfeiture or be a ground of defense, "unless such misrepresentation or untrue statement relate to some matter material to the risk." We have already said that these statements were material, but beyond that we could not say that the answer to Item 3 was a misrepresentation or untrue statement of the facts as they existed when the policy was applied for and obtained, and Item 9 had reference to the future. It is only just to the appellee to say that we do not think he was guilty of fraud or misstating facts. Unfortunately, he did not think that he was going to engage in an operation which required insurance, and that is, of course, what Item 9 has reference to, and the agent knew from him that he did not intend to and would not take out insurance for the road work. The agent did not withhold anything from him or in any way impose on him. On the contrary, he told him he thought he would have to take out the insurance and endeavored to get him to do so. It was not the intention of either of them to cover that work with this policy, and it is only because the commission, affirmed by the superior court, has found that it did cover it, in so far as the employes and their dependents are concerned, that he and the company were held. The long line of cases cited by the appellee, including Patapasco Ins. Co. v. Briscoe, 7 Gill & J. 293, 28 Am. Dec. 319; Md. Ins. Co. v. Bossiere, 9 Gill & J. 121; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Crane, 18 Md. 280, 77 Am. Dec. 239; A. & E. R. R. Co. v. Balto. Ins. Co., 32 Md. 37, 8 Am. Rep. 112; Keystone Benefit Ass'n v. Jones, 72 Md. 363, 20 Atl. 195; Globe Life Ins. Co. v. Duffy, 76 Md. 293, 25 Atl. 227; Dulaney v. Fidelity & Cas. Co., 106 Md. 17, 66 Atl. 614; and others—do not seem to us to aid the appellee, for, in so far as they relate to the intention of the parties, he testified most positively that he had no intention of insuring the employes in the road work, and there was no intention on the part of the appellant to do so by this policy. The appellee's main trouble is that it is conclusively shown, and not denied, that there was no intention of including such employes as Briscoe, or such work as he was engaged on, and the policy clearly carried out that intention, in so far as the appellant and appellee are concerned, and is only effective for the benefit of the widow of Briscoe by reason of the award of the commission, which expressly distinguished the liability to her from that to the appellee.

[3] Without meaning in any way to criticize, or to express an opinion as to the correctness of the award of the commission, as that is not before us for review, we cannot hesitate to hold that as between the appellant and the appellee the policy did not include Briscoe, and the appellant is simply in the position of a surety for the compensation allowed by the commission, as it is relieved from liability to the appellee for reasons we have stated. So far as the appellant and appellee are concerned, paragraph 6 must under the other provisions and the evidence in the case be construed to mean that:

"This policy shall cover all employes of the employer, legally employed in the business mentioned in the declarations, made a part of the policy."

It may be well to add here with emphasis that this is a wholly different case from such an one as American Ice Co. v. Fitzhugh, 128 Md. 382, 97 Atl. 999, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 33, where the question was whether the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law included such an employe as Fitzhugh. He was admittedly an employe of the ice company, as a driver of an ice and coal wagon, in the regular business of the company, which the insurance was intended to cover. There was no such question as there is here, and this case must not be confounded with those in which the question arises as to whether an employe of an employer in the business intended to be insured is covered by the policy. That may often arise in cases under this law; but the question here is a wholly different one, as it was distinctly understood that this policy was not to cover the employes on the road work.

In view of what we have said, it is apparent that the appellant is entitled to recover. If it was not, then we would have the remarkable condition that an insurance company would be required to pay insurance which both the insured and the insurer agree was never intended to be paid, and neither of them understood or intended that the policy should cover the insurance in question, and the peculiar part of it is that the only ground for the contention is the award, while the commission making it distinctly said that it did not mean to hold that the policy was effective between the appellant and the appellee, and sustained the award in favor of the third party by reason of the provisions in the policy and the law which, under their interpretation, entitled her to it.

In Turner v. Egerton, 1 Gill & J. 430, 19 Am. Dec. 235, Chief Judge Buchanan said:

"Where one is compelled to pay the debt of another, he may recover against him in an action for money paid, etc., upon the promise which the law implies, as in the case of money paid by a surety on a bond, which is considered as paid to the use of the principal, and may be recovered in an action against him for money paid, etc."

In Baltimore v. Hughes, 1 Gill & J. 480, 19 Am. Dec. 243, the same judge said:

"If one is compelled, or is in a situation to be compelled, to pay the debt of another, as in the case of a surety, and does pay it, the law implies a promise on the part of him for whom the money is paid, on which an action may be sustained, for in such case it is not a voluntary but a compulsory payment."

See, also, 1 Poe, §§ 107-111, where the question is fully considered under the count for money paid. As there is such a count in the narr., it will not be necessary to discuss the special counts.

[4, 5] The first prayer of the plaintiff was properly rejected. That prayer, if good, would enable an insurance company to recover from the employer compensation paid by it in almost any case. It is altogether too general. The second is rather broad also. There may be cases in which the insurer and employer did not intend to insure some particular employé, not supposing he was covered by the law; but that of itself would not be sufficient to authorize the recovery by the insurer from the insured. If the policy is broad enough to cover all employes in the business or occupation which the policy is intended to cover, then merely because the insurer and employer thought that some particular employé or class of employes was not covered by the law, but the commission and the court on appeal decided the contrary, that would not be sufficient to relieve the insurer of its liability to the employer. The theory of the third and fourth prayers, as we understand it, may be correct; but they do not sufficiently cover the case. It is for the court to construe the policy and determine the meaning of the clauses relied on, and not for a jury or for the court, sitting as a jury. The appellee's second prayer, which was granted, left it to the court, sitting as a jury, to construe the clause of the policy referred to. Then the provision at the end of the prayer makes it bad. It should have specifically referred to such statements as the appellee desired to submit to the consideration of the court, sitting as a jury, and not require it to look through the pleas for the reasons the appellee had for his declarations, even if they be assumed to be good reasons.

[8] The demurrer to the fifth plea should have been sustained. Readiness on the part of the appellee since the decision of the commission was not sufficient, and the addition to the plea, that the plaintiff had knowledge at the time of the issuance of the policy that the defendant was engaged or about to be engaged in the road work, did not make it better. It may have had knowledge of the fact that the appellee intended to engage in such work, but it might well have assumed that, if he intended to engage in hazardous work in another county, he would take out a policy to cover that. We are not aware of any reason why a party having separate and distinct occupations, both of which require insurance under this law, could not take out two policies, each covering one of them and not the other.

It follows that the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and new trial awarded; the appellee to pay the costs.

(122 Md. 618)

MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE v. MACHEN et al. (No. 22.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. May 8, 1918.)

1. STATUTES §221 — CONSTRUCTION — PRESUMPTION OF LEGISLATIVE KNOWLEDGE.

It is presumed that Legislatures succeeding passage of a taxing statute not only had knowledge that bank deposits, to which it is now claimed the statute applies, were to be found in many banks, but that they also knew of the construction generally placed upon the statute that such deposits were not regarded as taxable under it.

2. STATUTES §218 — CONSTRUCTION — LAPSE OF TIME.

Any unvarying construction of a taxing statute for such a lapse of time as 20 years should be disregarded only on the most imperious grounds.

3. TAXATION §73 — BANK DEPOSIT — STATUTE.

If a deposit with a trust company is money, it is not taxable under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 51, § 2, unless it be the proceeds of the sale of stock, bonds, or other property disposed of to evade and escape taxation.

4. TAXATION §73 — BANK DEPOSIT — "CERTIFICATE OF INDEBTEDNESS OR EVIDENCE OF DEBT."

A deposit with a trust company, evidenced by a written receipt for the amount, signed by the treasurer, if an indebtedness, as distinguished from money, is not taxable under Code Pub.

Civ. Laws, art. 81, § 214, not being a "certificate of indebtedness or an evidence of debt."

Appeals from Baltimore City Court; Carroll T. Bond, Judge.

Action by the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, a municipal corporation, against Mary Gresham Machen and Arthur W. Machen, Jr., executors of the last will and testament of Arthur W. Machen, deceased. From an order affirming the action of the State Tax Commission vacating and annulling an assessment made by the appeal tax court of Baltimore city, for state and city taxation, the Mayor and City Council appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

R. Contee Rose, Asst. City Sol., and S. S. Field, City Sol., both of Baltimore, for appellant. Arthur W. Machen, Jr., of Baltimore (Machen & Williams, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees Mary Gresham Machen and Arthur W. Machen, Jr., executors.

PATTISON, J. This is an appeal from an order of the Baltimore city court affirming the action of the State Tax Commission of Maryland, vacating and annulling the assessment made by the appeal tax court of Baltimore city for the purpose of state and city taxation for the years 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916 upon a deposit in the Safe Deposit & Trust Company of Baltimore, made by appellee's testator, Arthur W. Machen, in his lifetime.

By the agreed statement of facts found in the record, Arthur W. Machen, deceased, on or about June 8, 1896, deposited with the Safe Deposit & Trust Company of Baltimore, a corporation incorporated under the laws of Maryland, the sum of $25,000, and received for such deposit the following receipt:

"Safe Deposit & Trust Company of Baltimore, 13 South Street, Baltimore, June 8, 1896. Received of Mr. A. W. Machen, twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000) on deposit returnable on demand. [Signed] Francis M. Darby, Treasurer."

On the back of said receipt was indorsed the following:

"$13,000 of this has been repaid to me some time ago. [Signed] A. W. Machen. Oct. 6, 1909."

That Arthur W. Machen in his lifetime withdrew $13,000 of said deposit, leaving a balance of $12,000 on deposit at the time of his death, which occurred on December 19, 1915, and for more than four years prior thereto. That interest at varying rates was paid by said trust company to said testator on said deposit, but at no time at a higher rate than 3 per cent. per annum. That the receipt remained in his possession until the time of his death, and has since been in the possession of his executors. That some time after the payment of the $13,000, a portion of the deposit, the testator made in pencil in his own handwriting the entry which appears on the back of the receipt. That the whole amount of the deposit was withdrawn by his executors, the appellees, upon the death of the testator, to wit, in or about July, 1916, and was used by them in paying pecuniary legacies and expenses.

The only question presented by this appeal is whether the above-mentioned deposit is taxable under the laws of this state.

The valuation and assessment was made by the appeal tax court under section 214 of article 81 of the Code of Public Civil Laws of this state (Code of 1912), which is as follows:

"All bonds, certificates of indebtedness or evidence of debt in whatsoever form made or issued by any public or private corporation incorporated by this state or any other state, territory, district or foreign country, or issued by any state (except the state of Maryland,) territory, district or foreign country not exempt from taxation by the laws of this state, and owned by residents of Maryland, shall be subject to valuation and assessment to the owners thereof in the county or city in which such owners may respectively reside, and they shall be assessed at their actual value in the market, and such upon which no interest shall be actually paid shall not be valued at all, and upon such valuation the regular rate of taxation for state purposes shall be paid, and there shall also be paid on such valuation thirty cents (and no more) on each one hundred dollars for county, city and municipal taxation in such county or city of this state in which the owner may reside."

The city contends that the deposit is taxable under the foregoing section of the Code, in that the aforesaid receipt is a "certificate of indebtedness or an evidence of debt" within the meaning of the provision of the statute, and as such is taxable; and, as we understand the city's contention, the deposit would be taxable if the acknowledgment of its receipt were evidenced by the usual certificate of deposit, or by bank passbook, or by the mere entry of such deposit upon the ledger of the bank if interest is paid on such deposit. In other words, any evidence in writing of a deposit, in whatever form it might appear, is a "certificate of indebtedness or an evidence of debt" within the meaning of the statute and taxable thereunder, as contended by the appellant.

This construction of the statute is not the one that has been placed thereon by those whose duty it has been, since the passage of the act in 1896 (Laws 1896, c. 120), more than 20 years ago, to value and assess the taxable property included within its provisions. It was not, so far as we are informed, until 1911, 16 years after the statute was passed, that any doubt was entertained as to the meaning of the statute in respect to the question here raised. To such time the deposits were never regarded as taxable.

In 1911 this identical question was submitted to the circuit court for Carroll county for its decision, and the arguments there made were the same as those made in this court in the case now before us. That court held, however, that deposits were not taxable, and no appeal was taken therefrom.

The statute has remained the same, and since that time no further attempt has been made to tax bank deposits except in some instances, where it had been disclosed in the settlement of estates in the orphans' court of Baltimore city that the decedent had money on deposit in bank, the city authorities, without resistance, valued and assessed the same for taxation.

In Baltimore v. Johnson, 96 Md. 787, 54 Atl. 646, 61 L. R. A. 568, the attempt was made to value and assess, for taxable purposes, a seat in the Baltimore Stock Exchange. In speaking of the effect of the long acquiescence in the construction of the statute, by the city's taxing authorities, by which a seat in that body was not held taxable, the court, speaking through Chief Judge Boyd, said:

"That it is not necessarily conclusive of the question, but it is an important circumstance when we remember that the language now relied on is in substance the same that has been in the statutes for so many years. The value of a seat may change from year to year, but if it is property now, within the meaning of our tax laws, it has been during all those years. If it was, not only have the owners of those seats been placed in a position, by the construction put on the law by the tax officers, by which they omitted them from their schedules of personal property, as provided for in section 178 of article 81 (Code Pub. Gen. Laws), although each swore that his schedule contained 'a true, full and complete list of all real and personal property held or belonging to me,' etc., but the tax officers themselves have failed to discharge their duties. Not only the original assessors were required to add any property omitted from the schedules, but the appeal tax court and assessors appointed by them are required to take steps to place unassessed property on the books. * * * We certainly can assume that all of the holders of such seats would not intentionally have violated the law in making up their schedules, and we are equally positive that the tax officers throughout all those years would not have willfully failed to discharge their duties. * * * During these years the Legislature has frequently had questions of taxation before it, and has passed many laws in relation thereto. * * * And although the members of the Legislature and the city and state tax officers may be presumed to know that these seats have not been assessed, the Legislature has not attempted, in terms, to have them taxed, and, as we have seen, the constructions placed on the tax laws during this great length of time seems to have been that they were not taxable. It was said in Hays v. Richardson, 1 Gill & J. 366, in speaking of the construction of a statute: 'This contemporaneous unvarying construction of the act of Assembly for 60 years ought not to be disregarded, but upon the most imperious and conclusive grounds.' See, also, Harrison v. State, 22 Md. 468, 85 Am. Dec. 668; Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch, 299, 2 L. Ed. 115; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 8, 36 L. Ed. 869. When therefore the language of the statute relied on is not now more comprehensive than it has been for half a century, and the thing sought to be taxed has been in existence during all that time, but has never been taxed, there ought to be some valid and substantial reason assigned before the new construction of the statute, now contended for, should be adopted."

What we said in that case is particularly applicable to the case before us.

As we have said, bank deposits, with the exception above mentioned, have never been regarded and treated as taxable under the unvarying construction placed upon the act of 1896 by those who have been intrusted with its enforcement.

[1] It is presumed that the Legislatures, succeeding the passage of the act, not only had knowledge of the fact that deposits such as the one before us were to be found in the many banks of this state, but that they also knew of the construction generally placed upon this statute that such deposits were not regarded by the taxing authorities of the state as taxable thereunder (Baltimore City v. Johnson, supra); nevertheless we find no amendments to the statute passed more than 20 years ago, by which bank deposits are unanimously brought within its provisions. This any one of the Legislatures that have convened since its passage had the power to do, and no doubt would have done had they thought that the construction placed thereon was inconsistent with the intention of the Legislature that passed the act, or had they wished to bring bank deposits unmistakably within the provisions of the statute.

[2] Applying the principles announced in Hays v. Richardson, supra, and quoted in Baltimore City v. Johnson, supra, that any unvarying construction of a statute for such lapse of time "ought not to be disregarded, but upon the most imperious grounds," we do not feel warranted or justified in placing upon the statute a construction differing from that placed thereon by the taxing authorities of the state.

It is further contended by the appellant that, should we hold that deposits are not taxable under section 214 of article 81, then such deposits cannot escape taxation under section 2 of said article, because of the clause therein contained that:

"All other property of every kind, nature and description within this state, except as provided by section 4, shall be valued and assessed for the purpose of state, county and municipal taxation to the respective owners thereof in the manner prescribed by this article," etc.

[3, 4] The deposit is claimed by appellees to be money and by the appellants to be an indebtedness. If it be money, it is clearly not taxable, unless it be "the proceeds of the sale of stock, bonds or other property disposed of for the purpose of evading and escaping taxation," and that is not shown in this case. Section 2 of article 81. And if it be an indebtedness it does not fall within the clause named, as it is not property within the meaning of that section, to be valued and assessed in the manner therein provided. Discrimination is therein made as to debts liable to taxation thereunder, and it is evident that it was not the intention of that statute to impose taxes upon every kind of debt. Buchanan v. Commissioners of Talbot County, 47 Md. 293.

For these reasons and those already stated, the order of the court below will be affirmed.

Order affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

(123 Md. 635)

MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE v. HUTZLER et al. (No. 23.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. May 3, 1918.)

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Carroll T. Bond, Judge.

Action by the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, a municipal corporation, against Ella G. Hutzler, Albert David Hutzler, Jacob H. Hollander, and Henry Oppenheimer, executors of the estate of David Hutzler. From an order affirming the action of the State Tax Commission vacating and annulling an assessment made by the appeal tax court of Baltimore city for state and city taxation, the Mayor and City Council appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

R. Contee Rose, Asst. City Sol., and S. S. Field, City Sol., both of Baltimore, for appellant. Charles Markell, of Baltimore (Haman, Cook, Chestnut & Markell, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees Ella G. Hutzler and others, executors.

PATTISON, J. The order of the Baltimore city court affirming the action of the State Tax Commission of Maryland vacating and annulling the assessment made by the appeal tax court of Baltimore city for the purposes of taxation for the years 1914 and 1915 upon the deposits mentioned in the records will be affirmed, for the reasons given in the opinion filed in the case of Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Mary Gresham Machen and Arthur W. Machen, Jr., Executors, 104 Atl. 175, No. 22 of the January term of this court.

Order affirmed, with costs to the appellees.

(123 Md. 36)

ADY v. JENKINS. (No. 2.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 19, 1918. Motion for Rehearing Denied July 30, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS §261(1)—RESCISSION.

When one party makes a substantial breach of contract, the other may rescind or refuse to perform and sue for his damages.

2. CONTRACTS §321(1)—BREACH—REMEDIES.

A breach of but one of the subsidiary provisions or promises of a contract will not, as a rule, relieve the other party from such further performance as may be due from him under the contract, and he is left to his remedy by an action for compensation in damages.

3. SALES §98—BREACH—RIGHT TO RESCIND.

Where plaintiff purchased goods to be canned and labeled with his name, agreeing to deliver the labels by a certain date, but the goods were not packed before such date and were never delivered, the mere fact that he failed to send the labels by such date did not constitute such breach as warranted rescission by the other, especially where plaintiff wrote, asking when he should send the labels, and received no reply.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE §120—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

A letter, confirming a sale and purchase of canned goods embodying the terms of the contract and referred to in the bill for specific performance, is admissible in evidence.

5. CUSTOMS AND USAGES §15(1)—REQUISITES.

In bill for specific performance of contract to sell and deliver canned goods, binding plaintiff to furnish labels by a certain date, offer to introduce evidence as to the custom among brokers in the vicinity concerning delivery of labels was properly excluded.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harford County; Wm. H. Harlan, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Bill by Samuel J. Ady against Frank B. Jenkins. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Harry S. Carver, of Bel Air, and Edward H. Burke, of Towson, for appellant. John L. G. Lee, of Baltimore, for appellee.

BRISCOE, J. This is an application by a bill in equity for an injunction and for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of a pack of canned corn for the season of 1917, known as "Hyde's Egyptian Corn." The injunction was granted, and the defendant was decreed to specifically perform the contract and to deliver the corn, according to the contract. From this decree, the defendant has taken an appeal.

The contract between the parties is in writing and is evidenced by the following letter:

"Hyde, P. O., Md., 3/29/1917.

"Saml. J. Ady, Esq., Sharon, Md. Confirming my telephone conversation of last night regarding your offer of March 21st that you will pack for me all your packing of this season, 1917, except 1,000 cases for your own requirement. The price to me is 1.30 per dozen f. o. b. Sharon, shipment to be made as soon as ready. Labels to be in your place or shipped by Aug. 1st. Payment to be made in 10 days & bill of lading furnishing with each shipment with usual discount for cash. Kindly acknowledge this by return mail. The maximum amount of your pack for my brand not to exceed 5,000 cases. Yours truly, Frank B. Jenkins."

This letter was mailed to and received by the defendant, and it is admitted that the contract was accepted by him.

The defense of the appellant rests on two grounds: First, that the failure of the appellee to deliver or ship the labels by the 1st of August was a sufficient reason for him to rescind the contract; and, second, that the appellant did not use the seed corn stated in the bill. On the other hand, while it is admitted that the labels were not shipped to the appellant by the 1st of August, 1917, it is contended that this failure to deliver was not such a breach of the contract, under the facts of the case, as to give the appellant a right to rescind the contract.

[1] The law is well settled that when there has been a substantial breach of a contract, the other party has a right to rescind the contract or to refuse to perform his part, and sue for damages. Koch v. Wimbrow, 111 Md. 22, 73 Atl. 896; Anvil Mining Co. v. Humble, 153 U. S. 540, 14 Sup. Ct. 876, 38 L. Ed. 814. In Brantly on Contracts, page 415, it is said:

"It is not, however, every breach of contract, or failure exactly to perform, which justifies a rescission. If the promise which is broken is subsidiary, that is, one which does not go to the root of the matter, defeating the object of the contract, and where the breach can well be compensated by damages, the other party cannot rescind for this reason."

In 6 R. C. L. pp. 925, 926, under title, Contracts, the rules of law upon this subject and the authorities in support thereof are collected and stated at length. In section 311 it is said:

"It is not every partial failure to comply with the terms of a contract by one party which will entitle the other party to abandon the contract at once. For partial derelictions and nonperformance in matters not necessarily of first importance to the accomplishment of the object of the contract the party injured must seek his remedy upon the stipulations of the contract itself. Before partial failure of performance of one party will give the other the right of rescission, the act failed to be performed must go to the root of the contract, or the failure to perform the contract must be in respect to matters which would render the performance of the rest a thing different in substance from that which was contracted for."

[2] A breach of but one of the subsidiary provisions or promises of a contract will not, as a rule, relieve the other party from such further performance as may be due from him under the contract, and he is left to his remedy by an action for compensation in damages. Brantly on Contracts, 415, 439, 300, 401; 6 R. C. L. §§ 312, 313, pp. 927, 928.

[3] While, as a general rule, in mercantile contracts stipulations as to time are regarded as essential, we cannot hold, under the facts of this case, that the failure of the plaintiff to deliver the labels by the 1st of August was such a breach of the contract as to justify the defendant in rescinding and abandoning the contract. An examination of the evidence will show that time could not have been regarded as such a substantial part of the contract, or one of its essential terms, as to bring this case within the authorities relied upon by the appellant, and to have justified the defendant in refusing to perform his part of the contract. The plaintiff testified that he wrote several letters to the defendant, one in July, 1917, and one in August, 1917, requesting him to advise the plaintiff when he would begin packing corn and how many labels he required to be sent, but that he received no reply to either letter, and no application at any time for labels; that on or about the 27th of September, 1917, he visited the defendant at his canning house near Sharon, in Harford county, and made inquiry as to the pack, and that he was told by the defendant that he would pack 4,500 cases of the corn, but to his surprise was informed that he would not deliver the 3,500 cases as agreed upon, and that he was about to sell the pack elsewhere, and that he would not deliver the pack to the plaintiff; that he informed the defendant that he had sold the goods to others, and that canned goods had increased considerably in price since the contract was made in March, 1917. While the defendant denied he had received the letter of July, 1917, and gave no reason why he had not replied to the letters, he admitted that he could not have used the labels, on the 1st of August, 1917, even if they had been delivered on or before that date. He also admitted that he packed only 900 cases in August, and that he had three or four bunches of labels left over for the previous year, which he could have used. The labels for the year 1916, under a similar contract between the parties, had not been furnished or delivered until October and November of that year. The labels, it appears, were to be pasted on the cans after the corn had been packed in them, cooked, and cooled; and, so far as the packing operations were concerned, that could have been done at any time even after the close of the season, as it had been done, under similar contracts, for previous years, with the defendant. As stated by the court below in its opinion, if the defendant was now allowed to repudiate the contract, the result would be that he would make some 70 cents a dozen additional profit on the goods, while the plaintiff would be obliged, if he in any way could find the special quality of goods he had sold, to go into the market and buy at an advance of probably 70 cents a dozen. It has been frequently held by this court that where time is not of the essence of the contract, a mere failure to perform within the period specified will not avoid or justify the rescission of a contract. Scarlett v. Stein, 40 Md. 528; Baltimore v. Raymo, 68 Md. 569, 13 Atl. 383. It is clear, we think, that the contract in this case is of a nature that a court of equity should specifically enforce, and that the court below was clearly right in so directing and in granting an injunction in its decree of the 20th of October, 1917. Sullivan v. Tuck, 1 Md. Ch. 59; Fardy v. Williams, 38 Md. 502; Eq. Gas L. Co. v. Balto. Tar Co., 63 Md. 285; Neal v. Parker, 98 Md. 266, 57 Atl. 213; Brantly on Contracts, p. 252.

There was no reversible error, in the ruling of the court, upon exceptions to testimony, set out in the record.

[4] The admission of the letter which contained the terms of the contract was entirely proper. It was the real contract between the parties, and was referred to in the bill of complaint "as the contract which was reduced to writing in a letter from the plaintiff to the defendant, which was mailed to and received by the defendant, and the said contract was accepted by the defendant." It was the basis of the suit, made a part of the bill, and was clearly admissible in evidence.

[5] As the case is now presented, it is quite certain that the proffer to introduce evidence as to the custom among brokers, in Bel Air, as to the delivery of labels, was properly excluded by the court, and there was no error in this ruling. Foley v. Wm. Mason & Son, 6 Md. 37; Gibney v. Curtis, 61 Md. 192; Balto. Baseball v. Pickett, 78 Md. 386, 28 Atl. 279, 22 L. R. A. 690, 44 Am. St. Rep. 304.

For the reasons we have given, the decree of the court below will be affirmed.

Decree affirmed, with costs.

(133 Md. 442)

CREAGHAN et al. v. MAYOR, ETC., OF BALTIMORE et al. (No. 25.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 8, 1918.)

1. INJUNCTION §85(2) — ENFORCEMENT OF ORDINANCE.

Enforcement of a void ordinance may be enjoined at the instance of a party whose interests will be injuriously affected by its execution.

2. STATUTES §64(1) — PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

A statute may be valid in part and void in part, even where the two parts are contained in the same section, provided that the valid part is independent of and severable from that which is void.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §111(4) — ORDINANCES — PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

A city ordinance may be valid in part and void in part, even where the two parts are contained in the same section, provided that the valid part is independent of and severable from that which is void.

4. INJUNCTION §118(4) — ENFORCEMENT OF ORDINANCE — PLEADING.

Where ordinance enforcement of which is sought to be enjoined as unconstitutional contains many provisions, and is amendment of article of City Code, containing numerous other provisions on same subject-matter, plaintiff must point out provisions claimed to be unconstitutional, showing his interest would be injuriously affected.

5. FOOD §1 — ORDINANCE REGULATING PRODUCTION OF MILK — AUTHORITY OF MAYOR AND COUNCIL.

Under Baltimore City Charter (Acts 1898, c. 123) the mayor and city council had authority to pass Ordinance No. 262 of 1917, regulating the production and distribution of milk and milk products in the interests of cleanliness and health.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §278(4) — REGULATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF MILK — DUE PROCESS.

Ordinance No. 262 of 1917 of city of Baltimore, regulating the production and distribution of milk and milk products in the interests of cleanliness and health, is not unconstitutional as depriving milk dealers of their property without due process of law.

7. FOOD §1 — REGULATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF MILK — VALIDITY.

Ordinance No. 262 of 1917 of city of Baltimore, regulating the production and distribution of milk, held not invalid.

8. FOOD §1 — DISTRIBUTION OF MILK — VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE.

Such ordinance is not invalid as attempting to confer on the commissioner of health unlimited discretion in granting, refusing, and revoking permits to and of milk dealers.

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §309(1) — DISTRIBUTION OF MILK — VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE — NOTICE.

Ordinance No. 262 of 1917 of city of Baltimore, regulating production and distribution of milk and milk products, is not invalid as failing to provide for proper notice and hearing before commissioner of health as to issuance or revocation of milk dealers' permits.

10. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §316 — DISTRIBUTION OF MILK — ORDINANCE — DUE PROCESS.

Ordinance No. 262 of 1917 of city of Baltimore, regulating production and distribution of milk and milk products, is not invalid as failing to provide an appeal from exercise of discretion of commissioner of health.

11. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §362 — DISTRIBUTION OF MILK — DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER.

Ordinance No. 262 of 1917 of the city of Baltimore, regulating distribution of milk in interest of health, is not invalid as attempting to delegate legislative power to commissioner of health in that it attempts to empower him to make regulations for sale of milk, etc.

12. INJUNCTION §85(2) — ORDINANCE — IMPOSSIBILITY OF COMPLIANCE — WAR CONDITIONS.

Because milk producers and distributors, owing to war conditions, have not been able, in the months allowed by a city ordinance, to make the changes in dairies and farms required by it, is no ground for holding unreasonable or enjoining enforcement of ordinance deemed necessary for discharge of city's duty to preserve public health.

Appeal from Circuit Court of Baltimore City; H. Arthur Stump, Judge.

Suit by Thomas J. Creaghan and Samuel G. Imwold against the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore and John D. Blake, Commissioner of Health. From a decree dismissing the bill, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Isaac Lobe Straus, of Baltimore, for appellants. Alexander Preston, Deputy City Sol., of Baltimore (S. S. Field, City Sol., of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees.

THOMAS, J. This appeal is from a decree of the circuit court of Baltimore city sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing the bill of complaint filed by the appellants against the mayor and city council of Baltimore and John D. Blake, commissioner of health, to have Ordinance No. 262 of the mayor and city council of Baltimore declared null and void, and for an injunction restraining the enforcement of the same.

The bill alleges:

That the plaintiff Thomas J. Creaghan was a resident and taxpayer of Baltimore city, and at the time of the filing of the bill, and for 28 years prior thereto, was engaged in the retail milk and dairy business in Baltimore city, during all of which time he had conducted the business in a proper and sanitary manner, and had delivered to his customers healthy milk and dairy products; that the plaintiff Samuel G. Imwold was a resident and taxpayer of Baltimore county, and owned and operated a dairy farm in that county, having in his herd about 100 cows, and at the time of the filing of the bill milking 60 cows; that he retailed loose milk, the product of his own herd and the herds of others; that he maintained his herd in a healthy and sanitary condition, "and that the herds of the others from whom he produces milk" were likewise kept in a healthy and sanitary condition; that his plant in Baltimore county, which was of great value, had been inspected by city inspectors and state inspectors; that he had never had any "trouble under such inspection"; "that for 28 years past he has retailed milk to the consumers in Baltimore city from the churn, properly iced, of high grade, healthy, and fit for human consumption; that all of the assistants at said dairy farm and engaged in delivery of the product thereof are also kept in a clean, healthy, and sanitary condition."

The bill further alleges:

That on the 1st day of June, 1917, the mayor and city council of Baltimore passed an ordinance, known as Ordinance No. 262, which provided, in section 6, that it should take effect five months after the date of its passage; that there was no statute of the state authorizing the ordinance, and that the same is "unconstitutional and in contravention of the twenty-third paragraph of the Bill of Rights of the state of Maryland and the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives citizens of Baltimore city and nonresidents of Baltimore city of their property without due process of law, and without any warrant or authority whatsoever, and interferes with their personal liberties"; that "many portions of said ordinance are void in that it attempts to empower said commissioner of health to use unlimited and unbounded discretion in granting or refusing or revoking permits therein provided for, and does not undertake to provide any general rules or regulations limiting the exercise of said discretion"; that it "fails to provide for proper notice and hearing or appeal from the results of the exercise of such discretion as therein provided to any properly constituted judicial tribunal, so that the powers attempted to be granted to said commissioner of health may be exercised in a whimsical, capricious, ignorant, fraudulent, or dishonest manner without any opportunity to your orators or either of them for an appeal from or a correction of such action on the part of such commissioner of health"; "that such regulations as are prescribed by said ordinance are arbitrary, unreasonable, unfair, unjust, and the provisions thereof provide for the exercise of the will or discretion of a municipal officer unrestrained by any prescribed general rule of law, placing him in a position where he may give permits to some and refuse permits to others under the same conditions, and permit such citizens as he may like to conduct their lawful business and prevent others from so conducting their lawful business to the great hurt and detriment of such others, to their ruin and the confiscation of their property"; that the "ordinance attempts to delegate legislative power to the commissioner of health, in that it attempts to empower him to make regulations for the sale of milk or cream below the requirements for standard milk pasteurized and standard cream pasteurized, for sterilization of milk, for standardization or adjustment of milk, for the requirement for the production of the aforesaid grades of milk, for the production, pasteurization, and handling of all milk, skimmed milk, or cream held, kept, or offered for sale, sold or delivered for consumption in the city of Baltimore, or used for the manufacture of ice cream or butter, buttermilk, or other fermented milks, whey, or curd in the city of Baltimore, for the increasing of temperature for pasteurization, for the application of the tuberculin test, for the making of the grades of milk established or attempted to be established by said ordinance, for excusing from compliance with the expressed terms of said ordinance, for the naming of the conditions under which selected milk pasteurized or selected cream pasteurized may be sold in Baltimore city, for excusing compliance otherwise necessary under rule 5, section 59E of said ordinance, for keeping, offering for sale, selling, delivering, or using in the city of Baltimore milk or cream below standard milk or cream, for discoloring or denaturing milk or cream, for keeping milk at a higher temperature than otherwise by said ordinance allowed, for inspecting or investigating the herd, the farm, and its equipment of the producer outside of Baltimore city and the jurisdiction of the defendants and each of them, for producing, handling, selling, or distributing raw milk and cream, for removing infected cattle from herds outside of Baltimore city, for regulating and fixing the character and equipment of the farm for the production of raw milk outside of Baltimore city, for declaring the conditions under which any condensed milk, condensed cream, evaporated milk, evaporated cream, or other milk or cream products may be sold in Baltimore city, and, generally, to transact many other things without legislative assent"; that the "enforcement of the powers thus attempted to be conferred upon the commissioner of health will unequally affect the rights of your orators and of other persons engaged in like trade or business," and cause other irreparable damage," and "that all and each of said powers so attempted to be conferred are ultra vires"; "that, although the respective business of your orators, as aforesaid, are not now and never have been nuisances in fact or in law, nevertheless, under the terms of said ordinance, they may be so declared by the mere dictum of said commissioner of health, and your orators may be deprived of their business and means of livelihood," that the ordinance, if enforced, will forbid the entrance of perfectly clean and healthy milk into the city of Baltimore, "except at the pleasure of the commissioner of health"; that under the provisions of the ordinance it will take effect on the 1st day of November, 1917, and that the defendants had given notice to the plaintiffs and others that the ordinance would be enforced at that time; that the enforcement of the ordinance would be ruinous to the established business of the plaintiffs and each of them, and of the milk business of the majority of milk dealers in Baltimore city, and the damages arising from such enforcement would be irreparable; and that, "owing to war conditions," and the scarcity of labor and metal, it had been impossible ever since the passage of the ordinance to make such "changes in the plants of dairies operating in Baltimore city and in milk-producing farms and plants as are necessary in order to comply with its provisions."

The bill then prayed that the ordinance referred to, "and each and every part thereof," be declared null and void, and that the defendants be enjoined from enforcing or attempting to enforce it.

The ordinance, which was filed as an exhibit with the bill, is entitled:

"An ordinance to repeal sections 55A, 56A, 56B, and 59 of article 14 of the Baltimore City Code of 1906, title 'Health,' subtitle 'Food, Food Products and Milk,' as amended by Ordinance 103, approved May 6, 1908, and to reordain said sections with amendments, and to add twelve new sections to said article, to be designated sections 55E, 59A, 59B, 59C, 59D, 59E, 59F, 59G, 59H, 59I, 59J and 59K; and to further regulate the production, manufacture, handling, sale and distribution of milk and cream products in Baltimore city."

Notwithstanding the ordinance itself covers more than 26 printed pages, and is an amendment of and an addition to article 14 of the Baltimore City Code of 1906, as amended by Ordinance 103 of May 6, 1906, containing many other provisions dealing with the same subject-matter, the plaintiffs nowhere in their bill refer to the particular section or sections of the ordinance claimed to be open to the objections urged against it, and the enforcement of which would operate to their injury. Nor have counsel for the appellants, in their brief, pointed out the particular sections, or provisions thereof, falling within the condemnation of the rules for which they contend.

[1-4] While the enforcement of a void ordinance may be enjoined at the instance of a party whose interests will be injuriously affected by its execution (Page v. Balto., 34 Md. 558; Deems v. M. & C. C. of Balto., 80 Md. 164, 30 Atl. 648, 26 L. R. A. 541, 45 Am. St. Rep. 339), the well-established rule in this state is that a statute may be valid in part and void in part, even where the two parts are contained in the same section, "provided that the valid part is independent of, and severable from, that which is void." Steenken v. State, 88 Md. 706, 42 Atl. 212; Welch v. Cogan, 126 Md. 1, 94 Atl. 384. And the same rule applies to ordinances. Field v. Malster, 88 Md. 691, 41 Atl. 1087. As we have said, the bill alleges that "many portions of said ordinance are void," without specifying the particular provisions or sections objected to, while the prayer of the bill is that the "ordinance and each and every part thereof" be declared null and void. Where an ordinance contains many sections and provisions, and is an amendment of and an addition to an article of the Code containing numerous other sections and provisions dealing with the same subject-matter, in connection with which the ordinance must be construed, good pleading would at least require the plaintiff to point out the sections and provisions claimed to be unconstitutional, with sufficient averments to show that his interests would be injuriously affected by their enforcement.

The main objections urged against the ordinance in question, as gathered from the very general allegations of the bill, are: (1) That the mayor and city council of Baltimore had no authority to pass it; (2) that it is unconstitutional in that it deprives the plaintiffs of their property without due process of law; (3) that it attempts to confer upon the commissioner of health unlimited discretion in granting, refusing, and revoking permits therein provided for; (4) that it fails to provide "for proper notice and hearing or appeal from the results of the exercise of such discretion"; (5) that it attempts to delegate legislative power to the commissioner of health "in that it attempts to empower him to make regulations for the sale of milk," etc.

[5] 1. The Baltimore city charter (Acts of 1898, c. 123) expressly authorizes the mayor and city council of Baltimore "to provide by ordinance for the proper inspection of milk or any and all other food products offered for sale in the city of Baltimore or intended for consumption therein," and further declares that the city shall "have and exercise within the limits of the city of Baltimore all the power commonly known as the police power to the same extent as the state has or could exercise said power within said limits." The ordinance in question was passed in the exercise of the police power thus expressly conferred upon the mayor and city council, and cannot, therefore, be said to be without legislative sanction and authority. Deems v. Balto., supra.

[6-11] 2. All of the other objections, as we have enumerated them above, are fully covered and disposed of by the decisions of this court.

In the case of Boehm v. Balto., 61 Md. 259, Judge Miller, speaking for the court, said:

"Under the power 'to pass ordinances to preserve the health of the city, to prevent and remove nuisances, and to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases,' the mayor and city council of Baltimore enacted, among others, two ordinances. * * * By the first of these ordinances it is provided that no person shall remove the contents of any privy, well, or sink, within the limits of the city, without having first obtained a license so to do, and every person who may obtain such license 'shall be considered as subject to the orders of the board of health in all matters relating to the opening and cleaning of privies or vaults, time and manner of removal, and the presentation of statistics connected with the cleaning of privies, as also the place or places to which night soil may be removed, and for any refusal or neglect to obey the orders of the board of health as herein provided it shall be the duty of the comptroller, upon the written request of the commissioner of health, to revoke the license of the person or persons so refusing or neglecting to obey.' By the second it is enacted that every person desiring such license shall make a written application therefor to the comptroller, who, after conference with the board of health, and on being satisfied with the character of the applicant, the security and tightness of his carts, that he is the owner of such as are specified in his application, and that he is not in collusion or combination with others to defraud the city, may grant him a license for one year, and renew the same from time to time, upon his paying for such license, and each renewal of the same, the sum of $2.50 for each and every cart; * * * 'and the comptroller upon complaint of the health commissioner may revoke or suspend any such license.' * * * The validity of these ordinances was not seriously questioned in argument. That they are lawful and proper exercise of the power 'to preserve the health of the city and to prevent and remove nuisances' does not admit of doubt. Such powers have been universally granted to municipal corporations in this country. In fact the preservation of the health and safety of the inhabitants is one of the chief purposes of local government, and reasonable by-laws in relation thereto have always been sustained in England, as within the incidental authority of such corporations. Under such a power a municipal corporation has the undoubted right to pass ordinances creating boards of health, appointing health commissioners, with other subordinate officials, regulating the removal of house dirt, night soil, refuse, of-fal, and filth, by persons licensed to perform such work, and providing for the prohibition, abatement and suppression of whatever is in-trinsically and inevitably a nuisance. * * * There is no similarity between these ordinances and the one pronounced inoperative and void in Radecke's Case, 49 Md. 217 [33 Am. Rep. 239]. The mischief against which they are directed, and the object sought to be attained by their enactment, are altogether different from those with which the ordinance in that case pro-fessed to deal, and we have no hesitation in de-clarating them not only free from the objections which were held fatal to that ordinance, but in every respect reasonable and proper. The sub-ject-matter dealt with by these ordinances re-quired the adoption of very stringent rules and regulations, and such is the character of their provisions. Every person obtaining a license to perform this offensive, but necessary, work is very properly subjected to the orders of the board of health in all matters pertaining to the manner of doing it. By one of the ordi-nances it is provided that 'any refusal or neglect to obey the orders of the board of health, as herein provided, it shall be the duty of the comptroller, upon the written request of the commissioner of health, to revoke the license,' and by the other power is given him to revoke or suspend the license upon the complaint of the same officer. We do not interpret these pro-visions as requiring the comptroller, before he acts, to investigate and determine the reasona-bleness or truthfulness of the charges or com-plaints made by the health commissioner. Prompt and decisive action is what is contem-plate and required, for it is manifest that such work could not be done, even for a short time, in an improper manner without serious danger to the public health. In the one case it is made his duty to act immediately 'upon the written request,' and in the other he may act upon the simple complaint of the health commissioner. The plea avers there was in this case both the 'complaint and written request,' and we are of opinion it is a bar to this action against the city."

In the case of Commissioner of Easton v. Covey, 74 Md. 262, 22 Atl. 266, the court had to deal with the validity of an ordinance passed by the commissioners of Easton, which provided:

"It shall not be lawful for any person or per-sons to erect or build any dwelling house, barn, shed, stable, storehouse, warehouse or shop within the limits of this town, or any porch on any part of the sidewalk, without first obtaining a permit from the commissioners of the town, through their clerk, to erect the same, for which one dollar shall be paid for each and every per-mit so granted," etc.

In that case it was argued by counsel for the appellee:

"The ordinance does not profess to regulate the erection of buildings, or to lay down general rules governing their construction, or to pre-scribe limits within which any given business can be conducted. But the construction sought to be placed upon it by the defendants 'would commit to the unrestrained will of the commis-sioners the power to say whether or not any building, of any character whatsoever, should hereafter be erected in the town of Easton.' It 'lays down no rules by which its impartial ex-ecution can be secured, or partiality and oppres-sion prevented.' Such a construction would make the ordinance one which in the language of Mr. Justice Miller, hardly falls within the 'domain of law.' Balto. v. Radecke, 49 Md. 230 [33 Am. Rep. 239].

After holding that the commissioners had the power to pass the ordinance, this court then said:

"We also think it equally clear that an ordi-nance passed under this clause to regulate the erecting of any buildings within the corporate limits, by providing that no such building shall be erected without a permit therefor, first ob-tained from the commissioners, is not only rea-sonable, but useful, if not essential to the wel-fare and prosperity of the town. Like ordi-nances have been passed by the corporate au-thorities of other towns and cities under just such general grants of power as this, and we have found no case in which their validity has been denied. The ordinance which was declared unreasonable and void in Radecke's Case was one which gave to the mayor the unrestrained and absolute power at his own mere will and pleasure to revoke any and every permit which had already been granted for the use of steam engines and boilers in the city of Baltimore, but at the same time the court was careful to say that in deciding that ordinance to be void they were not to be understood as expressing any dis-approval of a previous one which required a permit for the erection of every such engine within the city limits."

In Deems v. M. & C. C. of Balto., supra, the court had under consideration an ordi-nance of the mayor and city council of Balti-more making it unlawful for any person to sell or offer for sale any impure, adulterated, sophisticated, or unwholesome milk or other food products, and providing that only pure, unadulterated, unsophisticated, and whole-some milk should be sold, and that such article should be understood to be the natural product of healthy cows which had not been deprived of any part of its cream, and to which no additional liquid or solid preserva-tive had been added, and having the specific gravity therein mentioned. It also provided for the appointment of a competent chemist, who should make such chemical and micro-scopical examinations as might be required under the ordinance, and for the appoint-ment also of three inspectors of foods, and by section 6 further provided:

"And milk or food products in the possession of the person or persons so violating, disobeying, refusing, or neglecting to comply with the pro-visions of this ordinance may be confiscated and destroyed by the inspector examining the same."

The bill was filed by a dairyman, who con-ducted a retail business for the sale of milk, and alleged that a certain inspector, etc., without making any chemical or microscopi-cal examination thereof, and without due process of law, poured his milk out upon the streets and down the gutters of the city, thereby wasting and destroying the same. It further alleged that the ordinance, and particularly section 6 thereof, was void, and prayed for an injunction restraining the may-or and city council and the other defendants "from taking and destroying, without chemi-cal or microscopical examination first made, and without due process of law first had, any milk or other dairy product, the property of the complainant." It was urged by counsel in that case that a municipal corporation could not impose a forfeiture of property without expressed legislative authority; that the power conferred upon the mayor and city council did not authorize an unlimited control over the business occupations of the people, and that the power to regulate did not include a power to confiscate and destroy; that the municipal authorities had no power to declare any particular business a nuisance in a summary mode and enforce their decisions at their pleasure; that by the ordinance there in question the determination of the quality of all milk offered for sale in Baltimore city was left to the arbitrary decision of an inspector, from whom there was no appeal, who was licensed to destroy the property of the citizen at his pleasure, and by spilling the milk to render impossible any investigation respecting the honesty of his conclusions; that by the exercise of such a power any dairyman conducting an honest and legitimate business could, under color of law, be absolutely ruined, and his business be destroyed, or the inspector could secure the consignment of all shipments of milk from the counties to himself in the city of Baltimore, thereby guaranteeing the shipper against the destruction of his property for a pecuniary consideration, and that the ordinance attempted to confer an absolute and irresponsible power controlling the entire trade. In sustaining the ordinance, Chief Judge Robinson said:

'Nor can there be any question as to the power of the appellee to provide by ordinance for the inspection of milk offered for sale within its corporate limits, and to forbid the sale of any milk which does not come up to the standard or test prescribed by the ordinance. And the real question, it seems to us, under the demurrer, is whether it has the power to direct that milk which is found upon inspection not to come up to the standard, as thus prescribed, shall be destroyed. * * * Every well-organized government has the inherent right to protect the health and provide for the safety and welfare of its people. It has not only the right, but it is a duty and obligation which the sovereign power owes to the public, and as no one can foresee the emergency or necessity which may call for its exercise, it is not an easy matter to prescribe the precise limits within which it may be exercised. * * * 'Property of every kind,' says Mr. Justice Story, 'is held subject to those general regulations which are necessary for the common good and general welfare. And the Legislature has the power to define the mode and manner in which every one may use his property.' 2 Story, Const. And in the late case of Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 62 [8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205], after considering the constitutional limitations which declare that no person shall be deprived of his property or liberty without due process of law, the Supreme Court says these limitations 'have never been construed as being incompatible with the principle equally vital, because so essential to the peace and safety, that all property in this country is held under the implied obligation that the owner's use of it shall not be injurious to the community.' To justify such interference with private rights, its exercise must have for its immediate object the promotion of the public good, and, so far as may be practicable, every effort should be made to adjust the conflicting rights of the public and the private rights of individuals. At the same time the emergency may be so great, and the danger to be averted so imminent, that private rights must yield to the paramount safety of the public, and to await, in such cases, the delay necessarily incident to ordinary judicial inquiry, in the determination of private rights, would defeat altogether the object and purposes for which the exercise of this salutary power was invoked. Whatever injury or inconveniences one may suffer in such cases, he is, in the eye of the law, compensated by sharing the common benefit resulting from the summary exercise of this power, and which, under the circumstances, was absolutely necessary for the protection of the public. The use of milk as an article of food enters largely, as we all know, in the daily consumption of every household, and there is no more fruitful source of disease than the use of adulterated and unwholesome milk. And if the appellant's contention be right that the question whether or not milk, which is daily offered for sale in every part of a large and populous city, comes up to the standard prescribed by the ordinance, must be determined by the ordinary process of judicial investigation or by chemical analysis, it would be impossible to prevent the danger to the public health necessarily resulting from impure and unwholesome milk. * * * It is in the exercise of this power that quarantine laws, which not only interfere with private rights, but with the liberty of persons, are passed, and also laws which provide for the destruction of infected clothing to prevent the spread of contagious diseases. And as to the extent and the summary manner in which this power may be exercised to protect the public health, we may refer to Boehm's Case, 61 Md. 264, Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523 [11 N. E. 929, 59 Am. Rep. 113], and Newark v. Hart, 50 N. J. Law, 308 [12 Ad. 697]."

In the case of State v. Broadbelt, 89 Md. 565, 43 Atl. 771, 45 L. R. A. 433, 73 Am. St. Rep. 201, the appellee, a dairyman engaged in supplying milk to cities, towns, and villages within this state, was indicted under Acts of 1893, c. 306, for failing, neglecting, and refusing to register his herd of cattle with the live stock sanitary board, and he demurred to the indictment upon the ground that the statute was unconstitutional in that it deprived "the individual of the due process of law secured by" the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, and article 23 of the Maryland Declaration of Rights, etc. In disposing of the case, Chief Judge McSherry, after stating that the entire act was strictly a police regulation, enacted for the purpose of preserving the public health, and after referring to the danger arising from the use of impure milk, said:

"Thorough inspections of cattle and dairies may reduce the frequency of infection. The preservation of the public health by preventing the sale of infected milk, or of milk that may come from infected sources, when milk by reason of its almost universal use in one form or another as an article of food is especially likely to spread disease, is one of the most imperative duties of the state, and obviously one most incontestably within the scope of the police power. As a means to that end—the preservation of the public health—a requirement that every person selling milk for consumption in cities, towns, and villages shall cause his herd of cattle to be registered with the live stock sanitary board is a reasonable and an appropriate enactment; and the subsequent provisions are necessary parts of the scheme. The nineteenth section no more deprives the individual of due process of law than did the ordinance in Easton v. Covey, 74 Md. 262 [22 Atl. 266], which prohibited the erection of any building without a permit from the commissioners of the town, or an ordinance forbidding the keeping of swine without a permit in writing from the board of health (Quincy v. Kennard, 151 Mass. 262, 563 [24 N. E. 860]), or an ordinance requiring the written permission of the mayor of a town before any person was allowed to move a building along the streets (Wilson v. Eureka City, 173 U. S. 32 [19 Sup. Ct. 317, 43 L. Ed. 603], decided February 20, 1899), or the ordinance requiring a license for the removal of the contents of privies, and subjecting the holders of such license to the orders of the board of health (Boehm v. Mayor, etc., Balto., 61 Md. 259). The constitutional limitations which declare that no person shall be deprived of his property or liberty without due process of law have never been construed as being 'incompatible with the principle—equally vital, because essential to the peace and safety of society—that all property in this country is held under the implied obligation that the owner's use of it shall not be injurious to the community. * * * The exercise of the police power by the destruction of property which is itself a public nuisance, or the prohibition of its use in a particular way, whereby its value becomes depreciated, is very different from taking property for public use, or from depriving a person of his property without due process of law.' Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623 [8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 203]."

In M. & C. C. of Balto. v. Wollman, 123 Md. 310, 91 Atl. 339, this court, speaking through Judge Briscoe, said:

"The right to delegate power by municipal authorities rests upon the same principle and is controlled in the same way as the delegation of the legislative power by the state. * * * We think that fixing the rent of market stalls in the city of Baltimore is an administrative, and not a legislative, function, and may be delegated to the clerks of the markets, as provided by the ordinance in question."

In the case of State v. Normand, 76 N. H. 541, 85 Atl. 899, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 906, the Supreme Court of New Hampshire, dealing with a provision authorizing the state board of health "to make all necessary rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of" an act forbidding "the existence or maintenance of any unclean, unhealthy or unsanitary condition or practice in any establishment or place where food is produced, manufactured, or stored or sold, or any car or vehicle used for the transportation or distribution thereof," said:

"The delegation of such power is not unusual. The state board of cattle commissioners is authorized to make such 'regulations as the board deems necessary to exclude or arrest' diseases in cattle. * * * Each board of medical examiners 'may make any by-laws and rules not inconsistent with law necessary in performing its duties.' * * * The inspector of steamboats may make rules and regulations. * * * Similar power is given to the commissioners of pilotage. * * * And numerous other instances might be cited of powers given to public administrative officers to make rules for the enforcement of specific laws. If such rules are not unreasonable, and if they are not repugnant to the laws of the state or the Constitution, they are usually upheld as the exercise of power specially conferred by the Legislature for the more efficient enforcement of the statutes to which they relate. 'As the possessor of the law-making power,' the Legislature may confer authority and impose duties upon others and regulate the exercise of their several functions. It may pass general laws for that purpose, giving them expressly or by necessary implication an incidental discretion to employ the proper means to fill up and regulate the details for themselves and subordinates, though the exercise of that discretion be quasi judicial. * * * It cannot be said that every grant of power to executive or administrative boards of officials, involving the exercise of discretion and judgment, must be considered a delegation of legislative authority. While it is necessary that a law, when it comes from the lawmaking power, should be complete, still there are many matters relating to methods or details, which may be, by the Legislature, referred to some designated ministerial officer or body. All such matters fall within the domain of the right of the Legislature to authorize an administrative board or body to adopt ordinances, rules, by-laws, or regulations in aid of the successful execution of some general statutory provision. Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 121, 132, 56 N. E. 89, 93 (50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195). In that case it was held that, under a general statutory authority to prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases, a rule of the state board of health upon the subject of vaccination was not legislation. In Ishenour v. State, 157 Ind. 517, 62 N. E. 40, 87 Am. St. Rep. 228, it was held that a provision of the pure food law that the board of health should adopt measures necessary to facilitate the law's enforcement and prepare rules regulating minimum standards of foods and defining specific adulterations was not a delegation of legislative power."

Without attempting to refer to the various sections of the ordinance, or the many provisions contained therein, a reference to section 55A will serve to show the general character of the provisions made by the ordinance and of the powers conferred upon the commissioner of health. Section 55D, as ordained by ordinance No. 103 of 1908, declares:

"The commissioner of health shall have power to adopt such regulations as may be deemed proper and necessary to insure all milk and cream intended for consumption in Baltimore city being produced, transported, stored, kept, distributed, retailed, and delivered under conditions rendering them suitable for consumption as human food, and to compel perfect hygienic and suitable conditions of all cow stables, creameries, and dairies from which milk and cream so intended for consumption in Baltimore city are produced; such regulations not to be inconsistent with existing laws or ordinances, and copies of the same to be printed and kept for free distribution to the public; and said commissioner of health shall have power to prohibit the sale within the corporate limits of Baltimore city of milk or cream produced, transported, stored, kept or distributed, retailed or delivered contrary to such regulations, whether such milk or cream be produced within or outside of the corporate limits of the city of Baltimore; and to the end that said regulations may be enforced in cases of milk or cream produced outside of the corporate limits of the city of Baltimore, but intended for consumption therein, said commissioner of health may require such of the city milk inspectors as he may designate for the purpose to make inspections at such intervals and times as he may deem expedient of all dairy farms, stables, and other places outside of the city of Baltimore from which milk or cream are shipped for consumption in Baltimore city. In case full access to such premises or full opportunity to investigate all the conditions under which milk is there produced or kept shall be denied said inspectors, or in case upon such inspection the conditions are found such as in the opinion of the said commissioner of health render such milk or cream unsuitable or unsafe for human food and warrant the exclusion of said milk or cream from sale in Baltimore city, said commissioner of health shall have power to absolutely prohibit the sale thereof at any place in Baltimore city until such time as the reason for their exclusion shall in his opinion have ceased, and he shall adopt such means of identifying such milk or cream as to him may seem proper and expedient," etc.

Section 55A of the ordinance in question in this case provides:

"Every person or corporation desiring to bottle or handle for sale, or to offer or expose for sale, or to sell, dispose of, exchange or deliver milk or cream (the words 'milk or cream' as herein used being intended to mean milk, cream, skimmed milk, buttermilk or other fermented milk) or to manufacture for sale ice cream or butter, in the city of Baltimore, shall make application to the commissioner of health for a permit so to do."

It provides that the application shall be made on a printed form to be furnished by the commissioner of health, and what the application shall contain, and then provides:

"The commissioner of health, upon receipt of such application, shall cause to be investigated the place of business described in such application and the wagons or other vehicles, if any, intended to be used by such applicant. If such places of business and such wagons and other vehicles are found, upon such investigation, to be in a sanitary condition and fit for the uses and purposes to which they are intended to be put, said commissioner of health shall forthwith register said applicant in a proper record to be kept for the purpose, and issue a permit authorizing such applicant to carry on, engage in, and conduct the business applied for in Baltimore city at the place designated in such application. Such permits shall specify the kind or kinds of business to be conducted. All permits granted pursuant to this ordinance may at any time be revoked by the commissioner of health, for the persistent, repeated, or willful violation of any law or ordinance, or any regulations of the commissioner of health, governing the handling or sale of milk or cream, or the manufacture for sale of ice cream or butter in Baltimore city: Provided, however, that no such permit shall, at any time, be revoked by the commissioner of health, unless he shall first have given the holder of the same not less than ten days' notice in writing of his intention to revoke such permit, and an opportunity to be heard by him as to why such should not be done, this proviso not to be taken to apply to cases where the sale of milk or cream or the manufacture for sale of ice cream or butter may be temporarily prohibited by the commissioner of health because of disease, temporary unsanitary conditions or similar causes."

This section further provides that the permits shall not be transferable, and if the person or corporation having the permit shall change the location of his place of business, notice of such proposed change shall be given to the commissioner of health, and also provides that any person who sells or offers for sale milk, etc., in Baltimore city without having a permit to do so shall be subject to a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100 for each offense.

It would seem clear that the provisions of this section are entirely within the reasonable exercise of the powers conferred upon the mayor and city council of Baltimore. The permits provided for are issued to those complying with its provisions, and whose places of business, wagons, etc., are found, upon investigation, to be in a sanitary condition and fit for the purposes for which they are intended, and are revokable by the commissioner of health for the persistent, repeated, or willful violation of any law or ordinance, or any regulation of the commissioner of health, governing the handling or sale of milk or cream, or the manufacture for sale of any ice cream or butter in Baltimore city, after notice to the holder of the permit, and after he has had an opportunity to be heard. The ordinance does not attempt to delegate legislative power to the commissioner of health, but authorizes him to exact compliance with the provisions thereof and with such regulations as he has adopted for their enforcement, and gives him only such discretion as is necessary in the proper execution of a law or regulation designed to prevent the introduction and sale of impure milk, etc., in Baltimore city.

[12] In reference to the averment that, "owing to war conditions," and the scarcity of labor and metal, the plaintiffs have not been able within the five months allowed by section 6 to make the changes in their dairies and on their farms required by the provisions of the ordinance, it is sufficient to say that it presents no ground for holding unreasonable, or enjoining the enforcement of, an ordinance deemed necessary for the proper discharge of the imperative duty of the city to preserve the public health.

Radecke's Case, 49 Md. 217, State v. Mott, 61 Md. 297, 48 Am. Rep. 105, Bostock v. Sams, 95 Md. 400, 52 Atl. 665, 59 L. R. A. 282, 93 Am. St. Rep. 394, and Hagerstown v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 107 Md. 178, 68 Atl. 490, 126 Am. St. Rep. 382, upon which the appellants largely rely, deal with ordinances entirely unlike the one now under consideration. Radecke's Case was referred to by Judge Miller in Easton v. Covey, supra, as not in conflict with the latter decision, and in Hagerstown v. B. & O. R. R. Co., supra, Judge Briscoe, after observing that Easton v. Covey, supra, was unlike that case, said:

"And in holding this ordinance void and invalid for the reasons stated, we contravene no decisions in our own state, and impose no unnecessary restraints upon the action of municipal bodies' within proper and constitutional limitations."

The cases from which we have quoted have not been overruled by the later decisions of this court, and they fully sustain the provisions of the ordinance in question.

Decree affirmed, with costs.

(122 Md. 473)

MAYOR, ETC., OF BALTIMORE et al. v. GAMBLE et al. (No. 30.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)
INJUNCTION — §110 — JURISDICTION — CIRCUIT COURTS.

The circuit court of Baltimore county has no jurisdiction to enjoin enforcement of a Baltimore city ordinance wholly within the city for inspection of dairies, under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 16, § 86, confining jurisdiction in injunction suits to the circuit.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Baltimore County; Frank I. Duncan, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Bill by Robert James Gamble and another against the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore and another. From an order granting the injunction prayed for, the defendants appeal. Reversed, and bill dismissed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, and STOCKBRIDGE, JJ.

Alexander Preston, Deputy City Sol., of Baltimore (S. S. Field, City Sol., of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellants.

THOMAS, J. The bill of complaint in this case is like the one filed in No. 25 Appeals, January term, 1918, Oreaghan v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 104 Atl. 180, and prays that Ordinance No. 262 of the mayor and city council of Baltimore, approved June 1, 1917, "and each and every part thereof," be declared null and void, and that the mayor and city council of Baltimore and John D. Blake, commissioner of health, be enjoined from enforcing or attempting to enforce the same.

The bill was filed in the circuit court for Baltimore county on November 8, 1917, and on the same day that court granted a preliminary injunction as prayed. Thereafter the defendants appeared for the purpose of filing a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, and then brought this appeal from the order of the court granting the injunction.

Section 86 of article 16 of the Code provides:

"Each of the circuit judges may grant injunctions, or pass orders or decrees in equity, at any place in his circuit, to take effect in any part of his circuit, and may require in writing the original papers in any case, or abstracts and transcripts to be produced before him, wherever he may be in his circuit."

The ordinance provides, among other things, that a producer of milk who desires to sell the same in Baltimore city must obtain a permit, and, as one of the conditions for obtaining the permit, he must consent to an inspection of his dairy herd and premises, etc., in order that the commissioner of health may determine whether the milk is produced under the sanitary conditions required by the ordinance and from healthy cows. But compliance with this condition is purely voluntary on the part of the dairyman, and the ordinance operates only in Baltimore city, and to prevent the sale therein of impure or unhealthy milk.

The bill does not seek to enjoin the inspection of the plaintiffs' herds or premises in Baltimore county; for that is not authorized by the ordinance except with the consent of the plaintiffs. But the object of the bill is to restrain the enforcement in Baltimore city of an ordinance regulating the sale of milk therein. The injunction prayed for and granted by the court below was not intended therefore to take effect in Baltimore county or any part of that circuit, but only in Baltimore city.

The question of the jurisdiction of the court below to grant the injunction is so completely disposed of by the decision and reasoning of this court in Graham v. Harford County, 87 Md. 321, 39 Atl. 804, that a further discussion of it would only lead to a repetition of what was there said. Following the construction placed upon the section of the Code referred to in that case, we must reverse the order appealed from and dismiss the plaintiffs' bill.

Order reversed, with costs above and below, and bill dismissed.

(122 Md. 681)

CASTLE v. SWIFT & CO. (No. 44.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. May 15, 1918.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §129(4)—SALE OF GOODS—ACCEPTANCE AND RECEIPT.

Sales Act (Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 83) § 25, providing that a contract to sell goods worth $50 or more shall not be enforceable by action unless buyer shall accept part of goods and actually receive it, requires both acceptance and receipt, two separate acts, either of which may precede the other.

2. SALES §129(4) — ACCEPTANCE AND RECEIPT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

That eggs worth more than $50 were ordered and placed in seller's cooler at buyer's request, subject to order, was evidence of acceptance and receipt, within Sales Act (Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 83) § 25, providing that contract to sell or sale of goods worth $50 shall not be enforceable unless buyer shall accept and receive part; question being for jury.

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §160—INSTRUCTION —RECEIPT OF GOODS.

Prayer of seller of eggs that if evidence showed defendant purchased at a given price, eggs to be placed in seller's cooler and that, on eggs being placed there and invoice sent, he was to pay for them, then placing of eggs in cooler vested title in buyer, was erroneous, as failing to recognize requirement of actual receipt, under Sales Act (Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 83) § 25.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR §1062(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

Error in wrongful admission of evidence was harmless, where same fact was testified to by another witness without objection or contradiction.

Appeal from Superior Court of Baltimore City; John J. Dobler, Judge.

Action by Swift & Co. against Frederick C. Castle. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Willis E. Myers, of Baltimore, for appellant. Alfred J. Carr, of Baltimore, for appellee.

PATTISON, J. The action in this case was brought by the appellee, Swift & Co., to recover the loss sustained by it in the resale of eggs claimed to have been sold by it to the appellant, Frederick C. Oastle, and which he refused to take under such alleged sale. This appeal presents the question whether, under the statute known as the "Sales Act," there was a sale of the eggs by the appellee to the appellant that can be legally enforced.

J. Frederick Conrad, salesman for Swift & Co., testified that on Friday night, November 24, 1916, the defendant, a dealer in butter and eggs in the city of Baltimore, called the plaintiff over the phone at its Eutaw Market, Baltimore, Md., and asked the price of eggs. Witness quoted them to him at 37 cents per dozen, whereupon the defendant first offered 36 cents, but finally offered to purchase 200 cases and to pay therefor 36½ cents per dozen, if, as stated by the witness, "I would put them in our upstairs butter cooler, and he would order them out as he needed them." The eggs were to be placed in the butter cooler to save him the cost of storage. This offer was accepted, but, as Saturday was "a half holiday," the eggs were not put aside for the defendant until Monday, when, as requested by him, they were put in the butter cooler and designated as his eggs. On Tuesday morning the eggs were billed to him. On Wednesday morning the defendant again called the plaintiff over the phone, and Conrad, who answered the phone, was told by him that "the egg deal was off." Castle assigned as a reason therefor that the plaintiff's Pratt Street Market, as well as another dealer, had offered eggs to him at a lower price. The plaintiff refused to treat the deal as off, and upon the defendant's refusal to take the eggs and to comply with the terms of said agreement, they were resold by the plaintiff; the sum received therefor being less than the amount at which they had been sold to the defendant at such alleged sale.

Other witnesses testified that the defendant admitted to them that he had bought the eggs, and that he told them that he repudiated the sale for the reason stated by Conrad. It is also shown by the uncontradicted evidence of the plaintiff that the defendant, prior to the alleged sale, had purchased eggs from the plaintiff on terms similar to those under which Conrad testified the eggs in this case were bought by the defendant, and that the plaintiff had at times extended credit to the defendant to the amount of $2,500 or $3,000; "that is [as stated by plaintiff's credit man], we recognized it was credit because, although he would buy a couple hundred cases of eggs, or something like that, although he did not take them out at one time, we considered it credit just the same." The defendant admitted talking to Conrad, the plaintiff's representative, over the phone, but denied that he bought or agreed to buy the eggs, or that he had asked that they be put in the butter cooler for him, but that he asked plaintiff the price of eggs, just as he asked others, to ascertain their price, as he himself had eggs to sell, and wished to know their market value.

The "Sales Act" above referred to (article 83, § 25, of Code 1912) contains the following provisions:

"A contract to sell or a sale of goods or choses in action of the value of fifty dollars or upward shall not be enforceable by action, unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods or choses in action so contracted to be sold, or sold and actually received the same, or give something in earnest to bind the contract, or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract or sale be signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf.

"The provisions of this section apply to every such contract or sale, notwithstanding that the goods may be intended to be delivered at some future time, or may not at the time of such contract or sale be actually made, procured or provided, or fit or ready for delivery, or some act may be requisite for the making or completing thereof, or rendering the same fit for delivery; but if the goods are to be manufactured by the seller especially for the buyer and are not suitable for sale to others in the ordinary course of the seller's business, the provisions of this section shall not apply.

"There is an acceptance of goods within the meaning of this section when the buyer, either before or after delivery of the goods, expresses by words or conduct his assent to becoming the owner of those specific goods."

At the conclusion of the case the plaintiff offered one prayer which was granted. The defendant offered two; the first was rejected, and the second granted. By the plaintiff's prayer the court declared as a matter of law that if it, sitting as a jury, should—

"find from the evidence that the defendant purchased from the plaintiff 200 crates of eggs at 36½ cents per dozen, and that said eggs were to be placed in the plaintiff's butter cooler, so as to save the defendant the cost of storage, and it was a part of the agreement that, upon said eggs being so placed and an invoice sent for the same, the defendant was to pay for the same, then the placing of said eggs in said butter cooler and the sending of said invoice vested the title to the said eggs in the defendant. And if it shall further find that the plaintiff requested payment for the eggs, which was not complied with, and further that the plaintiff notified the defendant that unless he paid for the eggs the same would be sold at his risk, and in conformity with such notice the plaintiff did sell at the risk of the defendant said 200 crates of eggs, and advised him of the loss resulting therefrom, and requested payment of such loss, that said request was not complied with, then the verdict should be for the plaintiff for such sum as the court shall find, from the evidence, was the actual loss of the plaintiff, with interest in the discretion of the judge."

It is conceded that there was nothing given in earnest to bind the contract, or in part payment of the purchase money for the eggs said to have been bought by the defendant, and that there was no note or memorandum in writing of the contract or sale signed as required by the statute; consequently, in order to hold the contract or sale binding and enforceable against the defendant, the alleged buyer, it must be shown that he accepted at least a part of the eggs contracted to be sold or sold, and that he actually received the same. Therefore in this case we are concerned only in the meaning of the statute in respect to the provisions requiring acceptance and receipt by the buyer of the goods sold.

[1] It is clear that the terms of the statute require two distinct acts on the part of the vendee; he must accept, and he must actually receive, a part of the goods, in order to render the contract binding on him. There may be an actual receipt without any acceptance, and there may be an acceptance without any receipt. An acceptance may precede or follow the receipt, or it may be contemporaneous therewith; and at times even a receipt may be evidence of acceptance, but it is not the same thing. Hewes & Co. v. Jordan, 39 Md. 472, 17 Am. Rep. 578. As defined by the statute (section 25) there is an acceptance of the goods "when the buyer, either before or after delivery of the goods, expresses by words or conduct his assent to become the owner of those specific goods." By section 69 of the same article he "is deemed to have accepted the goods when he intimates to the seller that he has accepted them." In Williston on Sales, § 483, it is said:

"The ways of manifesting acceptance may be reduced to the three enumerated in the section of the Sales Act under consideration, namely: (1) Intimation of acceptance. (2) Exercising acts of ownership. (3) Retaining the goods. Under the first head will be included both cases where the buyer receives goods and expresses his acceptance of them, and also cases where by the terms of the bargain the buyer agreed to accept goods, whether specified at the time of the bargain or to be afterwards selected by the seller, without inspection."

All cases admit that the term "actually receive," found in the statute, means the acquisition of possession by the buyer, and whatever difficulties exist in regard to its meaning are largely due to the inherent difficulty of determining what is, in fact, possession. This court, however, has said, speaking through Judge Alvey, that:

"The receipt of part of the goods is the taking possession of them. When the seller gives to the buyer the actual control of the goods, and the buyer accepts such control, he has actually received them." Hewes & Co. v. Jordan, supra.

It is said, however, upon good authority, that goods may be received by the buyer within the meaning of the statute, and yet allowed to remain in the hands of the vendor, if it be shown that the seller has ceased to hold in the character of unpaid vendor and holds wholly as bailee for the buyer. Williston on Sales, § 91, and the numerous cases cited in note thereto.

[2] In this case we think there is evidence of both acceptance and actual receipt of the goods, which should be submitted as a question of fact to the jury under proper instructions of the court; thus we find no error in the ruling of the court in its rejection of the defendant's first prayer, asking that the case be taken from the jury.

[3] But the court in our opinion erred in granting the plaintiff's prayer, in which it is said that, if it be disclosed by the evidence that the defendant purchased the eggs at the price named, and the same were to be placed in the butter cooler to save him storage, and that upon the eggs being placed therein and an invoice sent to him he was to pay for the eggs, then the placing of the eggs in the butter cooler under such circumstances vested the title to said eggs in the defendant. This prayer fails to recognize, or at least within sufficient clearness, the essential requirements of the actual receipt of the goods by the buyer and the intention of the parties as to the same. It was not only necessary to find that the eggs were placed in the butter cooler, but it was also to be found that by so doing the unrestricted control of the eggs passed to the buyer, and that such was the intention of the parties.

[4] There is also found in the record an exception to the evidence. If this evidence was wrongfully admitted, there was no injury to the defendant caused thereby, as the same fact was testified to by another witness, to which no exceptions were taken, and which stands uncontradicted.

Because of the error of the court in granting the plaintiff's prayer, the judgment of the court below will be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and new trial awarded, with costs to the appellant.

(123 Md. 97)

SEIDL v. MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE. (No. 20.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 19, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 705(10)—USE OF ALLEY—PERSONAL INJURIES—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a pedestrian endeavoring to pass through a narrow alley obstructed by the city's horse and cart stood about a foot from the horse's head and remained there while the driver attempted to move the horse so that she could pass, the horse's front hoof striking her on the instep she was negligent.

2. TRIAL § 258(1)—INSTRUCTIONS—DIRECTED VERDICT.

Prayers instructing that the uncontradicted evidence showed plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence, and that she had offered no evidence legally sufficient to entitle her to recover, were not in accordance with the form approved, where a prayer of the kind is offered at the conclusion of all the testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court of Baltimore City; Chas. W. Heusler, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by Lydia V. Seidl against the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BRISCOE, THOMAS, PAT-TISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CON-STABLE, JJ.

William H. Lawrence, of Baltimore, for appellant. Robert F. Leach, Jr., Asst. City

Sol., of Baltimore (S. S. Field, City Sol., of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

THOMAS, J. This suit was brought against the mayor and city council of Baltimore to recover for an injury alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant's agent or servant. The declaration alleges:

"That on July 2, 1917, while the plaintiff was lawfully upon a public highway in the city of Baltimore, to wit, Griffith's court, using due care and caution, a horse hitched to a cart and being driven by an agent or servant of the defendant ran into and upon the plaintiff, injuring her about the feet seriously and permanently."

At the conclusion of the testimony, the court below granted prayers instructing the jury: (1) That the uncontradicted evidence in the case showed that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence; and (2) that the plaintiff had offered no evidence legally sufficient to entitle her to recover, and this appeal is from a judgment in favor of the defendant for costs, entered upon a verdict rendered in accordance with said instructions.

The plaintiff testified that on the 2d day of July, 1917, she went to see her sister, who lived at No. 720 Eastern avenue. While she was there, her sister, who was sick, asked her to go to the store for her. She went out the "back alleyway," which runs between Eastern avenue and Fawn street to President street, to a grocery store on High street near Fawn street. High street is east of and runs parallel with President street. In returning from the store by way of the alley, she had to cross President street. The alley was paved with "cobblestones," with the gutter in the middle, and was very narrow—just wide enough for a person to pass on either side of a wagon or cart standing in the middle of the alley. When the plaintiff was returning from the store, between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, as she entered the alley from President street she saw a horse, attached to one of the "city street carts," standing in the alley near and facing President street. They were not in the middle of the alley, but so far to one side that she could not pass them on that side. The driver was on the other side, in a "stooping position," putting dirt in the cart. She approached the horse and wagon on the side of the alley where there was not room for her to pass, and when she reached the horse's head she stopped. When the driver raised up and saw her, he told her that he would move the horse so she could pass. He took hold of the bridle on the horse, and, instead of moving the horse to the other side of the alley, he pushed the horse towards her, and the horse's foot came down on her foot and caused the injury complained of. She further testified that the horse and wagon did not move after she entered the alley, but remained in the same position on one side of the alley, and that she did not attempt to pass on the other side because the driver was on that side; that she stopped when she was about a foot from the horse's head and remained in that position while the driver was attempting to move the horse, until he pushed the horse towards her and the horse stepped on her foot; that she did not step back or move out of the way when the driver went to move the horse; that the horse did not move forward, or move his hind feet, and that the wagon did not move, but that the horse simply "shoved" his right front foot "over" and it "happened" to strike her foot; that the front of the horse's shoe struck her instep and bruised it; that the driver followed her into her sister's house, and she said there in his presence, and in the presence of others, that it was not his fault; and that she made that statement because she did not want him to lose his position. Dr. Onnen, who attended the plaintiff, and who saw her on the day the accident occurred, stated that the condition of her foot indicated that she had received a "glancing blow." The driver of the cart testified that he moved the horse so that the plaintiff could pass; that he did not move the horse towards her, but towards the opposite side of the alley; that the alley was very narrow; and that even after he moved the horse "she could just barely get through." Other evidence in the case shows that the alley from President street to the place where the accident occurred was ten feet wide, and that the width of the cart, "from hub to hub," was six feet.

[1] Assuming the truth of the plaintiff's testimony, and that the driver of the cart was guilty of negligence in moving the horse towards the side in which she was standing instead of towards the opposite side, we think the evidence clearly shows that she was also guilty of negligence which directly contributed to the injury complained of. Even if it can be said that she was not negligent in attempting to use the alley in going from President street to her sister's home while the horse and cart were in the alley, or in attempting to pass on the side of the alley on which, according to her testimony, the horse and cart were standing, instead of passing on the other side, she was clearly negligent in remaining so close to the horse while the driver was attempting to make room for her to pass. There is not a suggestion in the evidence that the driver intentionally caused the horse to move in her direction. On the contrary, the only inference to be drawn from her testimony and the testimony of the driver is that what he did was done in an effort to move the horse out of her way. According to her own statements, the horse did not move forward, or move his hind feet, but simply moved his right front foot, and the evidence furnishes no excuse for her having remained standing so close to the horse as to expose her to the risk of an unexpected movement of his foot, or for her failure to step back to a point of safety when the driver undertook to change the position of the horse. Ordinary care on her part would have avoided the accident, and she cannot complain of the consequences of her failure to exercise it.

[2] The prayers instructing the jury that the plaintiff had offered no evidence legally sufficient to entitle her to recover are not in accordance with the form approved where a prayer of that kind is offered at the conclusion of all of the testimony in the case; but as we think the case was properly withdrawn from the jury on the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and as the only exception in the case is to the ruling of the court on the prayers, we will affirm the judgment in favor of the defendant.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

(133 Md. 164)

TULL v. STERLING, Circuit Court Clerk.
(No. 27.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918.)

1. DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS & 5(1)—COMPENSATION—FEES.

The state's attorney for Somerset county is not entitled to an appearance fee in any civil case brought by him as state's attorney, under Local Code for Somerset County, enacted by Acts 1906, c. 280.

2. MANDAMUS & 3(6)—PAYMENT OF FEES — CLERK OF COURT.

Mandamus is not the proper remedy to be used by a state's attorney to require a clerk of the circuit court to pay over appearance fees, the remedy by ordinary action being adequate.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Somerset County; Henry L. D. Stanford, Judge.

Mandamus by Gordon Tull, State's Attorney for Somerset County, to compel William Jerome Sterling, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Somerset County, to pay certain fees. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, BURKE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Gordon Tull, of Princess Anne, in pro. per.

URNER, J. In pursuance of a statutory duty, imposed upon him as the state's attorney for Somerset county, the appellant instituted, and conducted a trial and judgment, in the name of the state, 38 separate proceedings in the circuit court for that county for the condemnation of certain natural oyster bars and areas for the use of the public. The costs of the proceedings as taxed by the clerk of the court, and paid to him out of the state treasury, included an appearance fee of $5 in each case for the appellant as attorney for the state. The Local Code for Somerset County contains the following provision, enacted by chapter 280 of the Acts of 1906:

"The state's attorney of said Somerset county in lieu of the fees * * * received by him, as provided for in any local law for Somerset county, or in any general law of the state, shall receive a salary of one thousand dollars per annum as full compensation for his entire services as required of him by law or which may hereafter be required of him by any law of this state, to be paid to him by the county commissioners of Somerset county."

In view of this provision the clerk was advised that he could not legally pay any appearance fees in the condemnation cases to the appellant, and his demand that they be paid to him was accordingly refused. A petition for mandamus to compel the payment was then filed, but it was dismissed on demurrer and the pending appeal has resulted.

It is provided by the Constitution of the state, by section 9 of article 5, in part, as follows:

"The state's attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary, not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law, and if any state's attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction hereof, be removed from office."

The expressed purpose of the local law for Somerset county, which we have quoted, was to provide for the compensation of the state's attorney for that county by means of a specified salary in lieu of the fees theretofore received by him for the performance of his official duties. If this change had not been made in the method and measure of his compensation, and the fee system had continued to apply to his office, the appearance fees in question would have had to be reckoned as part of the fees for which he would be accountable and out of which he would be paid for his services to the amount limited by the Constitution or by statute. It is made the duty of every person holding office under the Constitution or laws of this state (except justices of the peace, constables, and coroners), "whose pay or compensation is derived from fees or moneys coming into his hands for the discharge of his official duties, or in any way growing out of or connected with his office," to "keep a book in which shall be entered every sum or sums of money received by him, or on his account, as a payment or compensation for his performance of official duties a copy of which entries," verified by his oath, "shall be returned yearly to the Comptroller of the State for his inspection," and when the amount so received by such officer for the year "shall exceed the sum which he is by law entitled to retain, as his salary, or compensation for the discharge of his duties, and for the expenses of his office," he is required to "yearly pay over to the treasurer of the state the amount of such excess." Constitution, art. 15, § 1. The Code of Public Civil Laws, by section 24 of article 10, provides that accounts of state's attorneys against the county commissioners of their respective counties "may include a reasonable trial fee for each case actually tried, to be allowed in the discretion of the court, as well as the appearance fee provided by law," and the next succeeding section of the same article of the Code authorizes the Comptroller of the Treasury to adjust and settle the claims of any of the state's attorneys "for appearance fees in civil cases due them by the state, and for all fees similarly due for services rendered under the opinion of the Attorney General in the matter of cases removed from said county for trial or otherwise." It seems perfectly clear from these provisions that appearance fees received by state's attorneys were intended to be treated, like other fees, as items of compensation for official service, and as such were required to be reported to the Comptroller and the excess over the prescribed salary paid annually into the state treasury.

The salary of the state's attorney for Somerset county is not payable from fees, which he is authorized to charge and collect, but by direct payment from the county in equal quarterly installments. There is a provision in the Local Code that in all criminal cases in the circuit court for the county, in which the state's attorney shall appear for the state, an appearance fee as allowed by existing law shall be taxed as part of the costs, and when collected from the party liable therefor shall be paid over by the clerk to the county commissioners to be applied by them to the payment of the state's attorney's salary, for which, also, to such extent as may be necessary, they are directed to provide by taxation. It was in "full compensation for his entire services" under existing or future laws that the stated salary was to be paid. It was declared to be "in lieu of the fees heretofore received" by the state's attorney "as provided for in any local law" for the county "or in any general law of the state." There could hardly be a more plain and positive statement of the legislative purpose to limit the state's attorney's compensation, for all of his official services, to the amount of the annual salary which the statute substituted for the fees which he had theretofore been accustomed to receive.

[1] The cases in which the state's attorney claims to be entitled to appearance fees were instituted by him in the performance of a duty which was imposed upon him in his official capacity by section 960 of article 72 of the Code of Public Civil Laws. It was a duty clearly within the purview of the provision which defined the services for which the prescribed salary was intended to afford an exclusive compensation. Whether the salary was adequate in view of the nature and number of the cases in which the appearance fees are claimed is a question with which the Legislature has full power to deal, but which we have no authority to consider for the purposes of our decision. The only inquiry we can properly entertain is whether the appellant has a legal right to the appearance fees in dispute and to the writ of mandamus to enforce their payment. To that question our answer must be in the negative.

The fact that the amount of the appearance fees was paid to the clerk by the state is not a consideration which can affect our conclusion. The fees were doubtless taxed and paid in the usual routine of such transactions, without reference by the state's financial officers to the limitations as to the source and amount of the compensation of the state's attorney for Somerset county, and we see no reason to hold that their act of paying the fees to the clerk has had the effect of conferring upon the appellant a right to the fees which the statute has denied.

The case of Worcester Co. v. Melvin, 89 Md. 37, 42 Atl. 910, upon which the appellant relied to some extent, involved a very different question. It was there held that when a claim against the county for services rendered by counsel duly appointed to defend or prosecute a criminal case had been approved by the judge of the circuit court of the county, as provided by a local statute, it was the duty of the county commissioners to pay the claim, and the fact that the counsel had received an appearance fee in the same case, as authorized by law (Code, art. 36, § 10), was not a valid ground for the refusal of the commissioners to pay the fee which the judge had approved.

As the question here presented is governed by the special terms of the organic and statutory laws of our own state, to which we have referred, it is not necessary to discuss the cases in other jurisdictions which are cited in the appellant's brief.

[2] If we could have reached a conclusion that the appellant is entitled to the appearance fees in controversy, we should nevertheless have concurred in the dismissal of his petition for the extraordinary writ of mandamus for the reason that his claim could have been adequately enforced by an ordinary suit at law. Goldsborough v. Lloyd, 86 Md. 378, 38 Atl. 773; Caroline School Com'rs v. Hinson, 126 Md. 472, 95 Atl. 48; Brown v. Bragunier, 79 Md. 234, 29 Atl. 7; McEvoy v. Baltimore, 126 Md. 124, 94 Atl. 543; Hummelshime v. Hirsch, 114 Md. 39, 79 Atl. 38.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

(20 N. J. Eq. 233)

GOFF et al. v. GOFF ELECTRO-PNEUMATIC BRAKE CO. (No. 45/14.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 15, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS \S 684—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—RECEIVER.

Corporation Act, \S 96, does not authorize appointment of a receiver for a foreign corporation which is solvent.

2. CORPORATIONS \S 684—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—RECEIVER.

The Chancery Court will not, under its general powers, appoint a receiver for a solvent foreign corporation, for such relief is to be administered in the state of the corporation's domicile.

Bill by Howard Goff and others against the Goff Electro-Pneumatic Brake Company. Hearing on return of order to show cause for appointment of receiver for defendant. Order advised, dismissing order to show cause.

Patrick H. Harding, of Camden, for complainants. Norman Grey, of Camden, for defendant.

LEAMING, V. C. The bill herein is filed by complainants as stockholders and creditors of the Goff Electro-Pneumatic Brake Company, a corporation of the state of Delaware, and prays for an injunction restraining that corporation and its officers and agents from exercising any of its privileges or franchises or transacting its business, and for the appointment of a receiver of that corporation.

The bill discloses corporate assets in this jurisdiction and charges, not only neglect of duty upon the part of the officers and directors of the corporation, but also wrongful diversion of assets by them, and alleges that the business of the corporation is being conducted at a great loss, and greatly prejudicial to the interests of its creditors and stockholders, and that its business cannot be continued with safety to the public and advantage to the stockholders. The several averments of the bill are verified by a specific affidavit of one of the complainants.

An order to show cause was issued, without restraint, and at its return an answer was filed by defendant corporation, in which practically all of the essential facts on which relief is based are denied; the answer is supported by specific affidavits of verification, and also embodies a counterclaim against complainants, alleging that certain patents belonging to defendant corporation are in the name and under the control of complainants, and should be assigned to defendant corporation, and praying for a decree directing the assignment of these patents.

The bill does not allege that defendant company is insolvent. It alleges that its assets are $18,000, of which $10,500 is cash, and its liabilities about $4,000. The allegation of danger of future insolvency is based upon the claim that nothing is being done to promote the interests of the company and no revenues are being received, while its expenses are $250 per month for salaries. The answer discloses as assets cash to the amount of $8,289.38, bills receivable of the nature of quick assets to the amount of $1,791.55, and the patents which were made the basis of the capitalization of the corporation, and denies that it has liabilities to the amount of $4,000; its total expenses are stated as $300 per month, including rent. It accordingly is clear that a condition of insolvency neither exists nor is presently threatened.

In the adjudication of applications for the appointment of receivers of corporations the Court of Chancery of this state is required to observe certain well-defined limitations upon the exercise of that power.

[1] The statutory power found in our Corporation Act has reference only to corporations which are actually or potentially insolvent. Section 96 of that act (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1657) subjects foreign corporations doing business in this state to the provisions of the act, so far as they can be applied to foreign corporations; accordingly, in the appointment of receivers of foreign corporations, that section can only be understood to contemplate insolvent foreign corporations, and, as is pointed out in Minchin v. Second Nat. Bank, 36 N. J. Eq. 436, there are provisions of the act relating to insolvent corporations which obviously cannot be applied to insolvent foreign corporations, since the Court of Chancery of this state cannot prevent a foreign corporation from exercising its franchises in another state. As there stated it can, under our statute, through the medium of a receivership, sequester the property in this state of an insolvent foreign corporation and administer it here for the benefit of creditors and stockholders, but it can do but little more; thus the efficacy of the provisions of section 96 of our Corporation Act, so far as it relates to receivers of foreign corporations, is confined to securing to creditors and stockholders, citizens of this state, a just proportion of the property in this state of foreign corporations when insolvent. See, also, Albert v. Clarendon Land Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 623, 23 Atl. 8. Whether under our statute a receiver of an insolvent foreign corporation may be appointed without an adjudication of insolvency first being made in the state of the domicile of the corporation need not be here considered. See McDermott v. Woodhouse, 87 N. J. Eq. 615, 101 Atl. 375. It follows that any relief that may be herein awarded to complainant must emanate from the general powers of this court.

[2] The recent case of Morse v. Metropoli- tan Steamship Co., 87 N. J. Eq. 217, 100 Atl. 219, reviews at some length the circumstances which may appropriately call into activity the general powers of a court of equity to appoint a receiver of a solvent domestic corporation. But, as already stated, the present application is for the appointment of a receiver of a solvent corporation of another state and for an injunction restraining the corporation and its officers and directors from exercising any of its privileges or franchises.

It is clear that the measure of relief here sought cannot be properly awarded, even though the verified denials and affirmative averments of the answer be wholly disregarded. Not only is this court unable to enforce a decree of that nature out of this state, but such decree, could it be enforced, would clearly be operative to regulate the management of the internal affairs of a foreign corporation, since it would wholly deny to that corporation the exercise of its corporate functions. Jackson v. Hooper, 76 N. J. Eq. 592, 604, 75 Atl. 568, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658. Nor does it seem that any lesser degree of relief can be here administered in behalf of complainants, with due regard to the rule that a court should not take jurisdiction of the internal affairs of a foreign corporation. Cases are to be found in which peculiar circumstances have been deemed adequate to justify relief against certain proposed acts of solvent foreign corporations within the state where relief has been sought (see Corry v. Barre Granite Co. [Vt.] 101 Atl. 38, and cases there cited), but relief of the nature here desired should be administered in the state of the domicile of defendant corporation.

I will advise an order dismissing the order to show cause.

(92 N. J. Law, 232)

ROSE et al. v. SLOUGH. (No. 58.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨808(7)—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALK—FAILURE TO TRIM SHADE TREES—PENALTY.

An ordinance fixing a penalty on abutting owners for failure to trim shade trees would not create a right of action against the owner for personal injuries from defective sidewalk, caused by failure to trim roots of a tree.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨818(11)—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALK—LIABILITY OF ABUTTING OWNERS—EVIDENCE.

Liability of abutting owners for personal injuries from raising of paving stone in sidewalk by shade tree roots would not be shown by his removal of the roots thereafter, as any person may abate a nuisance in a highway.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨808(2)—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALK—PERSONAL INJURIES—LIABILITY OF ABUTTING OWNERS.

Where a city, pursuant to Act March 8, 1893 (P. L. p. 130), assumes control of shade trees within its territory, an abutting owner on a city street is exempted from liability to an individual injured by tripping over paving block of sidewalk raised by roots of a shade tree in the walk.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by Anna M. Rose and Theodore F. Rose, her husband, against Mary Cooper Slough. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Bleakly & Stockwell, of Camden, for appellant. Wescott & Weaver, of Camden, for appellees.

KALISCH, J. The respondents, husband and wife and plaintiffs below, were permitted to recover a judgment against the appellant, defendant below, upon the following state of facts: The defendant was the owner of certain premises abutting a public highway in the township of Pesauken. A sidewalk paved with patent composition paving blocks extended along the front of the premises. On this sidewalk stood and grew a shade tree, the roots of which, from natural growth, spread under the paving blocks and caused them to bulge up several inches, thereby rendering the sidewalk uneven and broken in several places. The female plaintiff, while walking along on this sidewalk, stumbled and fell, as a result of its uneven and broken condition, and sustained injury. These facts are the gravamen of the amended complaint filed in the cause, with the additional averment that the defendant maintained the "shade tree for use, pleasure, and comfort, and for the beautification of her property."

With the exception of this averment, the material facts of the present case are not dissimilar to those set forth in Rupp v. Burgess, 70 N. J. Law, 7, 56 Atl. 166. In the case cited there was a demurrer to the first count of the declaration, which averred "that the defendant was the owner of a certain lot fronting on Newton street, in the city of Newark, and while owning and occupying this lot he wrongfully and knowingly permitted the flagstones with which the sidewalk in front of his property was covered to become and remain in a broken, insecure, and dilapidated condition," and that by reason thereof the female plaintiff, who was walking along upon that portion of the sidewalk, stumbled and fell, etc. Mr. Chief Justice Gummere, speaking for the Supreme Court (70 N. J. Law, on page 9, 56 Atl. on page 166), said:

"The first count, plainly, discloses no cause of action. It is based upon the assumption that the owner and occupant of premises abutting upon a public street is under a legal duty to keep in repair the sidewalk in front of his property. But no such obligation rests upon him, unless by virtue of the requirements of a city or municipal ordinance (Dill. Mun. Corp. par. 1012; Weller v. McCormick, 18 Vroom, 397 [1 Atl. 516, 54 Am. Rep. 175]), and the declaration fails to allege the existence of any such requirement. And even when the duty of repairing sidewalks is imposed upon the abutting owner by statute or ordinance, the failure to perform that duty does not render the owner responsible to individuals for injuries received by them, resulting from defects in the sidewalk due to want of repair. The only liability which rests upon the property owner for the nonperformance of such a duty is the penalty provided by the statute or ordinance. Fielders v. New Jersey Street Railway Co., 39 Vroom, 843, 352 [53 Atl. 404, 54 Atl. 822, 59 L. R. A. 455, 96 Am. St. Rep. 552], and cases cited."

Counsel of respondents argue that the doctrine enunciated in Weller v. McCormick supports the theory upon which the plaintiffs were permitted to recover in the present case. It is true that the case referred to, in many of its features, is like the present. It is, obviously, materially unlike in one important respect, and that is that the injury sustained by the plaintiff was the result of a decayed branch of a tree, which stood in front of the defendants' premises, falling upon the plaintiff while passing along the sidewalk, whereas in the present case the injury to Mrs. Rose resulted from a fall on a sidewalk, by reason of its being out of repair. The bearing of this difference in the facts upon the legal aspects of the present case will be considered later.

In Weller v. McCormick, Dixon, J., in a careful and well-reasoned opinion, points out with characteristic perspicuity the essential facts necessary to be established by the plaintiffs, in order to cast a liability upon the landowner to respond in damages for the injury sustained. In 47 N. J. Law, on page 398, 1 Atl. on page 517, 54 Am. Rep. 175, the learned judge said:

"It must be conceded that ordinarily, when a person, for his private ends, places or maintains, in or near a highway, anything which, if neglected, will render the way unsafe for travel, he is bound to exercise due care to prevent its becoming dangerous. If, therefore, from the fact that the tree in question stood on a portion of George street owned by the defendant, it is to be inferred that the tree was placed or maintained there by him for his private benefit, it would follow that the alleged duty existed. But we think that in the present case this fact is not sufficient to warrant such an inference against the defendant."

It is to be observed that this alleged duty of the abutting owner is qualified by a condition, that the tree was placed or maintained in the public highway for his benefit, and that the mere fact of the presence of the tree on a portion of the highway in front of the owner's premises gave rise to no presumption that it was there for the private benefit of the defendant, and hence created no legal duty regarding it. The learned justice then proceeds (47 N. J. Eq. on page 398, 1 Atl. on page 517) to state his reason, as follows:

"Shade trees in the streets of a city are of public as well as private utility. They protect and ornament the way for public use, as they also do the adjoining property for private enjoyment. It is therefore clear that, by virtue of the ordinary public right in highways, the public may plant and maintain shade trees therein. Whether the Legislature, to whom this power primarily belongs, has in a given case delegated it to a subordinate, depends, of course, upon the terms by which authority is granted. In the charter of the city of New Brunswick the matter is not left in doubt. That instrument (P. L. 1863, p. 347, § 31) gives the common council power to make, modify, and repeal ordinances, rules, regulations, and by-laws for directing and regulating the planting, rearing, trimming, and preserving of ornamental shade trees in the streets, parks, and grounds of the city. It thus appears that since 1863 the municipality has had the power of planting and preserving shade trees in the streets, and therefore the presence of any such tree in a street may be attributed to the exercise of this power, as well as to any other cause. Under these circumstances, the most that the plaintiffs can properly claim to have proved is that the tree was planted or maintained either by the defendant for private purposes or by the city for public purposes."

The result reached was that the verdict could not be maintained upon an inference that the tree was planted or maintained by the defendant, and that, if the tree in question was planted or preserved by the city, the defendant owed no legal duty concerning it, except such as was imposed by the by-laws of the corporation.

Now, in the case under consideration, the uncontroverted proof is that the tree was on the sidewalk when the defendant acquired ownership of the premises. There is an utter absence of any proof tending to establish that the tree was planted or maintained for the private benefit of the owner. On the contrary, there is a perfectly legitimate inference from the facts that when the tree was set out it was in conformity to a plan to beautify the public highway. It is clear, from an act entitled "A further supplement to an act entitled 'An act to increase the powers of township committees' approved March 11, 1880" (P. L. 1893, p. 130), that the Legislature conferred the power upon township committees "to direct and regulate the planting, rearing, trimming and preserving the shade trees" in the highways of the townships, and "to authorize or prohibit the removal or destruction of the same." The plaintiffs introduced an ordinance, in evidence, passed by the township committee, regulating the trimming of shade trees standing along the streets, roads, avenues, and highways of the township, and fixing a penalty of $5 for a violation of the ordinance by the owner, and reserving to the municipality the power to direct such shade trees to be trimmed at the cost and expense of the owner. This situation was not present in Weller v. McCormick, supra. The legal effect of the ordinance in the present case is that it is an affirmative act of the municipal authority, by which it has taken under its care and control the regulation and preserving of shade trees for the public benefit.

[1] The fact that a failure of the owner to observe the behest of the ordinance subjects him to a penalty does not, according to well-settled authority, create a right of action against such owner, by an individual who has sustained an injury arising from the non-observance, because the ordinance belongs to a class of ordinances, as was well said by

Pitney, J., in Fielders v. North Jersey St. Ry. Co., supra, 68 N. J. Law, on page 352, 53 Atl. on page 407, 54 Atl. 822, 59 L. R. A. 455, 96 Am. St. Rep. 552—

"intended, not for the benefit or protection of individuals comprising the public, but for the benefit of the municipality as an organized government, and more particularly if they impose upon property owners the performance of a part of the duty of the municipality to the public, as legislative intent is indicated that a breach of such ordinance shall be remedial only at the instance of the municipal government, or by enforcement of the penalty prescribed therein, and that there shall be no right of action to an individual citizen especially injured in consequence of such breach."

[2] The circumstance that the defendant, a few days after the accident, employed a contractor to cut away the roots of the tree in order to repair and level the sidewalk, and thus to make it safe, is wholly unimportant. It was not evidential of any legal duty owing from the defendant to the plaintiff, by reason of the presence of the tree in the highway before and at the time the plaintiff was injured. Any citizen may lawfully abate a public nuisance in the highway. The fact, therefore, that the defendant abated a public nuisance created in front of her premises, after the plaintiff was injured, cannot properly raise an inference that she created it, or had any especial control over it. She was under no legal duty to put the sidewalk in repair. The fact that she undertook to do so after the accident cannot properly raise an inference of individual responsibility for the creation of the nuisance, if such existed.

[3] Reverting, now, to the marked distinguishable feature of this case from Weller v. McCormick, supra, we find that in the case cited the undisputed fact was that it was the falling of a decayed limb of a tree upon the plaintiff that caused his injury. In the present case it is not pretended that the roots of the tree were the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff. The testimony is ample to the effect that the pavement of the sidewalk was made uneven by the spreading of the roots of the tree underneath, and that the paving blocks were kicked out of position by some of the public using the sidewalk. It is therefore the defective condition of the sidewalk, partly caused by the roots of the tree and the use made of the sidewalk by the public in general, which is made the basis of the defendant's liability. As has already been pointed out, there was no legal duty resting upon the defendant to keep the sidewalk in repair. It would seem, therefore, that the causes which operated to put the sidewalk in a defective condition are inconsequential, unless it is established that the defendant by some act of her own contributed to such defective condition. There is no proof in the case showing when the pavement was laid, or that the defendant caused it to be put down, or that at the time the paving was done there were any indications of any roots of a tree in the ground likely to disturb the pavement.

The defendant was therefore in a similar position to that of an owner of premises, whose sidewalk becomes defective because of buckling in extreme hot weather, or becomes depressed by heavy rains, or becomes out of repair by reason of any other action of the elements, or by the destructive acts of pedestrians, and permits such sidewalk to remain in that condition. There being no legal duty cast upon the owner to repair, there can be no recovery for an injury sustained by reason of such defective sidewalk, arising from a failure to repair. In the present case, the growing and spreading of the roots, which caused the sidewalk to become uneven, were nature's work, and over which the defendant had no control, and concerning which she owed no duty.

But, irrespective of this fact, where a municipality, in pursuance of state legislative sanction, assumes control of the trees within its territory, an abutting owner, on a street of such municipality, is relieved from the care of a tree standing on the sidewalk in front of his premises, to the extent that he will be exempt from liability to respond in damages in a civil action to an individual who has suffered an injury of which the tree was the producing cause.

The refusal of the learned trial judge to grant defendant's motion for a nonsuit was error, and therefore the judgment must be reversed.

(39 N. J. Eq. 307)

In re BOWERS. (No. 44/554.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. April 24, 1918.)

1. CONTEMPT ¶27—REQUESTING WIFE TO CONSENT TO DIVORCE.

Where husband sued for divorce on ground of desertion, and wife answered, denying desertion, and charged constructive desertion, a letter written to the wife by husband's father, requesting her to consent to the divorce, having the effect of fraudulently imposing on the court, is a clear contempt.

2. CONTEMPT ¶2—THREATENING SOLICITOR—ATTEMPT TO INDUCE SOLICITOR TO WITHDRAW.

Where the father of the husband, plaintiff in divorce action, goes to the wife's solicitor and threatens to bring political and other pressure to compel the solicitor to withdraw from the case, such act being effort to deprive court of services of one of its officers and a step toward collusion, is a clear contempt.

3. CONTEMPT ¶31—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CHANCEERY.

Act March 15, 1917 (P. L. p. 71), providing that no power of any court to punish for contempt shall be construed to extend to any case, except the misbehavior of any person in its actual presence, the misbehavior of any officer of court in his official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any officer or other person to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the court, is unconstitutional.

tional, in so far as it may be claimed to apply to the Court of Chancery.

4. CONTEMPT \S 70—PUNISHMENT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—COURT OF CHANCERY.

1 Comp. St. 1910, p. 442, § 82, providing punishment for contempt for disobedience of orders of the Court of Chancery, does not apply to a contempt committed by attempting to induce defendant in divorce action to consent to a divorce, or by threatening the defendant's solicitor with political disfavor upon refusal to withdraw from case.

5. CONTEMPT \S 28(3)—DEFENSES—IGNORANCE OF LEGAL EFFECT OF ACTS.

A person who attempted to induce defendant in divorce case to consent to a divorce, and threatened her solicitor in attempt to compel him to withdraw from case, was in contempt, although he was not an attorney and did not know legal effect of his acts, although such ignorance is a mitigating circumstance, to be considered in determining degree of his culpability.

Proceeding to punish William Bowers for contempt. On order to show cause. Respondent adjudged guilty.

Nelson B. Gaskill, of Trenton, for the order. King & Vogt, of Morristown, opposed.

LANE, V. C. This is a proceeding instituted at the request of the court to punish the respondent, William Bowers, for contempt, in that he did commit acts which tended to obstruct, interrupt, prevent, and embarrass the proper administration of justice.

A divorce suit was pending in this court, brought by one Edmund H. Bowers, petitioner, against Mabel B. Bowers, defendant. The respondent is the father of the petitioner. The acts alleged to be contemptuous were two in number:

First. On or about December 17, 1917, the respondent called at the office of the solicitor of Mabel B. Bowers and threatened the said solicitor that, unless he should cease his opposition to the efforts of the petitioner to obtain a divorce from the defendant, Mabel B. Bowers, or withdraw from the then pending divorce action, he, William Bowers, would bring political and other pressure to bear upon the said solicitor to compel him to sever his connection with the case. The divorce action was based upon the ground of desertion. There had been an answer filed, denying the desertion and charging constructive desertion. At the time the threat was made the solicitor was a candidate for reappointment as attorney and counsel for the town of Boonton, and the respondent, Bowers, either had or thought he had, through his acquaintance with those who had, some political influence.

Second. On January 11, 1918, the respondent wrote to the defendant in the divorce petition a letter containing the following language:

"I wish now to request you to allow Ed his divorce (on grounds of desertion only), no alimony, no lawyer's fees, and no defense to be put in by you whatever. These present impossible conditions must be changed at once, for good.

These two dear children must be cared for properly and immediately. We have Marguerite here, and have arranged for her to start in school Monday a. m. Ed will have Edrew, and with Mrs. Barker's and our help he will have the best of care. These arrangements will permit you to live your own life in your own way. There is no reason why Ed cannot take them to N. Y. to stay with you over a Sunday occasionally as you may desire, in the same manner as you allowed them to come here. Finally, I assure you that nothing will be said by any of us concerning the reasons of your living apart. When they are old enough to realize, incomprehensibility will answer all questions. Kindly reply promptly, and greatly oblige."

The matter was referred by the Chancellor by formal order of reference to me as Vice Chancellor. The respondent appeared and was examined. He admitted the writing of the letter, admitted the visit to the office of the solicitor, but denied that the conversation was as related by the solicitor. I find against him on the issue of fact.

[1] The law of this state provides, that no divorce shall be obtained by collusion; the very jurisdiction of the court depends in part upon there being annexed to the petition an affidavit of noncollusion. The extent to which this court has gone in endeavoring to prevent a divorce being obtained by collusion is well illustrated by the case of Sheehan v. Sheehan, 77 N. J. Eq. 411, 77 Atl. 1063, 140 Am. St. Rep. 566. The attempt of the respondent to induce the wife to consent to a decree, which as in this case might have the effect of fraudulently imposing upon the court, is a clear contempt.

[2] The act of the respondent in threatening the solicitor for the defendant in order to compel him to withdraw from the case is a clear contempt. It tends to deprive the court of the services of one of its officers. It was intended also in this case as a step in deceiving the court, to the end that a collusive divorce might be granted. The Chancellor (In re Merrill, 102 Atl. at page 402) said:

"It is a contempt of the dignity of the court for one of the litigants before it to denounce and abuse to the judge the lawyers representing the adversary party, because lawyers are officers of the court."

[3] The statute (P. L. 1917, p. 71), which provides that no power of any court to punish for contempt shall be construed to extend to any case, except the misbehavior of any person in its actual presence, the misbehavior of any officer of court in his official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any officer or other person to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the court, is unconstitutional in so far as it may be claimed to apply to the Court of Chancery. The Chancellor doubted (In re Merrill, 102 Atl. at page 408) whether it applied to the Prerogative Court. That it does not apply to chancery is too clear for argument. Flanigan v. Guggenheim Smelting Co., 63 N. J. Law, 647, 44 Atl. 762. See, also, In re Thompson, 85 N. J. Eq. 221, 236, 96 Atl. 102.

[4] The act providing for punishment for contempt for disobedience of orders of the Court of Chancery (1 Comp. Stat. p. 442) does not apply to the class of contempt now under discussion. See Frank v. Herold, 64 N. J. Eq. 371, 51 Atl. 774.

[5] The respondent upon the hearing denied any intent to contemn the authority of the court, stated that he did not realize that his acts were contemptuous, and apologized to the court. He must at least be held to have known that his act in threatening the solicitor was, whether it constituted a contempt or not, a wrong. He deliberately and without respect to the rights of the parties endeavored to secure that which he desired by every means within his power, legal or illegal. The headnote of Seastream v. N. J. Exhibition Co., opinion by Vice Chancellor Pitney, 61 Atl. 1045, expresses the law, as I understand it, as follows:

"The fact that one accused of contempt in attempting to improperly influence the administration of justice was not an attorney, and was therefore possibly ignorant of the legal effect of his acts, did not excuse him or purge him of the charge of contempt, although it was a mitigating circumstance to be considered in determining the degree of his culpability."

I have consulted with the Chancellor as to the punishment to be inflicted, and after taking into consideration all of the circumstances of the case, including the disavowal on the part of the respondent to contemn the court and his apology to the court, and the fact that the case is novel, at least in the sense of publicity and trial, we have concluded that in this instance there will be inflicted only a penalty of $50 and the costs of the prosecution. The extent of the punishment in this case is not to be considered in any wise as a precedent, should a case of similar nature come before the court.

I adjudge the respondent guilty of contempt upon both counts, and impose upon him a penalty of $50 and costs of this prosecution. Let him be committed to the common jail of the county of Morris until the penalty and costs are paid.

FOWLER et al. v. WESTERHOFF BROS. CO. et al. (No. 44/558.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 10, 1918.)

1. ACTION \Leftrightarrow 69—STAY—RES JUDICATA.

An action will not be stayed because of the existence of a former action, in which judgment has been obtained, but which has not been settled, where such former action is not conclusive of all the issues involved in the second action.

2. JUDGMENT \Leftrightarrow 883(11)—COMPELLING SET-OFF OF JUDGMENT—ACTION IN OTHER JURISDICTION.

A New Jersey equity court will not enjoin party before it from proceeding to enforce in

New York judgment for costs rendered by federal court in latter state on ground that New Jersey suit will produce a recovery, which may be set off against judgment for costs, where no motion for relief is made in the New York court.

Bill in equity by George Fowler, individually and as trustee, and another, against the Westerhoff Bros. Company and others. Hearing on bill, etc. Injunctive feature of bill held open for further showing.

McDermott & Enright and John M. Enright, all of Jersey City, for complainants. Forster W. Freeman and William B. Gourley, both of Paterson, for defendants.

LANE, V. C. In 1906 the complainant Thomas S. Napier commenced a suit in the Supreme Court of the state of New York, in equity, against Peter D. Westerhoff, Henry Westerhoff, Harris J. Westerhoff, and Westerhoff Bros. & Napier Company. The suit was removed to the federal court for the southern district of New York. Testimony was concluded some time in 1912; final judgment was rendered against the plaintiff; this judgment was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit; the opinion of the court is in 233 Fed. 398, 147 C. C. A. 334. A judgment for costs against Napier for a sum somewhat less than $3,000 was entered. Subsequent to the judgment, legal title to the Napier stock became vested in George Fowler, trustee. The charge of the plaintiff in the New York proceeding was substantially that, although the business was being conducted in corporate form, the business should be administered as if it was conducted by a partnership. The New York court found that the partnership agreement had not continued after the formation of the corporation. This finding necessarily resulted in a dismissal of the bill. On March 2, 1918, George Fowler, individually and as trustee, and Thomas S. Napier, commenced suit in this court against Westerhoff Bros. Company, a body corporate (the name of the corporation having been changed), Peter D. Westerhoff, Henry Westerhoff, Jacob Westerhoff, and Harris J. Westerhoff. The bill prays for an investigation of the conduct of the business of the corporation, alleges mismanagement upon the part of its directors and officers, prays an accounting from them, alleges an improper withholding of dividends, and asks for a decree directing the directors to declare dividends. It also asks for the appointment of a receiver. Subsequently proceedings were commenced upon the judgment of the federal court in New York. The complainants move for an injunction restraining defendants from proceeding upon their New York judgment until a decree can be obtained in this court, so that wherever sums may be found due complainants from defendants may be offset against the judgment obtained in New York; a counter motion is made by defendants to stay the pending suit until the judgment in New York is settled by the complainant Napier.

[1] First. The motion of the defendants will be denied. The argument is that the cases are so similar as that the judgment in New York is res adjudicata in the pending suit, and that the pending suit is to all intents and purposes a renewal of the litigation in New York. To what extent the judgment in New York is conclusive upon the issues in the pending suit it is not necessary for me to determine. It is quite apparent that it is not conclusive upon some of the issues presented. No authority has been brought to my attention which would warrant the court in staying the pending suit as prayed for by the defendants.

[2] Second. The defendants have a valid subsisting judgment of the federal court, in equity, of the Southern district of New York, against complainant Napier, and the attempt of complainants is to enjoin proceedings to enforce that judgment until a decree here, which complainants hope will result in their acquiring sufficient moneys to pay the New York judgment. The jurisdiction of this court is not questioned by defendants. That it is not free from doubt will be demonstrated by a consideration of the following cases: McKim v. Voorhies, 7 Cranch, 279, 3 L. Ed. 343; U. S. ex rel. Riggs v. Board of Supervisors of Johnson County, 6 Wall. 166, 18 L. Ed. 768, at page 776; Davenport v. Lord, 9 Wall. 409, 19 L. Ed. 704, at page 707; Central National Bank v. Stevens, 169 U. S. 432, 18 Sup. Ct. 403, 42 L. Ed. 807, at page 818; Marshall v. Holmes, 141 U. S. 589, 12 Sup. Ct. 62, 35 L. Ed. 870; Wonderly v. Lafayette, 150 Mo. 635, 51 S. W. 745, 45 L. R. A. 386, 73 Am. St. Rep. 474.

Complainants rely upon the analogy of the present application to applications to courts of law to offset judgments and to stay proceedings upon executions until suits between the same parties in the same or other jurisdictions may ripen into judgments, so that they may be offset, and they cite Hendrickson v. Brown, 39 N. J. Law, 239, Blackburn v. Reilly, 48 N. J. Law, 82, 2 Atl. 817, and Phillips v. Mackay, 54 N. J. Law, 319, 23 Atl. 941. But Justice Garrison, in Phillips v. Mackay, said:

"The practice requires that the application be made in the court whose judgment is against the party applying for the set-off; but it has never been required that the court in which the remedy is sought should have control over the judgment used as a set-off."

And in Brookfield v. Hughson, 44 N. J. Law, 285, Justice Reed, speaking for the Supreme Court, held that the motion should be made in the court where the judgment against the moving party is obtained.

Irrespective of the power of the court, the application is one that is always addressed to the sound discretion of the court. It seems to me that this court ought not at the present time attempt to interfere with the proceedings in New York. The complainants may, I think, obtain complete relief, if entitled to any, by application to the New York court. I will permit the injunctive feature of the order to show cause to remain in force until they may have an opportunity to do so. I need hardly say that I express no opinion upon what the action of this court would be if the application were to enjoin the defendants, pending this suit, from assigning or otherwise disposing of the judgment obtained by them in New York, or if the action sought to be enjoined was designed to destroy the basis of this suit by obtaining, through the use of the New York judgment, title to the Napier stock, and it were made to appear that equitable considerations required that, pending the determination of this suit, the title should not be disturbed. These questions are not before me.

Settle order on notice.

(39 N. J. Eq. 361)

ROSS v. ROSS. (No. 41/28.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 10, 1918.)

DIVORCE \S 129(16) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to warrant decree of divorce on ground of wife's adultery.

Petition by William R. Ross against Eleanor Ross. Decree for petitioner.

Queen & Stout, of Jersey City, for petitioner. J. Emil Walscheid, of Union, for defendant.

LEWIS, V. C. The petitioner in this case has presented evidence that convinces me that he is entitled to a decree for divorce against his wife. The parties were married on February 27, 1907. He was a motorman, and she was employed as a domestic. Their residence was in Brooklyn until the summer of 1907, when the petitioner came to live in this state. One child, born July 29, 1908, was the fruit of the union, and at the time of this hearing is being cared for by Mrs. Margaret Ross, an aunt of the petitioner; all expenses in connection with the same being paid by the petitioner. Shortly after the birth of the child, troubles arose in the household, owing to the use by the defendant of intoxicating liquors. She was arrested at times, and the petitioner procured her release, but finally, she was sent to the House of Good Shepherd in Brooklyn. From this institution she was also discharged through the intercession of the petitioner, but she was again arrested. Upon her release on this occasion, she brought suit in Brooklyn against her husband for separate maintenance. It was then that the petitioner took up his residence in New Jersey, and they lived apart from August, 1909, to September, 1915. The petitioner then wrote to his wife, asking her to come to New Jersey, and they met and made arrangements, the result of which was the taking of an apartment at No. 299 Monmouth street, Jersey City. At this address they lived together from September, 1915, until December, 1915. The defendant for a short time abstained from the use of intoxicants, and then resumed her habits, which she continued until December 10th, and on this date the testimony discloses that she set fire to her apartment and was arrested on a charge of drunkenness. After a hearing, she was convicted in the Second criminal court of Jersey City and sentenced to the county jail for 90 days.

A consideration of the conduct, habits, and disposition of the defendant leads one unhesitatingly to the conclusion that her morals were such that she might commit the offense charged against her under the circumstances as related by the correspondent, William Skow. Her solicitor contended that the views expressed and the rules laid down in the case of Letts v. Letts, 79 N. J. Eq. 630, 82 Atl. 845, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1236, should be applied; but, as I indicated at the time, I think the evidence in this case reveals an entirely different situation. The vulgarity of the story told herein does not necessarily lead a reasonable person to regard it as entirely improbable. The correspondent stands unimpeached. There is nothing before me to indicate that his testimony was not given in the interests of justice. His story must be received with great caution and scanned carefully. This was done, and a searching cross-examination failed to shake it. It has corroboration from other lips, and one observing the correspondent and these witnesses must have been impressed with the fact that they were ingenuous and relating a truthful account of the defendant's relations with Skow. He says that he had intercourse with her on two occasions. These offenses were committed on November 28, 1915, and the second on December 5, 1915. They took place in a woodshed in a cellar of No. 299 Monmouth street, Jersey City. Skow's evidence as to the first occasion is as follows:

"Q. Will you describe to the court just when it was, and where it was, and under what circumstances it took place? A. Well, I was down chopping wood one Sunday morning, and Mrs. Ross came down while I was chopping wood, and she asked me for 10 cents, and I pushed her away and told her not to bother me, and then I goes up and goes over to the other woodshed, and she comes in after me, and she threw her arms around me, and she asked me again for 10 cents, and I said, 'No,' and she kept on pleading, and wanted me to be sure that I will come down this afternoon, and she lifted up her clothing, and I gave her a quarter that afternoon. She came down, and she laid on the burlap in the woodshed, and I had connections with her."

His evidence relative to the second occasion is as follows:

"Q. Was there any other occasion when you did that? A. Then the Sunday following I was down there again chopping, and she came down, and she asked me for money, and I gave her a half dollar, and she came down in the afternoon, the same as the first."

Mrs. Christina Skow, the mother of the correspondent, who lived during the events described by her son at the same address as the Ross family, testified that she heard the voices of her son and Mrs. Ross in the cellar. She knew they were down there. Skow says that one of the expressions used by the defendant when in the basement was "Come on." His mother says that on one occasion she heard Mrs. Ross, who was down in the basement, use these words. The effort made to prove that it was impossible to hear a voice in the basement from the Skow apartment failed.

After the arrest and conviction of the defendant in the Second criminal court of Jersey City, Ross asked Mrs. Skow if she knew anything about his wife, and Mrs. Skow told him to ask her son William. Mrs. Skow had previously informed Ross, whose apartments were opposite hers, that his wife was continually in the cellar, and that she was with men. Ross talked to Skow, the correspondent, and the latter told him that he had had intercourse with Mrs. Ross. Upon examination, he gave as his reason for disclosing to the petitioner his relations with the defendant that he felt it his duty to see Ross right, as his wife was carrying on and had set fire to the house. It was quite apparent that Skow and Ross were unsophisticated. After hearing the correspondent's story, the petitioner went with Skow, the correspondent, and Magnus Peterson, to the county jail and confronted his wife there. Peterson, according to the testimony, appears to have accompanied Ross as a friend. A confession as to the commission of the offenses is related by the three. Ross' account is as follows:

"Q. Tell the court what you said, and what she said, and what the others said. A. I asked her how much money she got off William Skow, and she at first said, 'No,' and I said, 'Yes, you did,' and she said 'No,' and I said, 'Yes, you did,' and she said, 'How do you know?' and I said, 'I was told so,' and she said, 'I got 50 cents for one time and a quarter another time,' and I said, 'What did you give him for his money?' and she said, 'Nothing,' and I said, 'Yes, you did,' and she said, 'No, I did not,' so I called in William Skow. Q. Where was he? A. He was sitting out in the little hall, and I called him in, and he stayed back of me, and I asked him if he was lying to me, or who was lying to me, and he said, 'Ross, I am not lying to you,' so finally she said, 'I let Skow have the best of me twice.' Q. Who was there at that time? A. Mr. Peterson."

Peterson and Skow both corroborate petitioner as to the admission of the defendant when confronted by Skow.

Mrs. Ross denies her intimacy with Skow. She admitted having borrowed money from him, but entered a denial of the story of the offenses in the cellar of the Monmouth street home. Of course, this confession could not alone be relied upon to support a decree for divorce; but it gives corroboration to the story related by the correspondent and the other witnesses of the petitioner. Skow, as above stated, appears to be unshaken in his testimony, and, aside from his improper conduct with defendant, there is nothing affecting his character shown; so the situation is not as in Clare v. Clare, 19 N. J. Eq. 37. The story as told by Skow accords with the defendant's proved habits and character. Adams v. Adams, 17 N. J. Eq. 325. I think the requirements for divorce so comprehensively set forth in the case of Berckmans v. Berckmans, 17 N. J. Eq. 453, are met by the testimony offered in this case.

I shall, in accordance with the views above expressed, advise a decree nisi for the petitioner.

(89 N. J. Eq. 159)

IN RE McADAMS.

(Prerogative Court of New Jersey. Feb. 15, 1918.)

1. INSANE PERSONS § 85—GUARDIANS—WHO MAY BE APPOINTED.

That the clerk in chancery, who consulted with counsel conducting proceedings under a commission in the nature of a writ of de lunatico inquirendo issued out of the Court of Chancery, and gave him information which aided in the proper development of the petitioner's case, did not disqualify the clerk from afterwards being appointed guardian of the lunatic by the orphans' court, on the ground that the clerk was practicing law before the commission.

2. INSANE PERSONS § 85—APPOINTMENTS OF GUARDIAN—WHO MAY BE GUARDIAN.

Under 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 2781, § 1, the orphans' court may appoint any fit and discreet person guardian of a lunatic; a mother or next of kin not having a preference.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Union County.

In the matter of the appeal from an order of the orphans' court of the county of Union, appointing Robert H. McAdams guardian of Catherine Morrissey, a lunatic. Order affirmed.

Herbert C. Gilson, of Jersey City, for appellants. William D. Wolfskehl, of Elizabeth, for respondents.

WALKER, Ordinary. This is an appeal from an order of the Union county orphans' court appointing Robert H. McAdams, Esq., guardian of Catherine Morrissey, a lunatic.

Catherine Morrissey having been adjudged a lunatic under a commission in the nature of a writ of de lunatico inquirendo issued out of the Court of Chancery, a transcript of the proceedings in that court was duly filed in the Union county orphans' court, which court, by order, duly appointed Robert H. McAdams, Esq., who is the present clerk in chancery, guardian of the lunatic. There was a contest over the guardianship in the orphans' court between relatives of the lunatic. Certain of them filed a petition praying for the appointment of a guardian other than Mr. McAdams, upon grounds set forth in the petition, the salient ones being that Mr. McAdams had been attorney for the lunatic for a number of years, and had been active in keeping the petitioners away from her, and keeping them ignorant as to her mental condition, and also because, on the hearing under the commission, Mr. McAdams appeared with Mr. Wolfskehl and consulted and conferred with him during the progress of the proceedings; and they invoke rule 35 of the Court of Chancery, which provides that the clerk of the court shall not practice either as a solicitor or as a counselor in the court, as a reason why Mr. McAdams' appointment should be reversed.

[1] Whether practicing in the Court of Chancery as solicitor or counsel by the clerk in chancery in a lunacy proceeding would disqualify the clerk afterwards from being appointed guardian of the lunatic by the orphans' court it is not necessary to decide, because what was done by Mr. McAdams in this case was not practicing in the court. Mr. McAdams had been counsel for the subject of the inquisition. He did not file the petition for the commission, nor address the commissioners, nor examine witnesses upon the taking of the inquisition. This was admitted by counsel for appellants. What he did he had a right to do, and properly did, namely, to consult with counsel who was conducting the proceedings, and give him information which he possessed, and which presumably aided in the proper development of the petitioner's case.

Counsel for the relatives who objected to the appointment of Mr. McAdams asked leave to take depositions in this court to show that Mr. McAdams was active at the counsel table at the hearing before the commissioners and jury. This I denied, not only because the matter of taking testimony in this court on appeal is discretionary with the ordinary, but also because counsel admitted, as above stated, that Mr. McAdams had not addressed the commission or the jury, or examined any witnesses, and, of course, the record discloses that he was not the solicitor of the petitioners. As I remarked before, the only thing he did was what any one possessed of facts bearing upon the case was privileged to do, namely, assist counsel in developing the case.

[2] The appellants placed reliance on the case of Read v. Drake, 2 N. J. Eq. 78. It was there decided that under the act of 1820 (Rev. Laws, p. 784) the mother or next of kin were given a preference, and were entitled, if they desired it, to the appointment of guardian of minors under 14 years of age, and could not be passed by, except upon some satisfactory objection made and sustained before the court. That case has no application to the one at bar. That involved the appointment of a statutory guardian for an infant. This case involves the appointment of a statutory guardian for an insane person. The provision which here governs is to be found in the act concerning idiots and lunatics (Comp. Stat. p. 2781, § 1), which provides that in case of lunacy found the Chancellor shall cause to be transmitted to the orphans' court of the county of the lunatic's residence a certified copy of the proceedings, and the orphans' court is directed and required, on application for that purpose, to appoint some fit and discreet person guardian of such lunatic. It will be observed at a glance that the only qualification here required is the appointment of a fit and discreet person. That Mr. McAdams is fit to be appointed guardian of a lunatic is perfectly clear, and that he is a discreet person I think is equally apparent. That he possessed the qualifications of fitness and discretion was decided by the orphans' court, and there is nothing in the record which suggests any reason why the discretion exercised by the orphans' court in making the appointment should be overturned.

I am of opinion that the order appealed from should be affirmed, and that will be the order.

(92 N. J. Law, 183)

KAUFMAN v. WILLIAMS et al. (No. 51.)
(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT §184(2)—PLEDGE TO SECURE PERFORMANCE OF LEASE—RIGHTS AS AGAINST SUBSEQUENT GRANTEES.

A lessee deposited cash with the lessor as security for the performance of all the covenants and conditions of the lease. The lessor conveyed the land, and with the consent of the lessee paid over the deposit to the grantee, who made an express agreement with the lessee to hold the deposit in accordance with the terms and conditions of the lease. The grantee subsequently conveyed, subject to the lease. Whether, in the settlement between the parties to this conveyance, the deposit reached the hands of the new grantee, or remained in the hands of the first grantee, was a disputed question. The lessee upon the termination of his lease sued for the deposit. Held, that the deposit was a pledge, and that the first grantee was liable to the lessee therefor under the express agreement, and that the second grantee was liable only in case the deposit had reached her hands.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Essex County.

Action by Benjamin H. Kaufman against Elma Mennen Williams and others. From a judgment on a directed verdict in favor of defendant Meyer, and against defendants Williams and Mennen as individuals, defendants Williams and Mennen appeal. Affirmed as to defendant Meyer, and reversed as to defendants Williams and Mennen.

Charles J. Basch, as landlord, and Benjamin H. Kaufman, as tenant, entered into a lease of property owned by Basch, which recited that the tenant had deposited with the landlord, upon delivery of the lease, $5,000 as security for the performance of all its covenants and conditions. It was thereby agreed that, if the tenant paid the rent and performed the conditions and covenants, the landlord would return the deposit to the tenant upon the termination of the lease, and that interest thereon should be paid semiannually to the tenant. One provision of the lease was that the term "landlord" should be construed as meaning Basch, "his executors, administrators, or assigns," and that the term "tenant" should be construed as meaning Kaufman, "his executors, administrators, or assigns." Another provision was that the covenants contained in the lease were binding on the parties thereto and their successors in interest. Basch conveyed the property in fee to Meyer, subject to "all stipulations, agreements, and covenants which * * * now are obligatory upon the owner or now owners of said premises," and subject, further, to the Kaufman lease. Meyer within a month thereafter entered into an agreement under seal with Kaufman, by which he assumed the lease and all the terms thereof, acknowledged the receipt of $5,000 from Basch, pursuant to the terms of the lease, and agreed to hold that sum as a deposit in accordance with the terms and conditions of the lease. Thereafter Meyer conveyed to Elma C. Mennen in fee, subject to all existing leases and tenancies, specifying the Kaufman lease. This deed contained the same provision as to stipulations, agreements, and covenants, which "now are obligatory upon the owner or now owners of said premises." Meyer continued, notwithstanding his deed to Mennen, to pay Kaufman the semiannual interest on the $5,000 for four years thereafter, including each semiannual installment that came due during Mrs. Mennen's life. She died October 25, 1916. Elma Mennen Williams and William Gerhard Mennen are her executors, and also her residuary devisees. The property in question was devised to them. Kaufman paid the rent until three months before the expiration of his term. The rent for the last three months he has not paid. This suit is brought by him against Meyer, Mrs. Williams and Mr. Mennen as executors of Elma C. Mennen, and as individuals. He claims judgment in the alternative against Williams and Mennen, as executors or as individuals, in the sum of $2,500 (the $5,000 deposit less the unpaid rent), or against Meyer in the sum of $5,000. The trial judge directed a verdict in favor of Meyer, and against Williams and Mennen as individuals, for $2,500 and accrued interest.

Scott German, of Newark, for appellants. Jacob Fischel and Wilbur A. Helsley, both of Newark, for respondent Meyer. Samuel F. Leber, of Newark, for respondent Kaufman.

SWAYZE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The trial judge held that Williams and Mennen were liable as individuals by reason of the provisions of the lease. This could only be if the covenant to return the deposit was a covenant running with the reversion. On no other theory could Williams and Mennen be held liable on Basch's covenant. We think there was a misconception of the legal situation. The true state of the case is that $5,000 was pledged with the landlord as security for the rent. The covenant to repay the deposit did not change its character. It remained a deposit by way of pledge. Later Meyer, the then landlord, and Kaufman the tenant entered into a new agreement, either assenting to or authorizing the transfer of the pledge by Basch to Meyer, and this transfer was made. Thereby the pledgor substituted Meyer for Basch as pledgee, and Basch, having parted with the pledge with the assent of all parties in interest, was discharged from further liability. Meyer became liable to Kaufman on his agreement to hold the deposit in accordance with the terms and conditions of the lease, and no contract or conveyance by Meyer without Kaufman's consent could deprive the latter of his rights. When Meyer subsequently conveyed to Mrs. Mennen, he remained a pledgee, and liable to her as such, by reason of her becoming entitled to the debt secured, unless he transferred the pledge to her. The only question is, in case Meyer still holds the pledge, whether under the terms of the lease there is a present liability of Meyer to return the deposit. By those terms it was to be returned at the termination of the lease if the rent had been paid. The lease has terminated, but the rent has not been fully paid. The suit is therefore prematurely brought against Meyer. The judgment in his favor must be affirmed on that ground, and on that ground alone.

We cannot agree with the learned trial judge that Mrs. Williams and Mennen can be held individually as owners of the land by reason of the covenants in the lease. The suit is to recover a deposit held in pledge as security for the performance of the covenants in the lease. The pledgee is liable as such, not as lessor. So far as concerns the legal situation, the deposit might as well be made with a trust company. The liability to return the deposit to Kaufman runs not with the reversion but with the pledge, if we may use that form of expression. Whether Mrs. Mennen or her estate or devisees can be held by reason of the acceptance of a deed from Meyer, subject to all stipulations, agreements, or covenants obligatory upon him, is a question not now presented. Even if, upon a proper construction of the deed, it should be held that the language amounted to an assumption of the liability of Meyer or an agreement to indemnify him, Kaufman was not a party to the deed, and cannot enforce Meyer's right in a court of law against the Mennens. Crowell v. Hospital of St. Barnabas, 27 N. J. Eq. 650. The deed contains no covenant in favor of Kaufman. If the Mennen estate can be held at all by Kaufman, it can only be because, in the passing of the title, the $5,000 deposit was allowed to her as a deduction from the purchase price. If this was done, then she in effect received $5,000 of Kaufman's money held in pledge, and upon his fulfilling the condition of the pledge she must return it. Whether or not she was allowed this deduction is a question of fact, which must be submitted to a jury. If they find that she received it, judgment should go against her executors. If they find that she did not receive it, judgment should go in favor of her executors. Mrs. Williams and Mennen as individuals are in any event entitled to a judgment in their favor. The present judgment against them must be reversed.

We reiterate by way of caution that the judgment in favor of Meyer is affirmed only because, as to him, the suit is prematurely brought. His ultimate liability may be determined hereafter. Technically, perhaps, the suit is prematurely brought against Williams and Mennen, even if they have had the $5,000, since confessedly the rent was not fully paid when the suit was begun; but a credit of the amount of rent against the deposit is in effect payment, and there can be no difficulty in making this credit, if Mrs. Mennen has had the money.

(38 N. J. Law, 190)

MAUSERT v. MUTUAL DISTRIBUTING CO. (No. 30.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §=260—SALE—DEMAND.

A demand on the mortgagor to perform the condition of his mortgage is a condition precedent to a valid seizure and sale of the mortgaged chattels, where there can be no default until demand.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §=260 — DEMAND FOR PAYMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a chattel mortgage is payable on demand, there can be no default until demand; but in such case a lawful notice of intention to sell the chattels for the purpose of making the debt is equivalent to demand of payment, when the mortgagor has rendered an actual demand impossible by his flight and concealment.

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §=292(1)—CONVERSION OF MORTGAGED CHATTELS—DEFENSES.

It is a defense to an action by the mortgagor against the mortgagee, for conversion of the chattels covered, that the mortgagor has consented to, or ratified, the acts of the mortgagee; and such ratification may be inferred from evidence that for two years after seizure and sale for the purpose of making the mortgage debt the mortgagor expressed no dissatisfaction, but, on the contrary, before bringing suit, purchased of the mortgagee a part of the chattels, which the latter had bought at the sale to protect itself, and had also, with full knowledge of the facts, accepted from the mortgagee a voluntary payment of the difference between the amount of the debt and what the mortgagee had realized from the chattels purchased at the sale.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Essex County.

Action by Frederick William Mausert against the Mutual Distributing Company, a corporation, for conversion of chattels. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and venire de novo awarded.

Reed & Reynolds, of Newark, for appellant. Palmer Bradner and Frank E. Bradner, both of Newark, for appellee.

TRENCHARD, J. This suit was brought to recover damages for the conversion by the defendant of certain chattels of the plaintiff. The defendant, in its answer and at the trial, claimed to be a purchaser of such chattels at a sale thereof under a chattel mortgage given by the plaintiff to the defendant, and so sought to justify its possession. The learned trial judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff, leaving to the jury only the amount of the damages.

We are of the opinion that the direction of a verdict cannot be sustained. It appeared that the mortgage in question was upon the condition that if the mortgagor should pay to the mortgagee "on demand, at the office of said Mutual Distributing Company [mortgagee] in Newark, N. J., the sum of $682.88, then these presents shall be void," and further provided that in case of default in payment it should be lawful for the mortgagee to take and sell the chattels covered, and out of the proceeds to retain and pay the mortgage debt, and render the overplus to the mortgagor. Of course, under such a mortgage, upon default the mortgagee may, upon due notice to the mortgagor, sell the chattels covered by the mortgage for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt, without resort to any court for a decree of foreclosure. Freeman v. Freeman, 17 N. J. Eq. 44. And that was what the defendant (the mortgagee) undertook to do.

[1] But it appeared that the mortgagee had not made an actual demand of payment on the mortgagor, and the trial judge considered that in the absence of such a demand there was no default, and that therefore the sale was a nullity. It was upon that ground that he directed a verdict for the plaintiff. No doubt a demand on the mortgagor to perform the condition of his mortgage is a condition precedent to a valid seizure and sale of the mortgaged chattels, where there can be no default until demand. Goodrich v.

Willard, 2 Gray (Mass.) 208. And where, as in the present case, a chattel mortgage is payable on demand, there can be no default until demand. Goodrich v. Willard, 2 Gray (Mass.) 208; Ely v. Carnley, 19 N. Y. 496; Slingo v. Steele-Wedeles Co., 82 Ill. App. 139. The case of Security Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. N. J. Paper Board, etc., Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 603, 42 Atl. 746, is not to the contrary. The well-recognized rule that an action at law may be brought on a promissory note, or a bond payable on demand, immediately after its delivery and before any actual demand has been made, has no application here. A chattel mortgage has characteristics which a note or bond has not. It is a security for a debt, and the mortgagor has a right to redeem the chattels by payment of the debt.

[2] But even in the case of a chattel mortgage payable on demand a lawful notice of intention to sell the chattels for the purpose of making the debt is equivalent to demand of payment, when, as here, the mortgagor has rendered an actual demand impossible by his flight and concealment. Goodrich v. Willard, 2 Gray (Mass.) 208. In the present case the evidence tended to show that immediately after the mortgage was executed the mortgagor abandoned his place of business and residence in this state, and secreted himself outside the state in such a manner that plaintiff could not ascertain his whereabouts. The evidence also tended to show that lawful notice of the intention to sell was given by the mortgagee.

[3] There is another reason why the mere absence of actual demand of payment did not justify a direction of a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. It is a defense to an action by the mortgagor against the mortgagee, for conversion of chattels covered, that the mortgagor has consented to, or ratified, the acts of the mortgagee. Merritt v. Ward, 113 Ill. App. 208. In the present case the evidence tended to show that, for more than two years after the mortgagee had taken and sold the chattels, the mortgagor expressed no dissatisfaction with the mortgagee's conduct, but, on the contrary, before bringing this suit, purchased of the mortgagee a part of the chattels, which the latter had bought at the sale to protect itself, and had also, with full knowledge of the facts, accepted from the mortgagee a voluntary payment of the difference between the amount of the debt and what the mortgagee had realized from the chattels purchased at the sale. This evidence permitted of the inference that the mortgagor had ratified the acts of the mortgagee.

The judgment below will be reversed, and a venire de novo awarded.

WHITE v. GRAVES et al. (No. 43/338.)
(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 10, 1918.)

1. WILLS §=439 — CONSTRUCTION — INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

The cardinal principle in construing wills is to ascertain the real intention of testator.

2. WILLS §=440 — CONSTRUCTION — TESTATOR'S INTENTION FROM WILL.

The intention of testator is usually gathered from the will itself.

3. WILLS §=441 — CONSTRUCTION — TESTATOR'S INTENTION—CIRCUMSTANCES.

Where the language of the will is of doubtful meaning, attendant circumstances may be taken into consideration in ascertaining testator's intention.

4. WILLS §=439 — CONSTRUCTION — TECHNICAL RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

Technical rules of construction are designed to assist the court in and not prevent the court from ascertaining testator's intention.

5. WILLS §=692 — CONSTRUCTION OF TESTAMENTARY POWER.

Where testator directed that, upon wife's death, property held in trust should be sold and proceeds paid "to my children or to benevolent objects, in such proportions, as my wife may appoint," he gave his wife power to apportion his estate among his children and benevolent objects, and each of the members of the classes; the words "in such proportions" applying to "children" as well as "benevolent objects."

6. WILLS §=692—POWER OF APPOINTMENT—INVALID APPOINTMENT.

Where testator empowered wife to apportion the proceeds of the sale of trust property "to my children," an appointment to the widow of a deceased son is void.

7. WILLS §=692—VOID PROVISION IN WILL PURSUANT TO POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

Where wife is empowered to apportion proceeds of the sale of trust property, a provision in her will attempting to charge upon the residue moneys alleged to have been loaned by two beneficiaries to the estate is void.

8. WILLS §=692—POWER OF APPOINTMENT—UNAUTHORIZED PROVISION OF WILL.

Where husband's will empowered wife to apportion the proceeds of sale of property held in trust to his children, a provision in wife's will that the children, to whom she had apportioned shares in such fund pursuant to the appointment, should invest money and use income, and that remainder should go to issue of such children, held void.

9. WILLS §=692—POWER OF APPOINTMENT—VOID APPOINTMENT.

Where wife, pursuant to power of appointment given her by husband's will, apportions proceeds of sale of trust property among the children specified in husband's will, the fact that she made a void appointment, and made invalid provisions concerning the enjoyment of the estate by the beneficiaries, does not vitiate the valid appointments.

10. WILLS §=589—EXERCISE OF POWER IN RESIDUARY CLAUSE.

Power of appointment may be exercised in a residuary clause.

11. WILLS §=589 — CONSTRUCTION — EXERCISE OF POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

Where testator, in residuary clause, referred, not only to residue of her estate, but to residue of trust fund over which she had power of appointment, and one-fourth of trust fund had not been disposed of, the residuary clause was an appointment of the undisposed one-fourth to the residuary legatee.

12. WILLS §=692 — APPOINTMENT — EXERCISE.

Where wife is empowered to apportion trust fund among testator's children, and gives one-fourth each to testator's two sons by first marriage, and also one-half to her daughter, the wife will not be held to have committed a fraud upon the power, although the sons are in more need of assistance than the daughter.

Bill by Mary R. White, trustee under the will of Edwin Graves, deceased, against Edwin Augustus Graves and others. Decree advised in accordance with opinion.

Minton & Day and O. Franklin Wilson, all of Morristown, for complainant. Francis H. McGee, of Trenton, and Gilbert Collins, of Jersey City, for answering counterclaimants. Raymond C. Matthews, of Morristown, for certain answering defendants.

LANE, V. C. The case requires the construction of the twelfth (called in the will the eleventh) paragraph of the will of Edwin Graves, deceased, and that of Mary J. Graves, deceased. The paragraph of the Edwin Graves will reads as follows:

"Eleventh. The residue of my estate which I have hereinbefore given to my executors in trust for my family, I desire and direct them and the survivor of them to so hold in trust as long as my wife lives, and at her decease I direct them to sell my real estate, or such real estate as they may have purchased according to the provisions hereinbefore contained and convert the same into money and to pay the same with the proceeds of the personal property held by them in trust, to my children or to benevolent objects, in such proportions, as my wife may by her will or other writing in the nature thereof appoint, having entire confidence in her judgment in that respect, and having no desire to give to my children any more of my estate than I have herein given to them, unless some unforeseen contingency may render such increase necessary or advisable, of which I wish my wife to be the judge."

The question is whether, under this provision, the children take under the will, unless the wife has appointed to benevolent objects, or whether the children take only such shares as the wife has seen fit to appoint to them.

By the eighth paragraph of his will the testator had provided:

"Eighth. All the rest and residue of my estate, both real and personal, wheresoever the same may be situated, I give, devise, and bequeath unto my executors hereinafter named and to the survivor of them, in trust to and for the following uses, purposes and trusts: To permit my wife and family to occupy my present residence as heretofore, to rent out any other real estate I may own and to invest the personal estate according to their discretion and receive the rents, and income and pay the same to my wife Mary, semiannually, to be by her appropriated for the support and maintenance of my family and the education of my children, and the surplus to appropriate to benevolent objects according to her discretion and according to my practice heretofore."

The wife, Mary J. Graves, upon her death, left a will, the third paragraph of which reads as follows:

"Third. In pursuance of the power of disposition and appointment given to me in the last Will and Testament of my deceased husband, Edwin Graves, and after carefully considering all existing circumstances and probable future conditions, I do appoint and dispose of the property and estate which comes within the power hereinbefore stated as follows:

"During the many years intervening since the death of my said husband I have annually devoted to charity considerable portions of the income by me derived from my said husband's trust estate, which gifts and benefactions I feel would completely fulfill the desires of my husband concerning benevolent objects, therefore, and in further consideration of the present circumstances of my family, I make no further gifts to benevolent objects.

"A. In the exercise of the power of disposition aforesaid, I give to my daughter, Mary R. White, the pictures, household furniture, and articles of household use, which were my husband's at the time of his decease; and the books which were my husband's, I direct shall be equally divided between my sons, Edwin A. Graves and George M. Graves.

"B. My daughter, Mary R. White, and my son, Walter Graves, having jointly loaned to the said trust fund of my said husband's estate the sum of thirty-two hundred and seventy dollars, I do order and direct that of said sum, sixteen hundred and thirty-five dollars be paid to my daughter, Mary R. White, and sixteen hundred and thirty-five dollars thereof be paid to Julia R. Graves, the widow of my said son, Walter Graves.

"C. The residue of said trust fund, thereafter remaining, I do order and direct to be divided in four equal parts, one-fourth of which I give and bequeath to my son, George M. Graves; one-fourth part thereof, I give and bequeath to my son, Edwin A. Graves; one-fourth thereof, I give and bequeath to my daughter, Mary R. White. It is my desire, however, that my children securely invest the legacies in this paragraph given to them, and use the income for their personal benefit during their respective lives, with remainder on the decease of such legatee to his or her children. If any of my children in this paragraph named be deceased at the time of my death leaving child or children, then such child or children of my deceased child shall take the part which his, her or their parent if living at the time of my decease would have taken. It is my desire that my homestead premises after my decease be retained for the use of my family or be rented until such time as a fair and adequate price can be obtained for it.

"D. Another one-fourth part thereof I give and bequeath unto Julia R. Graves, widow of my said deceased son, Walter, but I charge this gift with the payment of twenty-two hundred dollars, which by my said son, Walter, was owing to me at the time of his decease. If, at the time of my death, the said Julia R. Graves be deceased, then I give and bequeath that which she would have taken if living under this legacy unto my said daughter, Mary R. White."

[1-4] The widow, Mary J. Graves, was the third wife of Edwin Graves. He left him surviving two sons by his first wife, one son by his second wife, and a daughter by his third wife. At the time of the death of Mary J. Graves, the two sons by the first wife and the daughter by the third wife were surviving. The son by the second wife died, leaving a widow, Julia R. Graves. As has been so often said, the cardinal principle in the construction of wills is to get at the real intention of the testator. This is usually to be gathered from the will itself, although attendant circumstances may, of course, be taken into consideration, if the language uned be of doubtful meaning. Technical rules of construction are designed to assist the court in, and not prevent the court from, ascertaining the intention of the testator. Deats v. Ziegner, 82 N. J. Eq. 605, 89 Atl. 31. If I could see my way clear, I would put upon the will the construction insisted upon by the respondents, to wit, that the children take under the will, and that the power of appointment to the wife was limited to designate such benevolent objects as she saw fit, and that the words "in such proportions" apply either to proportions between children and benevolent objects as classes, or proportions among benevolent objects. If so construed, the testator would not have made it possible that, in the absence of an exercise of the power of the appointment by the widow, he would have died intestate as to the entire residue of his estate; there would be secured to the children, in the absence of an appointment by the wife to benevolent objects, an equal division of the estate; and the widow would not have had it placed within her power to discriminate among the children, only one of whom was hers.

[5] My first impression, upon reading the will, without a knowledge of the attendant circumstances, was that under it the widow might apportion among the children and benevolent objects and each of the members of the classes. It was not until the result of such a holding was brought forcibly to my mind that I thought I could see that another construction might be placed upon the language used. I have examined the will since in the light of the arguments and briefs of counsel, and have endeavored to ascertain whether there was any such doubt upon the face of the will as that, considering the surrounding circumstances, the court might be permitted to put upon the will such a construction as would result in a fair and reasonable distribution of the estate. I have failed to find such a doubt. The language used is not technical. The draftsman undoubtedly, in reducing to writing his ideas, used the language which first came into his mind to express them. It seems to me that, under these circumstances, the impression which is made by a first reading is more likely to convey to the reader the real intention of the draftsman than the impression which is only arrived at by a careful, technical scrutiny of the language used and the application of technical rules of construction. I have tried both methods, and have been unable to shake my first impression. I think that the phrase "in such proportions" applies both to children and benevolent objects; that the testator intended to give his wife complete power to apportion his estate among his children and benevolent objects in such manner as she should deem proper under the circumstances existing at the time of the making of her will. The respondents would read the clauses in the will as follows:

"To my children, or to benevolent objects, in such proportions as," etc.

I cannot so read them, and I think that the latter clauses are in opposition to any such reading.

[6-9] The appointment made by Mary J. Graves to Julia R. Graves, the widow of the deceased son, is admittedly void. So, also, is the attempt to charge upon the residue moneys alleged to have been loaned by Mary R. White and Walter Graves to the estate, as is also the attempt of the testator to interfere with the enjoyment of the estate by the beneficiaries. That the testator has, however, included within her will these void provisions, does not vitiate the valid appointments. I think she validly appointed to the two sons by the first marriage and the daughter, Mary R. White, each one-fourth of the estate.

[10, 11] This leaves one-fourth undisposed of, and of which the testator, Edwin Graves, is now intestate, unless the residuary clause of the will of Mary J. Graves may be considered an appointment of this quarter to her daughter, Mary R. White. A power of appointment may be exercised in a residuary clause. It is not necessary that technical words be used; if it clearly appears from the document that the power of appointment was intended to be exercised, it will be considered as having been exercised. That the testator had in mind that, although she had previously disposed of the whole of the residue of her husband's estate, yet some contingency might arise, as has arisen, by which there would be a residue undisposed of, is clear. In the residuary clause of her will she distinctly refers, not only to the residue of her estate, but to the residue of the trust fund. Her intention was that if, for any reason or other there should be anything left over not legally disposed of, that residue should go to the daughter, Mary R. White. I think, therefore, that there was an appointment by the will of Mary J. Graves of the illegally appointed quarter to Mary R. White.

[12] It is lastly insisted by respondents that, because it appears that the two sons by the first wife are much more in need of assistance than the daughter by the third wife, the testator, Mary R. Graves, committed a fraud upon the power. The testator, Edwin Graves, expresses entire confidence in the judgment of his wife, and makes his wife judge of the happening of the unforeseen contingency referred to in his will. It would have to be a very clear case indeed before this court would interfere, and substitute its judgment for the judgment of the person designated by the testator. While it is true that the daughter, Mary R. White, is financially in a much better position than the two sons by the first marriage, it is likewise true that she is a woman and they are men, and that they are much older than she, and therefore, in the nature of things, will not require assistance so long as she may. I do not think that there has been such discrimination in this case as would permit the court to find that there was fraud.

It is suggested in the briefs of counsel that the poverty of the two sons by the first wife is the only unforeseen contingency which would warrant the widow in appointing to children rather than to benevolent objects; but this does not follow. The will of Edwin Graves was made in 1860. While the provision made by him in his will at that time may have been ample for the children, at the time of the making of the will of Mrs. Graves in 1912 such provision may have been totally inadequate. Conditions have changed. The value of money has fluctuated to a great extent. The testator does not require that the unforeseen contingency should be such as would make it necessary that there should be an increase; he says, "necessary or advisable," and he makes his wife the judge.

I will advise a decree in accordance with these views, which decree will provide for the immediate liquidation and distribution of the estate. Decree may be submitted on two days' notice.

(91 N. J. Law, 544)

BROWNE v. HAGEN.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §183 — OFFICERS—CIVIL SERVICE.

The Civil Service Act applies only to those offices the terms of which are not fixed by law.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §191—HEALTH OFFICERS—CIVIL SERVICE—"TERM FIXED BY LAW."

Under 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 2660, § 31, authorizing local boards of health to appoint subordinate officers and fix their terms, and an ordinance appointing health inspector for three years, with right to hold over until appointment of a successor, one so appointed held office for a "term fixed by law," and he did not come within the protection of the Civil Service Act, nor hold office during good behavior.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Quo warranto by the State, on the relation of J. Alexander Browne, against Orville R. Hagen. From a judgment (100 Atl. 857) for relator, respondent appeals. Reversed.

William I. Lewis, of Paterson, for appellant. Peter J. McGinnis, of Paterson, for appellee.

GUMMERE, C. J. This is a quo warranto proceeding, brought for the purpose of determining the title to the office of health inspector of the city of Paterson. The relator by his information challenges the right of the respondent, Hagen, who is the incumbent, to continue in the occupation of the office, and asserts his own right to hold it. The respondent demurred to the information, and upon the hearing before the Supreme Court judgment was directed for the relator. From that judgment the respondent appeals.

The information discloses the following facts: In November, 1903, the board of health of the city of Paterson appointed Browne, the relator, health officer of that city. On the 13th of November, 1906, the board reappointed him for a term of three years. On the 13th of November, 1909, he was again reappointed for a term of three years, and until his successor should be appointed. At the general election held in the city of Paterson in November, 1912, that municipality adopted the Civil Service Act (Acts 1908, c. 156). Subsequent to its adoption the board of health of Paterson made several attempts to appoint a health officer to succeed Browne, but these attempts were, each of them, ineffectual, because of the inability of the members of the board to agree upon an appointee, until January 12, 1915. On this latter date one Thomas A. Clay was appointed to the office. In the meantime, and until the appointment of Dr. Clay, the relator continued in the occupation of the office and in the enjoyment of its emoluments. Dr. Clay entered into the possession of the office shortly after his appointment, and continued to hold it for nearly two years, and then resigned. The board of health accepted his resignation, and on the 14th of November, 1916, appointed Hagen as his successor. Some little time after this latter appointment the relator filed the present information, and seeks to support it upon the ground that, being legally in office at the time of the adoption of the Civil Service Act, he was by virtue of its provisions entitled to hold the office during good behavior.

[1, 2] The civil service law applies only to those offices the terms of which are not fixed by law. The question which the present case presents, therefore, is this: Was the office of health inspector of the city of Paterson, which was held by Dr. Browne, at the time of the adoption of the civil service law by that city, one the term of which was fixed by law, or one which had an indefinite term? The power of the board of health of Paterson to appoint a health inspector at the time of the appointment and reappointments of Dr. Browne to that position was conferred by the thirty-first section of the General Health Act of 1887 (Comp. Stat. p. 2669), which provides that:

"Local boards of health shall have power and authority to appoint such subordinate officers and agents * * * as they may deem necessary, to fix the term of such appointments and the compensation of such appointees."

This section not only authorizes the creation of the office of health inspector, but in express words empowers the board to fix the term thereof. As has already been pointed out, the appointment of Browne in 1909 was for a definite term of three years, with authority to remain in the occupation of that office after the expiration of the term until his successor should be appointed. We are therefore to consider whether the holder of an office, who has been appointed by a resolution declaring the term during which he shall hold it, coupled with a further declaration entitling him to continue in the office after the expiration of that term until his successor is appointed, occupies an office the term of which is fixed by law. On the authority of earlier decisions, we think it must be declared that he does.

In this case of Peal v. Newark, 66 N. J. Law, 265, 271, 49 Atl. 468, the common council of Newark passed a resolution appointing Peal as superintendent of buildings for the period of two years, at a salary of $1,500 per year, and this court held that, assuming the resolution to have been passed by legal authority, it fixed the term of the appointee. In the later case of McGrath v. Bayonne, 85 N. J. Law, 188, 89 Atl. 48, this court had before it the legal effect of a resolution adopted by the board of councilmen of the city of Bayonne, appointing one Noolan to the office of assistant building inspector, and fixing the term of the position at one year. It was held by this court that the appointment was for a term fixed by law; the declaration of this court being that a resolution of a municipal body which declares the term of its appointee, such action being in the exercise of a power conferred upon it by the Legislature, is as much the fixing of a term by law as if the Legislature itself had acted in the premises.

These two cases would be dispositive of the question involved in the present proceeding, except that in the resolutions then under consideration there was no provision that the appointee should hold over after the expiration of his term until the appointment of his successor, and the contention on the part of the relator is that this provision changes what would have been a definite into an indefinite term. A similar question was presented to the Supreme Court in the case of Rightmire v. Camden, 50 N. J. Law, 43, 18 Atl. 30. The city charter of Camden provided for the election of a receiver of taxes, fixing the term of his office at three years, and until his successor should be chosen and qualified. The court held that the term of this officer expired at the end of three years from his election, following the decision of this court in Haight v. Love, 39 N. J. Law, 479, 23 Am. Rep. 234, and then proceeded as follows:

"Nor is the principle above cited"—that is, the principle upon which Haight v. Love was rested—"impaired or modified by the fact that the statute which created the office provided that the incumbent should hold until his successor qualified. Such a provision was not designed to extend the tenure of office of the incumbent beyond the specified time for his benefit. Its purpose was to conserve the public interests, that there might be no vacancy in office through the delay of the successor to qualify."

We concur in the view thus expressed, and consider the declaration equally applicable, whether the incumbent holds over through the delay of his successor to qualify, or through the neglect of the appointing body to perform the public duty which the law has cast upon it of appointing a successor at the expiration of the term, of the incumbent. The relator, having been appointed for a term which was fixed by law, does not come within the protection of the Civil Service Act, and his challenge of the right of the defendant to hold the office of health inspector is therefore without merit.

The judgment under review must be reversed.

(92 N. J. Law, 193)

HOLZAPFEL et al. v. HOBOKEN MANUFACTURERS' R. CO. (No. 47.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ACTION \S 65—AMOUNTS NOT DUE.

Section 21 of the Practice Act of 1912 does not support a suit and entry of judgment therein for moneys not due at the time of beginning the action, though there be installments to accrue, and though there is already a right of action for installments in arrear.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT \S 394—AWARD UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—ENFORCEMENT.

A contract to pay weekly sums in settlement of liability of an employer for the death of an employee, equal to the maximum provided in the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1911 (P. L. p. 184), and supplements thereto, may be enforced, by the persons claiming the payments, in the Supreme Court by a common-law action.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 1172(2)—REVERSAL IN PART.

Where the judgment was properly rendered for moneys already due, but was erroneous in providing for moneys not due, it may stand as to the moneys due, and need not be reversed in toto. Rules 131 and 147 are applicable.

Walker, Ch., and Black, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by Margaret C. Holzapfel and others against the Hoboken Manufacturers' Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Judgment modified.

Isidor Kalisch, of Newark, for appellant. James D. Carpenter, Jr., of Jersey City, for appellees.

PARKER, J. The appeal is from a judgment entered in the Supreme Court pursuant to an order signed by Judge William H. Speer, of the circuit court, acting as Supreme Court Commissioner by virtue of rules 92 et seq. of this court, which are substantially the same as rules 61 et seq., appended to the Practice Act of 1912 (P. L. p. 395), which order adjudged the defendant's answer sham and frivolous, and directed that judgment be entered against the defendant (appellant) in favor of Margaret C. Holzapfel, and William,

Anna, John, Mary, James, and Margaret Holzapfel, suing by Margaret C. Holzapfel, their next friend, "for the sum of $260 (being for 26 weekly payments of $10 each), and for $10 on the Tuesday of each and every week from and after the date hereof for 262 weeks, with plaintiff's costs to be taxed by the clerk."

The theory upon which judgment was rendered in this form seems to have been that it conformed to the provisions of a contract between defendant and said Margaret C. Holzapfel, acting for herself and for the benefit of the other plaintiffs above named, who are her infant children, and that such judgment was warranted by section 21 of the Practice Act of 1912, which provides that:

"Judgment may be entered in such form as may be required by the nature of the case and by the recovery or relief awarded." P. L. p. 381.

The contract, as will presently more fully appear, provided for payments of $10 per week until the total of $3,000 should be paid. At the date of the order 12 weekly payments had been paid, 26 were in arrear, and the other 262 were still to accrue. The commissioner apparently considered that the statute authorized an adjudication which would cover the whole contract once and for all.

[1] We are quite clear that he overstepped the powers conferred by the section quoted. It creates no cause of action where none existed previously, nor does it enable a party to sue in anticipation of a cause of action which has not yet arisen. The general object is, of course, to avoid multiplicity of suits and of judgments, in cases where the rights of all parties may be settled and ascertained with convenience. In effect it is an assimilation to the existing procedure in equity. But even equity ordinarily avoids making an award of money as between debtor and creditor until it is due. Allen v. Taylor, 3 N. J. Eq. 435, 437, 29 Am. Dec. 721; Jordan v. Clark, 16 N. J. Eq. 243, 247. If it accrue after bill is filed and before decree, a supplemental bill is the proper practice. Id.; 16 Cyc. 357; Story, Eq. Pl. § 336. It is, of course, elementary at common law that an action cannot be brought to recover money not due. In attachment cases the statute permits it (Devlan v. Wells, 65 N. J. Law, 213, 47 Atl. 467); but this is a departure from the common law, and when the action is commenced by summons, no claim that matured after the suit was brought can properly be included in the judgment, even in case of an installment contract (Felt v. Steigler, 69 N. J. Law, 92, 54 Atl. 243; Titus v. Gunn, 69 N. J. Law, 410, 55 Atl. 735; 1 O. J. 1148). The rule is a meritorious one, certainly as to causes of action to accrue after the judgment, because non constat that payments will not be promptly made as they accrue. It is going far afield to say that this elemental and sensible rule of the substantive common law was intended to be abrogated by a statute relating to practice—to methods of procedure rather than to rights of action. The judgment in this aspect was clearly erroneous.

The other phase of the case requires a somewhat fuller recital of the facts exhibited in the record. William Holzapfel, husband of the adult plaintiff and father of the infants, was in the service of the defendant as a locomotive engineer when he sustained a fatal accident in the course of his employment, and died the same day, leaving the plaintiffs, his widow and infant children. The widow and the defendant, conceiving the case to be one covered by the Workmen's Compensation Act, entered into an agreement in writing which, among other things, mentioned the names and ages of the children, classifying them and the widow as "dependents," and stipulating for a "maximum" payment of $10 per week and a total compensation of $3,000. From these and other features of the agreement it may safely be inferred that it was made in view of the provisions of the act, which in case of death calls for a maximum of $10 per week for 300 weeks. P. L. 1913, p. 306. The agreement was submitted to, and approved by, the Workmen's Compensation Aid Bureau established by P. L. 1916, p. 98. But the act is nowhere mentioned or referred to in the agreement.

[2] It is argued, on the assumption that the agreement in question was made pursuant to the act, that only the court of common pleas, as the forum provided in the statute, had jurisdiction to enforce the agreement, and hence the Supreme Court had none. To this view we do not accede. The original act (P. L. 1911, p. 134) does not particularly contemplate any formal agreement, except as to the amount of compensation in the case of injuries not covered by the schedule. See foot of page 138. There is no allusion to agreements for compensation in death cases. Page 139. In fact, the agreement to compensate would seem to be that implied in the contract of hiring, or conclusively presumed to have been made because of the statute. P. L. 1911, p. 136, par. 9; American Radiator Co. v. Rogge, 88 N. J. Law, 436, 92 Atl. 85, 94 Atl. 85; Id., 87 N. J. Law, 314, 93 Atl. 1053. The amendment of 1913 does not recognize the practice of making an agreement after the injury and protects the claimants against an agreement to accept less than they are entitled to by permitting the statutory action in the pleas in spite of it, leaving it open to that court to decide whether a sufficient compensation was stipulated. P. L. 1913, p. 309.

In 1916 the Legislature went a step further and provided that no such agreement should be conclusive unless approved by the Workmen's Compensation Aid Bureau, and that, unless such an agreement approved by that bureau was filed within 31 days after the injury, the bureau should take the matter up itself by way of settlement, or, in default of settlement, by suit. P. L. p. 97. But nowhere in all this legislation is there any intimation that the agreement, when made and when calling for the full statutory compensation in a case where it is definitely fixed by the statute, and especially when approved by the bureau, as in this case, so that it is conclusive, shall be enforceable only in the court of common pleas. The Supreme Court case of Parro v. N. Y., S. & W. R. R., 85 N. J. Law, 155, 88 Atl. 825, is cited to the contrary, and from the report of that case it appears that there was a "release" whose consideration was the payment of compensation as provided by the terms of the Compensation Act of 1911. If that was all of it (and nothing more appears) the jurisdiction of the common pleas may well have been exclusive, as the amount of compensation must needs be fixed by that court. But in a case like that at bar, where the rate and amount are fixed in exact accord with the maximum laid down in the act, and in words and figures, and not by reference, and the agreement, if made under the act is conclusive we see no reason for denying to our principal court of common-law jurisdiction the power to entertain a suit for arrears of liquidated installments due thereunder. - The cited case of Dupont v. Spocidio, 90 N. J. Law, 438, 101 Atl. 407, is in no wise to the contrary. All that was there decided, relevant to the present inquiry, is that an agreement for compensation, when made, relieves the claimant of the obligation to bring his suit within one year after the injury.

The next point made is that the agreement was signed by the mother alone, and hence created no rights in favor of the children, because the act of 1916, ubi supra, contemplates signature by the dependents. But this argument contains its own refutation, for the agreement in that event becomes, as to the children, an agreement of compromise and settlement at common law, made for their benefit and ratified by them, through a suit thereon to which they are parties plaintiff by their next friend, and by a judgment in which they will be concluded. Sites v. Eldredge, 45 N. J. Eq. 632, 18 Atl. 214, 14 Am. St. Rep. 769; 22 Cyc. 698. If they were seeking to repudiate the agreement, the case might be different; but they are standing on it, and defend the judgment.

The last point made is that the judgment does not provide against contingencies mentioned in the Compensation Act, such as remarriage or death of the widow, death of one or more of the children, or their arrival at 18 years of age. It is a sufficient answer to say that our disposition of the case, so far as relates to the payments to accrue in futuro, makes it unnecessary to pass upon this point.

[3] The judgment, as respects the provision for payment of weekly amounts to accrue after its rendition, must be reversed. Whether it properly included any payments accruing after the commencement of the suit is not argued, so we do not pass on this, though we are not to be understood as so intimating. The question then is: Must the judgment be reversed in toto? In our view rules 131 and 147 of the Supreme Court are applicable, and enable us to separate the error as to future payments from the judgment correctly rendered as to past-due payments. The situation is somewhat similar to that in Camden v. McAndrews & Forbes Co., 85 N. J. Law, 260, 88 Atl. 1034. The amount of arrears is not disputed, and for all that appears was properly adjudicated.

The judgment will be modified, by striking out the provisions as to payments not accrued (which must be sued for in another action or other actions). No costs will be allowed in this court.

WALKER, Ch., and BLACK, J., dissent.

(89 N. J. Eq. 311)

RUNKLE et al. v. SMITH et al. (No. 42/743.)
(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

1. USURY \S 127—EFFECT AS TO ONE COLLATERALLY LIABLE.

Where an obligation could not be enforced against the principal debtor to the extent of the amount by which it was usurious, it could not be enforced to the same extent against persons but collaterally liable.

2. USURY \S 127—EFFECT AS TO SURETY.

In suit by the creditor, the sureties of the principal debtor may set up the defense of usury.

3. GUARANTY \S 79—RES ADJUDICATA—PARTIAL VALIDITY OF USURIOUS CLAIM.

In the determination of the chancery court that part of the debt was usurious, there was included a determination that there was justly due on the claim the sum for which it was valid, which determination, all parties being before the court, was res adjudicata of any right the creditor may have against principal debtor's guarantor.

Suit by Harry G. Runkle and others against William E. R. Smith, executor, etc., and others, wherein the Logan Trust Company cross-petitions for payment to it out of income accruing on certain shares in a certain trust fund of an amount the court refused to order paid out of the residuary estate, the Casualty Company of America filing claim on an assignment. Application of the Casualty Company for payment to it denied.

McCarter & English, of Newark (Arthur F. Egner, of Newark), for William A. Marburg. Lindabury, Depue & Faulks, of Newark (J. Edward Ashmead, of Newark), for Union & New Haven Trust Co. Frank S. Moore, of New York City, for complainants and Daniel Runkle. Colby & Whiting, of Newark, for Casualty Co. of America.

LANE, V. C. [1-3] The Logan Trust Company holds an assignment of the interests of Harry G. Runkle in the residuary estate of William Runkle. There was also assigned by Daniel Runkle and Mary Runkle Heiberg their interests in the income of the trust fund of which the Fidelity Trust Company of Newark is trustee. The Casualty Company of America gave to the Logan Trust Company a bond securing the payment by Harry G. Runkle of the debt as stated of $73,000, due from him to the Logan Trust Company. As security, the casualty company took from Harry G. Runkle an assignment of his interest in the residuary estate of William Runkle. The papers were contemporaneously executed and delivered, and refer to one transaction. The Logan Trust Company filed a claim upon its assignment executed by Harry G. Runkle of his interest in the residuary estate of William Runkle, and I have already held (103 Atl. 382) that the loan was usurious to the extent of $7,300, and have disallowed the claim of the Logan Trust Company so far as the residuary estate of William Runkle is concerned to that extent. It has now filed a cross-petition, asking this court to direct payment out of the income accruing upon the shares of Harry Runkle and Mary Runkle Heiberg in the trust fund of the amount that this court has refused to direct paid out of the residuary estate. To this cross-petition Daniel Runkle and Mary Runkle Heiberg have filed answers setting up the usurious nature of the transaction. The casualty company filed its claim upon its assignment, and it has been adjudicated by a prior decree of this court that there is due to it upon its assignment of the interest of Harry G. Runkle in the residuary estate the sum of approximately $1,100. That decree directed the distribution of the residuary estate upon the basis that there was, and could be, due to the casualty company upon its assignment only the sum of $1,100. This sum has been paid. It would appear that the claim of the casualty company upon its assignment has been fully satisfied. It is now suggested, however, orally, that the court ought not to make distribution of the $7,300, the amount of the usury already found to be in the loan of the Logan Trust Company to the assignee next in order of priority, no order having yet been signed upon the prior opinion of the court, unless the casualty company be in some way protected against liability to suit by the Logan Trust Company upon the bond of guaranty, and it is suggested that either the court ought to order the $7,300, with its accumulations, to be paid to the casualty company upon its assignment, or that the fund should be retained until the liability of the Casualty Company of America, upon its bond, shall have been determined. It is now stated by counsel for the casualty company that a determination of this contention will be academic, because since it was made the casualty company has been declared insolvent by a New York court, and placed in charge of a liquidating agent, and that under the law in New York claims of such a nature as that which the Logan Trust Company would have cannot be enforced. See the cases considered in Allen v. Distillers Co. of America, 87 N. J. Eq. 531, 100 Atl. 620. Exhaustive briefs have been filed on behalf of all parties. I will not consider, unless there be an appeal taken, of which I desire to be notified at once, the cases cited, but will merely express generally the reasons which have induced me to come to the conclusion I have. So far as the Logan Trust Company's claim against the income accruing to Daniel Runkle and Mary Runkle Helberg is concerned, the case is now in such a position that the Logan Trust Company is asking affirmative relief against Daniel Runkle and Mary Runkle Helberg. Their liability is collateral to that of the principal debtor, Harry G. Runkle. Having already found that the obligation cannot be enforced as against Harry G. Runkle to the extent of $7,300, it follows that it cannot be enforced to the same extent against Daniel Runkle and Mary Runkle Helberg. It is not denied that the law is such that sureties may set up the defense of usury. The claim of the Logan Trust Company against the interests of Daniel Runkle and Mary Runkle Helberg will therefore be denied. The casualty company is a guarantor of Harry G. Runkle, the principal debtor. Its assignment is of the same fund of which the Logan Trust Company holds an assignment. To direct the fund to be paid to the casualty company would be, in fact, to turn it over to the Logan Trust Company, which this court has already refused to do. To segregate the fund and hold up its distribution until it may be determined whether the Logan Trust Company has a claim against the casualty company is, in the nature of things, impossible. Substantially the court is administering the affairs of an insolvent estate, although not so in form. If suit should be brought by the Logan Trust Company against the casualty company, the defense of usury is available to the casualty company, but aside from this it appears to me that the Logan Trust Company has submitted to the jurisdiction of this court, and there was necessarily included in my finding that it could not recover the $7,300 usury, a determination that there was justly and equitably due upon its claim the sum for which I held it to be a valid claim, and that, all parties being before the court, that determination is res adjudicata upon any right that the trust company may have against the casualty company.

I will therefore deny the application of the casualty company for the payment to it, or to withhold distribution until its rights may be determined in some other forum.

If an appeal is to be taken, I desire to be notified at once, so that more formal conclusions may be filed.

In re HOLMAN.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. July 29, 1918.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS — 34—VALIDITY OF PROHIBITION ELECTION — NONRESIDENT ELECTORS.

A special election on the question of prohibition, under Act Jan. 29, 1918 (P. L. p. 14), will be set aside, where Act Feb. 28, 1918 (P. L. p. 437) §§ 4-6, 9, passed in conformity to the constitutional mandate allowing electors engaged in the military service outside of the election district to vote, was not complied with, and the number of such disfranchised electors was sufficient to have changed the result; the right to vote being an inherent one.

Petition by George W. Holman, Jr., to contest the validity of a special election in Dover township, Ocean county, under Act Jan. 29, 1918 (P. L. p. 14). Election set aside.

Argued before KALISCH, J., sitting alone pursuant to the statute.

Berry & Riggins, of Toms River, for petitioner. William Howard Jeffrey, of Toms River, opposed.

KALISCH, J. A special election was held on Tuesday, May 28, 1918, in the township of Dover, in the county of Ocean, in this state, under chapter 2 of the Laws of 1918, on the question whether the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage shall or shall not be prohibited. The result of the election, as announced, was 291 votes for and 275 votes against prohibiting such sale, thus making a majority of 16 votes in favor of prohibition.

The admitted facts, presented by a stipulation, in writing, entered into by counsel of the respective parties in the case, are, that on the date of the special election, and more than 20 days prior thereto there were 43 qualified electors of the township in active service in the military forces of the United States, and who were absent from their respective election districts; that out of these 43 qualified electors, as appears from a list attached to the stipulation, there were 34 within the United States, with their military addresses obtainable upon due inquiry; that, out of these 34, 18 were distributed among the camps and coast guard stations within the state of New Jersey; that no sample ballots were mailed to any of the absent qualified electors; that no registry lists were posted in the respective election districts of the township prior to said special election; that the township clerk did not mail to the qualified electors of the township, in the military service of the United States any statement of the proposition to be voted upon at such special election or any notice of, or information concerning said election; that none of the qualified electors of the township in the active military service of the United States, who were absent from their respective election districts on the day of said election voted thereat. From the testimony taken, under an order made by me in the cause, it appears, and I do find, that the secretary of state did not, at least 20 days prior to the said special election or at any other time, forward to the clerk of Dover township, in Ocean county, the names and addresses of the qualified electors in the military forces of the United States, residing within the limits of the township, as required by section 5 of the act of 1918 (Act Feb. 28, 1918 [P. L. p. 439]).

It further appears from the testimony, and I do find, that no attempt was made by the secretary of state to obtain the names and post office addresses of the qualified electors of the state, in the military service of the United States, residing in the township of Dover, from the Adjutant General of the United States or other proper authority of the United States. It further appears from the testimony, and I do find, that there is no record, either in the office of the secretary of state or in the office of the adjutant general of New Jersey, of any application made by the secretary of state to the adjutant general for the names and post office addresses of the qualified electors in the military service of the United States, residing within the township of Dover.

There is, however, testimony to the effect that the office of the secretary of state was advised by the department of the adjutant general of this state that it was impossible for the latter to furnish any list of names and military addresses of the soldiers and sailors of the state of New Jersey. But I think it is wholly unimportant whether or not the failure of the secretary of state or of the adjutant general to comply with the provisions of the statute was due to their willfulness or neglect, or of either of them, or because of the impracticability of carrying the statutory behests into execution, so long as it appears that the qualified electors were deprived of their right to vote at the election and were sufficient in number to have changed the result, if they had been afforded an opportunity to cast their votes and had voted against prohibition. I find further as a fact that the secretary of state made no attempt to comply with section 6 of the act, which requires him to send to each of such qualified voters either a printed copy of this act or printed directions for voting and sending therewith a ballot, etc.

In view of the fact that section 9 of the act permits a qualified voter, in the military forces of this state or of the United States, to vote by an unofficial ballot, I am not prepared to say that, if this had been a general election, a failure of compliance with sections 4, 5, and 6 would be sufficient to justify setting aside the result accomplished at such election, even though it appeared that the qualified absent electors, if they had voted, would have changed the result. The reason for this view is founded upon a marked difference which exists between a general and special election. The day for holding a general election is fixed and certain. It is a legal holiday, and it is fair to presume that every person of intelligence has knowledge of it. It is the duty of every good citizen to vote, but he is not compellable to do so. It is a right which he is free to exercise or not. The absent soldier is afforded an opportunity to acquire the necessary information, by applying to the proper sources, as to who the candidates are, or the questions to be voted on, or how he may properly register his vote, at the election, before the day of election arrives. As has been said, section 9 permits the absent soldier to cast an unofficial ballot. Thus it is to be observed that he is at least afforded an opportunity to cast his vote. But this cannot be properly said in the case of a special election, for he has no means of knowing when such election is to take place, unless he receives actual notice. It is plain that, if he receives no such notice, he is practically deprived of the opportunity and right to vote.

It is argued that the right to vote is not an inherent right. As a general proposition, I think it is manifestly unsound, for it is clear that the citizens of a democracy have an inherent right to a voice in their government and to participate in the selection and election of those to be intrusted with the administration of their governmental affairs, and to make laws to govern themselves. This inherent right can only be exercised through the ballot, or by like means, in order to express the popular will. The right to vote inheres in citizenship. The common law did not create the right to vote. The right pre-existed the common law. It is only necessary to point to both sacred and profane history for confirmation of this statement. The common law of England fostered class distinctions, and only recognized the right of local self-government in a certain class of citizens; e. g., such as is accorded to the citizens of London to participate in the governmental affairs of their municipality, granted by charter, and as an ancient and sanctioned prerogative. The common law of England is impotent to serve as a safe guide in the matter of the suffrage of citizens, in a government of and by the people. But, whatever may be the state or condition of peoples living under different forms of government from ours, the question of the inherent right of a citizen to vote in a democracy cannot be an open one here. Now, it is to be observed that the federal Constitution does not create or confer the right to vote, but guarantees that right, and recognizes such right to exist in every male citizen of the United States who has arrived at the age of 21 years. Our state Constitution likewise does not create or confer the right to vote, but, like the federal Constitution, guarantees it and limits the right to vote to male citizens of the United States who have attained the age of 21 years, and who have resided in this state for 1 year, and in the county in which he claims his vote for 5 months, next before the election. Our Constitution further declares:

"That in time of war, no elector in the actual military service of the state or the United States, in the army or navy thereof, shall be deprived of his [right to] vote by reason of his absence from such election district; and the Legislature shall have power to provide the manner in which, and the time and place at which, such absent electors may vote, and for the return and canvass of their votes, in the election districts in which they respectively reside." Const. art. 2, par. 1.

The Legislature, in conformity to the constitutional mandate, passed such laws. The evidence before me shows that they were not complied with. I am not prepared to hold that the provisions of the statute are mandatory, in that a failure to observe them would have the effect of vitiating the election, irrespective of the fact whether or not the disfranchised vote, if voted, would have changed the result.

I find as a fact that a sufficient number of qualified electors were absent from the township of Dover, in the county of Ocean, who were in the military forces of this state and of the United States, and that in violation of the Constitution of this state, and the provisions of the statute, they were deprived of their votes, at the special election held in the township, which votes, if cast against prohibition, would have changed the result of the election, and therefore the election must be set aside.

(39 N. J. Eq. 205)

STEITZ v. OLD DOMINION COPPER MINING & SMELTING CO. et al.
(No. 44/164.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 28, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS ¶189(9)—SUIT BY STOCKHOLDER—INDISPENSABLE PARTIES—DISMISSAL.

Bill for rescission or accounting for profits by stockholder, alleging fraudulent confession of judgment by corporation and transfer of its property in satisfaction, and subsequent transfers, though not making ultimate transferee party, will not be dismissed, especially in view of chancery rule 13 (100 Atl. viii) as to determining controversy between parties before court or directing others to be brought in.

2. CORPORATIONS ¶189(11)—SUIT BY STOCKHOLDER—BILL—SHOWING RELATION.

Bill by stockholder sufficiently shows the relation by allegation that at a certain time he became holder of a certain per cent. of its stock; objection that he is not such a stockholder as should be permitted to maintain such a bill being matter of defense.

3. CORPORATIONS ¶665(3)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—INTERNAL AFFAIRS—INVESTIGATION BY COURT.

Bill based on allegation of fraud committed by officers and directors of corporation against its stockholders, and so not involving its internal affairs, is not open to objection that court should not investigate affairs and relations of foreign corporations at suit of nonresident as to property without the state.

4. CORPORATIONS ¶189(11)—SUIT BY STOCKHOLDER—BILL—SHOWING REASON.

Bill by stockholder of corporation, the organization of which has been abandoned, for rescission or accounting for profits of transfer of its property in satisfaction of judgment fraudulently confessed by it, held to show sufficient reason for suit by stockholder, instead of by corporation.

5. CORPORATIONS ¶189(6)—SUIT BY STOCKHOLDER—LACHES—BILL.

Allegation of bill by stockholder for rescission or accounting for profits of transfer by corporation of its property to satisfy judgment fraudulently confessed by it held sufficient to eliminate charge of laches, notwithstanding long delay.

6. DISCOVERY ¶6—IN EQUITY—DISMISSAL OF BILL—GROUNDS.

That a defendant, obviously having knowledge of some of the facts, may not have knowledge of all the facts of which the bill seeks discovery, is not ground for dismissing bill.

7. EQUITY ¶362—DISMISSAL OF BILL—GROUNDS.

It is no ground for dismissal of bill that the court would not appoint a receiver as prayed, that being only a portion of the relief prayed for.

Suit by Henry L. Steitz against the Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Company and others. Heard on motion of the named defendant to dismiss the bill of complaint. Motion denied.

Carlyle Garrison, of Jersey City, for complainant. Collins & Corbin, of Jersey City, and Dunbar, Nutter & McClennen, of Boston, Mass., for defendant Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co.

LEWIS, V. C. The complainant, in his bill, states that in 1913 he became the holder of the Old Dominion Copper Mining Company of New York, to the extent of about 2 per cent. This corporation apparently never did any business in New Jersey, and never owned any property therein, and its organization was abandoned in 1889. He alleges that this corporation was organized in 1880, and owned property in Arizona, and that in 1884 the company confessed judgment in favor of the copartnership of Cope, Cole & Co., of the state of Maryland, and that the claim on which the judgment was confessed had previously been paid in part and was without consideration, and that members of this partnership were directors of said New York company and concealed from the other directors this confession of judgment. He alleges that later in 1884, pursuant to the alleged consent of more than two-thirds in number and amount of the stockholders in the New York company, a mortgage was given and filed of record covering all the property of the New York company. He alleges that in 1886 all the property was sold to William Keyser, a partner in Cope, Cole & Co. to satisfy said confessed judgment. He alleges that in 1888 Keyser conveyed this property to the Old Dominion Copper Company of Baltimore, a Maryland corporation. He alleges that in 1895 the property was purchased by Leonard Lewisohn, of New York, and Albert S. Bigelow, of Boston, Mass., on behalf of the defendant Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Company, a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey, but owning no property in this state. He charges that the Maryland corporation and the New Jersey corporation took with knowledge of the earlier transaction. He alleges that the directors of the New Jersey corporation have passed a resolution by which they have authorized and directed that all of the property of the corporation be sold and transferred to the Old Dominion Company, a corporation organized in Maine, and that a meeting of the stockholders of the New Jersey corporation has been called to be held in Jersey City March 15, 1917, to act on this resolution of the directors.

The amended bill of complaint was filed in June, 1917, and does not negative the inference that the stockholders of the New Jersey corporation did vote to ratify the conveyance authorized by the directors, and the allegations of the bill do not negative the fact that the conveyance by the New Jersey company to the Maine company was made and executed, and the consideration for it paid and distributed, to stockholders of the New Jersey company before the original bill of complaint was filed. The bill of complaint does not allege that the complainant acquired his stock by operation of law, or that he paid any consideration therefor, but at the suggestion of the court, made on the oral argument, counsel for complainant has annexed to his brief, for the purpose of amending the bill, that the complainant entered the employ of one John Leighton, of New York City, who was interested in various enterprises at the time, in the early part of the year 1901; that he subsequently became actively associated in the business affairs of said Leighton, acting as his secretary and in a general confidential capacity up to the time of the death of said Leighton; that said Leighton, in the later years of his life, lost most of his money so that he could not pay complainant herein for services rendered, and in the year 1913 Leighton transferred to complainant the stock which the complainant now holds, as consideration in part for services heretofore rendered. Twenty-four years had therefore elapsed after the organization of the New York corporation was abandoned; and 29 years after the confession of judgment in 1884, which is claimed to be fraudulent, and the basis of the sale made in 1886, 27 years before the complainant became a stockholder.

The bill purports to make defendant the New York corporation, the Maryland corporation, the New Jersey corporation, and certain individuals, all nonresidents of New Jersey, claimed to be participants in the original transaction. It does not purport to make the Maine corporation a defendant. The bill prays a discovery from all the respondents as to the original transaction, and as to the property which was the subject of that transaction in which, on the allegations of the bill, many of the respondents took no part. The bill seeks a rescission of that transaction, or an accounting of the resultant profits.

Counsel for the defendant Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Company, ask that the bill be dismissed for the following reasons: First. There is a fatal absence of indispensable parties defendant. Second. The complainant does not show himself to be such a stockholder as should be permitted to maintain such a bill of complaint. Third. This court should not undertake an investigation of this kind into the affairs and relations of foreign corporations at the suit of a nonresident as to property not within the state. Fourth. There has been no sufficient effort to have the New York corporation sue for the wrong, if any, done to it, and no sufficient excuse for not making that effort. Fifth. The delay of over 25 years by the New York corporation, and by its officers, directors, and stockholders, has not been sufficiently excused or accounted for. Sixth. The discovery sought from the New Jersey corporation is of matters occurring before it was organized, and in which it took no part. Seventh. No sufficient ground is alleged on which to base an appointment of a receiver of the New York corporation by a New Jersey court.

[1] The matter is to be determined, of course, upon the allegations in the bill. As to the first objection: Upon the circumstances alleged in the bill I do not find a fatal absence of indispensable parties, especially in view of chancery rule 13 (100 Atl. viii). See also, Wilson v. Palace Car Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 534, 54 Atl. 415, 65 N. J. Eq. 730, 55 Atl. 997, and 67 N. J. Eq. 262, 58 Atl. 195.

[2] As to the second objection: It sufficiently appears on the face of the bill that complainant is a stockholder. The defendant's objection are matters of defense.

[3] As to the third objection: I can see no merit in it. The matters involved in the bill are not internal affairs of a corporation, but are matters based on allegations of fraud committed by officers and directors of a corporation against the stockholders thereof.

[4] As to the fourth objection: The allegations of the bill, if true (and on this motion they must be assumed to be true), show sufficient reason for suit by a stockholder, instead of the corporation itself.

[5] As to the fifth objection: The allegations of the bill are sufficient on the face thereof to eliminate the charge of laches, which might, perhaps, otherwise be inferred from the long delay.

[6] As to the sixth objection: Obviously the defendant must have within its knowledge, possession, or control, some of the facts of which discovery is sought, as specified in the complainant's bill. The fact that it may not have knowledge or possession of all the information of which discovery is sought by complainant in his bill is, of course, no ground for dismissal of the bill.

[7] As to the seventh objection: The appointment of a receiver is only one portion of the relief prayed for by complainant. Even assuming that this court would not appoint the receiver, as prayed for, that in itself is no ground for dismissal of the bill. The only application before me is for the dismissal of the bill, and, in my opinion, the allegations set forth in the bill are sufficient to maintain it upon this motion.

I will therefore advise an order denying the motion, and directing, under chancery rule 67 (100 Atl. xii), that it stand over until the hearing.

(30 N. J. Eq. 177)

U. S. INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL CO. v. DISTILLING CO. OF AMERICA et al.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE ¶73 — PRESUMPTIONS — CORPORATE ACTS.

Where power had been conferred upon a corporation to guarantee payment of dividends on stock of other corporations for the purposes of its own business, and such corporation guaranteed payment of dividends on certain stock, it will be presumed that it did so for purposes of its own business.

2. CORPORATIONS ¶388(2) — ULTRA VIRES CONTRACT—ESTOPPEL.

Where a corporation received a good and valuable consideration for contract into which it entered, it will not be permitted to set up lack of power to make the contract, and thus defraud the other contracting party.

3. CORPORATIONS ¶387(3) — ULTRA VIRES ACTS—WHO MAY CHALLENGE.

If ratification of a contract of a corporation by the stockholders was necessary, the stockholders are the only parties who can raise the question, and the corporation cannot.

4. EQUITY ¶141(1) — BILL — SUFFICIENCY — CONTRACTS—CONSIDERATION.

Where a contract sued on was set out in a bill, and stated a valuable consideration, it cannot be maintained that the bill did not show that the contract was supported by a valuable consideration.

5. CORPORATIONS ¶610(1)—VOLUNTARY DISSOLUTION—EFFECT OF EXISTING GUARANTY.

A corporate contract, guaranteeing payment of dividends on stock of another corporation and providing that no voluntary dissolution should affect the guaranty, did not strip the corporation of power to voluntarily dissolve, but only required it to make reasonable provision for the protection of the guaranty.

6. CORPORATIONS ¶620—VOLUNTARY DISSOLUTION—INJUNCTION.

Where a corporation guaranteed payment of dividends by another corporation, equity will grant an injunction against a voluntary dissolution until a provision is made to protect the guaranty.

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Bill by the U. S. Industrial Alcohol Company against the Distilling Company of America and others. From a decree denying the application of the defendants for an order dismissing the bill of complaint, and granting a preliminary injunction (87 N. J. Eq. 531, 100 Atl. (20), defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Richard V. Landabury, of Newark, and Levy Mayer, of Chicago, Ill., for appellants. John R. Hardin, of Newark, and Adrian H. Larkin, of New York City, for appellee.

GUMMERE, C. J. This is an appeal from a decree advised by Vice Chancellor Lane, denying the application of the defendants for an order dismissing the bill of complaint for want of equity, and granting a preliminary injunction restraining the defendants from completing statutory proceedings taken by them for the dissolution of the defendant, the Distilling Company of America, until the further order of the court. It appears by the bill that the complainant is the owner of 350 shares of the preferred capital stock of the Cuba Distilling Company; that in the year 1907 the Distilling Company of America entered into an agreement with the Cuba Company and a corporation known as the Matanzas Railway & Warehouse Company, which, after reciting that the Cuba Company had an authorized preferred capital stock of 25,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, of which 10,000 shares had been actually issued, and 15,000 shares were about to be issued, agreed that it, the Distilling Company of America, would guarantee to the then present and all future holders of all or any part of said 25,000 shares of Cuba preferred, so long as the same should be issued and outstanding, not exceeding the period of 50 years, quarterly dividends on said Cuba stock at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum; that the said guaranty should be irrevocable, and that no voluntary or involuntary dissolution, or merger or consolidation of the Cuba Company, or of the Distilling Company of America, should, except by and with the written consent of the holders of record of all of said preferred stock outstanding at the time, release, discharge, modify, or affect the guaranty in any way; and that said guaranty should be printed or engraved on all certificates of such Cuba preferred stock on the issuance thereof. The bill further alleges that in November, 1916, the Distilling Company of America instituted statutory proceedings looking to its dissolution, without making any provision for the protection of the rights of the holders of the Cuba preferred stock.

[1, 2] The order appealed from is attacked upon several grounds. First, it is contended that the bill should have been dismissed for want of equity, because there appears to be no authority vested in the defendant company to guarantee the payment of dividends on Cuba preferred stock. It appears in the defendant's certificate of incorporation that there had been conferred upon it the right to guarantee and secure the payment or satisfaction of dividends on shares of stock of other corporations, providing it does so for the purposes of its own business, or any part thereof. The argument upon this point submitted on behalf of the appellants is that the bill fails to disclose that the guaranty in the present case was for the purposes of the business of the Distilling Company, or any part thereof. This argument seems to us to be unsound. Where a power is conferred upon a corporation to be exercised under certain conditions, and it exercises that power, the presumption is that it exercises it legally, and not in violation of law; for to hold the act illegal, in the absence of any affirmative allegation, would be to declare that the corporation had perpetrated a fraud upon the statute, as well as upon the other contracting party. Moreover, the contract of guaranty expressly declares that it is made "for good and valuable consideration, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged," and, even if it be conceded that this guaranty was ultra vires, the Distilling Company cannot now take advantage of its wrongful act. It has obtained the benefit of its contract, it has received a good and valuable consideration for it, and in such a situation it will not be permitted to set up lack of power to make the contract, and thus defraud the other contracting party. Camden & Atlantic R. Co. v. May's Landing, etc., R. R. Co., 48 N. J. Law, 530, 7 Atl. 523.

[3] It is further argued that the bill should have been dismissed because it does not appear that the stockholders of the Distilling Company approved the contract of guaranty. The bill itself shows, we think, by necessary inference, that this contract received the approval of at least 80 per cent. of the stockholders at the annual meeting held next after the making of the contract. But whether it did receive such approval or not seems immaterial. The contract was a valid one, so far as the bill shows, made for a good and valuable consideration, and within the power of the directors to make. It consequently required no ratification by the stockholders. Moreover, if such ratification was necessary, the only parties who can now raise the question are the stockholders who did not approve the contract, and they are none of them here challenging its legality.

[4] Next, it is said that it does not appear on the face of the bill that this contract of guarantee was for a valuable consideration. This assertion, however, is contrary to the fact. The contract itself is set out at length in the bill; it expressly recites that the Distilling Company received a good and valuable consideration for the guaranty, and that admission on its part justified the Court of Chancery in so declaring.

[5, 6] The principal ground of attack, however, made upon the complainant's bill, is that by the provision in the contract that no voluntary or involuntary dissolution or merger or consolidation of the Distilling Company should release, discharge, modify, or affect the guaranty in any way, the Distilling Company stripped itself of a power conferred upon it by the statute (that is, the power to voluntarily dissolve), and that the public policy of the state makes such an agreement void. It may be conceded that a corporation organized under our laws cannot bargain away any of the franchises or powers conferred upon it by the Legislature for its own selfish purposes, and in derogation of the sovereign right. But we do not think this is the legal effect of the provision of the contract now under consideration. The power of the Distilling Company to voluntarily dissolve is left intact; but when it exercises this power it is under a valid obligation to make reasonable provision for the protection of the holders of its guaranty, so that such guaranty shall not be injuriously affected by the act of dissolution. This the bill shows the appellant failed to do, and such failure is an irreparable injury which equity will protect against. What method the Distilling Company should adopt is a matter with which the court is not now concerned, provided that the method, when adopted, will afford full protection to the holders of the guaranty. It may be that the latter will assent to a scheme suggested by the Distilling Company, and, if so, such assent will be accepted, normally, by the court as a valid performance of the Distilling Company's contract. If a particular method is suggested which does not meet the approval of the holders of the guaranteed stock, it will then become a judicial question whether such method will be a complete performance of the contract of guaranty. But until some method is formulated, which receives the approval either of the holders of the guaranty or of the court, the Distilling Company may properly be restrained from completing its act of dissolution.

We conclude, therefore, that the motion to dismiss the bill was properly denied, and that the restraining order appealed from (it being in force only until the court shall otherwise order) should be affirmed.

(92 N. J. Law, 168)

ATLANTIC COAST ELECTRIC RY. CO.
v. BOARD OF PUBLIC UTILITY
COM'RS et al. (No. 68.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — 26 — GRANT OR LIMITATION OF POWER.

The Senate and General Assembly, in whom by our Constitution the legislative power is vested, must necessarily, as the representative of all the people of the state, be held to retain all the sovereign powers, except as far as they have by unmistakable language intrusted them to others.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 680, 681(1)
— CONTRACTS — STREET RAILWAY COMPANIES.

The traction acts of 1893 and 1896 (4 Comp. St. 1910, pp. 5021, 5040) do not expressly authorize municipalities to contract with street railway companies. The power is implied from the power to grant or refuse consent to a location of tracks, and to impose lawful restrictions. The implication of power ought not to be extended beyond the necessities of the case.

3. CARRIERS — 12(9) — RATES — REGULA-TION — STREET RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Full effect can be given to the language of the traction acts of 1893 and 1896 by holding that the force and effect of a contract under section 32 of the act of 1893 is the force and effect of a contract by which the municipality and the railway company—the only parties thereto—are bound, but that no restriction is thereby implied on the sovereign power of the state to fix just and reasonable rates, as subsequent conditions may make desirable.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 682(4) —
STREET RAILWAYS—RESTRICTIONS.

The power of a municipality to impose lawful restrictions upon granting consent to the location of tracks of a street railway is subject to the condition that they be reasonable.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 682(4) —
STREET RAILWAYS—RESTRICTIONS.

The lawful restrictions that may be imposed upon granting consent to the location of tracks of a street railway must be lawful not only at the time, but from time to time; that is, at all times.

6. REGULATION OF RATES—POWER OF UTIL-ITIES COMMISSION.

The order of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners in the present case is justified by the Public Utilities Act of 1911 (Act April 21, 1911 [P. L. p. 374]).

Walker, Ch., and White, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Certiorari on the application of the Atlantic Coast Electric Railway Company to review an order of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners as to rates in the borough of Bradley Beach. The order was set aside (89 N. J. Law, 407, 99 Atl. 395), and defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. Edward Herrmann, of Jersey City, for appellant Public Utility Com'rs. Robert H. McCarter, of Newark (Durand, Ivins & Carton, of Asbury Park, on the brief), for appellee.

SWAYZE J. [1] The question is whether the ordinance of Bradley Beach and its acceptance by the street railway company made a contract which the state of New Jersey could not thereafter control, for, unless the state was deprived of its control by the act of the municipality, the Board of Public Utility Commissioners is free to act under authority of the act of 1911 by which it was created. The grant of power is strictly construed in favor of the state just as all grants of corporate power are strictly construed. Meday v. Rutherford, 65 N. J. Law, 645, 48 Atl. 529. The Senate and General Assembly, in whom by our Constitution the legislative power is vested, must necessarily, as the representative of all the people of the state, be held to retain all sovereign powers, except as far as they have by unmistakable language intrusted them to others. Our Constitution does not, like the Constitutions of some states, confer upon municipalities the right to grant street franchises. We have been careful to keep the sovereignty of the state unimpaired, and have not parceled out the sovereign powers among minor political subdivisions. Municipalities with us act solely by virtue of legislative authority and as legislative agents. The Legislature may intrust to municipal corporations, or even, as in the case of eminent domain, to private corporations, certain powers, and may even authorize them to make irrevocable contracts; but the courts ought to be, as they have been, astute to see that such powers are not unnecessarily extended by implication.

[2] The powers of municipalities in the granting of franchises to street railways are to be found in the traction act of 1893 (C. S. 5021) and the act of 1896 (C. S. 5040). They are limited to giving consent to the construction, operation, and maintenance of the street railway, the location of tracks, and imposing lawful restrictions.

The peculiar language of the acts is noteworthy. They nowhere expressly authorize the municipality to contract; they nowhere declare that the consent and acceptance constitute a contract. Section 32 merely declares that the consent and acceptance shall have the "force and effect" of a contract. This language would be unnecessary, if the consent and acceptance were in fact a contract, in the full sense of the word, for a contract necessarily has such force and effect. It must be because the consent and acceptance are in the nature of municipal legislation, rather than of private agreement, that the Legislature thought it necessary to add that they should have the force and effect of a contract. We must, indeed, attribute to the words all the meaning that the Legislature meant to attach thereto; but the question is what force and effect was meant, since they are clearly subject to some limitation. The consent and acceptance are surely subject to the taxing power and the police power of the state. No one would suggest that the power to consent and impose lawful restrictions upon the street railway company could be so exercised as to deprive the state government of its general control over the highways in which the rails are laid, including the power to vacate, to regulate speed of vehicles, to enact a law of the road, to give fire apparatus the right of way, to transfer control to county boards or to the state, instead of the municipality, and to determine as to other matters of police. Northern Pacific Railway v. Duluth, 206 U. S. 583, 28 Sup. Ct. 341, 52 L. Ed. 630, and cases there cited. So, also, it is quite inconceivable that the municipality could, by its ordinance granting consent, make provisions that would limit the taxing power of the state, whether by granting exemption from local taxes or by special contract as to amount or method of assessment. To that extent, surely, the ordinance could not have the force and effect of a contract. To what extent does the ordinance limit the other sovereign power of controlling rates of public utility companies?

It is well settled that a power to fix rates may be delegated to the municipality, and that rates so fixed may amount to an irrevocable contract, binding future Legislatures. The leading cases are cited by the Supreme Court. But, as was said in Home Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 273, 29 Sup. Ct. 50, 52 (53 L. Ed. 176):

"For the very reason that such a contract has the effect of extinguishing pro tanto an undoubted power of government, both its existence and the authority to make it must clearly and unmistakably appear, and all doubts must be resolved in favor of the continuance of the power."

In that case the city charter gave power to regulate telephone services and the use of telephones within the city, and to fix and determine the charges for telephones and telephone service and connection. This as the court said, is "ample authority to exercise the governmental power of regulating charges, but it is no authority to enter into a contract to abandon the governmental power itself. It speaks in words appropriate to describe the authority to exercise the governmental power, but entirely unfitted to describe the authority to contract. It authorizes command, but not agreement." And the court made a distinction between an ordinance "to fix and determine the charges" and an ordinance to "agree" upon the charges. In that case, the franchise had been sold by the municipality under statutory authority for a valuable consideration, and an ordinance had been passed granting the franchise and providing that the charges for service should not exceed specific amounts. Afterward the city passed an ordinance establishing lower rates. The later ordinance was held valid. Here the subsequent action was by municipal ordinance. In a later case, the subsequent action was by a state board. Milwaukee Electric Railway v. Wisconsin R. R. Comm., 238 U. S. 174, 35 Sup. Ct. 320, 59 L. Ed. 1254. In that case the power of the municipality under the act of the Legislature was to "grant" the rights to street railways to use the streets upon such terms as the proper authorities should determine. The ordinance authorized the street railway company to charge a fare not to exceed 5 cents and required the sale of 25 5-cent tickets for a dollar. Later an order of the Wisconsin Railroad Commission required the sale of 13 tickets for 50 cents. The order was held valid. The opinions in these cases review the earlier precedents upon which our Supreme Court relied in the present case, and show that those precedents arose under an express power to contract, or under statutes which ratified the municipal action and in effect made it the action of the Legislature itself. There is no such statute in New Jersey. Since the ultimate decision in cases where a claim is made to an irrevocable contract must rest with the United States Supreme Court, we must follow their decisions.

[3, 4] There is, as we have already said, no express grant of power to the municipality to fix rates or to contract as to rates. The power is implied from the power to grant or refuse consent to a location of tracks and to impose lawful restrictions. Jersey City & Hoboken Horse R. Co. v. Jersey City & Bergen R. Co., 21 N. J. Eq. 550; Jersey City v. Jersey City & Bergen Railway Co., 70 N. J. Law, 360, 57 Atl. 445. Neither in section 1 nor section 7 of the act of 1893, nor in the act of 1896, is there any mention of a contract; nor does the title of the ordinance granting consent indicate an intention to contract as to rates of fare, or even to impose lawful restrictions. It purports only to grant consent to the construction, operation and maintenance of a new line of street railway, a location of the route, and a location of the tracks and rails. Since the power to contract as to fares is only an implied power, the implication ought not to be extended so as to restrict the sovereign power of the state, unless we are compelled to that result by the necessity of giving meaning to the words "force and effect of a contract." Such a result is not necessary. Full effect can be given to the language by holding that the force and effect of a contract given by section 32 is the force and effect of a contract by which the municipality and the railway company—the only parties thereto—are bound, but that no restriction is thereby implied on the sovereign powers of the state, whether to fix just and reasonable rates as subsequent conditions may make desirable, or to exercise the taxing power or the police power. As between the parties, the consent and acceptance have force and effect as a contract, as was held in Reed v. Inhabitants of Trenton, 80 N. J. Eq. 506, 85 Atl. 270, and in Asbury Park Street Railroad Co. v. Township of Neptune, 75 N. J. Eq. 562, 74 Atl. 998; but it is a contract subject to the state's sovereign power over rates, and when, as in this case, the state, through its Board of Public Utility Commissioners, exercises its sovereign power over rates, the contract rights of the parties must yield. This gives the municipal action the force and effect of a contract, but not the force and effect of an irrevocable contract.

Even the implied power of the municipality to contract is under the statute limited. It is implied from the power to impose restrictions, but the statute requires that the restrictions be lawful, and they must, like all provisions of municipal ordinances, be reasonable. Rutherford v. Hudson River Traction Co., 73 N. J. Law, 227, 69 Atl. 84. It would not be reasonable for a municipality, without express power for the purpose, to tie the hands of the state forever.

Not only must the restrictions be reasonable; they must be lawful. The word "lawful" may mean lawful at the time of the consent and acceptance, or lawful from time to time, and at the time the controversy arises. If we adopt the former meaning, the word at the date of the ordinance in 1897, as applied to rates, meant just and reasonable rates as at common law, and that meant just and reasonable rates from time to time, as cost of service and other circumstances vary; the power to fix unchangeable or unreasonable rates could not be implied from the words "lawful restrictions." But it is the latter meaning that had become the settled one in the United States Supreme Court before 1897, the date of the ordinance now before us. In Ruggles v. Illinois (1883) 108 U. S. 526, 2 Sup. Ct. 832, 27 L. Ed. 812, the railroad company was authorized to pass by-laws regulating the affairs, business, and interest of the company, provided they were not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States or the state of Illinois. Rates of fare had been fixed pursuant to the by-laws. The question arose in a case involving the legality of a passenger fare. The court said:

"Clearly under this authority no by-law can be established by the directors that does not conform to the laws of the state, and this, whether the laws were in force when the amended charter was granted or came into operation afterwards. The power of the company for the regulation of its own affairs was thus in express terms subjected to the legislative control of the state. The corporate power was a continuing one and intended for the ordering of the affairs of the company as circumstances might from time to time require. The reserved control by the state was also continuing in its nature, and manifestly intended for the protection of the public whenever in the judgment of the legislative department of the government the necessity should arise."

[5] This rule has been applied in the Railroad Commission Cases (1886) 116 U. S. 307, 6 Sup. Ct. 334, 388, 1191, 29 L. Ed. 636, and recently, in Owenboro v. Owenboro Water-works Co. (1908) 191 U. S. 358, 370, 24 Sup. Ct. 82, 48 L. Ed. 217. In Freeport Water Co. v. Freeport City (1901) 180 U. S. 587, 600, 21 Sup. Ct. 493, 45 L. Ed. 679, it was held that a statute authorizing a contract between a city and a water company for water at such rates "as may be fixed by ordinance" meant "as may be fixed by ordinance from time to time," and not as may be fixed by ordinance at the date of the contract. In the most recent case it was held that a proviso that rules for the management and operation of lines of a street railway company "shall not conflict with the laws of the state," by fair construction, means the laws as they shall from time to time exist. Puget Sound Traction Co. v. Reynolds (1917) 244 U. S. 574, 37 Sup. Ct. 705, 61 L. Ed. 1325. Following this rule of construction, the lawful restrictions authorized by the traction act of 1898 must be lawful from time to time, that is, at all times, and hence at the present time; from which it follows that they must not be in conflict with the Public Utilities Act of 1911.

We can test our result in another way. What was lawful in 1897 was just and reasonable rates and practices. It would be absurd to contend that the municipality and the railroad company, under the power to impose lawful restrictions, could have fixed by their agreement unjust and unreasonable rates and practices; we must assume that the rates and practices then fixed were at the time just and reasonable. But it can hardly be that with changing circumstances those rates and practices would forever remain just and reasonable. We are admonished by present-day conditions that the higher level of prices and wages may have made old rates unreasonably low, and the constant progress in invention and in business management may have made old practices unjust to the public. And if the rates become unreasonable and the practices unjust, they would cease to be lawful. Unchangeable rates and practices are almost certain to become unlawful. The Legislature did not in this respect change the law by the Public Utilities Act of 1911. That act only authorizes just and reasonable rates and practices. It puts into statutory form what was in 1897 and always has been lawful, and intrusts the execution of the act to the new board. It follows that there is no impairment of the contract for lawful restrictions, which is all the traction act authorizes.

To avoid possible misunderstanding, we add, what is probably plain enough, that our view does not affect contracts made by the Legislature itself, or by any individual or corporation which has power to make them. We are in this case dealing only with the extent of the power given to the municipality, and we hold that the power is not broad enough to justify the municipality in restricting the sovereign power of the state over rates to be charged by public utilities.

[8] It remains only to consider whether the Public Utilities Act of 1911 warrants the order made by the board. The scope of that act is very broad. It is evidently meant to give full control of all public utilities to the board thereby created, so far as it could be done by legislation. The board is given general supervision and regulation of and control over public utilities and over their property, property rights, equipment, facilities, and franchises, so far as necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. The commission is given power, among other things, to fix just and reasonable rates, to fix just and reasonable standards, classifications, regulations, practices, measurements, or service, and to require railroads and street railways to establish and maintain just and reasonable connections with other lines. These powers are quite enough to justify the present order, whether it is regarded as a regulation of practices or fares.

The judgment setting it aside must be reversed, with costs.

WHITE, J. (dissenting). I disagree with the view that the terms, under which was granted the public franchise here involved, were at the same time both a contract and not a contract; that such contract, while entered into by the municipality in pursuance of express legislative authority, from the state to have "the force and effect of a contract," although a valid and binding contract between the parties to it, viz. between the municipality and the trolley company, is not such a contract as is protected by the federal and state Constitutions. The municipality is a state agency, as is also the Public Utility Commission. If the franchise restrictions were binding, as a contract upon one agent they were as equally binding upon the other, because they were binding upon the principal of both. Without authority from such principal to contract, they were binding upon neither agent; with such authority, they were binding upon the principal, and consequently upon both agents. To concede that they were binding as a contract upon one agent is, it seems to me, to concede that they are binding upon the principal and upon both the agents.

It is suggested that this is not so, because the subject-matter of the contract is subject to the state's sovereign police and taxing power. I think that the doctrine that contractual property rights, which are subject to the state's police power and taxing power, and, I might add, to the power of eminent domain, are, because of this, not protected from confiscation, is both novel and unsound.

It is further said that the fact that the act provided that the restrictions imposed by the municipality, if accepted by the trolley company, should have the "force and effect of a contract," shows that they were not in fact a contract, because, if they were, it would not have been necessary to give them the force and effect of a contract. I take the contrary view. It seems to me that, in order to invite the investment of capital in public transportation, by giving it something definite to rely upon, and to negative the idea that the terms agreed upon were merely temporary regulations, subject to change from time to time at municipal or state legislative whim, the state authorized the municipality to put them in the shape of an inviolable contract.

Again, if it be true that these terms, proposed by the municipality and accepted by the trolley company, as to the rate of fare to be charged, do not constitute a contract, then they may be changed by the state, or by any other of its duly authorized agencies without the consent of the municipality, which exacted the terms for the protection of its own people traveling upon its own streets. If, on the contrary, they constitute a contract, it seems to me that contract was made by an agency of the state having, and recognized by the state at the time as having, an interest in the subject-matter of the contract, and that therefore, under the well-recognized rule as to other agents, the contract cannot be altered by the state without the consent of the interested municipality.

For the above reasons, and for those expressed in the opinion of Mr. Justice Trenchard, speaking for himself and for the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Black, in the Supreme Court, with which reasons I agree, I vote to affirm the judgment of that court.

I am requested by Chancellor WALKER to say that he concurs in the foregoing views.

(80 N. J. Eq. 173)

In re HEDENBERG'S ESTATE.

(Prerogative Court of New Jersey. June 21, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

TAXATION \Leftrightarrow 886½.—TRANSFER INHERITANCE TAXES—ASSESSMENTS.

Testator bequeathed part of his estate to his sister, who predeceased him, leaving a son and daughter who survived the testator. Held, that the transfer inheritance tax is imposed upon the direct succession of the nephew and niece at the rate of 5 per centum, and not upon the bequest to the deceased sister, subject to exemption and a reduced rate.

In the matter of the assessment of an inheritance tax on the estate of Jesse Charles Hedenberg, deceased. On appeal from the assessment. Affirmed.

James Gillin, of New York City, for appellant. Herbert W. Boggs, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BACKES, Vice Ordinary. The decedent by his will gave the residue of his estate to his four brothers and sisters in equal shares. One of the sisters predeceased him, leaving a son and daughter, who survived the testator and took one-quarter of the estate, appraised by the comptroller at $9,084.13. Upon the several successions of the nephew and niece of $4,542.07, an inheritance tax was levied at 5 per cent., $227.10. From these assessments, the executor appeals, contending that the legacy should have been treated as a bequest to the testator's sister, and that the tax should have been levied upon the successions as though the sister had survived the testator, viz. by first allowing a sister's exemption of $5,000, and taxing the balance of $4,084.13 at the rate of 2 per cent., $81.68.

The beneficiaries acquired the estate by virtue of the testator's will, supplemented by section 22 of the "Act Concerning Wills" (Comp. St. p. 5866), which provides, amongst other things, that a devise or bequest to a brother or sister dying in the lifetime of the testator, leaving children surviving the testator, shall not lapse, but the estate so devised or bequeathed shall vest in such children "in the same manner as if such legatee or devisee had survived the testator or testatrix, and had died intestate."

The transfer inheritance tax (Comp. Stat. p. 5301), as amended in 1914 (P. L. p. 267), imposes a tax of 5 per cent. upon the clear market value of property transferred by the will of a resident decedent. In case the transfer is to a sister, an exemption of $5,000 is allowed, and the rate is cut to 2 per cent. on the excess.

The argument in support of the proposition that the legacy should be treated as a bequest to the testator's sister is rested mainly upon the construction placed upon the statute in Denise v. Denise, 37 N. J. Eq. 163, where the question presented was "whether the person whom our statute, in such an event as that which has happened in this case, puts in the place of the legatee named in the will takes subject to the debts of the primary legatee to the testator's estate." In holding that the funds of the estate should not be impaired, and that the legacy was to be treated as though the legatee named in the will had not died, Vice Chancellor Van Fleet says:

"The statute-made legatee is a mere substitute; he is thrust, by force of the statute, in the place made vacant by the death of the legatee named in the will, and is given what, but for his death, would have gone to the primary legatee. He takes the primary legatee's place, as a beneficiary under the will, and should, according to the ordinary rule prevailing in like cases, bear his burdens, and be subject to the equities which would have existed against him. * * * Statutes must always be construed so as to give effect to the intent and object of the Legislature, and this one, I think, must be so read as to cure the mischief it was intended to remedy; that is, it should be held to put the substituted legatee in the place of his parent, and to give him just what his parent would have been entitled to, subject to the same equities that his parent would have been subject to, and bound by the same rules of justice that his parent would have been bound by. He must take in the same manner that his parent would have taken."

In the later case of Suydam v. Voorhees, 58 N. J. Eq. 157, 43 Atl. 4, which involves the question whether the substituted legatee took the bequest charged with the debts of the testamentary legatee, Vice Chancellor Reed pointed out that the rule in the Denise Case applies only as between the estate and the statutory legatee, and, commenting upon the language above quoted, says:

"The last sentence contains the pith of the rule as between the testator and the statutory legatee. The latter takes what the testamentary legatee would have taken. It does not mean that the deceased legatee takes an interest in the legacy which passes through him to his child, and which, in passing, is liable to be seized upon by the creditors or the personal representatives of the father. Such a meaning would be contrary to the words of the act. Under the statute there is no vesting in the father for an instant. The legacy, which would have vested in the father had he lived, is by the statute vested in the first instance in the son. In respect to it there is nothing for the personal representatives of the father to administer nor for his creditors to reach."

The rules laid down in these cases are not antagonistic nor conflicting in principle, and to adopt either or both leads to the same result in the present controversy. The inheritance tax is imposed upon the transfer of the estate of decedents, and it is immaterial by what particular means afforded by law the property passes from the dead to the living, or what the character or quality of the legal vehicle is by which the transmission is accomplished; provided, of course, the method employed is one upon which the taxing power operates. As between kindred, the relationship that the deceased bore to the beneficiary fixes the exemption and measures the rate of taxation. Nephews and nieces are not within the exempt class, and under the statute they rate as do strangers.

The assessment will be affirmed.

(38 N. J. Eq. 146)

SULLIVAN v. NEWARK LUNCH ROOM CO. (No. 44/758.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

1. RECEIVERS ~~§~~146—DISCHARGE—REINVESTMENT WITH CORPORATE PRIVILEGES—"PROVIDING FOR DEBTS."

Mere extension of time for payment by insolvent corporation may not be "providing for debts" within 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1645, § 69, permitting court to discharge receiver and reinvest company with privileges if debts have been paid or provided for.

2. RECEIVERS ~~§~~146—DISCHARGE OF RECEIVER—REINVESTMENT WITH CORPORATE FRANCHISES—PROCEEDING.

Procedure contemplated by 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1645, § 69, permitting court to discharge receiver and reinvest an insolvent corporation with its franchises if debts have been paid or provided for, is in nature of equitable proceeding wherein public, as well as stockholders and creditors, must be considered.

3. RECEIVERS §146—DISCHARGE — RETURN OF ASSETS.

Chancery Court, under 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1645, § 69, will not order discharge of receiver of insolvent company on proposition of creditors' committee, in control of nearly all stock, that assets be transferred to company, in control of committee, and time notes be given creditors for face of claims.

Suit by Francis J. Sullivan against the Newark Lunch Room Company, resulting in appointment of receiver for the company on decree of insolvency. On application of a creditors' committee for an order discharging the receiver and reinvesting the corporation with its privileges and franchises. Application denied, and receiver directed to apply for and obtain an order of sale.

J. F. Hoover, of Newark, for the motion. Chester W. Fairlie, of Newark, receiver pro se.

LANE, V. C. [1,2] The Newark Lunch Room Company has been decreed insolvent by this court. A receiver has been appointed. He has operated the business under the orders of this court up until this time. A creditors' committee has obtained control of practically all the capital stock. The liabilities amount to upwards of $12,000. Tangible assets are appraised at upwards of $6,000, exclusive of good will. The creditors' committee, representing a substantial amount over a majority of the creditors and over one-half of the total indebtedness, now propose that the receiver be discharged, the assets transferred to the corporation now in control of the committee, and that time notes be given to the creditors for the face amount of their claims. On the return of an order to show cause why such a course should not be pursued, no one appeared objecting. Ought the court, notwithstanding the request of a great majority of the creditors, both in number and amount, and the acquiescence, in view of the failure to object, of all the creditors, refuse to permit the consummation of such a plan? The title of the act under which the receiver was appointed was originally "An act to prevent fraud by incorporated companies." Revision approved April 15, 1846; Revision of 1847, p. 129. The section of the act permitting the court to discharge the receiver and reinvest the corporation with the privileges and franchises requires that before this is done the debts must have been paid or provided for, and that it appears to the court that there remains, or can be obtained by further contributions, sufficient capital to enable it to resume its business. Section 69 of "An act concerning corporations" 2 Comp. Stat. p. 1645. A mere extension of time for payment may not be providing for debts. Bull v. International Power Co., 87 N. J. Eq. 1, 99 Atl. 111. The procedure contemplated by the statute is in the nature of an equitable quo warranto. Gallagher v. Asphalt Co., 65 N. J. Eq. 258, 55 Atl. 259. Not only are the stockholders and creditors to be considered, but the public generally. If every stockholder and every creditor consented to a plan of reorganization, unless this court can see that the business can be resumed with safety to the public, it ought not to approve the plan. If the plan proposed in the present case be approved, the result will be that the corporation will be started afresh, with liabilities exceeding its assets; new debts will be created; the old debts, the corporation through stock ownership being in control of old creditors, may be paid, and new creditors left to bear the burden. New creditors must be assumed to consider that they are dealing with a solvent concern, since this court has permitted the concern to continue, yet, in fact, they are not, and thus money may be taken and appropriated by the old creditors.

There are two analogous cases now fresh in my mind. In one, the company was adjudicated bankrupt; a creditors' committee was formed; the assets were bought in at sale by the creditors' committee; a new corporation was formed; the assets were turned over to it, at a valuation in excess of the amount paid by the creditors' committee at the sale in bankruptcy, but at a valuation claimed to be fair; notes were delivered for the purchase price; the corporation again became insolvent; a large part of the old debts had been liquidated; the money of the new creditors had been used in liquidating them. It is now claimed that the new debts share pari passu with the balance due on the old. At least two years in two courts has now been spent in the winding up of the new corporation, and it has not yet been determined what the relative rights of the parties are. In Horne v. Harrington there was a taking over by a corporation of the business of an individual insolvent. The creditors got together; formed a corporation; took over the assets of the insolvent individual at a valuation based not on actual value, but on the amount due from the individual to creditors; stock was issued to the creditors; the company became insolvent. In the latter case I have just been obliged to order an assessment on the stock to raise sufficient money to pay new debts. These two cases illustrate the care with which the court should scrutinize any plan such as now before it, before permitting it to become operative, and the court should, on its own motion, refuse to approve such a plan unless it appears that as a matter of fact the business can be resumed with safety to the public. If the creditors desire to reduce the stock of the company to an amount which will represent the fair value of the assets and will distribute that stock among themselves in proportion to their debts and take the stock in payment of their debts, another situation will have been presented.

[3] I am convinced that the present plan does not come within the sixty-ninth section, and will decline to direct an order discharging the receiver and reinvesting the corporation with its privileges and franchises.

A receiver has been appointed and has been continuing the business for a considerable time. It ought to be sold as a going concern. It should be sold at once. The receiver is directed to apply for and obtain an order directing him to sell within two weeks and to bring on a motion to confirm the sale immediately thereafter.

Settle order within one day.

(89 N. J. Eq. 283)

G. P. FARMER COAL & SUPPLY CO. et al.
v. ALBRIGHT et al. (No. 44/759.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 24, 1918.)

1. INTERPLEADER \S 16—EQUITY.

In suit in equity to settle rival claims to proceeds of insurance policy, it is unnecessary for the insurance company to file bill of interpleader, where the company was already a party to the suit, although one of rival claimants had not filed answer, the company having right to protect itself from suit by such claimant by petitioning court to restrain such action.

2. COSTS \S 79—INSURANCE COMPANY—ACTION TO SETTLE RIVAL CLAIMS TO POLICY PROCEEDS.

Where an insurance company was made a party to a suit to settle rival claims to proceeds of an insurance policy, it is entitled to costs, having been made a party, and required to appear and answer through no default on its part.

Action by the G. P. Farmer Coal & Supply Company and others against Mayme H. Albright and others, in which defendant New York Life Insurance Company interpleads by cross-bill or counterclaim. Motion made to strike out cross-bill or counterclaim. Cross-bill permitted to stand.

The bill disclosed this state of facts: The complainant G. P. Farmer Coal & Supply Company issued an attachment out of the Monmouth circuit against A. Fred Albright, and levied upon a policy, on his life, payable to his wife, Mayme H. Albright, issued by the defendant New York Life Insurance Company. The complainant Leon R. Taylor was appointed auditor, and upon his report judgment was entered in the action. The assured is now deceased, and his widow lays claim to the insurance. The contract of insurance was made in the state of New York, and its laws subject life insurance to the claims of creditors. The insurance company has refused to make payment because of the uncertainty of the rights of the rival claimants. The prayer is that the money be ordered paid into court upon delivering up of the policy, and that the proceeds be applied to the payment of the complainant's judgment. Mayme H. Albright, the beneficiary, is made a party defendant, and has answered, contesting the complainants' right and joining in the prayer that the moneys be paid into court. The New York Life Insurance Company, in its answer, assumes a neutral position towards the parties, and by cross-bill or counterclaim interpleads, and has paid the insurance money into court. Motion is made to strike out the cross-bill or counterclaim.

Kellogg & Chance, of Jersey City, for complainants. Durand, Ivins & Carton, of Asbury Park, for defendant Albright. Dickinson & Bodine, of Trenton, for defendant New York Life Ins. Co.

BACKES, V. O. (after stating the facts as above). [1] This bill is in aid of proceedings at law, and in effect is in the nature of a bill of interpleader to settle rival claims to a fund. All parties in interest are joined in the suit, and in the circumstances a cross-bill of interpleader was unnecessary for the protection of the stakeholder. It is not necessary to file a bill of interpleader where the holder of a fund is already a party to a suit in equity, brought by one claimant against the other, to settle the right to the fund in his hands. Barbour's Chancery Practice (2d Ed.) vol. 2, p. 120; Daniel's Chancery Practice (8th Ed.) p. 1567; 23 Cyc. p. 5; Lane v. New York Life Insurance Co., 56 Hun, 92, 9 N. Y. Supp. 52. A point is made of the fact that at the time the cross-bill was filed the defendant Mayme H. Albright had not filed her answer submitting her claim to the jurisdiction of the court, and that, as the cause then stood, it afforded no protection to the insurance company as against her possible suit at law upon the policy. This is inadmissible, for the reason that the court would have restrained her from such proceedings, upon the filing of a petition in the cause. Badeau v. Rogers, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 209.

[2] The cross-bill will be permitted to stand as an answer and as a petition for permission to pay the money into court, and to be discharged. Such is the practice that should have been followed. A decree may be entered, as moved, that the policy be surrendered, and the company be absolved from further liability thereon, and that it be dismissed from the suit. As the defendant was brought into court and required to answer, not because of any default on its part, it is entitled to its costs. A counsel fee of $50 will be allowed out of the fund, to be taxed as part of the costs, and to be eventually restored by the unsuccessful party.

(98 N. J. Eq. 353)

PENNSYLVANIA CO. FOR INSURANCE ON LIVES & GRANTING ANNUITIES
v. RILEY et al. (No. 42/22.)(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 8, 1918.)1. WILLS \S 755—DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY.

A bequest of $1,000 out of the sale of a house of testator in trust for education of legatee is a demonstrative legacy.

2. WILLS \S 754—SPECIFIC LEGACY.

Will directing that money coming to estate from purchase-money mortgage be held in trust, and income divided among children named, creates a specific legacy.

3. WILLS \S 767—DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY—ADEMPTION.

A demonstrative legacy, to be paid out of the proceeds of sale of house, does not necessarily fail by disposition of house in testator's lifetime, but assumes the status of a general legacy, payable out of other personal property, or, if properly charged, out of real estate.

4. WILLS \S 771—DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY—ADEMPTION—EFFECT.

Where the property to pay a demonstrative legacy had been sold, and the only other property had been specifically disposed of by the will, the demonstrative legacy, though considered as a general legacy, must fail.

5. WILLS \S 684(7)—TRUST FUND—REQUEST TO CLASS—TIME OF DISTRIBUTION.

Where will bequeaths income of trust fund to be divided equally among two life beneficiaries, principal to be divided after "their death" among reversionary legatees, on death of one life beneficiary after death of testatrix, one-half of the fund is distributable.

6. WILLS \S 523—GIFT TO CLASS—PRESUMPTION.

Where a gift is to several persons by name, a presumption arises that the persons are to take in their individual and not in their collective capacity, though persons named constitute a class.

7. WILLS \S 634(14)—VESTED ESTATE—REMAINDER.

Under will giving income of fund to two life beneficiaries, principal to be divided after their death to named class of persons "or the survivors or heirs of them," and after death of testatrix one life beneficiary and one reversionary legatee dies, the quoted words cannot be given a force sufficient to prevent the bequest from being vested at death of testatrix, so that share of deceased reversionary legatee would be payable to his estate.

Bill in equity by the Pennsylvania Company for Insurance on Lives and Granting Annuities, trustee under the will of Fietta Alselt, deceased, against Mary Riley and others, for construction of a will. Will construed.

Martin V. Bergen, of Camden, for complainant. O. L. Cole, of Atlantic City, for defendants Mary Riley and others. Edwin F. Crane, of Camden, for defendant Theresa Riley.

LEAMING, V. C. By this suit complainants seek judicial construction of the will of Fietta Alselt, deceased.

The provisions of the will, construction of which is herein sought, are as follows:

"6. I direct that out of the proceeds of the sale of my house, or other property, one thousand dollars shall be set apart and held in trust by my executor, for the education of Robert Lewis Read, child of my granddaughter, Mrs. Florence S. Read, nee Riley, and in case of his death, the said sum shall be divided equally between my grandchildren, Frank A. Riley, Mary Riley, Joseph H. Riley, Robert Riley, Fietta J. Alselt, Knight Alselt, Robert Alselt and Rachel Alselt."

"7. I direct that the twenty-six thousand dollars coming to my estate from the sale of the Norwood shall be held in trust by my executor, and the income therefrom shall be divided equally between my children, Mrs. Mary Riley and Mr. William H. Alselt, during their lifetime; and after their death, the principal shall be divided equally between my grandchildren Frank S. Riley, Robert Riley, Joseph H. Riley, Mary Riley, Fietta J. Alselt, Knight Alselt, Robert Alselt and Rachel Alselt and Robert Lewis Read, son of Florence S. Read, nee Riley, or the survivors or heirs of them."

At the death of testatrix she had disposed of the house referred to in the sixth item of the will, above quoted, and had no other property which could be sold for or applied to the purpose named, except $26,000; that money was the proceeds of a purchase-money mortgage of $26,000 on the Norwood, which mortgage represented the $26,000 referred to in the seventh item of the will above quoted; the mortgage had recently been paid, and the money was intact at the time of the death of testatrix. All other property of testatrix and also $2,000 of the proceeds of the $26,000 mortgage has since been used by the executors to pay debts of testatrix.

[1-4] The first inquiry relates to the status of the bequest in the sixth item of the will.

This bequest is a demonstrative legacy. The circumstance that testatrix at her death did not own the property out of which she directed the bequest to be paid is not alone operative to wholly defeat the bequest. A demonstrative legacy, so circumstanced, assumes the status of a general legacy, and should be paid from other personal assets of a testator, and, if properly charged, from testator's real estate. But, as already stated, no other assets of testatrix existed, except the proceeds of the Norwood mortgage, and that mortgage was specifically disposed of by the seventh item of the will. The trust bequest of the Norwood mortgage is a specific legacy; this is fully disclosed by the authorities collected in Mecum v. Stoughton, 81 N. J. Eq. 319, 86 Atl. 52, and Kearns v. Kearns, 77 N. J. Eq. 453, 76 Atl. 1042, 140 Am. St. Rep. 575; and the $26,000 representing its proceeds has been identified in a manner that clearly subjects the proceeds to the operation of the bequest. As general legacies must abate before specific legacies, it necessarily follows that the demonstrative legacy of the sixth item of the will fails. Johnson v. Conover, 54 N. J. Eq. 333, 35 Atl. 291; Tichenor v. Tichenor, 41 N. J. Eq. 39, 2 Atl. 778.

[5] Doubts touching the seventh item of the will have arisen by reason of the following circumstances:

At the death of testatrix all the persons named in the seventh item of the will were alive. Robert Riley, one of the reversionary legatees, died October 4, 1912, intestate and without issue. William H. Alselt, one of the life beneficiaries, died August 1, 1915. Mary Riley, the remaining life beneficiary, and all the reversionary legatees, except Robert Riley, are still alive. Instructions are now sought as to whether any part of the corpus of the trust fund became distributable at the death of William H. Alselt, and, if so, what disposition is to be made of it.

At the death of William H. Alselt one-half of the corpus of the trust fund became distributable. It has been uniformly so held in this state in construing similar language in all cases in which no other part of the will manifests a contrary intent. Woolston v. Beck, 34 N. J. Eq. 74; Stoutenburgh v. Moore, 37 N. J. Eq. 63, affirmed 38 N. J. Eq. 281; Collins v. Wardell, 65 N. J. Eq. 366, 54 Atl. 417; Merriam v. Dunham, 62 N. J. Eq. 567, 50 Atl. 235. In Kellog v. Burnett, 74 N. J. Eq. 304, 69 Atl. 196, the words "after the decease of my said two children" were held to mean after the decease of both; but that construction was there made necessary because of a reversion to a class which could not be ascertained until the death of both life tenants. It was, however, there recognized consistently with the cases above cited, that the direction for equal division of income between the life tenants is inconsistent with a right in the income in the nature of a joint tenancy. The language "during their lifetime," as used in the seventh item of the will here in question, must accordingly be understood to mean during their lifetime respectively. It follows that at the death of William H. Alselt one-half of the corpus of the trust fund became distributable.

But for the concluding words of the seventh item of the will, namely, "or the survivors or heirs of them," little, if any, doubt could be entertained touching the manner of distribution at this time of one-half of the corpus of the trust fund.

[6] The direction contained in the will is to "divide equally between" the persons specifically named. All the persons named are grandchildren of testatrix, except one, who is a great-grandchild; the enumeration of persons includes all of the grandchildren of testatrix and her only great-grandchild; the several grandchildren named are the children of the respective life tenants; the great-grandchild is a child of a deceased granddaughter of testatrix. Where a gift is to several persons by name, a presumption arises, in the absence of a contrary intent apparent on the face of the will, that the persons named are to take in their individual, and not in their collective, capacity, even though the persons named constitute a class or classes. Dildine v. Dildine, 32 N. J. Eq. 78. It follows that the manner of distribution of the corpus of the trust fund as contemplated by the will is per capita, as distinguished from per stirpes.

[7] It also seems clear that, in the absence of the concluding words of the bequest already referred to, the reversionary rights of the several grandchildren and the great-grandchild named in the bequest necessarily would be regarded as vested interests at the death of testatrix, as pointed out in Security Trust Co. v. Lovett, 78 N. J. Eq. 445, 79 Atl. 616, since there is to be found in the several reversionary legatees at the death of the testatrix a present right of future enjoyment, and that right of future enjoyment limited only on an event—the death of a life tenant—which was certain to happen, and the several reversionary legatees capable of taking in possession at any time either of the life estates should be spent; it is the uncertainty of the right of enjoyment, and not the uncertainty of actual enjoyment, which prevents a right from vesting, and renders it contingent. And even though the concluding words of the bequest should be understood as creative of a right by survivorship in those surviving in the event of the decease of a reversionary legatee before the period for distribution, the interest of such legatee would be regarded as a vested interest, subject to being divested by death before the period of distribution.

Accordingly it remains to consider whether the words "or the survivor or heirs of them," as used at the conclusion of the bequest, are found to be restrictive of the gift in such manner as to confer upon the survivors or upon certain heirs a right to the share of a legatee dying before the period for distribution. As hereinabove stated, Robert Riley, one of the reversionary legatees, died intestate and without issue, after the death of testatrix and before the death of William H. Alselt, one of the life tenants whose death made a distribution of one-half of the corpus necessary.

It will be conceded that the force to be attributed to the language in question here is difficult of ascertainment. Had the word "survivors" been used, without the word "heirs," the language would have clearly related to the survivors at the death of the life tenant, and Robert thus would have been excluded. Stout v. Cook, 79 N. J. Eq. 573, 576, 81 Atl. 821. But the words "survivors" and "heirs," as here used, appear to be wholly irreconcilable, unless some artificial or restricted meaning shall be attributed to the words, without satisfactory indication of the intention of testatrix in that respect. Testatrix may have intended by the word "heirs" to refer to issue or descendants, and in that manner may have sought to provide that, in the event of the death of a residuary legatee, without issue, before the period for distribution, his or her share should be paid to the then survivors; but that construction of the language used by testatrix would attribute an artificial meaning to the word "heirs," and would be essentially conjectural, and without the support of substantial evidence of such actual intent. A construction giving more adherence to accepted rules of construction would be to regard the disjunctive word "or," before the words "survivors" and "heirs," respectively, as strictly substitutionary, as distinguished from the copulative word "and," which latter word, when so used, ordinarily denotes quality or duration of the estate to be taken, and thus impute to testatrix an intent to substitute as objects of her bounty survivors or heirs for one dying before the period for distribution; but that construction presents the incongruity of two substituted and antagonistic classes of takers, without indication of their precedence, except such as might be inferred by the order in which they are named. In Re Stannard, 52 L. J. Ch. 355, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 660, with somewhat similar language before the court for construction the view was adopted that force should be given to both the word "survivors" and "heirs," and that this could not be done by relating the gift to the period of death of the life tenant, since in such case the substitutionary word "heirs" would be in conflict with the word "survivors." Accordingly the gift was held to relate to the death of the testator, and thus be to those who survived the testator, and to the heirs of any who did not survive testator. But in the will now under consideration the direction is for distribution to specific persons at the death of the life tenant "or the survivors or heirs of them." Perhaps other more or less reasonable conjectures could be indulged as to the possible intent of testatrix in the use of this peculiar and almost meaningless language selected by her; but no suggestion has been made that appears to have the support of a forceful manifestation of a defined intent upon her part. In such circumstances the conclusion appears to be impelled that the language here under consideration cannot be properly given any defined force which shall be operative to so restrict the several reversionary gifts that they may not be regarded as vested in right at the death of the testatrix. Accordingly the share of Robert Riley will be paid to his administrator for the benefit of Robert's estate.

(117 Me. 231)

REED v. REED.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. June 26, 1918.)

1. DEEDS §208(1)—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show unconditional delivery of deed.

2. DEEDS §208(1) — DELIVERY — TAKING BACK MORTGAGE.

That grantor took back a mortgage of the premises to secure performance of conditions of grantee's bond is practically conclusive upon the question of delivery of the original deed by grantor with the intention to convey immediately and unconditionally.

3. DEEDS §179 — REDELIVERY OF DEED TO GRANTOR.

That grantee returned his unrecorded deed to grantor, and grantor mortgaged the land in his own name, to secure a loan from a third person without knowledge of the deed, did not affect the title, as between the original grantor and grantee.

4. EVIDENCE §420(1) — DEEDS — PAROL EVIDENCE—CONDITIONS.

Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a deed actually delivered to the grantee and absolute on its face shall have effect only upon the performance of some condition or the happening of some contingency.

On Motion and Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Lincoln County, at Law.

Action by Melville H. Reed against J. Burton Reed. Verdict for defendant, and the case comes up on plaintiff's motion and exceptions. Motion sustained, and verdict set aside.

See, also, 115 Me. 441, 99 Atl. 181.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

McGillcuddy & Morey, of Lewiston, and Carl M. P. Larrabee, of Wiscasset, for plaintiff. A. S. Littlefield, of Rockland, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. This is an action of forcible entry and detainer to recover possession of certain real estate in Boothbay Harbor. The plaintiff claims to derive title by virtue of a warranty deed, dated and acknowledged September 4, 1907, from his father, Chapman N. Reed, to Bessie L. Reed, wife of the plaintiff, and by deed from Bessie L. Reed, of the same date, to himself. The defendant denies the passing of the title from Chapman N. Reed during his lifetime, and pleads title in his three brothers, one of whom is the plaintiff, and himself as tenants in common, heirs at law of their father. The issue is the efficacy of the deed from the father to Bessie L. Reed, and that depends upon whether or not it was legally delivered by the grantor to the grantee. If it was legally delivered and title passed, then the plaintiff should recover; if it was not delivered, then the plaintiff fails.

The jury having rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant, the case is before the law court on plaintiff's motion and exceptions. It is only necessary to consider the motion.

[1] It appears that Chapman N. Reed, with his wife, Sarah A. Reed, at the time the deed was made, was living in this homestead, which they had occupied for many years. He was then a man 72 or 73 years of age. In order to provide an annual income for himself and his wife, he arranged to convey this property to his son, the plaintiff, then living in Cambridge, Mass., who, in consideration of the conveyance, agreed to pay his father the sum of $300 a year during the father's life, and the same amount to his mother, should she survive her husband. In furtherance of this agreement a local attorney was secured, who drafted the warranty deed in question from Chapman N. Reed to Bessie L. Reed, the plaintiff's wife, a bond from Bessie and the plaintiff to Chapman N. Reed, conditioned to make the annual payments, a mortgage to Chapman N. Reed, signed by Bessie and the plaintiff, to secure the performance of the bond, and a warranty deed from Bessie to the plaintiff, subject to the mortgage. These were all a part of one and the same transaction. All these instruments, when prepared, were taken by the attorney to the Reed homestead, where all the parties were, and were duly executed and acknowledged in his presence. He cannot positively testify that they were delivered by the respective grantors to the respective grantees, nor could he be expected to do so as a matter of distinct recollection after a lapse of 10 years; but he left them at the house with the parties interested. This has been held to be some evidence of delivery. Lowd v. Bridgman, 154 Mass. 113, 26 N. E. 1004. To assume that they were not delivered is to conclude that all the labor and expense connected with the transaction were designedly futile. However, the plaintiff and his wife, who are the only other living witnesses to the transaction, testify that all the instruments were unconditionally delivered at the time of their execution; the deed by Chapman to Bessie, and the bond and mortgage by Bessie and the plaintiff to Chapman. The deed from the father to Bessie, as well as the deed from Bessie to the plaintiff, were carried by the plaintiff to his home in Massachusetts. None of the documents was recorded until after the father's death, which was in deference to the wishes of the parents. The plaintiff made various payments under the bond; the exact amount being somewhat in controversy. Sarah A. Reed died in February, 1908, and Chapman N. Reed in February, 1913.

[2] If further proof of the completed delivery of the deed is needed, in addition to the uncontradicted testimony of the plaintiff and his wife, and the inherent reasonableness of the transaction, it is to be found in the concurrent acts of the parties which recognized a transfer of the title. The father's intention to convey immediately and unconditionally is shown by the fact that he took back a mortgage of the same premises to secure the performance of the conditions of the bond. This is practically conclusive upon the question of delivery of the original deed, and is so held by the courts. Creeden v. Mahoney, 103 Mass. 402, 79 N. E. 776; Blackwell v. Blackwell, 193 Mass. 186, 81 N. E. 910, 12 Ann. Cas. 1070. If no title had passed to the grantee under the deed, the grantee had nothing which she could convey to the grantor in mortgage, and the grantor knew it. The validity of the mortgage was based on the validity of the deed.

Moreover, we have the written and unanswerable admission of Chapman N. Reed himself, made 8 months after the conveyance. In December, 1907, the plaintiff applied to his father for assistance in raising $1,000. Under date of December 27, 1907, the father replied:

"I got your letter last night. I am sorry to hear that you have had such hard luck. I will help you out if I can. But as it stands I can't do a thing. You have a deed (or Bessie has) of this place, and in one sense the place is yours; while you carry out the agreement (that is, the bond), I can't do a thing with it. If I should go to put a mortgage on it, the question would be asked: Is it clear of all incumbrances. You see that it would not be while you have a deed of it. Now, you send me the deed. None of the papers have been put on record. Then everything will stand the same as if nothing had been done. Then I can answer any questions that may be asked with a clear conscience. Then I will see what I can do. * * *

Acting upon this suggestion, the deed was returned by the plaintiff to his father, who thereupon placed a mortgage for $1,000 upon the premises with the Boothbay Savings Bank, in the father's name, the bank supposing that he was still the legal owner, and the money was turned over to the plaintiff by his father. Subsequently the plaintiff met some of the interest payments on this mortgage, and also paid a portion of the principal, ceasing payment on advice of counsel after the question of title had been raised. The father had received nothing from the bank, and paid nothing to the bank, and as between father and son it was as if the bank mortgage had been placed upon the son's property, while as between the father, son, and the bank the mortgage had been placed upon the father's property. It was a matter of pride with the old folks, and naturally so.

[3] This transaction, however, had no legal effect as between Chapman N. Reed and Bessie L. Reed, or the plaintiff, upon the delivery of the deed of September 4, 1907, or the passing of the title thereunder. That deed not having been placed on record, and the holder of the $1,000 mortgage having neither actual nor constructive notice of its existence, the bank's title under the mortgage would be good as against both Bessie and the plaintiff; but as between the father and them his deed had been delivered beyond recall, and the son held the title, subject to the mortgage for support.

It is needless to discuss the evidence further. The fact of unconditional delivery is completely established. No other inference can reasonably be drawn from the testimony and circumstances. Such was the conclusion reached by this court when the case was first here. Reed v. Reed, 113 Me. 522, 95 Atl. 211. At nisi prius the presiding justice had directed a verdict for the plaintiff, and the case was taken to the law court upon exceptions to that ruling, and also upon a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Regarding the direction of the verdict the court said:

"We shall not discuss the evidence. We need only to say that a careful study of it leads us to the conclusion that a verdict based on non-delivery of the deed could not be sustained. The exceptions must therefore be overruled."

The motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was granted. At the second trial, which included the introduction of the newly discovered evidence, a verdict was rendered by the jury in favor of the plaintiff; but this verdict was set aside on exceptions, because under the pleadings the defendant was not given the right to open and close. Reed v. Reed, 115 Me. 441, 99 Atl. 181. The merits of the controversy on the delivery of the deed were not considered. At this third trial it is the opinion of the court that the plaintiff's claim is completely established, as was found by the law court after the first trial, and as was found by the jury at the second trial. True, the defendant seeks to have us infer from certain statements of the plaintiff in testimony given in Massachusetts, and in cross-examination at the trials in this state, that some condition was attached to the delivery and that title did not vest. Such an inference is not fairly deducible from the evidence. The plaintiff evidently had in mind the conditions named in the bond, and knew that the title was not indefeasible while those conditions remained unperformed. It was precisely the same idea that the father entertained, when in his letter already quoted he said:

"You have a deed (or Bessie has) of this place, and in one sense the place is yours; while you carry out the agreement (that is, the bond), I can't do a thing with it."

Both father and son were correct in their views. The rights of the father in the place rested upon the bond secured by the mortgage, and not upon an undelivered deed, or a deed conditionally delivered, and that was what was intended by the son's testimony. Carefully analyzed, the testimony is not contradictory, and therefore the newly discovered evidence detracts in no wise from the strength of the plaintiff's claim. This deed having been completely and unqualifiedly delivered by the grantor to the grantee, title vested ipso facto in the grantee.

Some confusion seems to have arisen over the use of the term "conditional delivery," and the distinction between a condition affecting the delivery of a deed and an attempted oral condition modifying the efficacy of a deed once delivered by the grantor to the grantee was overlooked. The former is recognized in law; the latter is not and should not be recognized. This distinction follows from the indispensable element existing in every completed delivery, namely, the absolute relinquishment on the part of the grantor of all dominion and control over the instrument. There cannot be a joint control of the deed by the grantor and the grantee. Their adverse interests forbid it. It must be within the dominion of the one or the other, and title passes or does not pass, according as the deed has or has not been actually delivered. Once delivered, the only conditions affecting the vesting of the grantee's title must be expressed in the instrument itself.

Of course many cases have arisen where a deed has come into the possession of the grantee by mistake, or for a special purpose apart from delivery, and the grantee has assumed dominion over it, either without authority or in violation of authority. In such cases there has been no delivery whatever, conditional or otherwise, because there has been no intention on the part of the grantor to lose the right of control over it, and it has not come into the possession of the grantee as a conveyance with the consent of the grantor. Illustrations may be found in Chadwick v. Webber, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 141, 14 Am. Dec. 222; Woodman v. Ooolbroth, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 181; Rhodes v. School District, 30 Me. 110; Brown v. Brown, 66 Me. 316; Joslin v. Goddard, 187 Mass. 165, 72 N. E. 948—the last two cases being cited by the defendant. These authorities have no application here, because here the grantor had surrendered all right of dominion, and the grantee had lawfully received the instrument into her possession, in accordance with the intention and act of the grantor.

Under these circumstances this case falls within the well-settled doctrine that, when a deed has been delivered by the grantor to the grantee with the intention that it shall take effect as his deed, it takes effect in exact accordance with the expressed terms of the deed, and it cannot be shown by parol that it was to take effect only upon the performance of some condition or the happening of some event not expressed therein. A condition may precede delivery; but, once delivered, no conditions, except those expressed in the deed, can postpone the vesting of the title. In this we have made no reference to the cases in equity where a deed absolute on its face is held to be a mortgage. They concern the nature of the title granted, not the vesting or nonvesting of any title, and they have no bearing upon the point in issue here.

In Warren v. Miller, 38 Me. 108, a real action, the tenant offered to prove by parol evidence that, when the deed introduced by the demandant was made and delivered, the deed was to be void upon the fulfillment by the grantee of a verbal condition subsequent. The evidence was rejected by the presiding justice, and the law court sustained the ruling.

In Hubbard v. Greeley, 84 Me. 340, 24 Atl.

799, 17 L. R. A. 511, a case often cited in this state, the court said:

"The authorities all agree that a deed cannot be delivered directly to the grantee himself, or to his agent or attorneys, to be held as an escrow; that, if such a delivery is made, the law will give effect to the deed immediately, and according to its terms, divested of all oral conditions. The reason is obvious. An escrow is a deed delivered to a stranger, to be delivered by him to the grantee, upon the performance of some condition, or the happening of some contingency, and the deed takes effect only upon the second delivery. Till then the title remains in the grantor. And if the delivery is in the first instance directly to the grantee, and he retains the possession of it, there can be no second delivery, and the deed must take effect on account of the first delivery, or it can never take effect at all. And if it takes effect at all, it must be according to its written terms. Oral conditions cannot be annexed to it. * * * And it is perfectly well settled, by all the authorities, ancient and modern, that an attempt thus to deliver a deed as an escrow cannot be successful; that, in all cases where such deliveries are made, the deeds take effect immediately and according to their terms, divested of all oral conditions."

It should be further said that oral testimony should not be admitted to abrogate the legal effect of a written instrument once intentionally and completely delivered to the grantee. Otherwise the validity of the transaction would depend upon the recollection and truthfulness of human witnesses.

"There is manifest wisdom in the old rule, that the law will regard, in such transactions, not what is said, but what is done." Ordinary of N. J. v. Thatcher, 41 N. J. Law, 403, 32 Am. Rep. 225.

[4] In short, delivery of a deed in its legal sense is one thing; the effect of the deed after delivery is another. A deed does not on its face prove delivery; therefore the evidence of the fact must come from without. But the effect of the deed after delivery is proved on its face, and must come from within. Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a deed actually delivered to the grantee and absolute on its face shall have effect only upon the performance of some condition or the happening of some contingency. This is the settled law. Mowry v. Heney, 96 Cal. 471, 25 Pac. 17; Whitney v. Whitney, 10 Idaho, 633, 80 Pac. 1117, 69 L. R. A. 572; Haworth v. Norris, 28 Fla. 763, 10 South. 18; Berry v. Anderson, 22 Ind. 36; Lawton v. Sager, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 349; Wipfler v. Wipfler, 158 Mich. 18, 116 N. W. 544, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 941, with extended note; 8 R. C. L. 1003. This has been and still is the law of this state.

We have discussed the subject with greater fullness than might seem necessary, especially in view of the fact that there is no evidence of conditional delivery of any sort, because in Reed v. Reed, 113 Me. 522, 524, 95 Atl. 211, and perhaps in Coombs v. Fessenden, 114 Me. 347, 96 Atl. 242, the court used language, somewhat in the nature of dicta, that might be construed as approving the rule contended for by the defendant.

Such is not the law, and we take the first opportunity to correct any misapprehension that may have arisen, or might arise, and to reaffirm the doctrine of Hubbard v. Greeley, 84 Me. 340, 24 Atl. 799, 17 L. R. A. 511, supra, in order that there may be no uncertainty as to so important a legal principle, affecting as it does the stability of titles to real estate.

Motion sustained.

Verdict set aside.

(117 Me. 397)

CITY OF BANGOR v. RIDLEY.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 3, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 255 — CONTRACTS WITH OFFICERS—VALIDITY.

Under Rev. St. c. 4, § 43, prohibiting member of city government to be interested in any contract and making contracts in violation thereof void, a city alderman, who furnished teams and received payment for services, was liable to the city for the amount so received; the money having been paid under an implied contract made void by the statute.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 255—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

Though city received services of teams belonging to a city alderman and the payment therefor to him was equitable, it could nevertheless recover such money in an equitable action for money had and received, since Rev. St. c. 4, § 43, prohibited and made void any contract between the city and the alderman.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 247—VALIDITY OF CONTRACTS — ILLEGAL CONTRACTS — COMPLETED CONTRACTS.

A party dealing with a municipality can reap no advantage from the fact that his illegal conduct is completed, as it is incumbent upon every one, dealing with a municipality, to discover its authority to act, or to assume the risk upon failure to do so, and deal with it at his peril.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 255 — CONTRACTS WITH OFFICERS—VALIDITY.

In determining city's right to recover from alderman money paid him under implied contract for services of teams, which was prohibited by Rev. St. c. 4, § 43, the fact that the city received full value for the money paid, and no harm came to the public, was immaterial.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 231(1)—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY.

Under Rev. St. c. 4, § 43, making void all contracts of the city with a member of the city government, a contract in violation thereof is void on the part of the city as well as the officer.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 231(1)—"MUNICIPALITY."

In construing Rev. St. c. 4, § 43, prohibiting contracts between city governments and an officer thereof, the term "municipality" should be regarded as limited in its application to cities only.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Municipality.]

King, J., dissenting.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

Action by the City of Bangor against Fred C. Ridley. Case reported. Judgment for plaintiff.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, KING, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

James M. Gillin, City Sol., of Bangor, for plaintiff. George E. Thompson and Fellows & Fellows, all of Bangor, for defendant.

SPEAR, J. This case comes up on report. The record shows that the defendant, Fred C. Ridley, was an alderman in the city of Bangor for the municipal year of 1915, that during the year he furnished teams and drivers who performed certain services for the city, that he received payment in full in due course of business for the services rendered, and, by the admission of the plaintiff, "that the city received the benefit of the men and teams furnished by him to said city, * * * and that the prices for said teams and men were just and reasonable."

Under this state of facts the plaintiff city has brought an action for money had and received, to recover back from the defendant the amount it had paid him under these contracts, upon the ground that the services were rendered in contravention of the statute, and the payments therefor were illegal.

Revised Statutes, chapter 4, section 43, reads as follows:

"No member of a city government shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract entered into by such government while he is a member thereof; and contracts made in violation thereof are void."

[1] The defendant has been paid by the city, with the approval of the department of the city government authorized to approve and pay the city bills. The issue is: Has he a legal right to keep the money in defense of the pending suit? We think the test of this question is found in the inquiry: Had he a legal right, in any form of action, to recover from the city for his services? Applying this test, we are unable to discover any form of action upon which the defendant could recover. The language of the statute is as broad as language can make it. "Any contract" in violation of the statute is void. "Any contract" embraces every kind of contract, express or implied. No action can be maintained on a void contract. Goodrich v. Waterville, 88 Me. 39, 33 Atl. 659. This was an action to recover for medical attendance upon a pauper. The physician rendering the services was at the time a member of the common council of the city of Waterville. The nature of his contract of employment was precisely like that of the defendant in the present case; each contract resting upon an implied promise to pay what the services were reasonably worth. In this case the identical statute now involved was under consideration, upon which the court say:

"And the statute cited declares that all such contracts shall be void. If the employment of the plaintiffs did not create such a contract, then, of course, their action is not maintainable; for such a contract is the cause of action, and the only cause of action declared on. If it did create such a contract, it was one in which a member of the city government was directly interested, and for that reason one which the statute cited declares shall be void; * * * of course, no action can be maintained upon it."

Therefore the defendant could not have recovered, for his services, on a quantum meruit, as this form of action is based upon an implied contract, and comes within the inhibition of the statute.

In view of the statute now under consideration, there is another controlling reason why the defendant should be made liable for the money received for his services. The statute in question was enacted for the express purpose of prohibiting a member of the city government from making contracts with the city. But if he can influence the city government, of which he is a member, either as a matter of friendship or corruptly, to give him employment upon a contract, express or implied, and obtain and retain his pay for its execution, then both he and the city government can evade and nullify the effect and purpose of the statute with impunity. He has made his illegal contract. He may have influenced the city government to favor him. He has received his compensation for executing it. If he can keep the money, the statute is dead. He has succeeded by indirection.

This interpretation is fully sustained in the opinion of the court in answer to questions propounded by the Governor, found in 106 Me. on page 552, 82 Atl. 90, upon the construction of a statute identical in meaning with the one under consideration in which the court say:

"The Legislature must be presumed to have had in contemplation all of the contracts which might have been made by the different state officers, and to have enacted the statute for the purpose of removing any temptation on their part to bestow reciprocal benefits upon each other, and of preventing favoritism, extravagance, and fraudulent collusion among them under any circumstances which might be reasonably anticipated as likely to arise under different state governments in the years to follow."

[2] But it may be said the city government has voluntarily paid him for his services, and, as such payment was equitable, they cannot recover it back in the equitable action of money had and received. This reasoning might hold good in cases between individuals, but a municipality is a creature of the statute, and can do just what the statute, and the necessary execution of the statute, permits, and cannot do what the statute inhibits. It will require no citations to show that the officers of a municipal government cannot contract to pay, expend or pay out, city funds for an illegal purpose or upon an illegal contract. It is not within the scope of their powers, and the city in the proper form of action can recover it back. Otherwise municipalities might be mulcted to the verge of ruin by dishonest or incompetent officials. If having illegally paid the money out, the city cannot recover it back.

[3] A party dealing with a municipality can reap no advantage from the fact that his illegal conduct is completed, as it is incumbent upon every one, dealing with a municipality, to discover its authority to act, or to assume the risk upon failure so to do, and deal with it at his peril. This rule needs no citation in this state, but in Goodrich v. Waterville, 88 Me. 39, 33 Atl. 859, dealing with this very statute, the rule is thus tersely expressed:

"All persons acting under the employment of town or city officers must take notice at their peril of the extent of the authority of such officers."

[4] Nor is the fact that the city received full value for the money paid out, and that no harm came to the public, the test. Lesieur v. Rumford, 113 Me. 317, 93 Atl. 838, is a case in which a member of the board of health was employed by the board to attend a case of smallpox. In this case no statute expressly forbade such employment; but the court held that such employment was prohibited by the spirit of the law, both the common law and statute, and based upon the rule of sound public policy. After quoting the statute under consideration, and the statute relating to the employment of persons holding places of trust in a state office, the court says:

"Assuming, as we do, that these statutory prohibitions do not directly apply to a member of a local board of health, yet the principles on which they are founded are quite as applicable to a contract made by a board of health with one of its own members, as to the contracts expressly inhibited in these statutes."

It is further said (113 Me. 320, 93 Atl. 839):

"The test is not whether harm to the public welfare has in fact resulted from the contract, but whether its tendency is that such harm will result.

"Applying this rule to the contract declared on, and testing it by those principles which constitute public policy as recognized by the common law, and as evidenced by the trend of legislation and judicial decisions, we are constrained to hold that the contract does so far contravene public policy that it ought not to be upheld and enforced through the administration of the law."

There is a dictum at the end of this opinion, suggesting that an action of quantum meruit might be sustained; but this case is entirely distinguishable from the case at bar, as there was no express statutory prohibition of employment, by the board of health, of one of their members, and it may be that quantum meruit might lie; but quantum meruit is based upon an implied contract, whereby it is held, when one party knowingly receives the services of another party, and the conditions, circumstances, and relations are such that, in equity and good conscience, he ought to pay for such services, then, although no express contract exists, the law intervenes and implies a contract that the party receiving the benefit of such services shall be held to pay what they are reasonably worth. But the moment this obligation comes into being by implication it is an implied contract, and falls within the ban of the statute, and is made void thereby.

[5, 6] Finally, it should be noted that this statute was not enacted to prohibit the contractor, alone; with equal force it can be invoked to prohibit the city government from making "any contract" with one of its members. The language of the statute—any contract entered into—makes such a contract as void on the part of the city government as on the part of the contracting member. It makes no distinction. The contract is void on both sides. This language was undoubtedly used advisedly, for, from common knowledge, it is well known that there is a great temptation, and sometimes a positive inclination, on the part of a city government, to favor one of its members. The statute, therefore, wisely holds, if a city government undertakes to transgress its plain duty in this regard, that whatever they do shall be regarded as void. It would therefore appear that the implied contract, upon which the city government paid the defendant for his services, was ultra vires on their part, was illegal on his part, and the money paid was without authority, was in violation of the city's legal rights, and should be recovered back. It should be noted that the statute here invoked and construed applies in its terms solely to cities, and the term "municipality," or "municipal," as here used, should be regarded as limited in its application to cities only.

Judgment for plaintiff for $495.20, and interest from the date of the writ.

KING, J., does not concur.

(92 Vt. 306)

DEYETTE v. DEYETTE.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Chittenden.
April 12, 1918.)

1. DIVORCE — 327 — FOREIGN DIVORCE — JURISDICTION.

In suit for divorce in Vermont, jurisdiction of New York court, which annulled former marriage of defendant, was open to inquiry.

2. DIVORCE — 329 — FOREIGN DIVORCE — FRAUD.

In suit for divorce in Vermont, jurisdiction of New York court, which annulled former marriage of defendant, can be collaterally impeached only for fraud extrinsic to the matter then tried, and neither party may impeach it for false testimony then given.

3. DIVORCE — 329 — FOREIGN DIVORCE — FRAUD.

Husband had no such interest in foreign decree annulling wife's former marriage as entitled him to impeach it for fraud of wife and her mother in procuring it by falsely stating the wife's age.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶671(3) — RECORD — EVIDENCE.

The court will pay no attention to exceptions the consideration of which requires examination of evidence not in the record.

5. DIVORCE ¶286(4) — CUSTODY OF CHILD — COMPARATIVE FITNESS.

Though wife was guilty of intolerable severity, such fact is not controlling in disposing of custody of child, where husband sought ruling, in effect, that child was illegitimate, which would have relieved him of liability for her support.

Exceptions from Chittenden County Court; Fred M. Butler, Judge.

Suit by John E. Deyette against Eugenie Deyette, wherein defendant filed a cross-petition. Decree for petitioner, dismissing cross-petition, but awarding custody of child to cross-petitioner, and petitioner excepts. Affirmed and remanded.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HAS-ELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

V. A. Bullard and J. J. Enright, both of Burlington, for petitioner. A. L. Sherman, of Burlington, for petitionee.

WATSON, C. J. The petitioner, John E. Deyette, filed his petition for a divorce, and the petitionee, Eugenie Deyette, filed her cross-petition. The two petitions were heard together. A bill of divorce was granted the petitioner for intolerable severity, and the cross-petition was dismissed. The care and custody of the minor child was granted to the petitionee, and the petitioner was ordered to pay $100 per year to the petitionee toward the care and support of the child until she shall arrive at the age of 16 years. The case is here on the petitioner's exceptions.

It appeared that the petitionee had previously married one Borst in the state of New York, and that a decree of annulment of that marriage had been granted by a New York court, on the ground that she was married to him prior to, and had not lived or cohabited with him as husband and wife since attaining the age of legal consent. A certified copy of the record of those proceedings was introduced in evidence, and is made a part of the exceptions. It seems from that record that, at the time those proceedings were instituted, all the parties thereto were domiciled in the state of New York, and no claim is here made to the contrary. The record shows that the process was personally served upon the defendant Borst within that state. It therefore appears that the New York court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter. Borst failed to appear in answer to the case, and was wholly in default. Those proceedings were brought, and the decree therein rendered, under a statute of that state permitting a marriage to be annulled when contracted by a party of less than 18 years of age, provided the parties did not freely cohabit as husband and wife after such party had attained that age.

In the trial of the present case the petitioner sought to vitiate the New York decree, on the ground of fraud in its procurement; and on this question he was permitted to show, subject to exception, that Eugenie and her mother there testified that the former was born on August 31, 1887, when in fact she was born on August 31, 1886; that in fact she was 18 years of age on August 31, 1904; that she was married to Borst in the preceding October, and continued to live with him as husband and wife until the summer of 1905, and consequently they thus lived together for nearly a year after she attained the age of legal consent. The petitioner contends that the New York decree was therefore based upon fraud respecting an essential fact, by reason of which it is open to collateral attack, and is void.

[1-3] That the question of jurisdiction of the New York court was open to inquiry is beyond doubt. Domenchini's Adm'r v. Hoosac Tunnel & W. R. R., 90 Vt. 451, 98 Atl. 982. But the fraud shown did not go to the jurisdiction. We will assume that such a judgment rendered in that state may be impeached in a collateral action, for fraud, yet it can only be for fraud extrinsic or collateral to the matter tried in that action; it can not be impeached by either of the parties thereto, by reason of false testimony given at the time, even though given by a party. Camp v. Ward, 69 Vt. 286, 87 Atl. 747, 60 Am. St. Rep. 929; French v. Raymond, 82 Vt. 156, 72 Atl. 324, 187 Am. St. Rep. 994. It is said, however, that the petitioner in the present action is a stranger to the foreign decree, and therefore he may impeach it collaterally, citing in support of this position Blondin v. Brooks, 83 Vt. 472, 76 Atl. 184. In that case the fraud was as to the domicile of the plaintiff to the action in which the foreign judgment was rendered, and went to the jurisdiction. This court said the defendants, in the case of Blondin v. Brooks, were strangers to it, and that strangers can impeach a judgment collaterally "when it is for their interest to impeach it at all." Granting, though not deciding, that a stranger to a judgment may impeach it for intrinsic fraud, if it be for his interest to do so, his "interest" must be such at least, as concerns him in the collateral action wherein the impeachment is sought. Otherwise he is not aggrieved. In Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 132, the defendant was married in the state of Massachusetts to one Pomeroy. After living together there for some years, Pomeroy went to Chicago to procure a divorce for a cause not recognized by the laws of Massachusetts, and to evade the laws of that state. The defendant went to Chicago, appeared in the action, and the parties, by collusion, procured to be entered and docketed a decree of absolute divorce. Later the divorced wife married Kinnier, and the action was brought by him to annul the marriage on the ground that the former marriage of the defendant was in force, and her divorce from Pomeroy was void in the state of New York. The case stood on demurrer to the complaint. It was held that the judgment of the Illinois court effectually divorced the parties to it, and their marriage was no longer in force in any legal sense; that the plaintiff in the New York action was not defrauded or injured by the foreign judgment. The court said:

"The plaintiff was entitled to marry a marriageable person, and though she may not have been, in other respects, all he anticipated or all that was desirable, yet she was competent to marry, because her former marriage was not then in force, and, being competent, it is of no legal consequence to the plaintiff how she became so. Conceding fraud as alleged, he cannot avail himself of it."

In Ruger v. Heckel, 85 N. Y. 483, it was held that a second husband of a divorced woman could not maintain an action to have the decree divorcing her from her former husband canceled and her second marriage declared void, on the ground that the proof upon which the court acted in granting the divorce was fabricated, and the decree of divorce fraudulently obtained.

We think it clear that the petitioner in the present action has no such interest in the matter of the foreign judgment as entitles him to impeach it on the ground of the fraud shown. The wisdom of this law is forcibly brought to mind by the circumstances of this case, where the petitioner is attempting, by such impeachment, to render his marriage with the petitionee void, and thereby illegitimize their minor daughter of tender years, begotten and born in lawful wedlock, the fruit of the union. The law would be lacking in justice if it permitted such an inhuman undertaking to succeed.

[4] Several exceptions were taken by the petitioner, the consideration of which requires an examination of evidence not before us as a part of the record. To such exceptions we pay no attention. The bill of exceptions had attached to it what is stated to be exceptions taken by the petitioner during the progress of the trial. We assume that this was done by the presiding judge, and that they were intended to be a part of the bill. They are so treated. The evidence offered to be shown by the witness Loosemore, and by the witness Perry, and excluded by the court, does not appear to have been of sufficient consequence to require further notice.

Exception was taken to that part of the decree which gives the care and custody of the minor child to the petitionee, as unreasonable, in that it contemplates that the child will be taken out of the jurisdiction of the court, thus placing it beyond the power of the father to see the child as specified in the decrea. Suffice it to say of this exception that there is nothing about the decree indicating the contemplation here stated.

[5] It is said that the court in effect found and decreed that the petitionee had been guilty of such intolerable severity toward her husband as to show her not a fit person to live with him; and, if she has done ill in the marriage relation, she will be likely to do ill in the parental relation. Giving this all the force it is entitled to as an argument, it is far from controlling, in view of the fact, among others that the petitioner's love for the child is so small that it did not even deter him, on the trial of the facts in the court below, nor on exceptions in this court, from strenuously attempting to procure a ruling that could not result otherwise than to render this same child an illegitimate, and relieve him of any liability for her support. The good of the child is the primary consideration, and that can be judged to some extent by the comparative acts of the father and the mother, showing love and affection for it, and a parental interest in its welfare. It is very apparent from the record that the court below committed no error in decreeing the care, custody, and control of the child to the mother.

Judgment affirmed, and cause remanded.

(92 Vt. 390)

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. v. BROWN,
Ins. Com'r.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Washington.
June 12, 1918.)

1. STATUTES ¶217—CONSTRUCTION—LEGISLATIVE HISTORY.

The legislative history of a statute may be referred to for aid in arriving at the intent and purpose of the Legislature as expressed in the act.

2. CORPORATIONS ¶636 — ADMISSION TO DO BUSINESS IN STATE — TERMS AND CONDITIONS.

In permitting foreign corporations to do business in the state, permission may be granted under such conditions and regulations as the state shall impose, not thereby affecting matters of a federal nature.

3. INSURANCE ¶19 — LICENSE TAXES — COMPANY RULES—"SAME"—"SIMILAR."

A fidelity and deposit company, organized under Code Pub. Gen. Laws Md. 1904, art. 23, § 174, prohibiting imposition of license tax on such corporations, is not subject to license fee in Vermont under P. S. § 4824, authorizing imposition on foreign corporation of similar license fee as that imposed on a "similar" corporation by the other state, notwithstanding Vermont Life Insurance corporation pays a license fee in Maryland under Code Pub. Gen. Laws Md. 1904, art. 23, § 187, as amended by Laws 1912, c. 207, "similar," not having the significance of "same."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Same; Similar.]

Exceptions from Washington County Court; Leighton B. Slack, Judge.

Bill by the Fidelity & Deposit Company against Joseph G. Brown as Insurance Commissioner. On defendant's exceptions to orders sustaining demurrer in dismissing the appeal. Reversed, demurrer overruled, and cause remanded.

The bill alleges that by the Code of Public General Laws of the State of Maryland of 1904, article 23, section 167, as amended by the General Assembly of that state in 1912 (Laws 1912, c. 207) it is provided:

"No person, firm or corporation shall act as agent or solicitor in this state for any insurance company * * * except for such companies as may be chartered under the laws of this state, in any manner whatever relating to insurance risks, until all the provisions of this article relating thereto have been complied with, and there has been granted by the insurance commissioner a certificate of authority or license, for which said company * * * or their agent, doing a life insurance business, shall pay to the insurance commissioner the sum of three hundred dollars, * * * provided that nothing contained herein shall amend or repeal sections 170 to 174, both inclusive, of article 23 of the Code of Public General Laws of 1904."

That said section 174 reads as follows:

"No license fee shall be hereafter required of or collected from any company, corporation or association chartered, incorporated or organized under the laws of any of the states of the United States other than the state of Maryland. * * * As a condition of granting to such company, corporation or association a license to carry on any of the classes of insurance business known as surety, liability, fidelity, accident, boiler, plate glass, health, burglary, sprinkle leakage, credit indemnity, or casualty insurance. * * *"

It is further alleged that for many years last past the plaintiff has been engaged in carrying on its authorized insurance business in the state of Vermont, and has established a large number of agencies therein for such purpose, doing a large business each year, under a license granted to it according to the law of the state, and on April 1, 1917, a renewal of such license to do business in the state until April 1, 1918, was granted the plaintiff, it paying to the state for such renewal the sum of $5, as required by law.

Also that under and by virtue of the provisions of said section 167, the state of Maryland imposes upon and requires of the National Life Insurance Company, a Vermont insurance company doing a life insurance business in said state of Maryland, a fee of $300; that the plaintiff, in its business, either in this state or elsewhere, in no manner whatever engages in life insurance business, but wholly in the classes of insurance business specified in said section 174; that the defendant, as insurance commissioner of Vermont, by reason of the requirement by the state of Maryland of said fee from said National Life Insurance Company as stated above, and claiming authority and right therefor under and by virtue of section 4824 of the Public Statutes (G. L. 5623) has imposed upon, required of, and attempted to enforce against the plaintiff, as a fee for doing its said business in this state, the sum of $300, and still continues so to do, and therein has demanded of the plaintiff the payment of the additional sum of $295 as such fee, and has threatened, and still threatens, to revoke and cancel the said license of the plaintiff unless such additional sum is paid; that unless the defendant is restrained from carrying his said threats into effect, the plaintiff's said license will be canceled and revoked without any remedy or redress to the plaintiff in the premises, and thereby the plaintiff will suffer great and irreparable damage, etc.

The prayer is for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from revoking or canceling the plaintiff's said license, and from further imposing upon, requiring of, and attempting to enforce against the plaintiff, an additional fee for doing its said business in this state, for the cause aforesaid, and for general relief. A temporary injunction was issued against the defendant, to be in force until further order of court.

The defendant filed his answer, and therein incorporated a demurrer to the bill, assigning as a cause the want of equity. The printed case shows that the parties then stipulated that the cause, in so far as the claims, briefs, and arguments of the parties, are concerned, shall stand for the decision of the court wholly upon the construction of section 4824 of the Public Statutes; that until the final determination of the cause, the defendant, for or by reason of any claim based upon that section of the statute, shall in no way interfere, or attempt to interfere, with the carrying on of business in this state, but, upon the payment by the plaintiff annually of the fee of $5, shall renew the license of the plaintiff, as of April 1st, so to do business in this state; and that if, upon the final determination of the cause, the Supreme Court shall hold that the fee should be held to have been $300, then the plaintiff shall pay the same to the state of Vermont without further demur.

The demurrer, being heard solely on the question whether, on the facts alleged, the provisions of section 4824 of the Public Statutes authorizes the insurance commissioner to collect a fee of $300 from the plaintiff for doing business in this state, was sustained, the bill adjudged insufficient, and dismissed, with costs to the defendant, the temporary injunction to continue in force pending the appeal taken by the plaintiff.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Theriault & Hunt, of Montpelier, for plaintiff. Herbert G. Barber, of Brattleboro, for defendant.

WATSON, C. J. The only question presented is as to the construction of section 4824 of the Public Statutes, now section 5623 of the General Laws, which reads:

"If another state or country imposes upon or requires of a domestic insurance company or its agents doing business therein, fees, fines, penalties, deposits, obligations or prohibitions exceeding those imposed by this state upon or required of foreign insurance companies doing business herein, an insurance company organized under the laws of such other state or country and its agents doing business in this state shall be subject to the fees, fines, penalties, deposits, obligations or prohibitions similar to those so imposed in such other state or country. * * *

The plaintiff claims that if this section of the statute is to stand, it must be construed as applicable in its retaliatory operation, not to insurance companies generally, regardless of the lines of business in which they are engaged, but to insurance companies doing like lines of business; in other words, that the retaliatory operation must be according to classification. While the defendant claims that the true intent and purpose of the General Assembly was to make the maximum fee, etc., imposed upon any Vermont insurance company by another state, the fee, etc., to be imposed upon all insurance companies of the same state, doing business in Vermont.

[1] The law of this section was first enacted as No. 115 of the Acts of 1888. The legislative history of this enactment may be referred to for aid in arriving at the intent and purpose of the lawmakers as expressed in the act. Town School Dist. of Brattleboro v. School Dist. No. 2, 72 Vt. 451, 48 Atl. 697; Lapina v. Williams, 232 U. S. 78, 34 Sup. Ct. 196, 58 L. Ed. 515. The original bill, as introduced, had reference to life insurance companies only; and the fees, etc., to be imposed upon or required of a foreign life insurance company and its agents while doing business in this state, were "the same" as were imposed upon or required of a domestic life insurance company while doing business in the state or country under whose laws such foreign life insurance company was created, in case they be more in amount or at a greater rate than those required by other provisions of law of this state. By amendments the bill, as it became a law, had reference to "any insurance company," and the fees, etc., to be imposed upon or required of any insurance company coming from another state or country, and its agents, doing business in this state, were fixed as "similar" to those imposed in such other state or country upon any domestic insurance company, while doing business therein, in case, etc.

[2] It is matter of common knowledge that there are several general classes of insurance. The word "similar" is defined (Webster's Internat. Dict.) as "nearly corresponding; resembling in many respects; somewhat alike; having a general likeness." It is to be noticed that, as thus defined, it has not the significance of "the same," identical. The statute under consideration contemplates reciprocal relations founded upon consent, which is implied from comity between the states and the absence of prohibition. In permitting foreign corporations to do business in this state, the permission may be granted under such conditions and regulations as the state shall impose, not thereby affecting matters of a federal nature. Cook v. Howland, 74 Vt. 398, 52 Atl. 978, 50 L. R. A. 338, 98 Am. St. Rep. 912. The license, and renewals thereof, granted to the plaintiff prior to the bringing of this bill, were under the provisions of P. S. 4764 (now G. L. 5554), for each of which, extending until the 1st day of April thereafter, the company was required to pay the insurance commissioner $5. The excess of this sum can be collected of the plaintiff only under the provisions of the retaliatory statute in question. It seems pretty clearly to have been the intention of the Legislature, when this statute is applicable, to return like for like—to treat an insurance company coming from another state or country, to do business here, the same as such a company from this state is treated in such other state or country, while doing business there. So long as the provisions of the original bill related solely to life insurance companies, the amount of the fees, etc., was aptly fixed as "the same." And yet it was fixed by classification, for not two insurance companies, even of the same class, are identical; they have but a general likeness, and are therefore only similar. Were the law in terms to impose the same fees, etc., upon "similar insurance companies," there should seem to be no doubt as to the meaning intended; and yet, as the law was passed, and as it now is, broad enough to bring within its provisions all insurance companies, we think the same idea of classification obviously flows out of the nature of the purpose to be accomplished, and that the word "similar," in the connection of its use, carries with it this basic idea, and that such was the intention.

Therefore, by the law of the section of the statute in question, when applicable, the fees, etc., which shall be imposed upon or required of an insurance company organized under the laws of another state or country and its agents doing business in this state, shall correspond in amount to the fees, etc., imposed by such other state or country upon an insurance company of the same classification, incorporated in this state, or its agents, doing business in such other state or country.

[3] According to the allegations in the bill, the plaintiff is not of the same classification as the National Life Insurance Company of this state, and is nowhere engaged in doing life insurance business. It is engaged exclusively in the classes of insurance business specified in section 174 of the Maryland statute set forth in the statement of the case; and the law of that section is that no license fee shall be required of or collected from any insurance company, corporation, or association chartered, incorporated, or organized under the laws of any other state of the Union, as a condition of granting to such company, corporation, or association a license to carry on any of the classes of insurance business specified therein. It follows that the insurance commissioner is not authorized by the provisions of section 4824 of the Public Statutes (G. L. 5623) to collect from the plaintiff the additional fee demanded of it for doing business in this state.

Decree reversed, demurrer overruled, bill adjudged sufficient, and cause remanded.

(92 Conn. 702)

ZETTERSTROM v. THOMAS.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. BAILMENT §21—LOSS OF GOODS—LIABILITY—EVIDENCE.

Where defendant, being called to carry chief of police to scene of automobile and motorcycle collision, was requested by chief to carry motorcycle back, but refused to do so, and later was asked to go and get the motorcycle, and on going to get it found it had been stolen, he was not liable for the loss thereof as a bailee.

2. BAILMENT §21—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

"Bailment" is delivery of goods in trust on contract, express or implied, that trust shall be truly executed, and goods restored to bailor as soon as purpose of bailment shall be answered.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Bailment.]

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, New Haven County; Isaac Wolfe, Judge.

Action by Harold Zetterstrom against Herbert C. Thomas. Judgment on verdict for plaintiff, which was set aside, and plaintiff appeals. No error.

Walter J. Walsh, of New Haven, for appellant. Charles F. Roberts, of New Haven, for appellee.

RORABACK, J. The complaint alleges that in October, 1916, the plaintiff was riding a motorcycle upon a highway in the town of Orange, when he collided with a motor vehicle and was seriously injured. Certain police officials of the town of Orange took charge of the motorcycle, and one of them authorized and employed the defendant to remove the machine in question, which was slightly damaged because of this collision. The defendant accepted such employment, and undertook to remove the motorcycle from the highway to his garage in the town of Orange, but negligently and carelessly left the same unsecured, without any one to guard it, so that the motorcycle was taken by some person or persons unknown to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff has never been able to recover possession of his machine.

[1] The defendant's motion to set aside the verdict was properly granted, for it appears from the evidence that about 9:30 o'clock at night on October 10, 1916, the plaintiff and a companion were riding a motorcycle along the highway in the town of Orange, when he collided with an automobile. The force of the collision threw the plaintiff off his machine, which caused a severe injury to him, and he was removed to the hospital. The fact of the collision was communicated to the police headquarters of the town of Orange. The chief of police of this town requested the defendant to send a car to take him to the place of the accident. The defendant took a light touring car, and carried the officer to the place of the collision, which was about four miles distant from the defendant's garage. This was about 11 o'clock at night. The defendant refused to permit the motorcycle to be loaded into his car, because of its size and weight. After an unsuccessful attempt to remove the motorcycle from the highway, the defendant carried the officer back to police headquarters, where a report was made of the collision. After the matter had been reported to police headquarters, the defendant went to his home. Early in the morning of October 11th, the defendant was called up by an officer of the police department and requested by him to go up in the morning and get the plaintiff's machine. This the defendant agreed to do. When the defendant attempted to obtain possession of the plaintiff's machine, it could not be found, as some one had removed it during the latter part of the night.

[2] It is plain from the evidence that the defendant did not stand in the relation of bailee of the plaintiff when his property was surreptitiously taken from the highway. While it is true that there are a number of different kinds of bailments, the different kinds are of the same general character, and for the purposes of this case the word may be defined to be:

"A delivery of goods in trust, on a contract, express or implied, that the trust shall be truly executed, and the goods restored to the bailor as soon as the purpose of the bailment shall be answered."

This is a standard definition of this word, and in the present case there can be no difficulty in understanding its application to the facts presented by the record. The evidence plainly shows that the plaintiff's property was never for a moment in the defendant's possession as bailee, nor does it appear that there was any acceptance of the article by the defendant, as the law of bailment requires. The record clearly indicates that the verdict of the jury was one which could not have been reasonably reached from the evidence, and that it was properly set aside by the court below.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

(98 Conn. 33)

Appeal of EVA et al.

In re EVA'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1071(1)—CURE OF ERRORS.

Parties could not complain of alleged errors in the findings of facts, where they had made a motion for a correction in the court below, and such corrections as were asked were granted.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶265(1) — EXCEPTIONS—CORRECTION OF FINDINGS.

In the absence of exceptions to fact findings, as required by Gen. St. 1902, §§ 795, 796, alleged errors in finding facts will not be reviewed on appeal.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶704(2)—RECORD—REVIEW OF FINDINGS—ABSENCE OF EVIDENCE.

In the absence of the evidence, alleged errors in finding facts cannot be reviewed.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶18—APPOINTMENT — QUALIFICATIONS — RESIDENCE.

It was not error to refuse appointment as administrator of a person next of kin, residing in a distant state, whose occupation required his presence in such state, and who was unfamiliar with the matters of the estate, when there appeared to be some antagonism between him and some other heirs.

5. EVIDENCE ¶351—ECCLLESIASTICAL RECORDS—ADMISSIBILITY.

In determining legitimacy of alleged heir, seeking appointment of administrator, the priest's record of marriage of her parents and of her baptism was admissible, under Gen. St. 1902, § 703, as original entries.

6. MARRIAGE ¶40(1) — LEGALITY — PRESUMPTIONS.

When a marriage has been shown, the law raises a strong presumption in favor of its legality, and the strength of this presumption increases with the lapse of time.

7. MARRIAGE ¶50(1) — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

Circumstantial evidence is always competent proof of marriage in civil cases.

8. BASTARDS ¶6—PROOF OF LEGITIMACY.

Since, under Gen. St. 1902, §§ 697, 698, judicial notice must be taken of the statute laws and judicial decisions of other states, and by the decisions of New York marriage may occur without formalities, legitimacy of a child of a New York marriage was sufficiently shown by the priest's record of having married her parents and of her baptism, so as to warrant appointment of administrator on her petition therefor, as next of kin.

Appeal from Superior Court, Litchfield County; William M. Maltbie, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of John Eva, deceased, for the appointment of an administrator. From the decree rendered, Richard Eva and others appeal. No error.

From the finding it appears that John Eva, for many years a resident of Bridge-water, in the probate district of New Milford, died intestate on December 17, 1916. He left an estate of about $12,000. This consisted of deposits in Connecticut savings banks. He left no lineal descendants surviving him. The deceased had two brothers, William J. and Richard H. Eva. They died before the intestate. William J. left eight children, of which the appellant is one. These children all resided in the state of Michigan when the testator died. Richard H. Eva was married to Margaret Shannon on February 1, 1866, by Father John Orsenigo, at Croton Falls, N. Y., and one child, Annie Eliza was born of this marriage. On June 26, 1883, Richard H. Eva married Mary R. Brown at Fredericksburg, Va. Three children were born of that union. Annie Eliza went to live with the deceased when she was 4 years of age, and lived with him most of the time until her marriage. For about 12 years, prior to his death, John Eva lived with Annie E. and her husband at Bridgewater, where he died. On December 21, 1916, Annie E. made application to the court of probate for the district of New Milford requesting that John S. Addis, of New Milford, be appointed administrator of the estate of her uncle, John Eva. On June 10, 1917, the children of William J., including the appellant made application to the same court of probate for the appointment of Frank W. Marsh, of New Milford, as administrator of the estate of John Eva. Upon that application the court of probate issued an order of notice for a hearing. The finding does not disclose that this application was ever withdrawn. Subsequently the appellant, Richard Eva, made another application, praying that letters of administration be granted to him. On March 6, 1917, the court of probate heard these applications and found that the heirs failed to agree on the appointment of an administrator among themselves. The trial court also found that from the appearance and attitude toward each other as they appeared before the court on the hearing of the appeal and from the nature of the testimony offered, it was evident that there existed a strong personal feeling among those claiming to share in the estate. All the children of William J. Eva and the children of Mary R. Brown Eva still desire the appointment of Richard Eva as administrator, but object to the appointment of John S. Addis.

Richard Eva, the appellant, is a resident of the state of Michigan. For more than 15 years before the decease of John Eva, Richard Eva had not seen him, and knew nothing of his affairs. During this period he had not been in this state, except on two short visits, up to the time of the trial. He was for several years a fireman, and is now employed as a through freight engineer on the Michigan Central Railroad between Jackson and Detroit, Mich. He is a person of good appearance and intelligence, apparently about 35 years of age. He can procure a leave of absence from his employment at any time, and can obtain free transportation to and from Connecticut. John S.

Addis, the appellee, is a disinterested person, familiar with the settlement of estates, residing in the town of New Milford and is a suitable person to act as administrator. Upon his appointment he duly gave bond, qualified, and entered upon his duties as administrator, and has since then been performing them.

From the reasons of appeal, on which the appellant tried his case in the court below, we ascertain that his contention then was that the deceased, John Eva, left no widow surviving him, and the appellants are all of the next of kin and the only heirs at law of the deceased; that none of the appellants have refused or are incapable to act as administrator of the estate of the deceased; and that Annie E. Gough is not an heir at law or one of the next of kin of the deceased.

Martin J. Cunningham, of Danbury, and Frank W. Marsh, of New Milford, for appellants. Leonard J. Nickerson, of Cornwall, for appellee.

RORABACK, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1-3] Several reasons of appeal are based upon alleged errors in finding facts. These objections are without merit, as the record discloses that a motion was made to obtain a correction of the finding of the superior court, and it appears that the corrections asked for, so far as material, were made. Furthermore, the evidence is not before us, and, besides, there are no exceptions to finding, as required by sections 795 and 796 of the General Statutes. The motion is denied.

The appellant claims the right to administer upon the estate of the deceased by virtue of the provisions of section 318 of the General Statutes, which provides that:

"When any person shall die intestate, the court of probate, in the district in which the deceased last dwelt, shall grant administration of the estate to the husband or wife or next of kin, or to both, or, on their refusal or incapacity, or failure to give bond, or upon the objection of any heir or creditor to such appointment, found reasonable by said court, to any other person whom the court deems proper."

The question here presented is a narrow one. It appears that objection was made to the appointment of Richard Eva by Annie E. Gough, an heir at law and next of kin, which objection the trial court has found reasonable. It also appears that the court below has found it is for the best interest of the estate that a disinterested person should be appointed, and has also confirmed the appointment of Mr. Addis, which was made by the court of probate, so that the only question for us to decide is whether or not the action of the superior court was a reasonable exercise of the discretion resting in it.

[4] The facts disclosed by the record fall far short of showing that it was the duty of the court of probate to appoint the appellant,

Richard Eva, administrator. He and all those whom he represents were entire strangers to the situation that existed in Bridgewater when John Eva died. They knew but little of him, and nothing of his affairs at that time. Richard Eva's only qualification for his appointment was the fact that he is an heir at law and next of kin of John Eva. He is a railroad engineer, and presumably unacquainted with probate procedure under the laws of Connecticut. His calling is such that it is fair to assume that, in this critical period in the history of this country, his undivided time and attention are imperatively required at a place hundreds of miles away from the spot where he would frequently be called upon to act, if appointed administrator of the estate of John Eva. From the nature of this controversy it is apparent, as the trial court has found, that there are antagonisms and differences existing between the opposing parties now before us, which cannot be easily adjusted or reconciled.

In this connection we have not overlooked the fact that the legitimacy of Mrs. Gough has been questioned by an attempt to show that the marriage of her parents was invalid. Upon the other hand, it appears that John S. Addis, the appointee, is a resident of New Milford, a disinterested person familiar with the settlement of estates, and a proper person to act as administrator. The fact that Mrs. Gough has made application for the appointment of Mr. Addis should not militate against his suitability. It appears that Mrs. Gough is an heir at law and next of kin, and has a large interest in the estate of John Eva. It has also been shown that for many years of her life Mrs. Gough has lived with John Eva in Bridgewater. Upon the facts as they are presented by the record, the courts below were fully justified in finding that there was reasonable objection to the appointment of Richard to administer the affairs of this estate. It is almost unnecessary for us to add that we are of the opinion that the superior court acted reasonably and with due regard to the best interest of all concerned in conferring this appointment upon Mr. Addis.

As we have seen, Annie E. Gough claims to be an heir at law and next of kin of John Eva, the deceased. If that be so, her right to object to the appointment of the appellant, Richard Eva, cannot be denied. Whether her claim in this respect is well founded depends upon the validity of a marriage contract claimed to have taken place between her father and mother in 1866 at Croton Falls, in the state of New York. To prove that the father of Mrs. Gough, Richard H. Eva, was lawfully married to her mother, Margaret Shannon, the appellee offered in evidence a record of marriage in connection with other facts and circumstances. The following is a copy of the record:

"February 1st, 1866, Riccard Ida to Margaret Shannan
James Quinn
Margaret Scully
John Orsenigo."

To the introduction of this evidence the appellant objected, upon the grounds that it does not appear to be a record of marriage, or, if so, a record of what marriages, or in what place; it does not show who married them; nothing appears upon the face of the register showing that anybody married these parties; it does not show that anybody who was competent to perform the marriage ceremony did, in fact, perform a marriage ceremony between these parties; there is no evidence that the register was one required to be kept by law; and that it does not appear that these were the identical parties, Margaret Shannon and Richard H. Eva, that are involved in this suit. The superior court overruled these objections and admitted the evidence, and this is made a reason of appeal.

In connection with the production and admission of this record, the appellee introduced a credible witness, who stated that she knew Richard H. Eva and Margaret Shannon in 1866, and for some time prior thereto; that they resided in the Croton Falls parish in the state of New York; that she knew of their wedding, and that after this event they lived together as man and wife; that about one year after their marriage a child, named Annie, now Annie E. Gough, was born to them; and that she knew of the baptism of this child at Croton Falls. The appellee also called as a witness Rev. Thomas P. Phelan, pastor of the Roman Catholic parish at Brewster, N. Y., and the custodian of the records of marriages and baptisms of the old parish at Croton Falls. He produced this original record of marriages performed in the parish at Croton Falls, kept by John Orsenigo, who, as this witness stated, was an Italian and the parish priest at Croton Falls from 1853 to 1869, and who was generally known and called Father John. The record was kept in all respects according to the rules and customs of the Roman Catholic Church. The first entry in the book was: "Ego conjunctivat in matrimonialis." Then follows the names of the persons married, names of the witnesses, and the name of John Orsenigo. The appellee, against the objection and exception of the appellant, also placed in evidence the original record of baptisms, showing the baptism of Anne Eliza Eva, now Annie E. Gough. The entry in this record is as follows:

"March 1867
March 8th, Riccard Ida & Margaret Shannan
Anne Eliza (b. 13th Feb.)
Margaret McGabe John Orsenigo."

The same person who baptized this child also performed the marriage ceremony just referred to. He spelled the name of the man described therein as "Riccard Ida." He also spelled it in this way in the record of marriages. Father Phelan, who was the custodian of these records, presented the same in court and stated that he was familiar with Italian, and that "Riccard" is the Italian for Richard.

[5] These records, although not full and complete, were admissible. Section 703 of the General Statutes provides that the records of the proceedings of any ecclesiastical society or religious congregation, or copies thereof, certified by their respective clerks, shall be admissible evidence in all courts of such proceedings. These entries were admissible as original entries. Entries in a family Bible or religious register are admissible. See 1 Greenl. Ev. (15th Ed.) §§ 484, 493; Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 582. The record of baptisms made by the minister of a parish is evidence of the fact. Huntly v. Compstock, 2 Root, 100.

[6-8] The courts of Connecticut take judicial notice of the statute laws and judicial decisions of other states. General Statutes, §§ 697, 698. As the marriage contract, if any, was made in the state of New York, it becomes important to notice the laws of this state. 26 Cyc. 829. In Hynes et al. v. McDermott et al., 82 N. Y. 47, 37 Am. Rep. 538, Chief Justice Folger, in discussing this proposition, adopted the doctrine laid down in Brinkley v. Brinkley, 50 N. Y. 184, 10 Am. Rep. 460. This is stated to be as follows:

"By the law of this state, a man and a woman who are competent to marry each other, without going before a minister or magistrate, without the presence of any person as a witness, with no previous public notice given, with no form or ceremony, civil or religious, and with no record or written evidence of the act kept, and merely by words of present contract between them, may take upon themselves the relation of husband and wife, and be bound to themselves, to the state, and to society as such; and if, after that, the marriage is denied, proof of actual cohabitation as husband and wife, acknowledgment and recognition of each other to friends and acquaintances and the public as such, and the general reputation thereof, will enable a court to presume that there was in the beginning an actual and bona fide marriage."

Under certain well-known principles of administration the difficulty of making proof receives constant recognition by the court. The actor in any case will be required, and within the limits of sound reasoning permitted, to present to the court the best and fullest case that it is within his power to offer. In this respect the element of remoteness is an important one. It follows that, where the fact in question comes to the tribunal from a time beyond memory, roughly placed by a rule of procedure at 30 years, it will readily be assumed that all conditions necessary to its legal validity existed. Enfield v. Ellington, 67 Conn. 463, 34 Atl. 818; N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Cella, 88 Conn. 520, 91 Atl. 972, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 590. When a marriage has been shown, the law raises a strong presumption in favor of its legality, and the strength of this presumption increases with the lapse of time. In re Sloan, 50 Wash. 86, 96 Pac. 684, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960; Franklin v. Lee, 30 Ind. App. 31, 62 N. E. 78; note 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99. Circumstantial evidence is always competent, and in many cases sufficient proof of marriage in civil cases. 18 Ruling Case Law, 421, and cases cited in note 18.

Looking at the facts in the present case, we find that the appellee took one important step in proof of his contention that there was a marriage between the parents of Mrs. Gough by the introduction of the record of marriages at Croton Falls in 1863. The act of baptism shown by the records upon this subject speaks in most significant language as to the legitimacy of Mrs. Gough. Much stress is laid on the fact that in these records the husband and father is described as "Riccarda Ida," and not Richard Eva, as he would have been, if he were in fact the party now referred to. It is fair to assume that these misdescriptions were made owing to the fact that an Italian priest performed the ceremonies of marriage and baptism in question. The assumption that these parties were not the identical ones now referred to has but little force, when this fact is considered in connection with the other circumstances presented by the record. In support of the view that a marriage relation existed between these parties, in addition to the facts hereinbefore referred to, it appears that the woman took the name of Eva, that they cohabited together as man and wife, and that they had a daughter who always bore the name of Annie E. Eva until her marriage with Gough.

The facts found fully warranted the superior court in reaching the conclusion that a lawful marriage existed between Richard H. Eva and Margaret Shannon.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

(93 Conn. 58)

Appeal of POPE.

POPE v. ROGERS et al.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. July 23, 1918.)

1. WILLS §288(1)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a suit to establish a will, the burden of proof of essential facts is on proponent.

2. WILLS §303(6)—PROBATE—SUBSCRIBING WITNESSES.

In a suit to establish a will, the necessary facts need not be established by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses.

3. WILLS §300—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The essential facts for proof of a will need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

4. WILLS §302(1) — PROBATE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

To establish a will, all that is necessary is that upon the whole proof it shall reasonably appear more probable than otherwise that the instrument was executed in the manner required by the statute.

5. WILLS §302(1) — PROBATE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a suit to establish a will, evidence held sufficient to show that the will was written before the testator and witnesses signed it, that testator's signature was affixed before the signature of the witnesses who saw such signature, and that testator declared the instrument to be his will.

6. WILLS §324(4) — PROBATE — QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In a suit to establish a will, where it was claimed that the body of the will and testator's signature were added after the signature of the witnesses, the improbability of the testator and the witnesses signing their names to a blank piece of paper without comment was for the jury.

7. WILLS §118—EXECUTION—SIGNATURE OF TESTATOR—DECLARATION.

A declaration by a testator, after the witnesses had signed, in response to the negative answer to his question as to whether they knew what they had signed, that "it is my will," was a sufficient declaration to the witnesses that the signature which they had just seen and witnessed was his own.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; Howard J. Curtis, Judge.

Suit by Homer N. Pope against Hattie P. Rogers and others, executors of Frederick J. Pope, deceased. From a decree establishing the will, plaintiff appeals. No error.

This is an appeal from the judgment of the superior court on the second trial of the contestants' appeal from a decree of probate establishing a certain instrument as the last will of Frederick J. Pope. On the first trial in the superior court a verdict was directed for the proponents, and this court held that the facts did not show due execution of the instrument, and ordered a new trial for the reasons stated in Pope v. Rogers, 92 Conn. 243, 102 Atl. 583. On the first trial no evidence of the due execution of the will was offered, other than the testimony of the three attesting witnesses, who were pupils at the testator's school for boys and girls. Their testimony was, in substance, that Mr. Pope, who had been seated at his desk in the schoolroom, left it, carrying a paper in his hand, and approached a table at which the three pupils were seated. He thereupon presented the paper, and asked the three in turn to sign it, and they complied by writing their names successively the one under the other. None of them noticed Mr. Pope's signature on the paper when they signed it, or that he signed it in their presence, or that it then had on any part of the typewriting which now forms the body of the instrument, and none knew from observation, or from any statement made by Mr. Pope, what the paper was or why they were asked to sign it. On the second trial their testimony was to the same effect, but was supplemented by the testimony of two girls, also pupils of Mr. Pope, who testified that they saw Mr. Pope take the paper from his desk, unfold it, and write something upon it; that he then took it to the three boys and asked them to sign it, and when all had done so asked them whether they knew what they had signed, and on their saying they did not, he said to them, "It is my will." The paper itself shows that the signatures of the testator and of the three witnesses were written over and upon the lines made by the typewriter for that purpose, and the appearance of the folds indicate that the instrument was typewritten before it was folded.

Harrison Hewitt and Charles M. Clark, both of New Haven, for appellant. Charles S. Hamilton, of New Haven, for appellees.

BEACH, J. (after stating the facts as above). Upon its face the paper is a valid will, and the essential facts necessary, under the circumstances of this case, to prove its due execution, were correctly stated by the court in its charge to the jury. They are: First, that the paper, Exhibit A, contained all the typewritten matter now on it when signed by the testator and the witnesses; second, that the signature of the testator was on Exhibit A, as it now appears, when the witnesses signed it; third, that the witnesses saw the signature of the testator on the paper at the time they signed it; fourth, the testator informed the witnesses (who did not see him write it) that the signature was his own.

[1-4] The burden of proof was on the proponents to establish these facts; but they were not bound to establish them by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, and they were not bound to prove them beyond a reasonable doubt. All that was necessary was that, upon the whole proof, it should reasonably appear more probable than otherwise that the instrument was executed in the manner required by the statute.

[5, 6] The first requirement stated by the court was sufficiently evidenced by the appearance of the paper, which shows conclusively that the typewritten lines prepared for the signatures of the testator and witnesses were on the paper before they signed it; and the appearance of the folds indicates that the rest of the typewritten matter was placed on the paper before it was folded, and before the testator unfolded it for his own signature and for the signatures of the witnesses. The adjustment of the rest of the typewriting to the lines left for signatures, and the extreme improbability of four persons writing their names on a blank piece of paper, without any comment being made at the time, are also proper considerations for the jury.

The second requirement was met by the testimony of the two girls, who saw the testator unfold the paper and write something on it before he presented it for the signatures of the witnesses. As every other stroke of handwriting on the paper is otherwise accounted for, the only thing the testator could have then written on it is his own signature as it now appears thereon. And since the signature was there when the witnesses signed their names as witnesses in close proximity to it, the jury may well have refused to believe that they did not then see it. Their whole testimony was discredited, so far as the accuracy of their present recollection was concerned, by an affidavit executed when the paper was first offered for probate, in which they stated under oath that they saw the testator sign the paper, that he declared it to be his last will, and that they signed as witnesses in his presence and at his request.

[7] The fourth requirement, that the testator must have informed the witnesses that the signature on the paper was his own, is fairly satisfied by the testator's declaration that the paper was his will. Under the circumstances this statement was a sufficient declaration to the witnesses that the signature which they had just seen and witnessed was his own.

For these reasons the motion to set aside the verdict was properly denied. The assignments of error, based upon alleged errors and omissions in the charge of the court, are overruled. The law, so far as it is applicable to this case, is fully and correctly stated in the four propositions already discussed, and in this and other respects the court charged the jury in accordance with the substance, though not the language, of the contestants' requests to charge.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

(93 Conn. 61)

ANDERSON et ux. v. COLWELL

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. Aug. 9, 1918.)

1. PLEADING \S 236(6) — AMENDMENT — CHARACTERIZATION OF TRANSACTION.

In action for reconveyance of realty alleged to have been deeded to defendant in trust, though deed was absolute in form, disallowance of plaintiff's motion to amend by substitution of "mortgage" for "trust," and "mortgagee" for "trustee," was proper, as character of transaction was determined by allegations, and not by the pleader's characterization.

2. MORTGAGES \S 37(2) — ABSOLUTE DEED — PAROL EVIDENCE.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that an absolute deed was intended to stand only as security, so that the transaction was in fact a mortgage, whether the mortgage was to secure a present debt or future advances.

3. MORTGAGES \S 37(2) — ABSOLUTE DEED — PAROL SHOWING OF CONSIDERATION.

The consideration of an absolute deed intended as a mortgage, serving to prevent a resulting trust in favor of the grantor, may be shown by parol, even in cases which did not involve fraud, accident, or mistake.

4. MORTGAGES \S 32(5)—DEED ABSOLUTE IN FORM.

Where husband and wife transferred incumbered realty to defendant by deed absolute in form, but merely to secure payment of advances promised to be made by defendant, and to secure contracts for work to be given husband by defendant, transaction constituted a mortgage, whether or not defendant made advances.

Prentice, C. J., and Beach, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; Joel H. Reed, Judge.

Action by Matthew S. Anderson and wife against Daniel Colwell to secure reconveyance of land absolutely conveyed, as made in trust. From refusal to set aside judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Judgment set aside, and new trial ordered.

George E. Beers and Claude B. Maxfield, both of New Haven, for appellants. Louis M. Rosenbluth and Edwin A. Clark, both of New Haven, for appellee.

WHEELER, J. The complaint sets up these facts:

Mary E. Anderson was on November 1, 1913, the owner of three pieces of land, with the buildings thereon. She was in need of money with which to make repairs and to pay the sums due on incumbrances on this property. Her husband, Matthew S. Anderson, was in need of money for use in his business. Shortly after November 1, 1913, the said Mary E. Anderson transferred, by conveyance absolute in form, this property to the defendant, upon his agreement to make advances to her and her husband, the plaintiffs herein, to engage him to do certain work, to permit them to have possession of these premises, and to occupy one of the houses without paying rent until the final adjustment of the account, and to permit the plaintiffs to hold possession of all of this property until about November, 1915 or 1916. And in consideration of the agreements of the defendant, the plaintiffs agreed to hold this property, keep the charges against it maturing from time to time paid up, keep it in repair, and collect the rents, and to preserve an accurate account of all receipts and disbursements made on account of it, and to pay rent for the house and barn occupied as a home by them at a named rent. The parties to this agreement mutually agreed that in about two or three years from November 1, 1913, they would strike a balance, and the amount due according to this balance was to be paid, and thereupon the defendant was to transfer to the plaintiff Mary E. Anderson this property transferred by her to him.

The plaintiffs are indebted to the defendant for the balance due on rent, $566; also for cash received from defendant for material and labor, $1,345.82; also for amounts paid by the defendant upon incumbrances, not to exceed $1,800—in all, $3,711.82. The defendant is indebted to the plaintiffs for work and material furnished by Matthew S. Anderson, $3,389.17; also for the amount agreed to be paid for the transfer of a mortgage on property on Peck avenue, $750; also for acquiring title to said property, $50—in all, $4,189.17. This leaves a balance due upon this account in favor of the plaintiffs of $478.35.

The plaintiffs have carried out their part of this agreement, and demanded an accounting and a reconveyance of this property, and offered to pay any balance found due. The defendant has, in violation of his agreements, brought an action of summary process to recover possession of these premises. The plaintiffs pray for a revesting of the title to these premises in them, for an accounting, and for a judgment for the amount due on the accounting. The defendant, in his answer and counterclaim, claims a balance due of $1,378.70, and prays judgment for $1,500.

Upon the trial the plaintiffs introduced in evidence the deeds affecting these transfers. These were quitclaim deeds, absolute on their face and expressed to be for a valuable consideration. Thereupon the plaintiffs inquired of the witness Matthew S. Anderson as to what was said at the oral interview, as a result of which these transfers were made. This conversation defendant objected to as an attempt (1) to establish a trust in real estate by parol; (2) to vary by parol the terms of an absolute deed, expressed to be for a valuable consideration; (3) to vary the terms of a written instrument, when there was no allegation in the complaint of fraud, accident, or mistake in its procurement, and this conversation occurred prior to its execution.

The plaintiffs claimed the evidence "to show that the transaction was really a mortgage, and not an absolute transfer." This evidence was excluded. The plaintiffs moved to amend the complaint by substituting the word "mortgage" for "trust," and "mortgagee" for "trustee," in the complaint, wherein it was alleged that the conveyance was in fact upon the trust described in the foregoing agreement. The motion was denied. Thereafter the witness Matthew S. Anderson was inquired of:

"After this conveyance was made to Mr. Colwell, did you do certain work for Mr. Colwell on his property?"

And also:

"At the time that you made the transfers to Mr. Colwell, did you owe Mr. Colwell any money at that time? A. No, sir."

And also:

"After these transfers were made, was any money paid by Mr. Colwell on your account, or any expenses incurred for you?"

All of this evidence was excluded. These rulings are assigned as errors, and are the basis of the appeal. If they are correct, the denial of the motion to set aside the nonsuit was not erroneous.

[1] The disallowance of the amendment was proper. The character of the transaction was determined by the allegations of the complaint, and not by the characterization of the pleader. The duty of the court was to examine these allegations, and ascertain what the transaction amounted to, and whether it described a "trust" or a "mortgage."

[2] The court excluded this evidence upon the objections made by the defendant, and upon the further ground that, although parol evidence might have been admitted, had the mortgage been one to secure a present debt, this rule was not applicable in a case such as this was claimed to be, where the mortgage was to secure future advances. There is no difference in the rule whether the mortgage was given to secure future advances or a present debt. Matz v. Arick, 76 Conn. 383, 391, 56 Atl. 630; Weissman v. Volino, 84 Conn. 326, 80 Atl. 81. As early as French v. Burns, 35 Conn. 359, 363, we said:

"The rule that an absolute deed, if intended as a security for a debt, is to be regarded as a mortgage, is too well known to require the citation of authorities in support of it."

In Williams v. Chadwick, 74 Conn. 252, 255, 50 Atl. 720, 721, we said:

"But a conveyance, absolute in form, will in equity be regarded as a mortgage, when the facts show that the real transaction is a transfer of property merely to secure the payment of a debt."

The test to be applied is:

"Was the conveyance in fact made as security for some debt?" Fosdick v. Roberson, 91 Conn. 571, 575, 100 Atl. 1059, 1060; French v. Burns, 35 Conn. 359.

[3] The deed of land evidences the intention to pass title, and does not express the contract pursuant to which the deed was given. Lynch v. Moser, 72 Conn. 714, 719, 46 Atl. 153; Lovell v. Hammond Co., 66 Conn. 500, 510, 84 Atl. 511. The consideration of the deed serves to prevent a resulting trust in favor of the grantor. It may be shown by parol, and this evidence is not limited to cases involving fraud, accident, or mistake. Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) § 286.

The defendant meets the contention that these deeds, though absolute on their face, were in fact mortgages, by claiming: First. That it nowhere appears in the evidence or finding that the court made such a ruling. This is inaccurate; it so appears in the printed record, and also in the record of the court of which the printed record is a part. Second. That the evidence of the agreement could not be proved by parol, since the purpose is to secure a transfer of lands held under an express trust, and in the absence of allegations of fraud, accident, or mistake. We have seen that this was not the purpose of the plaintiffs; their purpose was to show that the transaction alleged, which they attempted to prove, was a mortgage, and therefore it was permissible to prove that the deed, though absolute on its face, was in fact a mortgage.

[4] The transaction as disclosed in the complaint must decide whether it was a mortgage. Mrs. Anderson concededly transferred three pieces of real estate to the defendant, and these were incumbered with mortgages, and she and her husband agreed to continue in the possession of these premises, to pay the charges maturing upon these premises, keep them in repair, collect the rent, and keep an accurate account of all receipts and disbursements, and to pay a named rental for the house occupied by them as the final accounting between the parties; and in consideration of these transfers and of these agreements the defendant agreed to make certain advances to the plaintiffs, to engage Mr. Anderson to do certain work, to permit the plaintiffs to hold possession of these premises, and to occupy one of the houses without paying rent until the final accounting between the parties, at a time about two or three years distant.

No other purpose of these transfers is disclosed, save the advances promised to be made and the work promised to be given. Whether the defendant had in fact made advances or not would not change the character of this transaction. It was a transfer to secure the payment of advances promised to be made, and to secure contracts for work to be given. This is a plain case of a mortgage. It would be an unwholesome and unknown sort of equity which would permit one to obtain a transfer of valuable real estate upon a promise to make advances, and to subsequently upon their repayment retransfer, and then, upon failure to make the advances, refuse to compel a retransfer.

But this is not that case. Here the defendant did make advances by paying certain mortgages upon these premises, and for these the plaintiffs agreed to account; and if the technical rule which the defendant sought to have enforced had prevented the plaintiffs from securing a retransfer, the facts alleged would have made imperative the accounting which the parties are alleged to have agreed to make. All of this evidence was clearly admissible upon either ground.

There is error, the judgment is set aside, and a new trial is ordered.

BORABACK and SHUMWAY, JJ., concur.

BEACH, J. (dissenting). I think the opinion, although it follows the record, is mistaken in saying that the plaintiffs agreed to hold the property, keep the charges against it paid, keep it in repair, and collect the rents. The other allegations of the complaint and the plaintiffs' brief show that the word "defendant" should be substituted for "plaintiff" in the second sentence of the fourth paragraph of the complaint.¹ As I understand it, the case tried to the court was one where the defendant was in possession under an absolute deed, and the grantor offered to prove a contemporaneous parol agreement to reconvey two or three years from date, on the theory that the transaction alleged in the complaint was in effect a mortgage.

The complaint, however, alleges an agreement under which the defendant, the alleged mortgagee, was to be paid an agreed rental by the plaintiffs for a part of the premises, and was also to be charged with the cost of keeping all the premises in repair. This seems to me utterly inconsistent with the theory that the defendant was merely a mortgagee; and the practical result of the account stated is that the defendant, who is supposed to have become a mortgage creditor to the extent of $1,800 by paying off mortgages (which he must have paid, in any event, for his own protection) is to have this credit more than canceled by a charge of some $2,000 for repairs on the alleged mortgaged premises.

I cannot see how such a pleading can be treated as a bill to redeem.

PRENTICE, C. J., concurs.

(92 Conn. 672)

WILLIAMS BROS. MFG. CO. v. NAUBUC FIRE DIST.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1913.)

1. TAXATION — 276—PLACE OF TAXATION—CORPORATIONS—"ESTABLISHMENT."

Under Gen. St. 1902, §§ 2328, 2329, providing that, where a corporation has two or more establishments for transacting its business in different towns or taxing districts, the establishments with their personal property shall be assessed in the town or taxing district where in they are situated, any building in which any part of the business of the corporation is carried on is an establishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Establishment.]

2. TAXATION — 263—PLACE OF TAXATION—STATUTE.

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 2342, requiring the property of any trading, mercantile, or mechanical business to be assessed in the town, city, or borough where the business is carried on, where a corporation has different buildings in different towns, cities, or boroughs, each building will be assessed in the town, city, or borough in which its business is carried on.

3. TAXATION — 268—PLACE OF TAXATION—"CARRIED ON BUSINESS."

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 2342, requiring the property of any trading, mercantile, or mechanical business to be assessed in the town, city, or borough where the business is carried on, the business of a manufacturing corporation is carried on where the various parts of the plant are located, and not where its office is located.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Carry On Business.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Hartford County; Edwin B. Gager, Judge.

Appeal by the Williams Brothers Manufacturing Company to the Board of Relief from the assessment of its property by Naubuc Fire District. From the action of the board in lowering the assessment, the Naubuc Fire District appeals. No error.

Alvan Waldo Hyde, of Hartford, for appellant. Stewart N. Dunning, of Hartford, for appellee.

WHEELER, J. The defendant, Naubuc Fire District, is a municipal corporation. The plaintiff is a manufacturing corporation. Both corporations are organized under the laws of Connecticut and located in the town of Glastonbury. The plant and principal office of the plaintiff is in Glastonbury. A small portion of its land and the building containing its general offices and a part of one of its factories are situated in the Naubuc fire district. The larger part of its land and the rest of its manufacturing buildings and the factory office from which the factory is operated are situated in Glastonbury and outside the limits of this district. The plaintiff, in October, 1915, made return of its property subject to taxation to the assessors of Glastonbury, and included in this list was an item showing the "average amount of goods on hand of manufacturers for whole or part of year preceding date of listing, including raw stock, and finished and unfinished product $79,000." On June 12, 1916, the assessors of this fire district gave the plaintiff notice that the value placed upon its real estate was $35,283, and that upon the average amount of goods in its hands during the preceding year was the said amount of $79,000. Upon the plaintiff's appeal the board of relief of this district reduced the value of the real estate of the plaintiff $8,283, and refused to reduce this assessment of $79,000 placed upon its goods on hand. The plaintiff, claiming to be aggrieved by the action of the board of relief took this appeal to the superior court. The court found that:

"The average value of the plaintiff's goods on hand during the year preceding the date of listing, including raw stock, and finished and unfinished product in its entire plant in the town of Glastonbury was $79,000, and the value of such goods actually within this fire district was $9,000."

The court held that the assessment should include only the value of the goods on hand in the district, and that the assessment of $79,000 should be reduced to $9,000.

The issue raised by the appeal is as to the true rule of assessment by the district of the goods on hand of the plaintiff, including raw stock and finished and unfinished product.

The fire district claims that, under the statutes: (1) A manufacturing business carried on within the limits of the fire district was subject to taxation there; (2) the statutory rule of assessment of such a business was the average amount of goods kept on hand for sale during the year preceding the date of assessment; (3) the manufacturing business of the plaintiff was located and carried on in the district; and (4) the average amount of goods kept on hand in connection with said business in the town of Glastonbury must be included in determining the value of the business.

¹ The sentence referred to reads as follows: "The plaintiff was to hold said property, to keep the charges against it maturing from time to time paid up, keep it in repair, and collect the rents, preserving an accurate account of all receipts and disbursements on account of said property."

The defendant fire district was authorized to lay and collect taxes for the purposes for which it was organized, viz. to light and sprinkle streets. P. A. 1915, c. 192. This statute does not contain any specific regulations, prescribing the method of taxation or the property to be taxed, but Gen. St. § 2001, provides that the laws relating to school districts shall apply to fire districts. And the law classifies the classes of property upon which the levy of taxes by a school district shall be had, specifying among these any manufacturing business, subject to taxation, located or carried on in the district. G. S. §§ 2328, 2329 are the provisions of the statutes under which the property of corporations in the defendant district may be taxed for the benefit of the district. These, in substance, provide that:

"The real estate shall be set in the list of the town in which such real estate is situated, and its personal property shall be set in the list of the town in which it has its principal place of business or exercise its corporate powers; and when it shall have two or more establishments for transacting its business in different towns or taxing districts, it shall be assessed and taxed for every such establishment, and for the personal property attached thereto or connected therewith, in the town or other taxing district having the power of taxation in which such establishment is." Field v. Guilford Water Co., 79 Conn. 70, 71, 68 Atl. 723.

The amendment of section 2329 has not substantially changed this analysis of these sections.

[1] Establishment, as used in this statute, refers to those agencies which serve for transacting the business of the corporation. All such, together with the personal property attached thereto or connected therewith, come within this provision of this statute. It is subject to assessment in the town or taxing district in which the establishment is situated. Any building in which any part of the business of the corporation is carried on is an establishment within the meaning of this statute. That this is the true construction of the word "establishment" is apparent from a reading of the amendment made by chapter 17 of Public Acts 1868, p. 148, to the original act.

G. S. § 2329, applies to all "municipal divisions," of which the defendant fire district is one. And the personal property situated within the district is to be taxed in that district. If this section were the only one relating to the levy of taxes upon corporations, no controversy would have arisen. But the fire district insists that G. S. § 2342, furnishes a special rule of assessment for the levy of taxes upon property of this kind belonging to a corporation situated in the fire district. This section provides that the property of any trading, mercantile, or mechanical business, belonging to an individual or a corporation, shall be assessed in the name of the owner or owners in the town, city, or borough where the business is carried on, and that:

"The average amount of goods kept on hand for sale during the year, or any portion of it when the business has not been carried on for a year, previous to the first day of October, shall be the rule of assessment and taxation."

[2] As originally passed, this section of the act (chapter 47, § 12, Public Acts 1851), related exclusively to trading and mercantile businesses, but later on this section was made applicable equally to corporations engaged in any manufacturing or mechanical business. It clearly contemplates a going business, and the rule of assessment is applicable only to such. We can see no reason why this rule may not apply to each of the two or more establishments situated in different towns, cities, or boroughs. So construed, the statutes can stand together. Moreover section 2342 does not appear to relate to any municipal division except towns, cities, and boroughs.

[3] The contention of the district that the business was carried on where its office was is not sound. The business was carried on where the various parts of the plant are located. We so construed this section in the case of Jackson v. Union, 82 Conn. 266, 270, 73 Atl. 773, and held that the place of office did not control, but the place where the timber was cut and prepared. If the personal property of the plaintiff was taxed in the district where its office was, as the district claims, then such parts of the personal property as were located outside this district and in an adjoining district would be also subject to taxation in this district. A construction leading to double taxation should be avoided. Since the defendant can lawfully light and sprinkle streets only within the district the plaintiff's property outside the district could receive no benefit from the district, and a construction which imposes taxes with no possibility of benefits should be avoided.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

(79 N. H. 48)

Petition of CARLTON et al.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Strafford. June 29, 1918.)

1. WILLS — § 527—RESIDUARY CLAUSE—GIFT TO LEGATEES.

Under residuary clause, giving to the "legatees" of the will in proportion to the amount "already given them," proportions of legatees are determined by considering gifts of real estate and personal property, of whatever nature.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 72 — DETERMINING AMOUNT OF RESIDUARY GIFTS — EVIDENCE.

The appraisal made pursuant to Pub. St. 1901, c. 189, §§ 1, 2, of the property scheduled in the inventory returned by the executors, is not conclusive in determining shares, under residuary gift to the legatees in proportion to the amount already given them.

Petition of Edward E. Carlton and another, as executors, for advice. Case discharged.

Petition for advice by the executors of the will of Cora C. Furber. The will was dated August 26, 1916, and proved March 27, 1917. The material parts of the will are as follows:

"Third. I give, bequeath, and devise to my brother, Edward E. Carlton, of Springfield, Massachusetts, the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars: also the contents of my home in said Dover: also a cottage and contents of the same and land situate in Alton, New Hampshire and known as the Cora C. Furber property, to him, the said Edward E. Carlton, his heirs and assigns forever. * * *

"Sixth. I give to Alice S. Furber of Manchester, New Hampshire, niece of the late Dudley L. Furber, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars together with an annuity policy which I hold in the Massachusetts Life Insurance Company of Springfield, Massachusetts, in the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars running fifteen years. * * *

"All the rest, residue and remainder of my property of any name and nature and wherever found, I give, bequeath and devise unto the legatees of this will in proportion to the amount already given to them, their heirs, and assigns forever."

The executors ask to be advised whether, in making distribution of the residue of the estate, the inventory value of the contents of the home in Dover and of the land in Alton given to Edward E. Carlton by the third clause and the value of the annuity policy given to Alice S. Furber by the sixth clause of the will should be considered in ascertaining the shares of the several legatees in such residuum. The will contains gifts of specified sums in money to six persons, beside those named in the above clauses.

Dwight Hall, of Dover, for executors. Jones, Warren, Wilson & Manning, of Manchester, for Alice S. Furber.

PARSONS, C. J. [1] "The word 'devise' is more specially appropriated to a gift of lands, and every person taking an interest in the produce of real estate directed to be sold is, strictly speaking, a devisee, and not a legatee. * * * But the terms are used indifferently; legatees may take under a bequest to 'all my devisees above named; * * * and the word 'legacy' may be applied to real estate, if the context of the will show that such was the testator's intention." Ladd v. Harvey, 21 N. H. 514, 528; Webster, Dict. title "Bequeath"; Bouv. Law Dict. title "Legacy." As to the land in Alton, technically Edward E. Carlton is a devisee, and not a legatee; but, using language with the same precision, he is one of "the legatees of this will," because of the gift to him of $10,000 and other personal property. His share is proportioned, not by the amount devised or bequeathed to him, but by "the amount already given" to him. "The word 'give' is of the largest signification, and is applicable as well to real as personal estate." Hooper v. Hooper, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 122, 129. The gift by the third clause to Edward E. Carlton included both real and personal estate, and the amount given him is the total value of the gift. So of the gift of two classes of personal property to Alice S. Furber by the sixth clause, cash and the annuity policy. The total value of her gift is the amount given to her.

It is not probable the testatrix understood the shade of difference in meaning which may be found between the terms "legatee" and "devisee." But the will is evidence that the scrivener was skilled in legal phraseology. In the two cases where a gift of real estate is made, clause third, above considered, and the residuary clause, care was taken to insert the appropriate word "devise" for a gift of real property by will. It is probable, if the testator had intended to limit the division of the residue by the amounts of her gifts of personal estate, apt words would have been used to express such intention. For the same reason it is clear that the amounts already given by the will were not understood to be limited to cash gifts. The executors are advised that the value of the property given to Edward and Alice other than cash should be included in ascertaining the amount already given them by the will.

[2] By "inventory value" in the question submitted is understood the appraisal made of the property scheduled in the inventory returned by the executors to the probate court. P. S. c. 189, §§ 1, 2. In Seavey v. Seavey, 37 N. H. 125, this appraisal was held admissible in controversies between strangers to the appraisal. The conclusion that such appraisal is admissible at all has since been criticized, if not expressly overruled. Derry v. County, 62 N. H. 485, 487, 488; Oncord Land & Water Power Co. v. Clough, 69 N. H. 609, 610, 45 Atl. 565. But in Seavey v. Seavey the appraisal, though considered admissible as prima facie evidence, was expressly held not to be conclusive. It is not conclusive of value upon the assessment of the inheritance taxes. Laws 1905, c. 40, § 13; S. P. S. p. 99. No ground is perceived upon which this appraisal can be held conclusive upon the distributees of this will in determining their several shares in the residuum. If there is controversy, the value should be determined in some proceeding to which all interested are parties.

Case discharged. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 34)

SPINNEY v. TOWN OF SEABROOK et al.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Rockingham. July 19, 1918.)

1. TAXATION — 602—COLLECTION—ARREST OF DELINQUENT TAXPAYER—"CIVIL PROCESS."

Where a tax collector commits a delinquent taxpayer to the county jail as authorized by Pub. St. 1901, c. 60, § 8 (re-enacted in Laws 1913, c. 82, § 5), the arrest is a civil and not a criminal process; a collector under Pub. St. 1901, c. 60, § 1 (Laws 1913, c. 82, § 6) having, in the collection of taxes, all the powers vested in constables in the service of civil process.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Civil Process.]

2. PRISONS — 18(6)—SUPPORT OF PRISONER—CIVIL PROCESS—LIABILITY OF COUNTY.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 282, § 4, providing that county commissioners shall allow jailor reasonable compensation for support of prisoners confined on criminal process, does not make county liable for board of prisoners confined on civil process.

3. COUNTIES — 208—ACTION AGAINST.

An action at law ordinarily does not lie against a county.

4. PRISONS — 18(1)—LIABILITY OF TAX COLLECTOR—SUPPORT OF DELINQUENT TAXPAYER COMMITTED TO JAIL.

Tax collector who commits delinquent taxpayer to jail is not personally liable for latter's support while confined in jail; Pub. St. 1901, c. 60, § 16, providing that tax collector shall not be liable for any cause except official misconduct.

5. TOWNS — 30—AUTHORITY OF SELECTMAN—TAX WARRANTS.

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 59, § 7, defining duties of selectmen of a town in issuing tax warrant, a town has no control over the selectmen in the performance of such duty and has no right to instruct them to issue or not to issue a warrant or to direct collector how to execute the warrant.

6. PRISONS — 18(6)—SUPPORT OF DELINQUENT TAXPAYER COMMITTED TO JAIL—LIABILITY OF TOWN.

Where tax collector commits delinquent taxpayer to county jail, the town whose selectman issued the tax warrant is not liable for his support while in jail in the absence of an agreement to pay for such support and in the absence of statutory provision imposing such liability.

7. PRISONS — 18(6)—SUPPORT OF PRISONER—CIVIL PROCESS—TOWN'S LIABILITY.

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 235, § 12, providing that the person at whose suit a person is committed to jail on civil process except for trespass, tort, or bastardy, shall give bond to jailor to pay prison charges, and neither section 11 nor section 12 making such person directly liable, a town causing arrest of delinquent taxpayer is liable for his support, if at all, only upon a bond.

8. PRISONS — 18(1)—JAILOR—PRISONER ON CIVIL PROCESS.

Jailor is not bound to receive a poor prisoner in a civil action and incur expense of his support without some indemnity therefor.

9. PRISONS — 18(1)—PRISONER ON CIVIL PROCESS—COMPENSATION FOR KEEPING.

Where jailor receives prisoner on civil process and supports him in jail without security for the prison charges or without aid from overseers of the poor, his only remedy is against the prisoner alone who is primarily liable.

Young and Peaslee, JJ., dissenting.

Transferred from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Allen, Judge.

Action by Ceylon Spinney against the Town of Seabrook, County of Rockingham, and another. Transferred from superior court to Supreme Court. Claim against defendant county disallowed; judgment for other defendants.

Action against the town of Seabrook, county of Rockingham, and one Perkins, as special tax collector of the defendant town, brought to recover certain prison charges and board from October 11, 1913, to December 18, 1914, of a delinquent taxpayer of Seabrook, who was committed to the county jail, of which the plaintiff was the jailer, by Perkins acting under a warrant given by the selectmen of the town for the collection of taxes. No bond for the prisoner's board in jail was demanded by the plaintiff and no bond for that purpose was given. The board was furnished by the plaintiff, for which he has received no pay. The taxpayer upon taking the poor debtor's oath was discharged. The county and the town moved for directed verdicts in their favor. Perkins moved that the action be dismissed as to him. Without ruling on these motions, the superior court, Allen, J., transferred the case from the October term, 1917, of the superior court.

Ernest L. Guptill and Ralph O. Gray, both of Portsmouth, for plaintiff. William H. Sleeper, of Exeter, for the County. Page, Bartlett & Mitchell, of Portsmouth, for the Town and for Perkins.

WALKER, J. [1] By section 8, c. 60, P. S. (re-enacted in section 5, c. 82, Laws 1913), it is provided that:

"For want of goods and chattels whereon to make distress, the collector may take the body of any person neglecting or refusing to pay the tax assessed against him, and commit him to the common jail."

Section 9 provides that:

"The jailor shall receive and detain such person in his custody until he pays such tax, cost of commitment, and charges of imprisonment, or until he is otherwise discharged by due course of law."

An arrest by a collector of taxes, under his warrant authorizing such procedure for the nonpayment of taxes, is a civil, not a criminal, process. The purpose of the arrest and of the commitment to jail is not to punish the prisoner as a criminal for failure to pay the tax assessed against him, but to compel the payment of the tax as a civil obligation. For the accomplishment of this purpose, "every collector, in the collection of taxes/committed to him and in the service of his warrant, shall have the powers vested in constables in the service of civil process." P. S. c. 60, § 1; Laws 1913, c. 82, § 6. That the collection of taxes is deemed by the Legislature to be a civil process is also recognized in section 17 of the same chapter, where it is provided that a tax may be "collected by suit at law or bill in equity." The imprisonment in jail of one who fails to meet his tax obligation is merely one means of collecting the tax, in the same way that the imprisonment of a debtor on execution is one means of collecting the debt. In Butler v. Washburn, 25 N. H. 251, and in Gordon v. Clifford, 28 N. H. 402, an arrest upon a tax warrant was treated as having been made in a civil proceeding, and no case holding a contrary doctrine has been called to our attention.

[2, 3] The contention therefore that the county is liable for the board of the prisoner while in jail assumes that such liability may exist when the commitment is made in a civil suit, for there is no statute explicitly imposing that burden upon the county in proceedings for the collection of taxes. If there is such a liability, it can only be derived from the general statute providing for the support of prisoners in jail. But that statute (P. S. c. 282, § 4) is as follows:

"Every jailer shall provide each prisoner in his custody with necessary sustenance, * * * and the county commissioners shall allow him, out of the county treasury, a reasonable compensation for the support of all prisoners confined on criminal process."

That the county under this statute is not liable for the board of prisoners confined in jail on civil process is so obvious as to require no argument, and such has been the purport of the decisions on this subject. Amherst v. Hollis, 9 N. H. 107; De Comcey's Petition, 22 N. H. 368; Plymouth v. Haverhill, 69 N. H. 400, 46 Atl. 460; Locke v. Belknap County, 71 N. H. 208, 51 Atl. 914. In the absence of statutory authorization, no reason is apparent for a different conclusion whether the imprisonment is for the collection of a tax or the collection of an ordinary debt. While an action at law ordinarily does not lie against a county (Day v. Coos County, 77 N. H. 582, 93 Atl. 965), the question of law as to the liability of the county has been considered as though it had been regularly presented as a claim.

[4] Nor is it apparent why the collector should be liable. He committed the prisoner in the execution of his warrant, which authorized him to proceed in that way in the attempt to collect the tax. Like a sheriff in committing a defendant upon an execution authorizing the act, he incurred no liability for the prisoner's support in jail. Stevens v. Merrill, 41 N. H. 309. That was a matter in reference to which he could exercise no control, and for which he could not be held responsible under the statute, which provides that a collector of taxes shall not be liable to any suit, "for any cause whatever, except his own official misconduct." P. S. c. 60, § 16. Kelley v. Noyes, 43 N. H. 209. Acting as a public officer (Winchester v. Stockwell, 76 N. H. 193, 81 Atl. 526), he incurred no liability for the board of the prisoner.

[5] The town of Seabrook in its private capacity did not authorize or direct the arrest and imprisonment of the delinquent taxpayer. The selectmen in issuing the tax warrant to the collector did not act as the agents of the town. It had no control over them in the performance of that duty, which was imposed upon them, and not upon the town, by the statute. P. S. c. 59, § 7. The town had no more right to instruct the selectmen to issue or not to issue the warrant, or to direct the collector how to execute the warrant, than it has to abate a tax (Hampstead v. Plaistow, 49 N. H. 84, 97), or to pass a vote in town meeting "directing the collection of delinquent assessments so fast only as can be done with convenience and without pressure" (Northumberland v. Cobleigh, 59 N. H. 250, 255). In an action for the recovery of a tax it was said in Canaan v. District, 74 N. H. 517, 536, 70 Atl. 250, 257:

"The plaintiff as a town in any capacity has no control over the questions involved in this tax. It cannot by town vote direct whether the property in question should be assessed for taxation or not, or determine its value. By similar action it could not authorize this suit. It has no control over it. * * * Although * * * a party to the controversy, which is between the state in the exercise of its taxing power and the taxpayer defending."

"The taxes collectible under the statute are in no sense debts owed to the town as a corporation, but to the public." Winchester v. Stockwell, supra, 76 N. H. 194, 81 Atl. 526.

[6] If the defendant town had passed a vote directing the collector to arrest the delinquent taxpayer and commit him to jail upon his neglect to pay the tax, the vote would be unauthorized and void, and the town would incur no liability thereunder for the acts of the collector in making the arrest, or for the expense incurred by the jailer in furnishing board to the prisoner. The town, in the absence of any affirmative action in the premises, and in the absence of any statutory duty imposed upon it in reference to prisoners' charges, cannot be held liable in the present case. It has no such interest in proceedings for the collection of taxes that it can be deemed to be in the position of a plaintiff in an action for the recovery of a debt. Canaan v. District, supra.

[7] But if this conclusion were wrong, or if it should be assumed that the town was the moving party in the proceedings resulting in the arrest and imprisonment of the taxpayer, it would only be liable to the jailer, if at all, for the prison charges upon a bond given for their payment. In P. S. c. 235, § 11, it is provided that:

"No person committed on civil process shall be detained in prison for the nonpayment of prison charges, except in actions of trespass, case for torts, and prosecutions for bastardy; but such charges shall be a debt against the prisoner."

And in section 12 that:

"The person at whose suit any person is committed to jail," except in the above-mentioned cases, "shall give bond to the jailer, with satisfactory surety, or such as may be approved by a justice, to pay the prison charges."

In either of the excepted cases, if no bond is furnished, the prisoner, under section 13, may be "released by order of the supreme (superior) court or of a justice thereof." It is significant that there is no provision that the plaintiff shall be responsible for the prison charges if they are not paid by the prisoner. The plaintiff is not directly liable for them. They constitute a debt against the prisoner. The plaintiff's liability arises only upon his giving the required bond for their payment.

It was provided in R. S. c. 189, § 12, that the plaintiff in a civil suit causing the imprisonment of the defendant shall give a bond to the jailer "to pay the prison charges in case of the prisoner's inability; otherwise such prisoner shall be discharged." This applied in all civil suits; the exceptions mentioned in the present statute above quoted were not introduced until 1845. Laws 1845, c. 237. In 1844, Harris v. Sullivan County, 15 N. H. 81, was decided, in which it was held that a bastardy proceeding is not a criminal prosecution and that the county is not liable for the support of the prisoner in jail in such an action, as it would be in a criminal case. In concluding the opinion the court say:

"As Colby was confined on process issued in a civil suit, it was the duty of the complainant to tender such a bond as the statute requires. The gaoler might have discharged Colby, if he had seen fit so to do; but, as he did not do this, his compensation for the prisoner's support is a matter between the prisoner and himself, with which the county has nothing to do."

In the revision of 1867 the statute in question took its present form, omitting the words "otherwise such prisoner shall be discharged." G. S. c. 221, § 12. This change was regarded by the commissioners as verbal merely, and not as affecting a modification of the law. It was probably considered that, if the bond was not furnished, a discharge of the prisoner would be the logical result, without the use of express language to that effect. Harris v. County, therefore, is a direct authority for the proposition that if a bond is not furnished for the prison charges in a civil suit, not included in the exceptions introduced in 1845, the jailer, who might have discharged the prisoner but saw fit to hold him, can only look to him for compensation for his board while in jail.

While it is unnecessary in this case to decide what relief the jailer might have in case of a defendant committed to his custody in an action of trespass, or an action of tort, or a prosecution for bastardy, which are excepted from the operation of section 12, it may be suggested that, when no bond is given and when his claim for board against the prisoner is worthless on account of the prisoner's poverty, it might be the duty of the overseers of the poor of the town in which the jail is located to provide for his support in accordance with the provision of section 1, c. 84, P. S. In Amherst v. Hollis, 9 N. H. 107, it was held that a prisoner confined in jail upon an execution may be a pauper within the meaning of the statute then in force for the relief of the poor (which is in effect the same as the present statute), and that it is the duty of the overseers of the poor of the town in which the jail is located to relieve him. The court say that:

"Imprisonment for debt certainly does not furnish a reason why a person should not be relieved, if poor and unable to maintain himself."

It might be added that it is also no reason why the expense of maintaining the prisoner should be imposed upon the jailer, or why, in the absence of a bond for his protection in supporting the prisoner or other contractual obligation, he should be permitted to hold the plaintiff authorizing the commitment responsible for the expense, which is directly chargeable to the prisoner.

[8, 6] In this view of the legislative purpose the argument, that in a case like the present one the county or town is liable, because it is unreasonable to assume the Legislature intended to make the jailer liable, is not of convincing force or logically persuasive. It is not evidence that the Legislature intended that some other party, not specifically designated in the statute, should be held liable. The jailer may protect himself; if he does not, as was said in Harris v. County, supra, his compensation "is a matter between the prisoner and himself." That burden is not imposed upon the jailer. He is not bound to receive a poor prisoner in a civil action and incur the expense of his support without some indemnity therefor. But if he does receive him and supports him in jail without security for the prison charges, or without aid from the overseers of the poor, his only remedy is against the prisoner alone who is primarily liable.

Upon the facts of the reported case, the order must be: Claim against the county disallowed. Judgment for the other defendants.

YOUNG and PEASLEE, JJ., dissented; the others concurred.

(79 N. H. 61)

LA POINT v. MONADNOCK PAPER MILL.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Hillsborough. June 29, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶356—FELLOW SERVANT.

Laws 1911, c. 163, § 2, makes an employer, failing to accept the provisions of the act, liable for injuries to a servant caused by a fellow-servant's negligence.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶226(1)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

An employé does not assume the risk incident to the method of work which he adopted in lifting, where his foreman participates in it.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶286(27)—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Whether defendant's foreman should have forbidden plaintiff's method of work in lifting, or whether the foreman's participation in it required care which he failed to use, were questions for the jury.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶356—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Laws 1911, c. 163, § 2, takes the defense of assumed risk away from employers who fail to accept the provisions of the act.

Transferred from Superior Court, Hillsborough County; Marble, Judge.

Case for negligence, brought under Laws 1911, c. 163, by Albert J. La Point against the Monadnock Paper Mill. Trial by jury, and verdict for the plaintiff. Transferred from the September term, 1917, upon the defendant's exceptions to the denial of its motion for a directed verdict and to a portion of the charge to the jury. Exceptions overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Doyle & Lucier, of Nashua (A. J. Lucier, of Nashua, orally), for plaintiff. Jones, Warren, Wilson & Manning, of Manchester (Allan M. Wilson, of Manchester, orally), for defendant.

PEASLEE, J. [1] The plaintiff was an employé of the defendant in a paper mill; and, as the defendant had not accepted the provisions of Laws 1911, c. 163, it is liable in this action for injuries to the plaintiff caused by the negligence of any of its other servants. Id., § 2.

[2] It could be found from the evidence that the plaintiff had lifted the rear end of a roll weighing 800 pounds from a truck on which it was lying, his object being to help move the roll forward on the truck. A fellow servant, who attempted to assist in the operation by lifting the forward end, was unable to do so. Thereupon the foreman, Clafin, who was capable of lifting 500 pounds or more, took hold of the forward end, lifted it suddenly, and, as he did so, thrust the roll and the truck against the plaintiff, who still held the rear end. The added weight or strain thus put upon the plaintiff caused the injuries for which this action is brought. It is evident that fair-minded men might well conclude that the act of the foreman was a negligent one. The defendant argues that because there were other men and appliances available for moving the roll, therefore it is not liable, since the plaintiff voluntarily undertook to do the work in the more dangerous way. One answer to this is that it could be found that the plaintiff had no reason to anticipate that the foreman would negligently put upon the plaintiff the dangerous strain to which he was subjected. It is certain that Clafin saw the method the plaintiff was using, and not only did not forbid it, but himself participated in the transaction. In this state of the evidence it cannot be concluded as matter of law, either that the plaintiff voluntarily undertook a risk not within the scope of his employment, or that his taking the method of work into his own hands was the cause of his injury.

[3] The defendant also contends that it was error to give the following instruction to the jury:

"In cases of this nature the master is bound to exercise reasonable care to provide the servant with a sufficient number of suitable assistants or fellow servants to properly do the work. I do not understand that there is any claim but that there were sufficient workmen about the mill whom Mr. Clafin could have secured to help in lifting the roll. The alleged negligence, as I understand it, is the failure of Mr. Clafin, who represented the defendant, to procure them. The plaintiff says that Mr. Clafin did not act as a reasonably prudent man in failing to order more men to do the work. The defendant says that he did. And that is a question of fact for you to decide."

It is true, as the defendant claims, that there were plenty of men available for the work; but any theory of negligence in that respect was expressly excluded from consideration. The point submitted by this instruction was whether the foreman, because of his position and superior knowledge, ought to have exercised his authority and prevented the opportunity for the occurrence of such an accident. Whether he should have done so, or whether the method the plaintiff adopted should have been tacitly indorsed by the foreman, was peculiarly a question for the jury. They might have found, either that the foreman should have forbidden the plaintiff's line of endeavor, or that participation in it required care which the foreman failed to use when he lifted the forward end of the roll. The instruction excepted to merely served to submit one of these views for the consideration of the jury.

[4] Nor is the instruction open to objection upon the ground that the plaintiff assumed the risk of this method of work, since the statute takes this defense away from employers who do not accept the provisions of the act. Laws 1911, c. 163, § 2; Nawn v. Railroad, 77 N. H. 299, 305, 91 Atl. 181.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 44)

JANVRIN v. POWERS et al.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Rockingham. June 29, 1918.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §158(4)—ORIGINAL PROMISE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that the promise of a property owner to pay for materials furnished to a contractor was an original and not a collateral undertaking, and therefore not within the statute of frauds.

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §23(2)—ORIGINAL PROMISE—EVIDENCE—INTEREST OF PROMISOR.

Where property owner, to induce materialman to furnish lumber to contractor, promised to see that it was paid for, personal benefit to him by reason of fact that his contract with builder was very advantageous was sufficient to remove contract from statute of frauds.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS §118—NECESSITY OF NOTICE.

If a lumberman furnishes material to a contractor upon the promise of the owner of the property to see that it is paid for, the lumberman has a lien, under Pub. St. 1901, c. 141, § 10, notwithstanding he gave no notice in writing of his intent to claim a lien.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR §856(3)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT—GENERAL MOTION—EFFECT.

General motion for directed verdict, without assigning specific reasons, is of no avail, if there is any ground upon which the jury could find for the other party.

5. MECHANICS' LIENS §280(2)—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In lumberman's action for price of materials and to impress lien on the property, on the theory that the owner, to induce him to furnish the lumber to the contractor, promised to see that he was paid therefor, evidence that the value of the house would have been greatly in excess of the contract price was competent to show the promise, and that the owner practically assumed control of the work.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR §907(2)—PRESUMPTIONS.

It is presumed, in the absence of evidence, that the jury followed the instructions of the court.

7. TRIAL §255(4)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—PRESERVATION OF EXCEPTIONS.

If a party fears that evidence may be considered by the jury for an improper purpose, or that the argument may mislead the jury, he should request further instructions cautioning the jury as to the use to be made of the evidence or argument.

8. MECHANICS' LIENS §118—NOTICE—WAIVER.

The provisions of Pub. St. 1901, c. 141, §§ 13, 15, requiring a subcontractor to give notice to the owner of his intent to claim a lien, are solely for the benefit of the owner, and he may waive such notice.

Transferred from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Sawyer, Judge.

Action by John A. Janvrin against Thomas Powers and Robinson Bros. Case transferred from superior court on defendant Powers' exceptions. Exceptions overruled.

Action on the common counts, with an account for lumber and supplies annexed. Robinson Bros. defaulted, and the case was submitted to the jury only against Powers. There was an attachment in the suit to secure a lien for the plaintiff on the property of Powers. Robinson Bros. took a contract to build a bungalow for Powers, and the materials specified in the account annexed to the writ were furnished by the plaintiff and used in its construction. The plaintiff did not give to Powers a written notice that he should claim a lien. The trial was by jury, and the issues submitted to them were whether the plaintiff had a lien upon the property of the defendant, and when it attached. The jury found that the plaintiff did have such a lien, and when it attached, although no question is now raised about the latter finding. The defendant's motions for a nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, and for a directed verdict at the conclusion of the evidence, were denied, subject to exception. The exceptions to evidence, to the argument of counsel, and to the charge of the court, taken by the defendant, sufficiently appear from the opinion.

Eastman, Scammon & Gardner, of Exeter, for plaintiff. Sleeper & Brown, of Exeter, and Ernest L. Guptill, of Portsmouth, for defendant.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant's motion for a nonsuit was based upon the following grounds: That, if any promise was shown on the part of the defendant, it was simply a collateral promise to pay the debt of another, and further that no notice in writing was given him, as required by statute. No grounds are set forth upon which the defendant relied in his motion for a directed verdict, but it is assumed they were the same as for the nonsuit. The plaintiff is seeking in this case to establish a lien upon the defendant's property. The defendant's position, as disclosed by these motions, is that, as the promise upon which the plaintiff relied was not in writing, he cannot maintain his action (P. S. c. 215, § 2), and also upon the statute (P. S. c. 141, §§ 13, 15) which requires a subcontractor to furnish to the owner a notice in writing of his intention to claim a lien and a statement of his account once in 30 days. The evidence of the plaintiff tended to prove that he knew nothing about the financial condition of Robinson Bros.; that before he furnished any materials to them to build the defendant's house he saw the defendant about furnishing such materials, and that the defendant told the plaintiff to go ahead and furnish the materials for them to build the house, and let him know from time to time, and he would see that the plaintiff was paid; that the plaintiff would not have furnished the materials if the defendant had not promised that he would see him paid; that as the work progressed the defendant telephoned to find out if a payment had been made by the Robinsons; that later the plaintiff's wife telephoned to the defendant about the work, and he asked if the Robinsons had made a payment, and she said, "No," and gave to the defendant the amount then due for materials, whereupon the defendant said he guessed he was in bad, and he could not understand why people did not do, as they agreed, his work was as good as a gold bond, etc.; that before the completion of the job the plaintiff wrote defendant a letter, giving him the amount of his bill, and that the Robinsons had ordered a little more material, probably amounting to $50 or more, and that he was notifying him of the amount of the bill to protect both himself and the defendant; that, referring to this letter in his testimony, the defendant said, "I knew I had to pay for the lumber that Robinson Bros. was putting in there for me, and I expected to, and supposed they had paid them till I got that letter;" that during the progress of the work the defendant ordered materials of the plaintiff; that before the completion of the house one Robinson, who had been in charge of the work, abandoned it, and the other Robinson came to take charge; that he told the defendant he had gone as far as he could, that he had nothing to do with, and that the defendant said, "You go right ahead, and, if the plaintiff don't draw the lumber, we will get somebody that will."

[1] From the evidence tending to prove the above statements, it could be found that the plaintiff furnished the materials upon the credit of the defendant, and that the defendant's promise was an original and not a collateral undertaking, and therefore not within the statute of frauds. In Lakeman v. Mountstephen, L. R. 7 H. L. 17, the facts were not unlike those in this case. There the defendant, who was the surveyor for a certain board of health for whom the plaintiff had been doing sewage work, on some question being raised about the continuance of the work, said: "You go on and do the work, and I will see you paid." It was held that there was evidence upon which the jury might find that the credit was given to the defendant, so as to make his promise original, and not collateral. The following cases, similar to the case at bar, hold that the promise was an original undertaking and not within the statute: Clifford v. Lubring, 69 Ill. 401; Jefferson County v. Slagle, 66 Pa. 202; Merriman v. McManus, 102 Pa. 102; Weyand v. Crichfield, 8 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 113. "The question to whom the credit was given is always for the jury to determine, upon all the circumstances." Browne, St. Fr. 254; Walker v. Richards, 41 N. H. 388; Connolly v. Waycott, 68 N. H. 618; Moshier v. Kitchell, 87 Ill. 18; Pettit v. Braden, 55 Ind. 201; West v. O'Hara, 55 Wis. 645, 18 N. W. 894; Larson v. Jensen, 58 Mich. 427, 19 N. W. 180.

[2] There was evidence on the part of the plaintiff that the defendant had obtained from Robinson Bros. a contract for the construction of his house that was very advantageous to him. Accordingly any promise he made to the plaintiff that would enable the Robinsons to obtain materials for the building of the house would inure to the benefit of the defendant. The legal principle which is laid down in the following language, to determine if a promise is within the statute of frauds, would seem to be applicable to this case:

"The distinction is between a promise the object of which is to promote the interest of the party making the promise. The former is within the operation of the statute; the latter is unaffected by it. And where the guarantor is himself to receive the benefit for which his promise is exchanged, it is not usually material whether the original debtor remains liable or not." 1 Reed, St. Fr., c. 8, § 70; Calkins v. Chandler, 36 Mich. 524, 24 Am. Rep. 568.

[3] As the jury were warranted upon the evidence in finding that the defendant made an original promise to the plaintiff to pay for materials, the defendant's second ground upon which he bases his motions, namely, that no notices in writing were given the defendant, as required by statute, is of no consequence, because, if the defendant was an original promisor, no such notices were necessary to give the plaintiff a lien upon the defendant's property. P. S. c. 141, § 10.

[4] If the defendant did not intend to base his motion for a directed verdict on the reasons specified in his motion for a nonsuit, but upon a general motion for a verdict without any specific reasons, that would not aid him. In that event, a verdict could not be directed for the defendant, if upon any view of the case the jury could find a verdict for the plaintiff, and we have already pointed out a ground upon which the jury could find such a verdict.

[5] The defendant excepted to evidence that the value of the house which the Robinsons contracted to build would exceed the contract price by several hundred dollars. The defendant also excepted to the argument of the plaintiff upon this evidence. The plaintiff was seeking to prove that the defendant promised that he would pay him for the materials furnished, and further that the defendant ordered material, and at a certain time in the progress of the work practically assumed control of it. This evidence and argument upon it was competent for that purpose.

[6] The court cautioned the jury in reference to the use that they should make of this evidence in the following language:

"You are not to render a verdict for the plaintiff, establishing a lien, simply because the defendant secured a low price, if you find he did, for the building of his cottage. If he got a low price for it, he is entitled to the benefit of it."

It is presumed, in the absence of evidence, that the jury followed the instructions of the court. Davis v. Railroad, 75 N. H. 467, 470, 76 Atl. 170; Turner v. Mfg. Co., 75 N. H. 521, 522, 77 Atl. 999; Lawrence v. Towle, 59 N. H. 28, 31.

[7] If the defendant feared that this evidence might be considered by the jury for an improper purpose, or that the plaintiff's counsel had argued it in a manner that would induce the jury to make a wrong use of it, and that the cautionary statement made by the court was not sufficiently clear and specific to fully inform the jury of the proper application of the evidence, and prevent them from making a wrong use of it, he should have requested the court for further instructions. Bank v. Ferguson, 58 N. H. 403; Dow v. Merrill, 65 N. H. 107, 111, 18 Atl. 317; Pitman v. Mauran, 69 N. H. 230, 40 Atl. 392; Nadeau v. Sawyer, 73 N. H. 70, 59 Atl. 369.

The defendant excepted to argument of plaintiff's counsel, wherein he reviewed and commented upon the defendant's conduct relating to the matters in controversy. We think the evidence fairly warranted the argument.

[8] The court in his charge, referring to the requirements in the statute (P. S. c. 141, §§ 13, 15) that the subcontractor shall give a written notice and statement of his account to the owner of the property in order to entitle him to a lien, stated that the notices were solely for the benefit of the owner, and therefore he may waive them. The defendant excepted to this statement. No error was committed in giving this instruction. There can be no question but that the provisions in this statute requiring notices are for the benefit of the owner. The statute prevents subcontractors from acquiring liens upon the property of owners unless the statutory notices are given, and is for the protection of owners. The defendant's contention that he could not waive the statutory requirements of notice cannot be sustained. The statute being for his benefit, there is no doubt that he could waive it. Battle v. Knapp, 60 N. H. 361; Flynn v. Insurance Co., 77 N. H. 431, 92 Atl. 737; Kelsea v. Insurance Co., 78 N. H. 422, 425, 101 Atl. 862. See State v. Albee, 61 N. H. 423, 428, 60 Am. Rep. 325.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 11)

BENOIT v. PERKINS et al.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. CoCs.
May 7, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1008 — REVIEW — FINDINGS OF FACT.

The Supreme Court cannot revise or set aside the finding of the jury as against the weight of evidence; but the only question is whether there was any evidence in support of their conclusion.

2. FRAUD ⇐17—LIABILITY OF VOLUNTEER—ACTIVE INTERVENTION.

One who though under no obligation to act at all voluntarily undertakes to do a thing, to give another such information as was necessary for her safety, is liable for resulting damage, not only if he carelessly omits to give information of an essential detail, but if he fraudulently conceals it.

3. TRIAL ⇐166 — JOINT MOTION FOR NON-SUIT.

Exception to overruling of joint motion of defendants for nonsuit and verdict is unavailing, where there is evidence sufficient against at least one defendant.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐882(17)—REVIEW—INVITED ERROR.

A verdict based on an instruction may not be complained of by the party requesting the instruction.

5. FRAUD ⇐17—FAILURE TO SPEAK—NECESSITY OF DUTY.

For failure to speak to be actionable fraud, there must have been a duty, from the relation of the parties to speak.

6. TRIAL ⇐260(6)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS COVERED.

A requested instruction that there must be legal obligation to speak, that failure to do so may be actionable, being substantially covered by others given, need not be given.

7. TRIAL ⇐252(17)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICATION TO EVIDENCE.

Giving an instruction as to the law if defendants acted, or assumed to act, for another in employing plaintiff was error; there being no evidence that they took part in the employment.

8. WITNESSES ⇐349—CROSS-EXAMINATION—CREDIBILITY.

Asking on cross-examination a defendant, who had testified to having taken possession of deceased's property and turning it over to the executor, if she did not have trouble with the executor, is competent on witness' credibility.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐971(3)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—CREDIBILITY—EXTENT.

The proper extent of cross-examination going to credibility of witness is settled at the trial.

10. TRIAL ⇐121(1)—ARGUMENT—USE OF EVIDENCE.

Counsel may in argument use, for purposes for which it is competent, evidence admitted subject to exception.

11. TRIAL ⇐121(1)—ARGUMENT—USE OF EVIDENCE.

Using in argument for a purpose for which it is incompetent evidence admitted subject to exception is error; and, if permitted, subject to exception, would destroy the verdict.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐688(2) — RECORD—SCOPE OF REVIEW—ARGUMENT.

Exception to the use in argument of evidence admitted subject to exception is unavailing, where the record does not show what use counsel proposed to make of it.

13. TRIAL ⇐121(1) — ARGUMENT—MISSTATEMENT OF EVIDENCE.

A mere misrecollection or accidental misstatement of evidence by counsel in argument does not render the trial unfair as matter of law.

14. TRIAL ⇐121(1) — ARGUMENT—MISSTATEMENT OF EVIDENCE.

The case turning on defendant's credibility, and he denying any telephonic communication with plaintiff, to which she testified, misstatement by plaintiff's counsel in argument, repeated and reiterated over objection, that witness testified to seeing plaintiff when she came to telephone defendant was error.

15. TRIAL ⇐133(1)—ARGUMENT—FINDING AS TO PREJUDICE.

It being impossible to say that it could not be found that forcible and repeated misstatement in argument, over objection, of material evidence was harmful, the verdict cannot stand, whether or not there be withdrawal and disregarding instructions, in the absence of a finding by the presiding judge, which the offending party must obtain, that it was harmless.

Young, J., dissenting.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Coös County; Chamberlin, Judge.

Action by Hilda Benoit against Charles B. Perkins and others. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendants bring exceptions. Exceptions sustained in part; verdict set aside.

Case in the nature of deceit to recover damages for injuries received while employed as a companion of one Marie Bordet. The declaration alleged that the defendants were the agents, counselors, and next friends of one Marie Bordet; that she was of unsound mind; was subject to fits of insanity, in which she was liable to do injury to herself and others; that the defendants had assumed the care of her, and, knowing the fact of Mrs. Bordet's insanity, conspired together to keep knowledge of it from the plaintiff in order to induce her to enter Mrs. Bordet's employ; that in ignorance of Mrs. Bordet's condition the plaintiff did enter her employ, and because of the condition which the defendants concealed from her was injured. The case was tried upon the general issue before Chamberlin, J., and a jury, who found a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendants excepted to the denial of their motions for a nonsuit and a verdict, to the admission of evidence, to statements of plaintiff's counsel in argument, and to certain instructions given the jury.

The evidence tended to prove that Mrs. Bordet's husband had been employed at Wentworth Hall, a summer hotel in Jackson, for many years. He owned a cottage there, in which he and Mrs. Bordet spent at least one winter, though usually they lived in New York during that season. The defendant James N. Berry had also been employed for years as manager of Wentworth Hall, and lived there with his wife when the hotel was open. He also owned a cottage in Jackson, in which he lived at other times. In the fall of 1914 Mrs. Bordet's husband died, and Mr. and Mrs. Berry went to New York with Mrs. Bordet and her husband's body. Mrs. Bordet spent the winter in New York, but in May, 1915, came to Jackson, going to cottages kept by the other two defendants, Mr. and Miss Perkins. The mother of Mrs. Bordet had died the year previous, and her husband's will was imperfectly executed. From the loss of her husband and mother and impending financial trouble, Mrs. Bordet became despondent and depressed in mind, and while at the Perkins cottages developed fits of mental instability, in which she endeavored to commit suicide. Mr. and Miss Perkins were advised of her condition; that she was liable to repeat the attempts and needed institutional care. Neither of the defendants wished her to stop at their resorts during the summer, though there was no evidence she desired to do so. The defendants' evidence was that she wished to live at her own cottage and desired a companion. A Miss Trickey, who lived in Jackson, having learned this fact from a Mrs. Harriman, meeting Mrs. Benoit in Bartlett, where she lived, asked her if she knew of a good woman who would go to Jackson and stay with Mrs. Bordet. Mrs. Benoit replied that she might like to go herself, and arranged to come to Jackson to see about taking the place. Upon two occasions she saw Mrs. Bordet at the Perkins cottages, and agreed with her upon the employment and its terms. Upon her first trip to Jackson she met Mr. Berry at the Jackson Falls house, where Miss Trickey lived, and had an interview with him. The defendants' evidence was that the interview was arranged for the purpose of informing the plaintiff of Mrs. Bordet's condition before she entered into any agreement with her, and that this condition was fully explained to her. The plaintiff denied that she was told of Mrs. Bordet's mental instability, suicidal tendencies, or attempts to kill herself. June 26, 1915, the plaintiff went to live with Mrs. Bordet at her cottage in Jackson. Nine days later, July 5th, Mrs. Bordet committed suicide by setting fire to her clothing, which she had previously saturated with alcohol. The plaintiff claimed injury from the shock of the tragedy and the physical exertions she was thereby called upon to make. The evidence was printed in full as an appendix. Further facts and the ground of the exceptions taken appear in the opinion.

Drew, Shurtleff, Morris & Oakes, of Lancaster (Geo. F. Morris, of Lancaster, orally), for plaintiff. Sullivan & Daley, of Berlin, and E. E. Hastings, of Fryeburg, Me. (H. Sullivan, of Berlin, orally), for defendants.

PARSONS, C. J. [1] The gist of the plaintiff's complaint is that the defendants, knowing that Mrs. Bordet was mentally unbalanced with suicidal tendencies, induced or permitted her to enter Mrs. Bordet's employ without informing her of that fact. The defendants' answer before the jury was that they did tell the plaintiff all they knew. This issue was there tried, and this court has no jurisdiction to revise the finding of the jury, or to set it aside as against the weight of the evidence. The only question here is whether there was any evidence in support of the conclusion reached by the jury. The plaintiff's statement that she was not told was some evidence; and, if a wrong result has been reached, the defendants have no remedy here.

[2] The defendants contend, in support of their motion for a directed verdict, that upon the evidence their failure to inform the plaintiff was not a breach of any legal duty owed by them to her. If it be assumed that the defendants, knowing Mrs. Benoit was proposing to enter Mrs. Bordet's employ, were under no legal obligation to the plaintiff to act at all in the matter, to give her any information, still there was no error in the denial of the motions for a nonsuit and a general verdict for the defendants. "Where one voluntarily undertakes to do a thing, whether that be by representation or by positive act, a duty is imposed upon the party making the representation or doing the act of exercising care." Conway Bank v. Pease, 76 N. H. 319, 324, 82 Atl. 1068; Pittsfield Co. v. Shoe Co., 71 N. H. 522, 533, 53 Atl. 807, 60 L. R. A. 116; Edwards v. Lamb, 69 N. H. 599, 45 Atl. 480, 50 L. R. A. 160; Hammond v. Hussey, 51 N. H. 40, 12 Am. Rep. 41. There was evidence that when Mrs. Benoit came to Jackson upon information of the opportunity, she was met at the Jackson Falls house by the defendant Mr. Berry, and had a conference with him as to the proposed employment. The defendants say and their evidence tended to prove that the meeting was arranged in order that Mrs. Benoit should be informed of Mrs. Bordet's condition before she negotiated with her as to the proposed service. The accounts of this interview differ in only one particular. Mr. Berry and Mrs. Berry say the plaintiff was told of Mrs. Bordet's suicidal tendencies and attempts. Mrs. Benoit says the contrary, and the jury have found with her. Assuming the defendants are correct in their contention that they were under no legal obligation to inform Mrs. Benoit as to Mrs. Bordet's condition, it could be found from the evidence that Mr. Berry at least undertook to give her such information as was necessary for her safety. Undertaking the task, he was bound to care in its execution, and liable if he carelessly omitted to inform her of an essential detail. A fortiori he is liable if, as could be found, he with intent to defraud concealed from her facts material to her safety, and because of her lack of information she acted to her subsequent injury.

[3, 4] As reported in the case, the motions for a nonsuit and verdict are general, in behalf of all the defendants collectively. Exceptions to such motions are overruled when it appears there was evidence which prevents the allowance of the motions as made. Moody v. Perley, 78 N. H. 17, 18, 95 Atl. 1047. The stenographer's minutes, printed as an appendix state that the motion for a direct verdict was "for the defendants individually and collectively." The exception was not so transferred, and no argument has been made of the evidence as applied to separate defendants. The question may be of no practical importance, and its consideration is postponed until asked for by the parties.

The ground upon which the denial of the motion for a verdict has been placed was recognized in the defendants' second request for instructions, which was:

"If you find the defendants undertook to disclose to the plaintiff, Mrs. Benoit, the mental condition of Mrs. Bordet, and that the defendants told the plaintiff the facts as they were, or as they, the defendants, believed them to be, then the defendants are not liable."

This instruction was given, and a verdict based thereon would be legally sound, and in any event irrevocable here; the law being stated as the defendants requested.

The fact that the case contained evidence from which could be found a breach of a duty assumed by at least one of the defendants requires the overruling of the contention that there was nothing for the jury. This conclusion is reached without considering whether upon other grounds the evidence would sustain a verdict against any or all of the defendants.

The exceptions to the instructions refused and given are next to be considered.

[5] As the jury were told in the charge, the evidence did not disclose false statements made to the plaintiff as to Mrs. Bordet's condition, but there was some evidence that the plaintiff was not told of Mrs. Bordet's occasional mental instability and suicidal attempts. Fraud may consist in the intentional concealment of a material fact as well as in a false statement of a fact. Hanson v. Edgerly, 29 N. H. 348, 354; Page v. Parker, 43 N. H. 363, 367, 80 Am. Dec. 172. "At common law, a fraud may be committed by the omission to disclose a material fact under some circumstances." Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 301, 320. But the fraudulent concealment of known facts with intent to mislead, and which in fact does mislead, another to his damage does not constitute actionable fraud, unless there be some obligation which the law recognizes to disclose the facts concealed. Potts v. Chapin, 133 Mass. 276. "I am not aware of any case in which an action at law has been maintained against a person for an alleged deceit, charging merely his concealment of a material fact which he was morally but not legally bound to disclose." Lord Chelmsford, Peck v. Gurney, L. R. 6 H. L. 377, 390. The duty to speak must arise from the circumstances, or there must be some relation of trust and confidence between the parties upon which to build the duty to disclose before the failure to disclose can be deemed a fraud whatever motive led to the concealment. 1 Story's Eq. §§ 207, 208; 2 Kent Com. §§ 482-492. "If this failure [to give information] were not in and of itself a fraud, it is not made so by alleging that it was induced by a desire to deceive and defraud the plaintiff (Van Weel v. Winston, 115 U. S. 228 [6 Sup. Ct. 22, 29 L. Ed. 384]). It was not a fraud unless there was some legal duty resting upon the defendant to make the disclosure. It may be that in foro conscientie the disclosure should have been made; but, unless a party has the right to this information, not only in that forum, but juris et de jure, the withholding of it cannot be classed as a legal fraud. * * * There must be some relation of trust and confidence existing between the parties upon which to build the duty to disclose before the right to a disclosure can be enforced by the courts. * * * No additional strength is given to the allegation of fraud by stating that Packard and defendant colluded and conspired together to conceal the fact for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff. If there were no duty resting on either to disclose the fact, each had the right to agree to be silent. The agreement to be silent where each has the right so to be is not made illegal by alleging it was done pursuant to conspiracy and collusion between the parties, without going further and showing that the concealment was but one step in carrying out a conspiracy which was unlawful, and it must be shown that it was unlawful and how, and what the steps were which were illegal or fraudulent. Mere general allegations of fraud and conspiracy are of no value as stating a cause of action." Wood v. Amory, 105 N. Y. 278, 281, 282, 11 N. E. 636.

[6] The defendants requested the court to charge the jury:

"If you find that there was no relation existing between this plaintiff, Mrs. Benoit, and the defendants, or either or any of them, by reason of which said defendants were under any legal obligation to disclose to the plaintiff, Mrs. Benoit, any facts tending to establish the sanity or insanity of Mrs. Bordet, Mrs. Benoit having asked for no information respecting Mrs. Bordet's mental condition, then your verdict must be for the defendants" —and excepted to the refusal to instruct as requested. There was no evidence that Mrs. Benoit made any inquiries of the defendants as to Mrs. Bordet or the nature of the employment she proposed to undertake. It does not appear that she trusted anything to them. In fact she appears to have resented their interest in the matter. For she testified she did not see at the time why she should see Mr. Berry when she was going to work for Mrs. Bordet and was making the trade with her. It is not claimed that this request does not correctly state the law or was inapplicable to the evidence, but the contention is that the request was substantially covered by the instructions given. This position is well taken. The necessity of legal obligation to speak as the foundation of a charge of fraud from failure to do so was recognized when it was said:

"In order to be a material misrepresentation there must be some relations existing between the parties in the way of contracts of employment, of dealings in some form where there is a duty on the part of the person knowing an event or a matter which might be important to state."

[7] As to what would constitute such a relation in this case the jury were further instructed:

"The allegation in the writ is that these defendants assumed to act for Mrs. Bordet, whom they knew was an insane person. * * * If they were acting for Mrs. Bordet, and Mrs. Bordet was competent to authorize them to act, or ratify their acts, they would be her agents. If they were acting as next friends, as it is stated in the writ, if they assumed to act for her and take care of her in her condition, which they knew and understood, as far as the evidence disclosed, then they were bound to act in good faith and honesty. It was their duty to disclose to this plaintiff at that time, before she engaged there, any information which as honest and reasonable men and women they should disclose there to enable her to protect herself. * * * In other words, you must find, before you can find a verdict for the plaintiff, that they assumed to act for her, for Mrs. Bordet, in some capacity."

To this instruction the defendants excepted upon the ground that there was no evidence that the defendants assumed to act for Mrs. Bordet. If there was no evidence that the defendants assumed to act for Mrs. Bordet in some capacity, the jury could not find they did so assume, and under the law laid down in the instructions the issue should not have been submitted to the jury. The preliminary question in consideration of this exception is, What was understood at the trial to be meant by the expression "acting for Mrs. Bordet in some capacity"—what from the charge must the jury have understood thereby? The plaintiff's claim was that she was injured because she entered Mrs. Bordet's employ without understanding its dangers. If she made her contract of employment with Mrs. Bordet, it was Mrs. Bordet's duty to warn her. If she made it with some one else acting for Mrs. Bordet, the duty of information rested with them. "Acting for Mrs. Bordet in some capacity" must therefore have been intended to mean representing her in relation to the proposed employment. The charge expressly so implies; for, after stating as before quoted that the duty to speak must arise from some relation existing between the parties by way of contracts of employment, the abstract statement is illustrated by the case of one employing another to work in his barn without informing him of a defect in its floor or to care for a vicious horse without giving notice of the character of the horse. From this language the jury could have inferred that they were at liberty to find that the defendants acted, or assumed to act for Mrs. Bordet in making the contract of employment, and that, if they did so act, they were legally bound to disclose what they knew. As a legal proposition, if these facts could be found, the statement may be unexceptionable. The case would then be of parties dealing together, one being in possession of facts material to the treaty which the other did not know and could not learn. The case would be within Hanson v. Edgerly and Page v. Parker, supra. But, as the defendants contend, the rule was inapplicable because there was no evidence in the case authorizing the conclusion that the defendants acted, or assumed to act, for Mrs. Bordet in the dealing which resulted in the contract. If the defendants, or either of them, had anything to do with the means by which information of the situation which Mrs. Benoit accepted reached her, the plaintiff failed to establish the fact by proof. Mrs. Benoit, learning of the opportunity by means, so far as the case goes entirely independent of the defendants, came to Jackson, and made her contract with Mrs. Bordet, and not with or through any of the defendants, acting or assuming to act for Mrs. Bordet.

Much stress has been laid in the argument upon the defendants' interest in Mrs. Bordet, and the subject was referred to in the charge. Long acquaintance with and friendship for Mrs. Bordet doubtless placed upon the defendants a moral, if not a legal, duty to care for her, and to see that whoever took charge of her was a suitable person and was instructed as to the care necessary for her protection, but this duty, whether legal or moral, was owed Mrs. Bordet, and not to the plaintiff. If in performance of a duty they owed Mrs. Bordet the defendants employed the plaintiff to care for her, the legal duty to Mrs. Benoit of informing her of the nature and perils of the service required would have been imposed; but, in the absence of evidence that, acting for themselves or for Mrs. Bordet, they took some part in the employment of the plaintiff, the case was improperly made to turn upon such employment by the defendants, of which there was no evidence. It is not error to refuse to give an instruction, unobjectionable as matter of law, if there is no evidence to which the legal proposition is applicable. Kuba v. Devonshire Mills, 78 N. H. 245, 99 Atl. 91. But it is error to submit to the jury a question upon which there is no evidence. Moody v. Perley, 78 N. H. 17, 95 Atl. 1047. The exception to the charge upon this ground is sustained. Whether the fraud charged was the proximate cause of the damage claimed has not been questioned.

[8, 9] One of the defendants, Miss Perkins, testified that after Mrs. Bordet's death she took possession of her money and jewelry and turned it over to her executor. Subject to exception the plaintiff was permitted to ask her upon cross-examination if she did not have trouble with the executor. The question was competent upon the witness' credibility. The extent to which an examination of this nature should be carried is settled at the trial. Guttersen v. Morse, 58 N. H. 185.

[10-12] The remaining exceptions necessary to be considered are to the argument of counsel. One is to a reference to the testimony just referred to as admitted subject to exception. The evidence was in the case, and counsel could use it for the purpose for which it was competent. Use for a purpose for which it was incompetent would be error, and, if permitted by the court subject to exception, would destroy the verdict. Burnham v. Stillings, 76 N. H. 122, 79 Atl. 937. The record does not show what use counsel proposed to make of the evidence.

As far as the record shows, the only question presented to the court when exception was taken was whether there was such evidence in the case.

[13-15] The remaining exceptions relate to misstatements of the evidence made in the course of the argument. "While a verdict may be set aside for the introduction in argument of facts not contained in the evidence, and a persistent misstatement of the evidence may amount to such introduction so as to render the trial unfair, a mere misrecollection or accidental misstatement of the evidence does not render the trial unfair as matter of law." State v. Wren, 77 N. H. 361, 364, 92 Atl. 170. In the case cited the error consisted in ascribing the testimony of one witness to another. The jury were cautioned by counsel and court to rely upon their own recollection of the testimony of the witnesses, and not upon the statements of counsel, and the error was found by the trial court to be harmless in fact.

One of the statements objected to in the present case, however, cannot be passed over as "mere misrecollection or accidental misstatement of the evidence." Mrs. Benoit testified that Mr. Berry telephoned to her, asking her what her terms would be. Mr. Berry denied making such inquiry or having any telephonic communication with the plaintiff. Counsel stated that a Mrs. George, who was a witness, when asked if she saw Mrs. Benoit, replied, "Only when she came to telephone to Mr. Berry," and argued with great force the value of a fact coming in this way from a witness incidentally and without express inquiry upon the point. The vital point in the case turns upon the credibility of Mr. Berry. Despite objection, the statement was twice repeated, reiterated, and enlarged upon. There was no such testimony in the case. What Mrs. George did say was that Mrs. Benoit came to her house to answer by telephone a letter she had received from Miss Trickey. It is not probable counsel intended to misstate the evidence. He may have had in mind what he had expected the witness to say rather than her actual testimony. If so, he placed before the jury a fact which he failed to get into the evidence, material upon a vital point in the case; and, when the matter was called to his attention, he reiterated the statement and enlarged upon it. "A statement by counsel in argument of material facts of which there was no evidence, direct or inferential, is ordinarily reversible error, unless there is a finding that it did not render the trial unfair." Gosselin v. Company, 78 N. H. 149, 151, 97 Atl. 744. "When exception was taken to the improper statement, it was incumbent upon the defendant to withdraw it, obtain an instruction to the jury not to consider it, and a finding of fact from the presiding justice that the trial was not rendered unfair thereby." Lemay v. De- mers, 77 N. H. 563, 564, 94 Atl. 262. These cases of recent date merely restate the rule, which has been consistently applied since the decision of Bullard v. Railroad in 1886, 64 N. H. 27, 5 Atl. 838, 10 Am. St. Rep. 367. Under this rule a verdict is set aside, not as a punishment for the misconduct of counsel, but to secure to the opposite party a fair trial. Bullard v. Railroad, supra. Hence the good faith of counsel in stating the fact as one proved by the evidence is immaterial; the question remains, Has the trial been fair? Here the jury has been urged to use in the decision of the issue before them a fact which has not been proved. If the fact were an immaterial one, or from the situation it was not probable the jury who heard the evidence were misled by the misstatement of it, it would be plain that there was no lack of fairness in the trial. But the fact stated may be, as in this case, a material one. The forcible and repeated statement of it by counsel may have had more influence upon the minds of the jury than their recollection of what the witness really said. If this latter is probable, it is probable the verdict has been unfairly obtained. In the case of such an error, how may it be corrected? To require counsel, stating his recollection of the evidence, to reverse himself or run the risk of losing the verdict whenever objection is made, should subsequent investigation of the record disclose he was in error, would give the objecting party an unfair advantage. To stop the argument for an examination of the record whenever controversy arose as to the evidence would be, in most cases, impracticable. When, as in this case, upon subsequent examination of the record it appears that the objecting party was in the right, and that there was a material misrepresentation of the evidence by the party obtaining the verdict, the verdict ought not to stand, if produced by the misrepresentation. Whether the trial was rendered unfair by the error is a question of fact to be settled, like all questions of fact relating to procedure at the trial, by the presiding justice. In the course of his argument counsel disclaimed any intention to misquote the evidence, and the jury were instructed generally that they should be guided by their own recollection of the evidence, and not by counsel's recital of it, although nothing was said by counsel or court with special reference to this particular statement. Conceding that for a misstatement of this kind what took place was a sufficient compliance with the rule requiring withdrawal of an improper statement and obtaining disregarding instructions, there is no finding that the error was harmless in fact. The burden of obtaining this finding is properly placed with the party in fault. It cannot be said there was no evidence upon which a finding fatal to the verdict could be made. Hence, in the absence of the contrary finding, the verdict cannot stand.

Exceptions sustained in part; verdict set aside.

WALKER and PLUMMER, JJ., concurred. PEASLEE, J., concurred in the result. YOUNG, J., dissented.

(183 Md. 23)

MURPHY et al. v. STUBBLEFIELD.
(No. 4.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. May 1, 1918.)

1. PLEADING \S 204(3)—DEMURREE—EFFECT.

In action in assumpsit on seven counts of which six were good, the defect, if any, in the seventh, which sought recovery on two separate notes, did not render the entire petition subject to general demurrer.

2. USURY \S 111(1)—PLEADING—REQUISITES.

Since usury is a statutory defense, the terms of Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 49, § 5, stating how usury shall be pleaded, must be strictly complied with.

3. USURY \S 111(2)—PLEADING—REQUISITES—"DISCOUNT."

In action on notes, plea that the notes were made with the intention that they should be discounted by plaintiff and that plaintiff gave less than their face value, the sum retained being usurious, was a good plea of usury; the term "discount" referring to a loan and not a sale of the paper, and meaning a loan with a right of taking the interest in advance.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Discount.]

4. GUARANTY \S 77(2)—LIABILITY—EXAMINATION OF REMEDIES AGAINST MAKER.

The maker of a note upon which payment was guaranteed by defendants could recover from them regardless of the fact that he made no attempt to recover from the maker, their liability being absolute.

5. WITNESSES \S 268(12) — CROSS-EXAMINATION—SCOPE.

In action on notes, under defense of usury, defendants could not cross-examine plaintiff as to the amount he paid for the notes, his understanding of the transaction, nor call on him for production of the check, but should make him their own witness as to such matters.

Appeal from Superior Court of Baltimore City; Robert F. Stanton, Judge.

Action by Thomas W. Stubblefield against William J. Murphy and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

John L. G. Lee and J. Albert Baker, both of Baltimore, for appellants. Charles F. Diggs, of Washington, D. C., and Watson M. Sherwood, of Baltimore, for appellee.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. This action is one in assumpsit, and the first six counts in the declaration are the common counts in that form of action. The seventh count is as follows:

"And for that one Fred. A. Dolph on the 24th day of November, 1916, by his promissory note now overdue, promised to pay to himself, or order, $1,000 four months after date, and the defendants indorsed the same to the plaintiff, and jointly and severally guaranteed payment of said note, and the said note was duly presented for payment and was dishonored, whereof the defendants had due notice and did not pay the same."

The eighth count is similar to the seventh, the note mentioned in it bearing the same date as that declared on in the seventh count, having the same length of time to run, and for the same amount. The two notes mentioned were attached to the narr. each being in this form:

"$1,000.00.

"Baltimore, Md., November 24, 1916.

"Four months after date I promise to pay to the order of myself, one thousand dollars, at Baltimore, Md., with interest at 6 per cent. from date. Value received. Fred. A. Dolph.

Indorsed: "Fred. A. Dolph."

"Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

"For value received we hereby jointly and severally guarantee the payment of the within mentioned note; and also hereby jointly and severally waive demand, protest and notice of nonpayment thereof.

Wm. J. Murphy.

"Anna C. Murphy.

"Wm. Bevan.

"Susie R. Bevan.

"Herman A. Rehling.

"Louisa Rehling.

"H. T. Weber.

"James F. Davis.

"H. S. Robinson.

"T. W. Stubblefield."

When the time of maturity arrived, neither of the notes were paid, but were protested for nonpayment, and notice was mailed to all those whose names appeared on the back of the note with the exception of the maker.

The suit was brought under the speedy judgment act applicable in the city of Baltimore and contained the affidavits required by the Act of 1886, c. 184. Within the time required under the act for the filing of pleas, in order to prevent a judgment by default, all of the defendants named with the exception of H. S. Robinson appeared and filed the general issue pleas. In the affidavit attached to those pleas the defendants admitted $1,344 to be due to the plaintiff, and disputed the balance of his claim, and in August, 1917, the plaintiff took a judgment for the sum of $1,344 with costs against the defendants who had pleaded. The next step took place on December 8, 1917, when the defendants obtained leave of the court to file an additional plea, and the same day the following plea was entered:

"That on the 24th day of November, 1916, defendants sent to plaintiff two notes of $1,000 each, with the understanding that said notes were to be discounted by plaintiff; that plaintiff gave to defendants only $1,800, and refused to pay more; that defendants then tendered to plaintiff the entire sum advanced, with interest, and demanded the return of notes, which plaintiff refused; and that the amount disputed in this case is usurious interest demanded on said loan and retained by plaintiff from the amount of said notes."

[1] A motion ne recipiatur to the additional plea having been overruled, a demurrer was entered. The contention of the appellants is that the legal result of the demurrer was to make the error mount up to the first error in pleading, and that such error is to be found in the seventh count of the declaration, and consists in a misjoinder of two causes of action in a single count. The insuperable difficulty for the adoption of this view lies in the fact that, in so mounting up, the demurrer becomes a general demurrer to the declaration, and, as long as there is one good count, the narr. will stand and cannot be reached by a general demurrer. In this case the action was in assumpsit, the first six counts being the usual common counts in that form of action, and as repeatedly held, these not being open to demurrer, even if the seventh count could have been held liable to demurrer if standing alone, the present objection to it is not maintainable as enough would be left to enable the plaintiff to maintain the action.

[2, 3] The judge of the superior court sustained the demurrer to the additional plea, and the correctness of that ruling is now called in question by this appeal. Apparently what the pleader had in mind in preparing that plea was to set up the defense of usury with regard to both of these notes. What is requisite for a valid plea of usury has remained practically unchanged since the Act of 1845, c. 352, now embodied in the Code, art. 49, § 5. Being a statutory defense, the terms of the statute must, of course, be strictly complied with. If the plea sets up a loan, then the plea was good, for usury applies only with regard to a loan. On the other hand, if the plea sets up a sale, then the plea was bad, since on the sale of negotiable paper the vendee is in an entirely different position from the one who makes a loan upon similar paper. The term which is used in the plea itself is "discounted," and it is therefore material to inquire whether under the circumstances of this case the use of the word "discount" implies a sale or a loan. In Amer. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) vol. 2, p. 469, it is said:

"To discount paper as used in a business of banking is only a mode of loaning money with the right of taking the interest allowed by law in advance."

The term has been defined by this court in almost the same language in Weckler v. First National Bank, 42 Md. 592, 20 Am. Rep. 95, where Judge Miller says:

"The ordinary meaning of the term 'to discount' is to take interest in advance, and in banking is a mode of loaning money. It is the advance of money not due until some future period, less the interest which would be due thereon when payable."

And the same rule has been reaffirmed in Black v. Bank, 96 Md. 428, 54 Atl. 88, in which Judge Pearce, after quoting from Judge Miller, adds:

"Only the legal rate of interest would be due on the principal when payable, and thus Judge Miller's definition of the term is shown to be the same as that given above. If the legal rate were exceeded, a presumption might arise that the parties intended, or the law implied, a sale rather than a discount, because a sale (between ordinary parties at least) would be legal at any rate of deduction agreed on, but, where a bank discounts paper at a rate exceeding that allowed by law, the transaction would be within the usury law."

While the plea in this case may be open to criticism as to its form, each and all the requisites for a plea of usury, as set forth in the section of the Code referred to, will be found to be contained in it, and it is specifically alleged that it was the purpose in the making and guaranteeing of the note to have the same discounted. There is no suggestion legitimately to be drawn from anything contained in the plea that it was the idea, either of the maker or of the guarantors, that it was for the purpose of a sale; on the contrary, the plea alleges that the note was drawn to be "discounted," and that the deduction made therefrom was such an amount as to constitute usury. There is nothing in the language of the plea itself to give any force to a presumption of sale, rather than loan, so as to make effective the presumption which, as noted by Judge Pearce, may, but does not necessarily, arise.

In the view of this court, therefore, it is error to have sustained the demurrer to the plea, an error which was highly prejudicial to the defendants, since it took away from them the opportunity of presenting evidence to substantiate the theory of usury. See authorities already cited, and very full note upon this subject in 105 Am. St. Rep. p. 509.

[4] No valid objection arises from the fact that, so far as appears either from the pleadings or evidence, there was no attempt made upon the part of the holder of these notes to recover on them from the maker, Fred. A. Dolph. The present defendants were clearly liable upon these notes whether viewed as indorsers or guarantors. Any question upon that ground is effectively settled by Wood Machine Co. v. Ascher, 103 Md. 133, 62 Atl. 1023, 115 Am. St. Rep. 343, and cases therein cited.

The record contains four bills of exceptions, but they all relate to a single question and may be disposed of together.

[5] At the trial of the case the plaintiff was put upon the stand and testified to being engaged in the real estate business in the city of Washington, and that he sometimes bought commercial paper; that in December, 1913, H. S. Robinson called on him, stating that he had a note which he wished to sell, and he produced to the plaintiff one of the notes in question, and the plaintiff purchased the same; that three days later he purchased the second note from him; that the witness gave him his check in payment for both notes. The notes were then read in evidence, and the plaintiff rested. The defendants' counsel called for the production of the check given in payment for the notes, which was objected to, and the sustaining of that objection constitutes the first exception. The second bill of exceptions was to the ruling of the court in sustaining an objection to a question asked on cross-examination, "How much did you pay Mr. Robinson for those notes?" The third bill of exceptions was to a similar ruling by the court to a question also asked on cross-examination of the same witness, whether he had ever had any conversation with a Mr. Bracy in regard to those notes. And the fourth bill of exceptions was to the refusal of the court to permit the plaintiff on cross-examination to be asked, "Did or did you not understand that Mr. Robinson was not the owner of those notes?"

The demurrer to the additional plea having been sustained, these rulings were in harmony therewith, since the plain purpose in each one of the questions objected to was to establish, by the plaintiff himself, usury. The burden of proof to sustain the plea of usury necessarily devolved upon the defendants. It was the essential part of their case. The questions were objectionable at the time, and in the manner, when propounded, because they were not legitimate cross-examination of the plaintiff, and a defendant cannot establish usury, fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit under the guise of a cross-examination of the plaintiff. Williams v. Banks, 19 Md. 88.

The rule is stated in Jones on Evidence (2d Ed.) § 820, in this way:

"The rule sustained by the Supreme Court and which prevails in most of the states is that the cross-examination can only relate to facts and circumstances connected with the matters stated in the direct examination of the witnesses. If any party wishes to examine a witness as to other matters, he must do so by making the witness his own."

And with slight verbal changes the same rule is announced by Mr. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence (16th Ed. § 445), and it has been followed in this state in numerous instances, of which Griffith v. Diffenderfer, 50 Md. 478, is a good example. See, also, Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 439. Almost the same question here presented arose in Youmans v. Carney, 62 Wis. 580, 23 N. W. 20, where it was held that, if the direct examination of the payee of a note is confined to the genuineness of a signature or the identity of the note, the adverse party has no right to cross-examine as to consideration. See, also, Bell v. Prewitt, 62 Ill. 361.

The defendants might, had they so desired, have called the plaintiff as their own witness, and examined him upon the several questions which were propounded to him on the cross-examination, but which were ruled out, as already noted. If they had done this, the evidence should have been admitted; but the defendants would have been bound thereby except as provided by section 5 of article 35, Code P. G. L. In the manner in which it was attempted to be introduced, not being legitimate cross-examination, the ruling of the court with regard to them was free from error.

It follows from what has been said that the judgment of the court below must be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial; costs to be paid by the appellee.

(133 Md. 91)

O'DUNNE v. SAFE DEPOSIT & TRUST CO. OF BALTIMORE. (No. 19.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 19, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §936(2)—FEES—ALLOWANCE BY LOWER COURT—REVIEW.

The action of the lower court in fixing counsel fees, where authorized to do so, is treated as presumptively correct, as it has better means of knowing what is just and reasonable than an appellate court can have.

2. WILLS §707(1) — ATTORNEY APPOINTED BY COURT—AMOUNT OF FEE—REVIEW.

An order, on exceptions by the trustee, suing to construe a will, reducing from $2,500 to $750 the fee allowed to counsel appointed to represent infant defendants, found entitled to an annual income of $3,714.12, as against their parents, reversed on the evidence, and a fee of $1,000 allowed.

Appeal from Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City; Henry Duffy, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Eugene O'Dunne appeals from an order sustaining the exceptions of the Safe Deposit & Trust Company of Baltimore, trustee under the will of Joshua P. McCay, deceased, to the allowance of a counsel fee for representing certain infant defendants, under an appointment by the court, on a bill by the trustee to construe the will. Order reversed, and cause remanded for the passage of an order fixing the fee at $1,000.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCK-BRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Randolph Barton, Jr., of Baltimore, for appellant. Charles McH. Howard, of Baltimore, for appellee.

CONSTABLE, J. The sole question presented in this appeal is to the adequacy of a fee allowed by the lower court to counsel appearing for certain infant defendants under an appointment by the court. No question has been raised as to the right of the solicitor to be compensated for this is admitted.

For the disposition of this case it will not be necessary to go with any great detail into the facts of the case out of which the right of the appellant to a fee arose, and we will therefore content ourselves with setting out the memorandum of facts which was forwarded by the appellant to several members of the bar for the purpose of aiding them in forming an opinion as to what would be a proper fee to be allowed the appellant by the court for his work in preparing and trying the case, and so as to enable them to testify at the hearing on that question:

"Joshua McCay left in trust to the Safe Deposit & Trust Company, under the will construed in this case, an estate of a little over $1,000,000. There was provision, after the death of his widow (now dead), to divide into quarters and hold each quarter in trust for children and descendants. The one-quarter interest of the Mary Morgan share is $241,378.12. Her three children are Howard (died April, 1917), Mary Nicholls (living, no children), and Rowland Morgan (living, three living children). Howard Morgan, deceased, left two infant children. The annual income on the Howard Morgan share, being one-third, was $3,714.12, with like amount to his brother, Rowland, and sister, Mary Nicholls. A bill was filed by the Safe Deposit & Trust Company April 4, 1917, to construe the will, and particularly the ninth clause thereof, to determine in whom the income is vested, whether in the infant children of Howard Morgan, deceased, or whether in his administrator, and also the rights of the surviving brother and sister as to income, and eventually as to corpus, on the death of the survivor of said Morgan children.

"It was contended by Mr. Vernon Cook, representing Mrs. Nicholls and Rowland Morgan, that the grandchildren of testator take vested interests, and contended by Mr. O'Dunne, counsel for the infant children of Howard Morgan, deceased, and the infant children of Rowland Morgan (now living), that the right to income is vested in these great-grandchildren, and not in their parents, and that, on the death of the survivor of said Mary Morgan children, her then living descendants at the time of termination of the trust shall be the ones to whom the corpus shall be distributed. The case was set for argument before Judge Duffy September 25th, and counsel were excused two or three times a day, for two or three days, waiting on a pending case. It was later finally and fully argued by Mr. Charles McH. Howard for the Safe Deposit Company, by Mr. Jesse Bowen for Rosa McCay Lockwood, by Mr. L. A. Dent, of Washington (with whom was Mr. Frank Gonnell), for Emily Proctor, and by Mr. Vernon Cook for Rowland Morgan and his sister, Mary Nicholls, and by Eugene O'Dunne for the infant children of Howard Morgan, deceased, and for the infant children of Rowland Morgan (living). Elaborate briefs were prepared and filed by Mr. Dent, on behalf of himself and Mr. Gonnell (35 typewritten pages), by Mr. Vernon Cook (10 pages), and the inclosed by Mr. O'Dunne on behalf of the infant children aforesaid (said last brief was of 62 printed pages). On November 9th Judge Duffy handed down the inclosed opinion and decree sustaining the contention of the infant children of Howard Morgan, deceased, and of Rowland Morgan (living)."

At the time of the signing of the decree on the points involved in the case, some discussion arose among the counsel and court as to the amount of the fees to be allowed to respective counsel for their services in the case. From certificate of the court in the record it appears that:

"The court asked Mr. O'Dunne what counsel fee he proposed taking, and Mr. O'Dunne stated that he had no particular amount to name; that in this particular case all of the services rendered were peculiarly within the knowledge of the court; that his brief had been filed and left with the court, and that he was willing to leave the matter to be determined by the court; and reminded the court that he had left with the court certificates, or letters, from Mr. Fisher, Mr. Barton, and Mr. Machen for the court's consideration, and asked if any of the gentlemen present had any suggestions to make to the court on the subject. None were made, and the court, after reading the letters of Messrs. Barton, Fisher, and Machen, stated that he would allow the fee of twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500), to be paid out of the corpus of the Howard Morgan share. Mr. O'Dunne thereupon suggested that the court add to the form of decree, as drawn by Mr. Howard, that the same be made subject to exceptions. The court thereupon indicated that he would make it, subject to exceptions to be filed in thirty (30) days, and the decree was thereupon revised accordingly by Mr. Charles McH. Howard, and thereafter signed by the court."

Exceptions to the allowance of $2,500 counsel fee were filed by the Safe Deposit & Trust Company, trustee, under the will. A hearing was had on the exceptions and testimony heard in open court. The exceptant produced four witnesses in support of its contention that the fee was too large. All these witnesses had been closely identified with the trial of the case and were all men of exceptional knowledge of cases along the line of this case. There was Mr. John W. Marshall, vice president of the Safe Deposit & Trust Company of Baltimore, and who at that time was head of the trust department of his company; Mr. Frank Gosnell, a member of the law firm of Marbury, Gosnell & Williams, and who had represented one of the parties in the litigation; Mr. Vernon Cook, a member of the law firm of Haman, Cook, Chesnut & Markell, and who represented one of the parties throughout the case; Mr. Jesse N. Bowen, a member of the law firm of Semmes, Bowen & Semmes. These gentlemen were thoroughly familiar with every feature of the case, and testified as to what in their opinion would be proper compensation for the work accomplished by Mr. O'Dunne. Mr. Marshall placed his estimate at $500, Mr. Cook at $750, Mr. Bowen at $1,000. Mr. Gosnell testified that previous to the hearing he had considered $500 adequate compensation, but during the hearing he changed this estimate to $1,000.

The respondent, previous to the hearing, had requested Mr. D. K. Este Fisher, a member of the law firm of Fisher, Bruce & Fisher, Mr. Arthur Machen, Jr., a member of the law firm of Machen & Williams, and Mr. Randolph Barton, Jr., a member of the law firm of Barton, Wilmer & Stewart, all accomplished lawyers, with a wide experience in cases of this character, to give him certificates, in the form of letters as to what would in their opinion be a proper compensation to be allowed him in the case just tried. He furnished them with a memorandum of facts, which we have set out above, and talked to them generally about the case. Mr. Barton and Mr. Machen were unable to attend the hearing, but their certificates were filed. Mr. Fisher attended the hearing and testified. Mr. Fisher and Mr. Machen each placed their estimate at $2,500, and Mr. Barton at $3,000. The court passed an order sustaining the exceptions, wherein it reduced the fee from $2,500 to $750.

[1, 2] The fixing of counsel fees, where courts are authorized to do it, has always been regarded by them as one of their most delicate duties, and especially unpleasant is it to appellate courts to have to review allowances made by the lower courts. Mr. Miller, in his work on Equity Procedure, in the notes to section 568, in dealing with this subject, has well said that the action of the lower court is treated as presumptively correct, since it has better means of knowing what is just and reasonable than an appellate court can have, and cites several authorities to that effect. While, of course, we want to give due weight and consideration to the finding of the lower court, and especially so since it heard every detail of the case and decided every question raised, which puts it in a peculiarly strong position, so as to form a correct opinion as to the value of the services rendered, yet it is difficult to reconcile its views with that of the experienced lawyers testifying for the respondent. It may be that those lawyers, with all their experience and knowledge, did not occupy the same character of position which would enable them, because of their nonassociation with the case, to form as correct an opinion as to the value of the services mentioned as the court who heard and decided the case and the lawyers who took part in its trial. It is also difficult to reconcile the court's present opinion of $750, formed after the hearing on exceptions, with the amount it placed of its own accord in the nisi order of $2,500. But there is a diversion of views among the lawyers testifying for the exceptant; two out of the four say $1,000 would be proper compensation, while the other two are for $500 and $750, respectively. While we are of the opinion that the estimates placed by the respondent's witnesses are entirely too large, yet we are of the opinion that $1,000 should be allowed the appellant. We will therefore reverse the order.

Order reversed, and cause remanded so as to pass an order in conformity with the foregoing opinion; the costs to be paid out of the Mary Morgan fund.

(123 Md. 670)

ZINK v. STATE OF MARYLAND, to Use of RENSTROM, et al. (No. 52.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. May 27, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §330(3)—DIRECTION TO DRIVE AUTOMOBILE—PERSONAL SERVANT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action against owner of automobile for death of pedestrian, evidence held to show that direction given by owner to driver to take third person to car line was personal direction, making driver owner's personal servant, and not servant of company of which owner was manager.

2. DEATH §104(8)—DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT—INSTRUCTION ON DAMAGES.

In state's action for wife for death of husband, wife's age at death having been 37 and husband's 44 years, instruction not specifically directing that in estimating prospective damages jury should consider probable duration of joint lives of wife and husband, was not erroneous, in view of small disparity in age.

Appeal from Baltimore Court of Common Pleas; Morris A. Soper, Judge.

Action by the State of Maryland, for the Use of Hilda Rebecca Renstrom, and others, against John H. Zink. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Lucius Q. O. Lamar and Wm. L. Marbury, both of Baltimore, for appellant. Lewis W. Lake and J. Cookman Boyd, both of Baltimore, for appellees.

PATTISON, J. August Renstrom, husband and father of the equitable plaintiffs, while walking upon the public highway leading from Wagner's Point to Stone House Cove, in Anne Arundel county, Md., on the 24th day of January, 1917, was knocked down and killed by an automobile owned by the defendant and driven by one Upham, who, as the declaration alleges, was at such time the agent of the defendant.

Renstrom at the time of the accident was employed by the Curtis Bay Chemical Company located upon Stone House Cove. He, each day, went to and from his home in Baltimore city to his place of employment upon the cars of the United Electric Railway Company of Baltimore city, the terminus of which, at Stone House Cove, is about four city blocks from the plant of the Curtis Bay Chemical Company. Upham, as well as the defendant, was an employé of the United States Asphalt Refining Company, whose plant is located in the vicinity of Stone House Cove, about a mile and one-eighth from the terminus of the car line of the railway company. To accommodate the employes of the Asphalt Refining Company and others employed or living in that locality, a public jitney bus line had been established by the city railway company, starting at the terminus of the car line and running upon the public macadam road to Wagner's Point.

On the day of the accident the jitney operating upon this line was disabled, and at the hour of 5 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, when the factory of the Asphalt Refining Company shut down, there was no jitney to take its employes to the terminus of the car line, consequently they, with the employes of other companies, were required to walk to the terminus of the car line in order to take the car to their homes in the city. The defendant, who also lived in Baltimore city, used an automobile owned by him in going to and from the plant each day. The car and jitney lines were not used by him. Upham boarded at the same house with the defendant, in the city, and rode with him each day to and from the plant of the company.

On the occasion of the accident it seems that the defendant was detained at the office of the company after the hour of the shutting down of its plant, and while there in conversation with a visitor, one Schlee, an employé of the company, called at the office, and the defendant asked him "what he was doing there," as it was after office hours. He said, "Well, the jitney bus was broken down and he was not able to go home." The defendant then turned to Upham, who was in the office waiting to return to the city with him in his automobile, and said to him, "What are you doing?" Upham replied, "nothing," and the defendant then said, "Well, take him [Schlee] up to the car line," meaning that he should take him in his (the defendant's) automobile, and both Schlee and Upham left his office. On their way to the car line, in the automobile of the defendant, they overtook other employes of the Asphalt Refining Company, who had started to walk to the car line. Three of these, either by invitation, or at their request, got upon the running boards, or upon the rear of the machine, it having but two seats in it. It was while upon the road, on the way to the car line, that Renstrom was knocked down and killed by the automobile driven, as we have said, by Upham.

Howard J. Eyerly, an employé of the Curtis Bay Chemical Company, testified:

That he, at the time of the accident, which was about ten minutes after 5 o'clock in the afternoon of January 24, 1917, was walking with Renstrom and two other employes of that company upon the public highway on their way to the car line. They were walking four abreast upon the road, he to the extreme left with Renstrom next to him on the right, "and I heard the buzzing of the machine, or some kind of a noise, and it made me turn around, and I just happened to get my head around and I saw this big gray machine, something on the order of a racing car, and a right heavy machine at that, and I hollered 'Look out!' That was all I had time to do, was to holler 'Look out!' and as I hollered 'Look out!' I stepped to the left like, about a foot, and Gus, the man who got hit, stepped one step ahead and just got his head around like this, when the machine came along and caught him. The machine knocked him down head first, and knocked him at least 10 feet in front of the machine, and then the left front wheel ran over his head again. The machine kept on about 200 or 250 feet, and in the meantime I started to run after the machine, because I thought the fellow was not going to stop, but he stopped . . . and we picked him [Renstrom] up and took him up to Brooklyn."

He further testified that he never heard any horn blow, and that the road was straight at this point, and that there was no obstruction in the road, more than a few men who were walking upon it; that when he looked around the automobile was about 75 feet behind him and was going, as he judged, about 35 miles an hour. "It went by me like a streak of lightning; just missed me." The automobile at that time was on the extreme left side of the road. Renstrom died the next day after being carried to the hospital.

Benjamin Max, one of those present with Renstrom and the witness Eyerly on the occasion of the accident, also testified as to the happening of the accident, but as his testimony was practically the same as that of Eyerly, we need not repeat it here.

Wycliff O. Manger, an employé of the Asphalt Refining Company, who was with Upham in the automobile at the time of the accident, testified:

That he was sitting in the front of the machine on the floor with his feet out on the step, looking ahead. "We passed different workmen on their way home, blowing the horn every time we passed any one. I noticed there was a cart in the distance, and they started to blow their horn, and blew it continuously to let the cart know they wanted to pass it on the left. There were four men walking on the left side of the road, right in front of the cart, as though they were getting out of the way of the cart. He (Upham) blew the horn and started to get over to the left side of the road to pass the cart, expecting the men to hear the horn and step off the road. It seemed they didn't hear the horn and didn't pay any attention to it until we were within, I guess, 20 or 30 feet of them, and they each started to look back over his shoulder and they saw the machine and they scattered. Two went to the right in front of the cart and two went off to the left. One man on the extreme left, he got off the side of the road, but the second man from the left, he was the last one to look back over his shoulder, and didn't get off before we reached him, and the left lamp of the machine struck him in the back and knocked him down alongside of the road. We continued on, slowing down, about 50 feet and came to a stop."

He also testified that the car was going about 10 or 12 miles an hour. This evidence of Manger is supported by that of Disney and Schlee, but Schlee further testifies:

That he "was down to the plant and Mr. Upham came to the office with the car. They generally bring it up about 5 o'clock, and Mr. Zink drives it home. He goes down in it in the morning and goes home in it at night, and Mr. Zink was in the office, and Upham said, 'Come on, Schlee, I will take you up to the car line,' and the other boys were all along the road, and they got in as we went by."

He also testified that he himself at times had used the car when told to do so by the defendant, but was unable to say that the business for which he used it was for the company. He was then asked: "What was the nature of the business?" He answered: "Different errands. Q. What kind of errands? A. Well, sometimes he sent me to his house."

The defendant, when placed upon the stand in his own behalf, testified that he was the manager of the United States Asphalt Refining Company, and had been manager since 1913; that the company employed possibly so many as 150 men, the number varying on different days; that the plant was about a mile and one-eighth from the trolley car line; that the company did not provide transportation for its employes to and from the trolley line, but the United Railway & Electric Company operated a bus line from Stone House Cove to Wagner's Point, upon which the buses run every 20 minutes. The witness also testified as to the conversation which we have already given, in which he told Upham to take Schlee to the car line. When he was asked: "Was it within your employment with the company to provide means for the employes of the company to get to the car line?" he answered:

"I had not any instructions in the matter whatever. The man was standing there and I used the discretion; as to whether it was personal discretions or not, I did not consider that at the moment. If there was any one else walking along the road and I felt like picking them up, I would—"

Here the witness was interrupted by his counsel asking him:

"But did you have personal interest in having Mr. Schlee taken to the trolley car that night? He was not in your employ, was he? A. No, sir. Q. Well, was it to your personal interest to have him sent to the car, and, if so, why? A. I had not any personal interest other than I considered a favor, that is all. Q. But the company had an interest in it, didn't it? A. I don't know. Q. You don't know whether it made any difference to the company whether the men had transportation or not? A. Well, they may have or not, but I did not consider that at the time I told them to take the machine."

He was then asked, upon cross-examination:

"Was it part of your duty to furnish transportation from these works to the car lines? A. No, sir. Q. Was there anything in the employment of these men, since you had charge of the employment, that was a condition to furnish them transportation from the works to the car line? A. No, sir. Q. Do you know of the jitney being broken down any other time than this? A. Yes, sir. Q. And how had the men gotten to and from the works then? A. Some of them walked and some of them were picked up on the other machines and taken to their car line. Q. Was this after office hours? A. Yes, sir."

At the conclusion of all the evidence the plaintiffs offered two prayers, both of which were granted; the defendant offered six prayers. The third, fifth, and sixth were granted; the first, second, and fourth were refused. Exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court in granting the plaintiffs' prayers and in refusing the defendant's said prayers. The defendant, by his first prayer, asked the court to instruct the jury that there was no evidence adduced "legally sufficient to prove that at the time when August Renstrom was struck by the automobile mentioned in the declaration, said automobile was being operated by the defendant, John H. Zink, or his servant or agent, as alleged in the declaration." It is upon the court's ruling in rejecting this prayer and in granting the plaintiffs' prayers that the defendant chiefly relies in his efforts to have the judgment for the plaintiffs, in the court below, reversed.

It is conceded that the automobile, driven by Upham at the time of the accident, was the automobile of the defendant; and the undisputed evidence in the case shows that at such time it was being used by Upham upon the express direction of the defendant in carrying Schlee to the car line. These facts show that Upham, at the time of the accident, was the agent or servant of the defendant, unless, as claimed by the defendant's counsel, Zink, the defendant, was acting as manager of the Asphalt Refining Company in giving such directions.

To have taken the case from the jury under the prayer offered, it would have been necessary for the court to have held, as a matter of law, that by the undisputed evidence in the case the defendant was acting as the manager of the Asphalt Refining Company, and not personally, in directing Upham to take Schlee to the car line in his automobile. It was not a condition of their employment that the company should provide its employes transportation from the plant to the car line. The railway company had provided a jitney bus line from its cars to Wagner's Point, and the employes of the Asphalt Refining Company had, at their own expense, availed themselves of such transportation in going to and from their homes to the company's plant. The bus upon this line upon previous occasions had become disabled, and at such times failed to provide means of transportation for the company's employes and others to and from the car line to the plants at which they worked; and at such times said employes and others walked to and from the car line, unless picked up, as stated by the defendant, by some automobile traveling upon that road.

The plant of the company had shut down for the day and the employes, other than Schlee, had started to the car line, but Schlee, knowing that the defendant was still at the office of the company and thinking he would soon start in his automobile for his home in the city, passing by the terminus of the railway company's car line upon his way to the city, goes to the office of the company, no doubt for the express purpose of riding with him in his automobile as far as the terminus of the car line, and thus avoiding walking that distance.

[1] Upham, at the time, was at the office of the company waiting to return to the city with the defendant in his automobile; the defendant, as we have said, having been detained by a visitor at the office. The defendant, seeing Schlee at the office at a time of day when he ordinarily would have been on his way home, asked him why he was there, and when told by Schlee that the bus was disabled and not running, the defendant turned to Upham and said, "What are you doing?" Upham replied, "Nothing," when the defendant said to him, "Well, take him up to the car line." These facts, in our opinion, do not show that the direction given by the defendant to Upham to take Schlee in his private automobile to the car line was given by him as the manager of the company, but on the contrary, show that such direction was a personal one, which made Upham his personal agent or servant. The correctness of this conclusion, we think, is further shown by the evidence of the defendant himself. He testified, when asked what interest if any he had in Schlee, that he had none, but regarded his act in sending Schlee to the station as a personal favor, and in doing so was prompted by the same feeling that would prompt him in picking up any other person walking upon the road in like situation, and from what he further said it can well be gathered that the company was not at all considered by him in what he did, in respect thereto, but the act was purely a personal one upon his part.

The decision here reached, upon the facts of this case, is not at all inconsistent with the decisions in the cases of Broderick v. Detroit Union Station & Depot Co., 56 Mich. 261, 22 N. W. 802, 56 Am. Rep. 382, Wilson v. Banner Lumber Co., 108 La. 590, 32 South. 460, and others cited by the appellant; the facts in those cases differ widely from those in the case before us; nor is the conclusion we have reached at variance with the principles enunciated in Bailey on Personal Injuries, vol. 8, p. 2005.

[2] The plaintiffs' second prayer is not in full accord with what this court, in Baltimore & Reisterstown Turnpike v. State, Use of Grimes, 71 Md. 583, 18 Atl. 884, said it should be. In that case this court, in discussing a prayer like the one before us, said:

"It would be better and safer to say that in estimating the prospective damages to the widow the jury were to take into consideration the probable duration of their joint lives," meaning the joint lives of herself and husband.

The court, however, said that:

"Although not perhaps as explicit as it might be, yet fairly interpreted, it means, as we understand it, that in estimating the prospective damages to the widow, the jury are to take into consideration the reasonable probabilities of her life and the life of her husband, or, in other words, the probable duration of their joint lives."

A reason assigned in that case, why the prayer should be more explicit, as suggested, was that:

"In some cases there may be a great disparity between the ages of the husband and wife. The husband may be advanced in years, and in feeble health, and the wife may be in the prime of life, and in such cases it would not be just to estimate the pecuniary loss suffered by her in taking into consideration the probable duration of her life, irrespective of the probable duration of the life of her husband."

The record in this case discloses that at the time of the death of the husband he was 44 years old and in perfect health, while the wife was at that time 37 years of age. This was not such a disparity in their ages as to warrant us in holding this prayer bad because of it, in view of the action of the court in the former case from which we have just quoted. As in that case no objection was made to the instruction because of such defect, and, as there said, we must assume the jury understood it to mean the joint lives of herself and husband. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. State, Use of Trainor & others, 33 Md. 542; Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. State, Use of Woodward, 41 Md. 268; Cumb. & Penn. R. R. Co. v. State, Use of Hogan, 45 Md. 234; Phila., Wilm. & Baltimore R. R. Co. v. State, Use of Bitzer, 58 Md. 372.

We find no error in the court's rulings in granting the plaintiffs' prayers, and in our opinion the defendant's second and fourth prayers were properly refused.

The judgment of the court below will therefore be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

(123 Md. 52)

MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF HAGERSTOWN v. FOLTZ. (No. 11.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 19, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE §60 — PROXIMATE CAUSE — REMOTE CONSEQUENCES.

A defendant, charged with causing injury through negligence, is not liable, unless alleged negligence was the proximate, and not the remote, cause of the injury.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §800(6) — OBSTRUCTION ON SIDEWALK—INJURY TO CHILD — PROXIMATE CAUSE.

City's alleged negligence in permitting a table to remain upon a sidewalk, in violation of an ordinance prohibiting obstructions thereupon, was not proximate cause of injury to small child, caught between table and automobile that backed upon the sidewalk.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §819(4) — ACTION FOR INJURY TO CHILD — CONTOUR OF STREET AND CURB—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

In action against city for injuries to child from automobile backing over curb onto sidewalk, where alleged negligence of city consisted of faulty contour of street and curb at such point, in that driveway part of street was higher than sidewalk, evidence held insufficient to show that the accident was the natural and probable consequence of the alleged negligence.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Frederick County; Glenn H. Worthington and Edward C. Peter, Judges.

Action by Stella Blanche Foltz, by her father and next friend, Ceits R. Foltz, against the Mayor and City Council of Hagerstown. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, without a new trial.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOOK-BRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Alex. R. Hagner, of Hagerstown (Jacob Rohrbach, of Frederick, and J. A. Mason, of Hagerstown, on the brief), for appellant. Omer T. Kaylor and Frank G. Wagaman, both of Hagerstown, for appellee.

PATTISON, J. The infant appellee, Stella Blanche Foltz, by Ceits R. Foltz, her father and next friend, recovered judgment in the lower court against the mayor and council of Hagerstown for personal injuries received by her in the manner hereinafter stated in the declaration. The declaration contained three counts. A demurrer was sustained to each and all of them, but the second count was amended, under leave of the court, and a demurrer filed thereto was overruled.

This amended count of the declaration alleged that the defendant, pursuant to its charter rights and powers, passed an ordinance prior to the happening of the injuries complained of, and which was then in force, making it unlawful for any person to obstruct in any way any street, highway, lane, alley, crossing, or sidewalk of Hagerstown; that for a long time prior to, and at the time of, the injuries complained of, a certain obstruction, to wit, a large table, was placed on the sidewalk of said town, at or near the intersection of South Potomac and Antietam streets, and the defendant,

"although it had notice of the violation of the provisions of the ordinance aforesaid, negligently, carelessly, and wrongfully took no measures whatever to enforce the provisions of said ordinance, and negligently, carelessly, and wrongfully permitted said obstruction to remain at the place aforesaid, and in consequence thereof the said obstruction was at the place aforesaid on the said sidewalk at the time of the injuries hereinafter alleged; that it was lawful for automobiles to turn around in the street opposite the said obstruction, and that by reason of the contour of said street and curb at said place that the defendant knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care should have foreseen, that automobiles turning at said point were likely to pass from said street onto the sidewalk; that on or about the 10th day of April, A. D. 1916, the said Stella Blanche Foltz was lawfully passing on and along the sidewalk of said Hagerstown, near the obstruction aforesaid, at the intersection of the streets aforesaid, and that an automobile was then and there being turned in said street, and was then and there backed upon the sidewalk opposite said obstruction, and that the body of the said infant was caught between the said automobile and said obstruction, and the said infant was by the obstruction aforesaid greatly torn, mangled, and bruised, and caused to suffer great bodily and mental pain and anguish, and great and permanent injuries, and that said injuries were so received by the said infant as a direct and immediate consequence of the aforesaid negligence of the defendant in the premises."

The amendment to the second count consists of the italicized words appearing in the above amended declaration. The evidence discloses that the table mentioned in the declaration was upon the sidewalk in front of the grocery store of Ernest Miller, at the southwest corner of Potomac and Antietam streets, in said town, where it had been for a number of years prior to the happening of the accident. This table, used by Mr. Miller in placing thereon flower bulbs, vegetables, and other articles that were offered and exhibited by him for sale, was 12 feet in length, 2½ feet in width, and 1 foot and 9 inches in height, and sat against the front wall of the store building, below the show window of the store, the sill of which came within a few inches of the top of the table, in an angle caused by the projection of a stoop or steps out from said building upon the sidewalk, extending to a point beyond the width of said table; the height of the stoop or steps being about the same as that of the table. The sidewalk in front of the store, at the point where the table was located, was 10½ feet in width; that is to say, the distance from the front wall of the store building to the curbstone was 10½ feet, and the distance from the eastward or outer side of the table to the curbstone was 8 feet.

On the afternoon or evening of the accident, the infant plaintiff, at that time 5 years of age, had gone with her mother to the store of Mr. Miller. The mother had made her purchase, and had left the store, and had turned to the right upon the sidewalk, with the infant plaintiff to her left, she being between the front wall of the store building and her infant daughter, and while so walking upon the sidewalk, with the infant plaintiff's right hand in her left hand, the automobile, owned by Clap and driven by one Kretz, backed against and over the curb upon the sidewalk, and in some way, not very definitely stated in the testimony, caught the infant plaintiff between the rear part of the automobile and the table, inflicting the personal injuries complained of. The mother, as she testified, did not observe the automobile until it was practically upon them, although at such time she had made only a few steps from the door of the store, which was upon the corner of the streets, and in making her exit through that door, and in turning to the right on South Potomac street, she faced that street at the point where the automobile was being turned. The evidence is not clear as to what part of the machine struck the table, but from the character of the break in the table, as described by the witnesses, it is most probable that it was the rear end of one of the rear springs of the automobile, and that the child was between the springs, and was struck by some part of the machine which did not extend so far to the rear as the rear ends of its springs. It is evident that the child was not caught between the table and that part of the automobile which struck the table, breaking the board upon it, for, had she been so caught, we cannot conceive how she could have escaped instant death. The noise of the impact was heard, not only by Mr. Miller, who was in his store at the time, but by others across the street, which shows the force with which the automobile struck the table, and, had the table not been there, the automobile, considering the force with which it was backed, would no doubt have gone to the wall of the store building, only 2½ feet away, inflicting the same, if not more, serious injury to the child.

[1] As it appears to us, the real question in this case is whether the alleged negligence of the defendant in permitting the table to remain upon the sidewalk in violation of the alleged ordinance was the proximate cause of the injuries complained of. It is a maxim that the law looks at the proximate, and not at the remote, cause of an injury. Out of the application of this maxim grows the liability or nonliability of a defendant charged with the infliction of an injury by his negligence. Unless the alleged negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the injury of which the plaintiff complains, there can be no recovery. For consequences of which his act or omission was only a mere condition or remote cause, the defendant is not liable. The constantly recurring problem is: Did the defendant's act or omission proximately cause the plaintiff's injury, and was such act or omission a want of ordinary care, or was the act or omission of the defendant only a remote cause or mere condition of the injury? No ultimate test of such character has yet been formulated. It is by analysis and synthesis, rather than by definition, that the distinction between proximate and remote cause must be made. 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 428. In the case of Young Co. v. State ex rel. Kabat, 117 Md. 247, 83 Atl. 347, we said, speaking through Judge Burke:

"It is * * * well settled that to sustain the action it was incumbent upon the equitable plaintiffs, not only to offer evidence legally sufficient to prove the negligence of the defendants under the rule stated, but they were bound to offer evidence legally sufficient to show that the negligence charged resulted in the death of Vincent Kabat. Actionable negligence is an act, or omission of duty, which is the proximate cause of an injury. No matter to what extent, or in what respect, a party may be negligent, such negligence does not constitute a cause of action, unless the negligence charged and the injuries sued for bear the relation of cause and effect."

In the more recent case of State v. W. B. & A. Elec. Rd. Co., 130 Md. 612, 101 Atl. 549, Judge Burke, speaking for this court, said:

"It is admitted that the rule is difficult of application. But it is generally held that, in order to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances."

[2] If the facts and circumstances above related were the only facts and circumstances upon which the plaintiff relied, it is clear that the alleged negligence of the defendant in permitting the table to remain upon the sidewalk in violation of the ordinance was not the proximate cause of the injuries sustained by the plaintiff, and this was so held by the court below, for not until the declaration was so amended as to involve the alleged faulty construction and contour of the street and curb at the place where the automobile was turned did the court hold that the facts alleged constituted a cause of action. We are therefore to inquire whether the facts offered in evidence under the aforesaid amendment to the declaration, considered in connection with the facts and circumstances already related, show that the negligence with which the defendant was charged was the proximate cause of the injuries suffered by the plaintiff.

Kreitz, the driver of the automobile which passed over the curb upon the sidewalk, inflicting the injuries complained of, was running his machine down Potomac street on its westward side, and upon reaching Antietam street attempted to turn in Potomac street without backing his automobile; but, as he says, there were three young ladies standing in the street near the southeast corner of Antietam and Potomac streets, about two feet from the curb, and because of their presence there he was prevented from making the turn without backing his machine. At this time the front part of his car was within three or four feet of the young ladies and was east of the east rail of the track, the after part of it being over the rails. It was then that he started to back his car, and in doing so he "threw out the clutch and put it in reverse gear," giving the car a backward motion, and it backed over the curb upon the sidewalk. He did not look back to see where his car was going, although he says he used his foot brake before reaching the curb, and, feeling the car go over the curb, he applied the emergency brake.

Stewart Miller, assistant engineer of the city of Hagerstown, when called to the stand by the plaintiff, testified that South Potomac street, at the point where the accident happened, is approximately 60 feet in width from house line to house line, and is 37.7 feet in width between the curbs; that it is paved between the curb with vitrified brick; that there was a trolley track about the center of Potomac street, the western rail of which was 18 feet and 9 inches from the western curb of the street; and that the elevation of the street at said rail was 11 inches higher than the bottom of the gutter at the curb on the west side of the street. The curb, which was of limestone 6 inches thick, arose to an elevation of about 6 inches above the bottom of the gutter. Its outer edge was somewhat worn. He, however, upon cross-examination, testified as follows:

"1 Q. Is there anything, in your opinion as an engineer, wrong with it, with reference to a reasonable construction of the street? 1 A. No, sir. 2 Q. (by Court). Is that a reasonable and proper construction there at that corner of that street, in your judgment? 2 A. Yes, sir. 3 Q. In which direction does the water drain on Potomac street? 3 A. It drains north." That on the west side of Potomac street the water flows north to the south side of Antietam street, and then west down the south side of said last-named street.

This testimony of the assistant engineer, witness for the plaintiff, was supported by Ferguson, the engineer of the city, a witness of the defendant, who had been engineer of the city for a little over 8 years, and, like the assistant engineer, was not in the service of the city when the street was paved, some 17 or 18 years before the happening of the accident. He, when asked:

"1 Q. In your opinion as city engineer, and as a street and road builder and civil engineer, will you please tell the court and jury whether that is a proper and reasonable construction of a street of that kind at that place where the accident happened? 1 A. It is. 2 Q. Why? 2 A. It is a very usual construction in the building of city streets."

The court then asked him:

"1 Q. Is there anything unusual in having the street, or driveway part of the street, higher than the pavement sidewalk? 1 A. No, sir; not at street intersections. I should say, with the exception of streets that are well provided with subsurface drainage, it is the rule rather than the exception. 2 Q. What kind of drainage do you have in Hagerstown? 2 A. At this point there is only surface drainage."

He also testified there had been no change in the streets since he had been city engineer. It had neither been lowered or raised in that time. It had remained the same.

Other witnesses, called by the plaintiff, who had frequently turned their cars upon the street at that point by backing them, testified that they never had any difficulty in avoiding going over the curb, as was done in this case. The condition of the street was practically the same at the time of the happening of the accident as it was when paved more than 17 years before said time. The grade or contour of the street was the same when the accident occurred as it was when first paved, and the evidence fails to disclose, during the whole period from the time said street was paved to the happening of this accident, that any automobile had ever backed over the curb and upon the sidewalk, in attempting to turn in the street.

[3] In our opinion there is nothing in these facts and circumstances which tend to show that the accident was the natural and probable consequence of the alleged negligence of the defendant, and that the act of Kreitz in backing the car over the curb and upon the sidewalk, resulting in the injuries suffered by the plaintiff, ought to have been foreseen by the defendant, in the light of such facts and circumstances. Therefore, as this court said in County Commissioners of Anne Arundel County v. Collison, 122 Md. 95, 89 Atl. 327:

"Unless the testimony tended to show that the negligence relied upon was the proximate cause of the accident, there was nothing upon which a jury could predicate a verdict for the party complaining, and the court should have declared that as a matter of law, and directed the jury so to find."

We must therefore hold that the court erred in its refusal to grant the defendant's fourth prayer, asking that a verdict be directed for the defendant because of a want of evidence legally sufficient tending to show that the alleged negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the accident. The judgment of the court will therefore be reversed.

Judgment reversed, without a new trial, with costs to the appellant.

(123 Md. 75)

LOHMULLER et al. v. SAMUEL KIRK & SON CO. (No. 14.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 19, 1918.)

1. NUISANCE §75—POWER TO RESTRAIN.

The power to restrain a party from using his own property so as to destroy or materially prejudice the rights of his neighbor is within the established jurisdiction of the courts of equity.

2. NUISANCE §72—INJUNCTION.

Not every inconvenience in nature of nuisance to person's dwelling, especially in a large commercial and manufacturing city, will call forth restraining power of equity by injunction; case must appear to be one of real injury, where a court of law would award substantial damages.

3. NUISANCE §72—INJUNCTION—OPERATION OF HAMMERS.

Where operation of hammers by manufacturer of silverware in business section of city caused lawyers in adjacent office building some annoyance and discomfort when their windows and those of the factory were open, lawyers could not enjoin alleged nuisance; their damages not being so substantial, and interference with their rights so serious, as to call for such relief.

4. NUISANCE §67—NOISE FROM OPERATION OF HAMMERS.

It is the duty of a manufacturer of silverware to operate its factory so as to cause tenants in an adjacent office building no more annoyance and discomfort than is reasonable and to be expected and necessary in the lawful conduct of the business.

5. NUISANCE §80—INJUNCTION—NOISE.

Only where noise complained of in suit to enjoin a nuisance is productive of actual physical discomfort to a plaintiff of ordinary sensibilities, and under all the circumstances is unreasonable and an invasion of his rights, can a court of equity intervene by injunction.

Appeal from Circuit Court of Baltimore City; H. Arthur Stump, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by John W. Lohmuller and others against the Samuel Kirk & Son Company.

From decree dismissing the bill, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCK-BRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

William C. Coleman and Randolph Barton, Jr., both of Baltimore (Semmes, Bowen & Semmes, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellants. Harry N. Baetjer, of Baltimore, for appellee.

THOMAS, J. The bill of complaint in this case was filed to enjoin an alleged nuisance, and the present appeal is from a decree dismissing the bill, after a hearing upon the bill, answer, and proof.

The plaintiffs, John W. Lohmuller, Vincent L. Palmisano, John W. Prinz, and Martin Lehmayr, were engaged in the practice of law, with offices in the Calvert Building, located at the southeast corner of Fayette and St. Paul streets, in the city of Baltimore. Mr. Lohmuller, Mr. Palmisano, and Mr. Prinz have occupied rooms Nos. 463 to 469, on the fourth floor, since February, 1916, and Judge Lehmayr has had his offices in rooms Nos. 563 to 569, on the fifth floor, directly above the offices of the other plaintiffs, since 1906. The Calvert Building fronts on Fayette street, and that portion of the building in which the plaintiffs' offices are located extends back to an alley, between 24 and 25 feet wide, known as "Bank Lane." The offices of the plaintiff extend about 80 feet along Bank lane, and have three windows opening on Bank lane and a window opening on an alley between the Calvert Building and the Equitable Building, just east of the Calvert Building. The defendant, the Samuel Kirk & Son Company, owns and occupies a large building known as Nos. 106 and 108 East Baltimore street, in which it carries on the business of buying, selling, and manufacturing jewelry, silverware, and other valuable articles. This building, which is 50 feet wide and four stories high, extends from the north side of Baltimore street to the south side of Bank lane, and from one-third to one-half of the north end of the building is opposite the Calvert Building and the offices of the plaintiffs, and the remaining portion of the north end of the defendant's building is opposite the building of the New Amsterdam Casualty Company. The defendant's factory for the manufacture of silverware and for repair work is located on the fourth or top floor of its building, and at the north end of this floor the defendant has installed four iron hammers, used in the manufacture of repoussé silver. These hammers, which weigh about three pounds each, are suspended above a bench, and are operated by the foot of the silversmith. The fourth or top floor of the defendant's building is below the level of the fifth floor of the Calvert Building, and in the north end of the fourth floor of the defendant's building there are seven windows opening on Bank lane. The bench above which the hammers are suspended is opposite and about 10 feet from the third window from the east side of defendant's building, and this window, according to the plat filed with the record, is 30 feet and 9 inches from the east window of Judge Lehmayr's offices and 27 feet from the east window on the sixth floor of the New Amsterdam Casualty Company building. Henry Adams, a consulting engineer, and a witness produced by the plaintiffs, describes the use of these hammers as follows:

"These hammers are secured on a bench. They are, I think, four of them, and they are suspended—the hammers are suspended—about this bench, and at the edge of the bench there are bars, in the shape of a V, tapered bars, secured at the bench, and there is a small point at the end, tapered. Now, the hammer strikes near the support by foot power, as the operator sits there, and he can strike as strong a blow or as light a blow as he wants. He has his piece of silver on which the design is outlined in his hand, and he has a feeling—he touches his finger on the work and he moves that piece of silver over that point and strikes his blow continually, sometimes heavy and sometimes light, according to the design he wants to bring out. It is not a direct blow, it is an indirect blow. You hear the noise from the hammer here (indicating) and certain noise at the end of the bar. In the room itself when they are going, with the other machinery going, you do not hear that noise as penetrating as you hear it outside of the room."

Mr. Kirk, the president of the defendant company, gave the following explanation of the use of these hammers:

"I have drawings now that I have made myself of a device that I had hoped would lessen the noise and accomplish the same result, and, after talking with our mechanics and the foreman of our department and several of our men, it was found that if the devices were made and put in operation it would lessen the noise very little, and it would require the restraining of our entire force, as the snarling iron is the standard equipment, and it meant also that every chaser that we would get in from an outside source would have to be retaught, and, another thing it did, it eliminated the sense of feel that the present iron has, and therefore it would practically make it very difficult to do the work. * * * I can explain it: The iron is held in a vise. It is a three-pound hammer, and the hammer is attached—the handle of that hammer is attached by a cord to a treadle that is held up by a spring, and on the other end is the spring that holds the hammer up. The hammer does not fall of its own weight; it falls on account of the blow, which is the weight of the man's foot as he puts it there. It is as near balanced as possible, almost like the scale. The piece of silver is put over the snarling iron, and the men hold either one or two fingers on the iron in order to guide it. The sense of feel in the first two fingers of their hand must be absolutely accurate and keen; otherwise they cannot judge what they are doing. For instance, a direct blow would not accomplish the same purpose. There is no other way to do it than the one way, and I think Mr. Adams will agree with me that that is true. We have studied every known method to try to reduce that noise, particularly since Judge Lehmayr's complaint, and we have spent a great deal of money in trying to relieve the situation."

Judge Lehmayr described the noise as he heard it in his office as follows:

"Well, these hammers when I am in my office, I suppose it would be as far away from me as one end of this courtroom is from the other, say about 30 or 35 feet, and they make a terrible noise. As for the windows (the windows in his office) being open, your honor, the windows are kept open very often in October, and on a day like this. The windows are open at this time and also sometimes in March and sometimes in April, and even in winter windows are kept open. It is true they are kept open only to a small extent for the purpose of ventilation. The noise is of such a character that it absolutely renders it impossible to use the offices when it is going on. It is intermittent. It used to go on day after day, but since this bill has been filed it has decreased. They do not use the hammers as much now, but before it was at all hours of the day; sometimes one hammer was going, sometimes two and sometimes three, three at one time. * * * It is a peculiar penetrating noise. It goes right through you, it affects the nerves, it is a nerve-racking noise. It is almost enough to give you nervous prostration. No matter how hot it is, if you want to stay in my office you have to close the windows and keep them closed to carry on a conversation. I would have my stenographer at the opposite side of my desk dictating a letter to her, and all of a sudden these hammers would start, and that would be the end of it. I would either have to shut the windows or go in one of the further rooms that Mr. Binswanger occupies; he is a subtenant of mine. * * * You cannot conduct an ordinary conversation while these noises are going on. You cannot hear a telephone conversation."

He also stated that the noise came in through the window opening on the alley between the Calvert Building and Equitable Building, and further testified as follows:

"Q. (By Mr. Baetjer): You mean the noise would come around there? A. Yes; the noise from the hammers; yes.

"The Court: Around the corner?

"The witness: Yes.

"Mr. Coleman: There is a court there?

"The Witness: Yes. That is almost as close as the other windows. You hear the noise there just as bad. When you strike iron on iron it gives a peculiar noise, but when that iron in turn strikes silver, it is a reverberating noise, almost enough to set you crazy."

Mr. Lohmuller, who, as we have said, occupied one of the offices on the fourth floor below the offices of Judge Lehmayr, and other witnesses, testified to the disturbing character of the noise to those occupying the offices of the plaintiffs when the plaintiffs' windows and the windows in the defendant's building were open, and the difficulty of carrying on a conversation over the telephone. Mr. Adams, the consulting engineer, who, by arrangement between the plaintiffs and the defendant, examined the defendant's factory, and tested the noise in Judge Lehmayr's office with the windows in his office and the defendant's building open, and while the hammers were being operated for the purpose of affording him every opportunity to do so, described the noise as follows:

"Judge Lehmayr was sitting opposite me at his desk, and I talked to him and it was very difficult; that is, annoying all the time. Your attention was called to these noises all the time on your ears while you were there, continually so. * * * It is exceedingly annoying. It is not a continuous sound you could get used to; it is a loud and then reduced again sound, and then goes ahead, continually changing all the time."

When asked whether he, as an expert, could suggest any way in which the noise could be remedied, he replied that they could not change the machines very well "because expert workmen and the touch has to be there," but that he thought something could be done by putting a glass inclosure around the bench above which the hammers were suspended; by moving it to another, but less favorable, location in the shop; by putting a canvas deflector in front of the defendant's windows and the windows of Judge Lehmayr's office, or by putting a glass deflector 2 feet wide in Judge Lehmayr's office window. He further testified on cross-examination that the factory of the defendant was crowded; that it is necessary in a manufacturing plant to have the various units together so that the work can be passed from one to the other, and that that is particularly so in a business like the defendant's, where there are precious metals and "there could be a loss"; that the president of the company had his office in the factory on a raised platform, where he could overlook the entire floor, and a telephone on his desk, and that Mr. Kirk, the president of the defendant, said to him that he was willing to pay a handsome fee to anybody who could suggest a way to do away with the noise, and that he "had tried every means they knew of, including the employment of engineers, to remedy it."

Mr. Laudeman, a witness for the plaintiffs, who was the manager of the Calvert Building and had been connected with the company that owns the building for about 23 years, testified that he occupied offices on the sixth floor of the building, immediately over the offices of Judge Lehmayr, and that he had not been seriously annoyed by the noise from the defendant's factory; that Judge Lehmayr had complained to him about the noise, and had asked that his rent be reduced on account of it; that the rent had not been reduced, but that the rent was going to be raised, and that Judge Lehmayr was aware of that fact.

Mr. Pearre, a witness for the defendant, testified that he was the secretary and treasurer of the New Amsterdam Casualty Company, and occupied offices in the company's building, in which there were two windows on Bank lane, and that he had never had any complaints about, and had never been annoyed by, noises from the factory of the defendant.

Mr. Breckett, the assistant secretary of the New Amsterdam Casualty Company, whose office is on the sixth floor of that company's building, testified that his office is a little above the level of the top floor on which the defendant's factory is located, with three windows opening on Bank lane opposite the defendant's building; that he had occupied his office, and had been almost "continuously" in it during the business hours of the day, for about 2 years, and that he had never been annoyed by noise from the defendant's factory. It appears by the plat we have referred to that the east window in this office of Mr. Breckett is only 27 feet from the window in defendant's factory opposite which the bench over which the hammers are suspended is located.

Mr. Henry C. Kirk, who succeeded his father as president of the defendant company and who had been connected with the company, and the partnership that preceded the organization of the company, for 30 years, testified that his entire business career had been with that company, and that he had charge of the manufacturing and designing department, and gave his entire time to it, and that his office was situated in the centre of the fourth floor, "right in the centre of the manufacturing"; that the firm of Samuel Kirk was organized in 1815, and had been engaged in the manufacture of silverware at 114 East Baltimore street from that date until 1894; that in 1894 they moved into the building 106 East Baltimore street, and that in the following year they also occupied the building 108 East Baltimore street, and continued their business in those buildings until the fire of 1904; that after the fire the defendant erected its present building at a cost of $200,000, and has occupied it since the summer of 1905; that the defendant has invested in the machinery and tools in its factory about $90,000; that its building was erected "especially for the purpose" for which it is used, and that to change the location of the hammers would require the defendant to either rearrange its entire shop, which would be very expensive, or to move its factory to another location. It further appears from the testimony of Mr. Kirk that the hammers referred to have always been used by the defendant, and those who preceded it in the business, and that they are indispensable in the manufacture of silverware. When the defendant occupied 114 East Baltimore street the windows of its factory opening on Bank lane were opposite Barnum's Hotel, located on the present site of the Equitable Building, and a type foundry. The building in which the type foundry was located was subsequently purchased by the Calvert Building and Construction Company, but was used by the type foundry for a number of years thereafter. It adjoins the Equitable Building and, under a lease from the Calvert Building & Construction Company, is now occupied by the Baltimore City Printing & Binding Company, which conducts a printing establishment there. The building now owned by the New Amsterdam Casualty Company was formerly the St. Paul Telephone Exchange Building, and after the fire of 1904 was used, for 4 years, as a hotel, and the rooms in the "rear part of the hotel," on the fifth and sixth floors, were used as guest rooms. Mr. Kirk also explained why it would not be practicable for the defendant to put a glass inclosure around the hammers, or canvas screens outside of its windows, and stated that the complaint of Judge Lehmayr was the first and only complaint the company, or those who preceded it in the business, had ever received about the noise from its or their factory.

The bill of complaint alleges that the section of the city in which the plaintiffs' offices and the defendant's building are located had never been a "factory district," but had been for many years "a retail business, and office building district," but the evidence in the case tends to show that, in addition to the defendant's factory, the type foundry, and the printing establishment referred to above, there have been a number of other like enterprises and several bowling alleys conducted in that neighborhood.

[1, 2] The bill prayed that the defendant be enjoined from operating its hammers in such manner as to produce the noise complained of, and in regard to the principle invoked by the plaintiffs in this case there can be no question or difficulty. The power to restrain a party from so using his own property as to destroy or materially prejudice the rights of his neighbor is within the well-established jurisdiction of courts of equity. But, as was said by Judge Alvey, in Adams v. Michael, 88 Md. 128, 17 Am. Rep. 516:

"It is not every inconvenience, however, in the nature of a nuisance to a party's dwelling, especially in a large commercial and manufacturing city, that will call forth the restraining power of a court of chancery by injunction. To justify an injunction to restrain an existing or threatening nuisance to a dwelling house, the injury must be shown to be of such a character as to diminish materially the value of the property as a dwelling and seriously interfere with the ordinary comfort and enjoyment of it. Unless such a case is presented a court of chancery does not interfere. It must appear to be a case of real injury, and where a court of law would award substantial damages."

In the case of Dittman v. Repp, 50 Md. 516, 83 Am. Rep. 325, the same learned judge said:

"In all such cases, the question is whether the nuisance complained of will or does produce such a condition of things as, in the judgment of reasonable men, is naturally productive of actual physical discomfort to persons of ordinary sensibilities, and of ordinary tastes and habits, and as, in view of the circumstances of the case, is unreasonable and in derogation of the rights of the complainant. This is the criterion laid down in the authorities, and, unless the facts show such a state of things, a court of equity will not interfere. * * * And in determining the question of nuisance from smoke or noxious vapor, or from noise or vibration, such as alleged in this case, reference must always be had to the locality, the nature of the trade, the character of the machinery, and the manner of using the property producing the annoyance and injury complained of. A party dwelling in the midst of a crowded commercial and manufacturing city cannot claim to have the same quiet and freedom from annoyance that he might rightfully claim if he were dwelling in the country. Every one taking up his abode in the city must expect to encounter the inconveniences and annoyances incident to such community, and he must be taken to have consented to endure such annoyances to a certain extent."

Of course the learned judge did not mean that because a party lives in a city he is compelled to endure all kind of noises, for he said there was a limit to the discomfort and annoyances to which a party living in a city or manufacturing district is "required to subject himself without remedy." But what the court meant was that, in determining whether the plaintiff is entitled to the relief sought, the court must take into consideration, not only the character of the noise, but also the locality in which the alleged nuisance is created. These cases are quoted and approved in the more recent cases of Hendrickson v. Standard Oil Co., 126 Md. 577, 96 Atl. 153, and Singer v. James, 130 Md. 882, 100 Atl. 642. In the case of Gallagher v. Flury, 99 Md. 182, 57 Atl. 672, Judge Pearce said:

"But the proximity of dwellings to disagreeable or objectionable structures is an inevitable incident of life in cities and towns. As was said in Hyatt v. Myers, 73 N. C. 232: 'If a man, instead of contenting himself with the quiet and comfort of a country residence, chooses to live in town, he must take the inconvenience of noise, dust, flies, rats, smoke, soot, cinders, etc., caused in the use and enjoyment of his neighbors' property, provided the use of it is for a reasonable purpose, and the manner of using it is such as not to cause any unnecessary damage or annoyance to his neighbors.'"

In the case of Bonaparte v. Denmead, 108 Md. 174, 69 Atl. 697, this court said:

"It must be borne in mind that this is not a suit at law for damages, as in Manion's Case, supra [87 Md. 81, 39 Atl. 90], but a bill for an injunction; and it must also be remembered that 'nothing is better settled in this state than that the granting or refusing an injunction rests in the sound discretion of a court of equity.' * * * Even in the case of a suit at law, this court said, in Manion's Case, supra: 'But the fact just noted suggests caution in dealing with the rights of the owners or occupants of [livery] stable property. It cannot be denied that a [livery] stable in a town adjacent to buildings occupied as private residences is, under any circumstances, a matter of some inconvenience and annoyance, and must more or less affect the comfort of the occupants, as well as diminish the value of the property for the purpose of habitation. But this is equally true of various other erections that might be mentioned, which are indispensable, and which do, and must, exist in all towns.' * * * In Adams v. Michael, 88 Md. 129 [17 Am. Rep. 516], this court said: 'The granting of injunctions on applications of this character involves the exercise of a most delicate power, and the court is always reluctant to act, except in cases where the right is clear and unquestioned, and the facts show an urgent necessity.' That was an application to restrain a threatened, or rather an anticipated, nuisance, but the reference to the reluctance of the court to act except in cases where the facts show an urgent necessity is clearly applicable to an application like the present, against an alleged existing nuisance, where there is any reasonable doubt from the testimony as to the urgent necessity of applying this summary remedy."

The cases to which we have referred and from which we have quoted dealt with alleged nuisances caused by noises, noxious gases, and smoke affecting both the value and the enjoyment of the dwelling house or residence of the plaintiff. In the case at bar, at the time the suit was brought, one of the plaintiffs was occupying his offices under a lease for 1 year, and the others had a lease for 5 years, beginning in February, 1916, and the rules and principles announced in the cases mentioned would seem to apply with even greater force to the facts and circumstances of this case, where the alleged nuisance exists in the business section of a large city, and where the only injury complained of is the annoyance to which the plaintiffs are subjected when occupying their offices.

[3-5] It would serve no purpose to make further reference to the evidence in the case, all of which we have carefully examined and considered. While it shows that the noise complained of does subject the plaintiffs, when they are occupying their offices with their windows and the windows of the defendant's factory open, to some annoyance and discomfort, the record does not, in our judgment, present such a clear case of an invasion by the defendant of the rights of the plaintiffs as entitled them to the relief prayed. It is, of course, the duty of the defendant to so operate its factory as to cause the plaintiffs no more annoyance and discomfort than is reasonable and to be expected, and necessary in the proper and lawful conduct of its business. On the other hand, the plaintiffs cannot hope to escape the annoyances that are to be expected in the neighborhood in which they are located, and which are incident to the reasonable and lawful enjoyment of the property of their neighbors. It is only where it is clear that the noise complained of is productive of actual physical discomfort to a plaintiff of ordinary sensibilities, and is, under all the circumstances of the case, unreasonable, and an invasion of his rights, that a court of equity can intervene by injunction.

Decree affirmed, with costs.

(132 Md. 540)

HULL v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.
(No. 48.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)

1. COMMERCE §27(6) — "INTERSTATE COMMERCE"—RAILROAD EMPLOYE.

A freight brakeman, who is a member of a crew taking a train from a point in one state to a point in another state, is engaged in "interstate commerce" within meaning of federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Interstate Commerce.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §88(6)—DEATH OF EMPLOYE—RELATION OF PARTIES—RAILROAD EMPLOYE—"EMPLOYE."

Where two railroad companies had agreement whereby each had the right to use the tracks of the other, an employé of one road, who was killed while working on the tracks of the other road, is not at time of death an "employé" of latter road, under federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665), although agreement specified that train employes should be subject to regulations and orders of company owning tracks on which they worked.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employé.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County; M. L. Keedy, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Hull, administratrix of estate of John M. Hull, against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Omer T. Taylor and Frank G. Wagaman, both of Hagerstown, for appellant. Henry H. Keedy, Jr., of Hagerstown (Charles C. Keedy, of Hagerstown, on the brief), for appellee.

BOYD, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant (appellee) in a suit brought by the appellant under the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act Cong. April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665]), to recover for loss sustained by reason of the death of John M. Hull in Harrisburg, Pa. There are three counts in the declaration, all of which allege that John M. Hull, the son of Elizabeth Hull, the plaintiff, was at the time of the injuries and death complained of and for some time prior thereto had been, a servant and employé of the defendant, and was employed and engaged in the performance of his duties in interstate commerce. The alleged negligence relied on is stated differently in the three counts, but it is only necessary to say that the declaration is sufficient to bring the case within the federal Employers' Liability Act, if the facts sustained it. The defendant filed the general issue plea and one alleging that John M. Hull was not on or about the 17th of March, 1917, or at any other time, a servant or employé of the defendant. At the conclusion of the testimony offered by the plaintiff, the defendant offered a prayer that:

"Under the pleadings in this case, there is no evidence legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and their verdict must be for the defendant."

That was granted, and a verdict was rendered accordingly, upon which the judgment appealed from was entered.

Mr. Hull belonged to a crew employed by the Western Maryland Railway Company, and was freight brakeman. The day before the accident, the crew had taken a train, hauled by a Western Maryland engine and operated by Western Maryland employes, from Hagerstown, Md., to Rutherford, Pa., and when he was killed the same crew was engaged in taking a train from Rutherford to Hagerstown. The Western Maryland road extends from Hagerstown, Md., to Lurgan, Pa., and the defendant's road from Lurgan to Rutherford, and for the purpose of operating trains from Hagerstown to Rutherford and back the two roads entered into an agreement which will be referred to later.

[1] We will first consider the question suggested by the special plea—whether Hull was an employé of the defendant within the meaning of the federal Employers' Liability Act. There can be no doubt about his being engaged in interstate commerce. Robert A. Warner conductor of the train, testified that they had taken a train from Hagerstown to Rutherford, arriving at the latter place some time the day before, and were called about 12:15 a. m. on the 17th of March by the yardmaster of the Rutherford yard of the defendant company. He directed them to get a train of cars off the west-bound yard and pick up seven cars at Harrisburg. They proceeded from Rutherford to Harrisburg on the west-bound main track, on which track their train was standing when they stopped for the seven cars, which they added to their train. The yardmaster at the Rutherford yard gave him instructions as to the operations connected with the movement of the train. The Philadelphia & Reading supplied the person to take the place of Hull as a member of the crew after he was killed. The witness said that his instructions were that when on the line of the Philadelphia & Reading he should obey the rules and instructions of that company.

The federal Employers' Liability Act provides:

"That every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several states or territories * * * shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employé, to his * * * personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employé * * * for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employé of such carrier," etc. U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 8657.

There have already been a large number of decisions on various questions which have arisen under Employers' Liability Acts in the state and federal courts, but it is rather remarkable that there are not more directly bearing upon the question we have before us.

One of the principal cases relied on by the appellant is North Carolina R. R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 34 Sup. Ct. 305, 58 L. Ed. 591, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 159. In that case it was shown that the North Carolina Railroad Company was not an interstate railroad, its tracks and property lying wholly within the state, but it had leased its road to the Southern Railway Company, which is an interstate railway, and a fireman employed by the latter company in interstate commerce was killed on the road of the lessor by the alleged negligence of the lessee. Justice Pitney said in the early part of his opinion that:

"Under the local law, as laid down in Logan v. North Carolina R. Co., 116 N. C. 940, 21 S. E. 959, the lessor is responsible for all acts of negligence of its lessee occurring in the conduct of business upon the lessor's road; and this upon the ground that a railroad corporation cannot evade its public duty and responsibility by leasing its road to another corporation, in the absence of a statute expressly exempting it. The responsibility is held to extend to employé of the lessee, injured through the negligence of the latter."

After referring to the decision of the lower court in 156 N. C. 500, 72 S. E. 858, he said:

"It is plain enough, however, that the effect of the rule thus laid down, especially in view of the grounds upon which it is based, is that although a railroad lease as between the parties may have the force and effect of an ordinary lease, yet with respect to the railroad operations conducted under it, and everything that relates to the performance of the public duties assumed by the lessor under its charter, such a lease—certainly so far as concerns the rights of third parties, including employé as well as patrons—constitutes the lessee the lessor's substitute or agent, so that for whatever the lessee does or fails to do, whether in interstate or intrastate commerce, the lessor is responsible. This being the legal situation under the local law, it seems to us that it must and does result, in the case before us, that the lessor is a 'common carrier by railroad engaging in commerce between the states,' and that the deceased was 'employed by such carrier in such commerce' within the meaning of the federal act; provided, of course, he was employed by the lessee, in such commerce at the time he was killed."

In the case of Southern Ry. Co. v. Lloyd, 239 U. S. 496, 36 Sup. Ct. 210, 60 L. Ed. 402, an engineer in the general employ of the Southern Railway Company was injured on the road of the North Carolina Railway Company, being the same company mentioned in the Zachary Case, and the relation was the same between the two companies as in that. The plaintiff sued and recovered judgment against both companies, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the state and later by the Supreme Court of the United States, citing the Zachary Case as the authority for it.

We quoted at length from the Zachary Case because the appellant relied so strongly on it, and, being decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, it is necessary to ascertain whether it is applicable to this case. After giving it our most careful consideration, we have reached the conclusion that it is not. Justice Pitney shows clearly that the decision is based on the local law of North Carolina, as announced by the Supreme Court of that state, which makes a lessor railway company responsible for all acts of negligence of its lessee occurring in the conduct of business upon the lessor's road, as is seen by the quotations we have made. He said what the act clearly declares that, in order to bring the case within the terms of the federal act, "defendant must have been, at the time of the occurrence in question, engaged as a common carrier in interstate commerce, and plaintiff's intestate must have been employed by said carrier in such commerce." As the North Carolina Railway Company had made the lease without being authorized by a statute expressly exempting it, it could not escape its responsibility under the rule adopted in that state, and Justice Pitney said, as shown above, that the lease "constitutes the lessee the lessor's substitute or agent, so that for whatever the lessee does or fails to do, whether in interstate or intrastate commerce, the lessor is responsible." (Italics ours.) No such relation exists between these two railroad companies. There was no lease, and the appellee had not turned over its charter duties to the Western Maryland Railway Company. It was still in the discharge of those duties, but the two companies by agreement used each other's tracks in the performance of their duties in certain interstate commerce.

It is not unusual for two railroad companies to make such, or similar, arrangements. Sometimes there is the relation of lessor and lessee, and, without citing the cases in the notes, it will be seen by reference to 33 Cyc. 706-707, that the courts are not altogether in harmony in reference to some matters arising when that relation exists. Then there are a number of cases which have arisen when one company has permitted the use of its road by another (Id. 710), and still others, where companies were operating or using roads of others (Id. 713). When we are called upon to ascertain whether a person is a servant or employé of another, sometimes the question arises as to whether, although he is a general servant of one master, he has become the servant of another, in some particular employment. See 26 Cyc. 1285, where the effect of the servant of one master being under the control of another is considered, but on the next page of that volume it is said:

"The fact that one railroad company uses the track and stations of another under contract between them does not as a rule make the employé of either company fellow servants with the employé of the other."

It is undoubtedly true that two railroad companies operating under such a contract as the one in this case bear a very different relation to each other from those operating under a lease, where one has practically turned over the operations of its road to the other.

[2] Hull was unquestionably an employé of the Western Maryland Railway Company, and not of the appellee, until he reached Lurgan on his trip the day before he was killed, and would have been as soon as he reached Lurgan on the return trip, had he not been killed. To hold that he had ceased to be an employé of the Western Maryland and had become one of the appellee from the time he reached Lurgan would be contrary to what is generally understood by the term "employé," and would unquestionably be contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of the agreement between the two companies, which was offered in evidence by the appellant. There is not the slightest suggestion in that agreement that the crew of one company was to be regarded as the crew of the other, while on the latter's line. We will refer to such parts of the agreement as we deem material.

Paragraph 2 is as follows:

"Freight trains to run through between Hagerstown and Rutherford in both directions and each company agrees to supply motive power in the above proportions so as to equalize the service performed."

Paragraph 4 provides that, "Crews of each road to run through with their engines over the line of the other company."

Paragraph 5 provides, in part, that each company to compensate the other for the use of the others' engines and crews on their line at the rates per hour set out. Time to begin at Rutherford and Hagerstown when crew is called for.

Paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, are as follows:

"6. The division of earnings of traffic not to be disturbed or in any way affected by this arrangement.

"7. Each company to furnish fuel and other supplies to its own engines and crews; any furnished by one to the other to be upon agreed uniform rates.

"8. No charge shall be made for water and terminal facilities.

"9. Neither company to be expected to do the engine cleaning and wiping for the other; where done, a charge of seventy-five (75) cents per engine to be made.

"10. Each company to be responsible and bear all damage and expenses to persons and property caused by all accidents upon its road."

Paragraphs 16 to 21, inclusive, are as follows:

"16. Each company to relieve and return as promptly as practicable the engines and crews of the other at ends of runs.

"17. Each company to have the right to object and to enforce objection to any unsatisfactory employé of the other running upon its line.

"18. All cases of violation of rules or other derelictions by the employé of one company while upon the road of the other shall be promptly investigated by the owning company, and the result reported to the employing company, with or without suggestions for disciplining, the employing company to report to the other the action taken.

"19. Accident reports on prescribed forms to be promptly made of all such occurrences, and where a crew of one company is operating upon the road of the other, a copy must be sent to the proper officer of each company.

"20. The employé of each company to be required to report promptly, on notice, to the proper officer of the other, for investigations of accidents, etc., the fullest co-operation to be given by the one company to the other in all such matters.

"21. The employé of each company while upon the tracks of the other shall be subject to and conform to the rules, regulations, discipline and orders of the owning company."

There would seem to be no doubt that the provisions of the contract referred to above show that the two companies did not intend to make the regular employes of the one company the employes of the other, when on the latter's line; on the contrary, it is apparent that they intended the very opposite. The appellant relies on paragraph 10, but there is nothing in that to show that the employes of the other company are to be regarded as employes of the owning company. The appellee would undoubtedly be responsible to an employe of the Western Maryland Railway Company for injuries sustained by reason of the negligence of the appellee's employes or agents, but not under the federal Employers' Liability Act. Suppose that act had not been passed before this accident, could it have been successfully contended that the appellee was not responsible for the death of Hull because its employes were his fellow servants? That would have extended the fellow-servant doctrine very far, and certainly beyond what had been done in this state.

In P. W. & B. R. R. Co. v. State, use Bitzer, 53 Md. 372, 400, that company, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and other railroad companies had an agreement with reference to the use of the defendant's road in Baltimore. There was an agreement between the companies in that case. This court said:

"Whatever effect this agreement might have upon the parties to it, it could not have any upon strangers to it, nor alter nor change the relations of either of them towards third parties, nor have the effect of making those, who were employed and paid wages by either of the contracting parties, the coemployes of the agents and workmen of the other parties, nor make the others liable, either severally or jointly, for any loss or damage caused by the neglect of any one of them, even had the agreement been silent in this respect. But in order to guard against any such result, the agreement itself expressly provides, that, 'if an accident shall happen whereby damages to persons or property shall be incurred, the party on whose road the same shall happen shall alone be responsible.'"

It will be observed that paragraph 10 is not a new provision in such agreements. The opinion went on to say, in reference to the principle that every employe assumes the risk of the negligence of his coemployes:

"Samuel Bitzer was not employed or paid by the appellant, but was employed by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and therefore this principle is not applicable to him."

That case settled the question for this state that the employes of the several railroad companies could not, in working under such an agreement, be considered coemployes. One of the objects of this act, as explained by Sen. Doliver on the floor of the Senate, was to modify the old law of the negligence of coemployes. He spoke of the law in this country that an employe injured by the negligence of a fellow workman could not recover, and said:

"This bill abolishes that doctrine, and gives the employes the right to recover for injuries arising from the negligence of his fellow workmen. That is the first proposition. The second proposition modifies the law whereby in other generations workmen were held by the court to assume the risk arising from defective machinery." Thornton on the Federal Employers' Liability and Safety Appliance Acts (2d Ed.) § 1.

It is obvious that there was no necessity to pass the federal act for the benefit of the employes of one company when injured by those of another company, under such circumstances as we have in this case, so far as the doctrine of fellow servant is concerned. It would be regarded as carrying the doctrine to an unjustifiable extreme, if in a suit for the death of Hull, brought outside of this act, the defense of fellow servant had been allowed. Under the language of the federal act, there is less ground for holding the employes of the several companies to be coemployes, than there was in such a case as Bitzer's. The general principle is also recognized in Bentley, Shriver & Co. v. Edwards, 100 Md. 652, 60 Atl. 283, although that was not a railroad case.

In the case of Robinson v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 237 U. S. 84, 35 Sup. Ct. 491, 59 L. Ed. 849, Robinson was a porter on a Pullman car, was required to obey the rules and regulations of the railroad company, and collected tickets and fares from passengers coming on the train after 8 o'clock a. m. He was injured by the alleged negligence of the railroad company and sued under the federal Employers' Liability Act. It was held that he was not an employe within the meaning of that act. Justice Hughes said:

"We are of the opinion that Congress used the words 'employe' and 'employed' in the statute in their natural sense, and intended to describe the conventional relation of employer and employe. It was well known that there were on interstate trains persons engaged in various services for other masters. Congress, familiar with this situation, did not use any appropriate expression which could be taken to indicate a purpose to include such persons among those to whom the railroad company was to be liable under the act."

So it may be said that Congress may have been presumed to know that such arrangements as existed between these two companies were often made, and if it had intended to make the employes of the "owning company," as the agreement calls it, coemployes of the other company, it would have used language "to indicate a purpose to include" them.

The fact that the crews of the other company were subject to the rules and regulations of the owning company cannot be material in determining the question. That is, of course, necessary for the safety of all persons traveling on the line of the owning company, as well as all working on it. The business could not be successfully conducted on a road over which many trains ran, if the "employes of each company," to use the language of paragraph 21, while upon the tracks of the other, were not subject to and required to conform "to the rules, regulations, discipline and orders of the owning company." But that would certainly not have the effect of making them employes of the owning company, any more than it would the porter on a Pullman car, or an express agent, or mail agent traveling on the train. In Oliver v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 196 Fed. 432, it was held by the United States District Court that a porter on a Pullman car could recover under the federal act under the circumstances of that case, but the decision was based on the ground that he was employed by an association composed of the railroad company and the Pullman company, which were joint owners of 50 cars. In Mo., K. & T. Ry. v. Blalack, 105 Tex. 296, 147 S. W. 559, an agent of an express company who handled baggage, but there was no proof of employment by the railroad company, was held to be a passenger and not an employe within the meaning of the act. See, also, same company v. West, 38 Okl. 581, 134 Pac. 655, to the same effect. It is the duty of the owning company to use all reasonable efforts to protect the employes of what we might call the "visiting company," and, even if there was no agreement on the subject, the owning company could enforce such rules and regulations as are necessary for the protection of its own employes and property, as well as those of the other company.

We have not thought it necessary to discuss the case of Standard Oil Co. v. Anderson, 212 U. S. 215, 29 Sup. Ct. 252, 53 L. Ed. 480, and other cases cited by the appellant, as we do not think they are applicable to the facts of this case. That a general servant or employe of one company may become the servant or employe of another in some special employment cannot be doubted. For convenience we cited above 28 Cyc. 1285, where many such cases are referred to. We cannot agree, however, with the appellant that when Hull was killed he was engaged in work for the appellee in the sense the authorities speak of such employment. His crew was then taking a train to their regular employer's road—one of the very things they were employed by the Western Maryland Railway Company to do. The distance between Hagerstown and Rutherford, as shown by the agreement, was 81 miles, and a regular run of the crews was from Hagerstown to Rutherford and return, just as it was with the crews of the appellee from Rutherford to Hagerstown and return. But, after all, this case does not turn on nice distinctions as to whether a person can be said to be an employe under certain facts and not under other facts, but whether John M. Hull was an employe of the appellee within the meaning of the federal Employers' Liability Act. For reasons we have stated, we feel constrained to hold that he was not.

We are of the opinion, then, that under the language of the act, under the agreement between the two companies, so far as it is binding (and the appellant put it in evidence), and under what we regard as the reasonable and practicable view of the question, as well as under such authorities as we deem applicable, we must hold that the federal Employers' Liability Act does not apply to this case. As that conclusion must result in an affirmance of the judgment, it is unnecessary to discuss the question of negligence.

Judgment affirmed, the appellant to pay the costs.

(132 Md. 464)

STATE, to Use of DUNHAM, v. FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND.

(No. 28.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 8, 1918.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD §177—SURETIES—DISCHARGE OF GUARDIAN—EFFECT.

Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 93, §§ 155, 165, 181, as to liability on guardian's bond, do not impose a liability where guardian under direction of orphans' court has accounted for and paid over all funds of estate, and court has made order discharging her and her surety, for money expended by plaintiff for education of wards, and not included in guardian's account, order being unquestioned.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD §160—ACCOUNT OF GUARDIAN—CORRECTION.

Orphans' court would have authority to correct errors in account of guardian after final ratification, and to abrogate and modify orders when necessary to promote ends of justice.

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD §178—BREACH.

Refusal of guardian to pay for maintenance and education of ward out of property under her control would constitute breach of bond, and creditor could resort to suit upon it.

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD §58—DEMANDS AGAINST WARDS—PRIORITY.

It is duty of guardian to pay all demands against ward, having regard to priorities, in full, or, if estate is insufficient, pro rata.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Chas. W. Heusler, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by the State, to the use of James A. Dunham, against the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland and another. A demurrer on behalf of defendant named to the declaration was sustained, and from judgment for costs in favor of such defendant plaintiff appeals. Affirmed without prejudice.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, UERNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

George Ross Veazey, of Baltimore, for appellant. Benjamin A. Stansbury, of Baltimore, for appellee.

BRISCOE, J. This suit was brought on the bond of Mrs. Agatha W. McShane, guardian of Mary W. Vest, George Graham Vest, Jr., and John W. Vest, beneficiaries under the will of George P. Vest, deceased, of the state of Missouri, in the name of the state, for the use of James A. Dunham, a creditor, to recover the sum of $465.86, alleged to be due him, for the education of two of the infant children of the testator. The trial of the case, in the Baltimore city court, resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff against the guardian, one of the defendants, for the sum of $450, with interest and costs. From this judgment, no appeal has been taken. A demurrer to the declaration, on behalf of the appellee, the surety on the bond, the other defendant in the case, was sustained by the court below, and from a judgment for costs, in favor of this defendant, the plaintiff has taken this appeal.

The main question to be considered is the liability of the appellee, the surety on the bond, and this is presented by a demurrer to the plaintiff's declaration. As the facts appear from the declaration and are somewhat unusual, we will set out the declaration, at length. It is as follows:

"(1) That in the year 1904 G. G. Vest, a citizen of the state of Missouri, died in that state, leaving a will, one of the provisions of which was as follows: 'One-third of my estate, after carrying out the provisions heretofore set forth in regard to my wife, shall be held by my said trustees and executors for the benefit of the three children of my deceased son, George P. Vest, namely: Mary W. Vest, George Graham Vest, Jr., and John W. Vest, for whose education and support the rents, property and proceeds of said one-third part of my estate shall be applied by my said trustees and executors at such times, and in such amounts as they may deem necessary, and when each of the three children shall be twenty-one years of age, the share of such child shall be paid over to her or him.'

"(2) That on or about February 28, 1911, Mrs. Agatha W. McShane, now residing in Centreville, Md., was duly appointed and qualified in the orphans' court of Baltimore county as guardian of the infant children above mentioned; that as such guardian it was her duty to account to the orphans' court, upon request, for all moneys received by her while acting as said guardian, it being further her duty to pay all bills incurred by her on the behalf of said infant wards, out of income received by her for that purpose.

"(3) That on February 28, 1911, said Agatha W. McShane and Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland bound themselves jointly and severally unto the state of Maryland in the penalty of $3,000, for the full and faithful performance by the said Agatha W. McShane, guardian as aforesaid, of all the duties imposed upon her by the laws of the state of Maryland, including the duty to faithfully account with the orphans' court of Baltimore county for the management of the property and estate of the orphans under her care, and further including the duty aforesaid to pay all bills incurred by her on the behalf of the said infant wards out of income received by her for that purpose.

"(4) That on the 15th day of April, 1914, after the filing of a petition on the part of Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, asking to be released from the above bond, and also after the filing of a petition by the guardian herself in the orphans' court of Baltimore county, the following order of court was passed by the said orphans' court: 'Ordered by the orphans' court for Baltimore county this 15th day of April, 1914, upon the foregoing petition and exhibits that Agatha W. McShane is hereby discharged from her position as guardian of the minors and wards named in the foregoing petition, she having failed and refused for reasons set forth in said petition to file a new bond in accordance with the provisions of the order of this court passed in this cause on the 7th day of October, 1913, upon the petition of the said Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, and as it is represented to this court that no property exists in the state of Maryland which should be taken possession or control of by a guardian for said minors, and as the court knows of no such property, the court refrains from passing any further order at this time on such subject. And the said Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland is hereby discharged from further liability as surety on the said bond given by it'

"(5) That during the period of her guardianship, the said Agatha W. McShane became indebted unto James A. Dunham, of the city of Baltimore, state of Maryland, for the education of two of the infant children above mentioned, to wit, George Graham Vest, Jr., and John W. Vest; that said bill now amounts, including interest, to the sum of $465.86; and that the said bill has long been outstanding and remains unpaid.

"(6) That this bill was frequently presented to Mrs. Agatha W. McShane for payment; that on or about March 3, 1914, she filed a lengthy account of her guardianship in the orphans' court of Baltimore county, showing that she had received income from the trustees under the will of G. G. Vest aforesaid to the sum of $5,844.10; that she had disbursed $6,597.76, the overpayment of $1,253.66 having been advanced by the husband of the said Agatha W. McShane; that the said guardianship account contains many items, such as amounts paid to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company of Baltimore City, and other items consisting of a single name such as 'Ridgely' or 'sundry expenses $85,' which do not tend to show that these disbursements were made for the education and maintenance of the children, to which the guardian was limited by law in the use of such funds; that furthermore no mention at all is made in such guardianship account of the bill which the said guardian well knew was rightfully owing to James A. Dunham, the plaintiff in the above-entitled case.

"(7) That the defendant Fidelity & Deposit Company has its place of business in Baltimore city, in the state of Maryland, and that Agatha W. McShane is a resident of Centreville, in Queen Ann's county, Md.

"And, therefore, the plaintiff claims from the defendant herein named the sum of $465.86."

The condition of a guardian's bond, as provided by section 155, article 93, of the Code, is that the guardian shall faithfully account with the orphans' court, as directed by law, for the management of the property and estate of the infant under his care, and shall also deliver up the property agreeably to the order of the court or the directions of law, and shall in all respects perform the duty of guardian according to law. It is quite clear that any failure to perform any of the conditions or requirements of the bond, as ordered by the orphans' court, would render the bond liable, and the bond could be, at once, put in suit. By section 181 of article 93 of the Code, it is specially provided that on a guardian's failure to account, as herein directed, his bond shall be liable to be put in suit. By section 165 of article 93 of the Code it is provided:

"Once in each year, or oftener if required by the court, a guardian shall settle an account of his trust with the orphans' court, and the said court shall ascertain at its discretion the amount of the sum to be annually expended in the maintenance and education of the infant, regard being had to his future situation, prospects and destination; and the said court, if it deem it advantageous to the ward, may allow the guardian to exceed the income of the estate and to make use of his principal and sell part of the same under its order; but no part of the real estate shall on account of such maintenance or education be diminished without the approbation of a court of equity as well as of the orphans' court."

[1] While there can be no doubt, under both the statute law and the decisions of this court, that a surety upon a guardian's bond would be liable for a breach of any of the conditions of the bond, yet it is difficult to see, upon the facts and the state of the record now before us, upon what principle or rule of law the surety in this case can be held liable. The declaration avers and the demurrer admits that the guardian has accounted for and paid over all the funds belonging to the ward's estate, and that she had disbursed $1,253.66 in excess of the income received by her from the trustees under the will. It further states that a lengthy account of her guardianship, was filed, in the orphans' court of Baltimore county, but no allowance was made on account of the plaintiff's claim. It also appears that on the 15th day of April, 1914, by an order of the orphans' court of Baltimore county, the guardian was discharged from her position for failure to file a new bond, and the appellee company was discharged from further liability as surety on the bond. The bond given in this case does not appear in the record, but the condition of a guardian's bond provided by the statute does not require a guardian to pay all bills incurred for the ward out of the income received, but the statute requires that a guardian shall settle an account of his trust with the orphans' court, and that court shall ascertain at its discretion the amount of the sum to be annually expended in the maintenance and education of the infant. The administration of a guardianship trust is to be carried on under the supervision of the orphans' court, and the money received by the guardian is to be expended under the direction of the orphans' court.

In Tomlinson v. Simpson, 33 Minn. 448, 23 N. W. 864, the Supreme Court of that state, in dealing with the obligation of a surety on a guardianship bond, said:

"It is a settled rule of law that a surety is not to be held beyond the terms of his contract. The claim against him is strictissimi juris. Nothing can be clearer, both upon principle and authority, than that the liability of a surety is not to be extended by implication beyond the precise terms of his bond. To the extent and in the manner pointed out in his obligation, he is bound, and no further. He has a right to stand on the very terms of his contract." 21 Cyc. 115; McKinnon v. McKinnon, 81 N. C. 201; State v. Jones, 89 Mo. 470, 1 S. W. 855; Frost v. Redford, 127 Mo. 492, 30 S. W. 179; Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Rich, 122 Ga. 506, 50 S. E. 338.

In the present case, the guardian appears not only to have settled an account, under the directions of the orphans' court, but to have paid out an amount largely in excess of the income received by her, and the action of the orphans' court in this regard remains unchallenged.

In Baldwin v. State, 89 Md. 588, 43 Atl. 857, this court said that it does not necessarily follow that sureties on a guardian's bond are liable because the guardian is. Their responsibility must depend upon the extent of the obligation created by the terms of the bond and the statutes, which can be read into it, and it was further said, in passing upon the questions in that case, that the guardian is entitled to be credited with all sums he properly pays out of the income, or even out of the principal, when duly allowed by the orphans' court.

Whether the order of the orphans' court, of March 3, 1914, approving the guardian's account, and directing the disbursement of the income received by the guardian, from the trustees under the will, was a proper order is not an open question on this appeal. Manifestly, however, parties acting under it would be protected so long as it stands and remains unreversed.

While for the reasons stated, we shall affirm the judgment appealed from, we do not think the appellant should be precluded from applying to the orphans' court to have the account opened and restated, so as he may have an opportunity to have such relief as the facts and circumstances of his case may require and justify.

[2] The orphans' court would have authority to correct any errors in the account of the guardian even after final ratification, and to abrogate and modify their own orders, when necessary to promote the ends of justice. Malkus v. Richardson, 124 Md. 228, 92 Atl. 474; French v. Washington Co., 115 Md. 310, 80 Atl. 913; Geesey v. Geesey et al., 94 Md. 371, 51 Atl. 36.

The obligation of the guardian clearly exists to pay for the maintenance and education of the ward out of the property under her control. Kraft v. Wickey, 4 Gill & J. 332, 23 Am. Dec. 569; A. & E. Ency. of Law, vol. 15, 79.

[3] A refusal to comply with this duty would constitute a breach of the guardianship bond, and the creditor may resort to a suit upon it. Baldwin v. State, 89 Md. 587, 43 Atl. 857; Raymond v. Sawyer, 37 Me. 406.

[4] It is well settled that it is the duty of the guardian to pay all demands against the ward, having regard to priorities, in full or if the estate is insufficient for that purpose, then to pay them pari passu, or pro rata. Frost v. Redford, 54 Mo. App. 351; Ereter v. Carr, 27 R. I. 184, 61 Atl. 171; State v. Miller, 3 Gill, 336; Swan v. Dent, 2 Md. Ch. 111.

For the reasons stated, the judgment will be affirmed, but without prejudice as herein stated.

Judgment affirmed, without prejudice, the costs to be paid by the appellant.

(132 Md. 389)

HUESTON v. NATIONAL CITY BANK OF CHICAGO. (No. 11.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 2, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS § 642(7)—FOREIGN CORPORATION—"DOING BUSINESS."

The bringing of an action in Maryland by a National Bank engaged in the banking business in Illinois does not constitute "doing business" in former state under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 23, §§ 93, 94, requiring foreign corporations "doing business" in the state to file certificate with secretary of state; and the bank is not precluded from bringing such action by section 94, providing that failure to file certificate as required by section 93 bars right of corporation to maintain action in state courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Doing Business.]

2. GUARANTY § 90—ACTION BY CREDITOR—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action on a guaranty of the debt of another, evidence as to the cause of the indebtedness and the manner in which it was incurred is irrelevant, where debt, having been admitted, is not in dispute.

3. EVIDENCE § 271(1)—ADMISSIBILITY—ACTION ON GUARANTY—STATEMENTS BETWEEN DEBTOR AND GUARANTOR.

In an action on a guaranty of the debt of another, statements made by debtor to guarantor before signing of contract of guaranty are inadmissible in evidence, the debtor being no party to such contract.

4. WITNESSES § 240(4) — EXAMINATION — LEADING QUESTIONS.

Question, "Was that the moving thing that led you to the signing of the agreement?" held leading.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR § 1058(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

Court's refusal to permit witness to answer a question as to her reason for signing a guaranty, if error, was harmless, where she had already testified, and was subsequently permitted to testify as to her motive and intent in signing the guaranty.

6. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF § 108(3)—PROMISE TO PAY DEBT OF ANOTHER—CONSIDERATION.

Written guaranty to pay debt of another was good, where consideration was expressed in a letter, although guaranty itself did not show consideration, Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 35, § 38, providing that consideration for promise to answer for debt of another need not be in writing.

7. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF § 33(3)—PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR DEBT—ORIGINAL PROMISE—FORBEARANCE OF CREDITOR.

Forbearance to sue is a good consideration for a promise to pay the debt of another, although no actual benefit accrues to promisor.

8. TRIAL § 252(1)—REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Requested instructions, unsupported by the evidence, are properly refused.

9. GUARANTY § 25(3)—ACTION BY CREDITOR—DURESS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action on a guaranty, evidence held sufficient to show that guarantor did not sign guaranty under duress.

10. COURTS § 18 — JURISDICTION — SERVICE WITHIN STATE ON NONRESIDENT.

Where a nonresident is served within a state in which she has been living off and on for three years, such service is sufficient to give court jurisdiction.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Chas. W. Heusler, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by the National City Bank of Chicago, a corporation, against Grace Hieston. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Plaintiff's second prayer, referred to in the opinion, is as follows:

The plaintiff, National City Bank of Chicago, prays the court to instruct the jury that if they shall find that on or about the 5th day of January, 1914, one Walter Hieston was indebted to the plaintiff, National City Bank of Chicago, in an amount exceeding $5,000, and that the plaintiff was then about to enforce by suit its claims against the said Walter Hieston, and that on or about the 5th day of January, 1914, the defendant, Grace Hieston, executed the following guaranty:

"Individual or Corporation. I hereby request the National City Bank of Chicago to give and continue to Walter Hieston credit as he may desire from time to time, and in consideration of all and any such credit given him I hereby guarantee prompt payment when due of any and all indebtedness now due or which may hereafter become due from him to said bank, howsoever created, or arising, or evidenced, to the extent of five thousand dollars ($5,000), and waive notice of the acceptance of this guaranty, and of any and all indebtedness at any time covered by the same. This guaranty shall continue until written notice from me of the discontinuance thereof shall be received by said the National City Bank of Chicago. Grace Hieston.

"Chicago, Ill., Jan'y 5, 1914."

And that upon receipt of said guaranty the plaintiff notified the defendant by letter dated January 5, 1914, that the plaintiff, in consideration of the aforesaid guaranty, agreed that it would start no suit looking toward the recovery of a judgment on the indebtedness due by the said Walter Hieston to the said plaintiff for a period of 30 days from the 5th day of January, 1914; and if the jury shall further find that the plaintiff, National City Bank of Chicago, relying on said guaranty, took no proceedings looking toward the recovery of a judgment on the indebtedness due by the said Walter Hieston to the said plaintiff, for a period of 30 days from the 5th day of January, 1914, and that the said Walter Hieston, after the expiration of said 30 days, did not and has not at the present time paid his said indebtedness, and that said indebtedness exceeds the sum of $5,000, then the verdict of the jury must be in favor of the plaintiff, National City Bank of Chicago, for the sum of $5,000, with interest in the discretion of the jury from such time as they shall find the plaintiff made demand upon the defendant to pay said indebtedness to the extent of $5,000.

(Granted.)

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, and STOCKBRIDGE, JJ.

Herbert B. Stimpson, of Baltimore, for appellant. L. Vernon Miller and George Weems Williams, both of Baltimore, for appellee.

BRISCOE, J. This is a suit upon a contract of guaranty, dated the 5th day of January, 1914, and executed in the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, by the defendant to the plaintiff. The appellant, the defendant below, is a married woman, temporarily residing in Baltimore city, in this state, but her husband is a citizen and a resident of the state of Illinois. Service of summons was obtained upon her in this state, where she had been residing, on or about the period of three years, prior to the institution of the suit. The appellee, the plaintiff below, is a nonresident corporation, duly incorporated under the laws of the United States, and carrying on the banking business in the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois. The contract of guaranty, is attached to and made a part of the declaration, and is as follows:

"Individual or Corporation. I hereby request the National City Bank of Chicago to give and continue to Walter Hieston credit as he may desire from time to time, and in consideration of all and any such credit given him I hereby guarantee prompt payment when due of any and all indebtedness now due or which may hereafter become due from him to said bank, howsoever created, or arising, or evidenced, to the extent of five thousand dollars ($5,000), and waive notice of the acceptance of this guaranty, and of any and all indebtedness at any time covered by the same. This guaranty shall continue until written notice from me of the discontinuance thereof shall be received by said the National City Bank of Chicago.

"[Signed] Grace Hieston.

"Chicago, Ill., Jan'y 5, 1914."

The declaration contains three counts in assumpsit, and a fourth count declaring upon the guaranty. This count avers, in substance, that Walter Hieston, the husband of the defendant, was indebted to the plaintiff in a large amount, exceeding $5,000, and the plaintiff was then about to enforce by suit its claim against him, and thereupon the defendant executed the guaranty set out and stated in the declaration. It further avers that upon receipt of the guaranty the plaintiff notified the defendant by letter dated January 5, 1914, which letter was duly received by the defendant, that the plaintiff in consideration of the guaranty agreed that it would start no suit, looking toward the recovery of a judgment on the indebtedness due by the husband to the plaintiff, for a period of 30 days, from the 5th day of January, 1914, that the husband had not paid the whole or any part of the debt due by him, at the time of the execution of the guaranty, and that the debt, exclusive of interest, largely exceeds the sum of $5,000. And that the plaintiff has notified the defendant of this fact, and has demanded the payment by her, but she has failed and refused to pay the same, in accordance with the guaranty. At the trial of the case, in the Baltimore city court, the defendant reserved four bills of exceptions, to the rulings of the court upon the evidence and prayers. There were also other rulings of the court, upon the pleadings and upon a motion to postpone or to discontinue the case; but, as we find no reversible error in the last-named rulings, we will first consider the controlling questions which are presented by the record, in their regular order.

[1] The first exception presents the ruling of the court, in refusing the defendant's motion to postpone the case, upon the ground, that the plaintiff bank could not maintain this action because it had not filed with the secretary of state, prior to the trial, the certificate required by article 23, §§ 93, 94, of the Code. The answer to this contention is very obvious, and that is the bringing of a suit by a National Bank in our state courts cannot be held to be "doing business herein," and that article 23, §§ 93, 94, has no application to a case of this kind. There was no error in overruling and refusing the defendant's motion, set out in this exception.

The second, third, and fourth bills of exception contain the rulings upon evidence. The second and third exceptions embrace the ruling of the court in sustaining objections to the following questions asked the witness Walter Hieston, in the course of the trial:

"Q. What was the immediate cause of your getting indebted to the bank? Q. What did you say to Mrs. Hieston, in reference to her signing this (meaning the guaranty)?"

[2] The debt due by the husband to the bank, it will be observed, was admitted and not in dispute. The cause of the indebtedness and the manner in which it was incurred were clearly irrelevant to the issues in the case.

[3] Statements made by the husband, who was not a party to the contract of guaranty, to the defendant, before she signed the guaranty, were inadmissible, and properly excluded by the court.

[4, 5] There was no error in the ruling set out in the fourth exception. The question, "Was that the moving thing that led you to the signing of the agreement?" propounded to the witness, the defendant in the case, was not only leading, but she had testified fully as to her reason for signing the guaranty, and was permitted to repeat in her subsequent examination her motive and intent in executing the guaranty. She could not therefore have been injured by the ruling, in sustaining the objection, in this exception.

This brings us to the rulings upon the prayers. The court below granted the plaintiff's second prayer, but refused all the other prayers presented, on behalf of both the plaintiff and defendant, in the case.

The plaintiff's second prayer, it will be seen (the reporter will set out this prayer, in his report of the case), not only stated the cause of action as set out in the fourth count of the declaration, but all of the necessary facts, if found by the jury, to permit a recovery in the case.

The testimony in the case, upon the main facts, was practically undisputed. The indebtedness of the husband of the defendant to the plaintiff, the guaranty of the defendant to pay a portion of this debt, and the failure of the defendant to pay the debt as guaranteed, are admitted, and are also clearly established by the evidence.

[8] While the consideration for the guaranty is not set forth in the guaranty itself, it is sufficiently shown by the other testimony in the case to answer the requirements of the statute.

By section 38 of article 35 of the Code of Public General Laws, it is provided:

"Where an action, suit or * * * proceeding is brought for the purpose of charging any person on a special promise to be answerable for the debt, default or miscarriage of another person, it shall not be necessary to show that the consideration for such promise is in writing."

The guaranty, however, upon which the action in this case is brought is in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, and the consideration therefor is set out in a letter by the bank, which was given to the defendant simultaneously with the execution of the guaranty. The letter is as follows:

"Chicago, January 5, 1914.

"Mrs. Grace Hieston, 325 Belden Avenue, Chicago—Dear Madam: In consideration of receipt of your guaranty, $5,000.00, guaranteeing the indebtedness owing by Walter Hieston to this bank, we hereby agree that we will start no suit looking toward the recovery of a judgment on such indebtedness for a period of thirty days from the date of this letter.

"Very truly yours, W. T. Perkins,
"BBW Assistant Cashier."

[7] The law is well settled in this state by a long line of authorities that the forbearance to institute legal proceedings is a good consideration for a promise by a third person to pay the debt of another, even though no actual benefit accrue to the party undertaking. Thomas v. Delphy, 33 Md. 373; Emerick v. Coakley, 35 Md. 188; Bowen v. Tipton, 64 Md. 275, 1 Atl. 861.

The plaintiff's second prayer, we think, correctly stated the propositions of law applicable to the case, and was properly granted.

As the demurrer to the fourth count of the declaration presents the same questions as were raised by the ruling on the second prayer, it was properly sustained, for the reasons we have stated in passing on this prayer.

The defendant's first and second prayers were demurrers to the evidence, and were properly rejected.

[9] The defendant's third, fourth, fifth, and sixth prayers sought to submit propositions not supported by the testimony, and could not have been granted, for the reasons stated, in passing upon the plaintiff's second prayer.

The defendant's seventh and eighth prayers were based upon the theory that the guaranty had been obtained from the defendant by duress and by threats of criminal charges against her husband.

[9] We find no evidence in the record tending to support the propositions sought to be submitted to the jury by these prayers. On the contrary, the defendant testified that she signed the paper of her own free will. The undisputed evidence shows that she executed the guaranty while acting under the advice of counsel, Senator Mason, of the Illinois bar, and that she fully understood the purport of the undertaking and the extent of her liability thereunder. The seventh and eighth prayers were properly refused.

[10] As to the question of jurisdiction raised by the plaintiff's demurrer to the defendant's two pleas in abatement, we need only say, that is clear, under the facts of this case, that the Baltimore city court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the case.

It appears from the record that service of process was not only made upon the defendant while within the state; but, according to her own testimony, she had been absent from the state of Illinois and had been living in a furnished apartment, in the city of Baltimore, in this state, "off and on for three years." In 11 Cyc. 668, the general rule upon this subject, under the title of "actions against nonresidents," is thus stated:

"But if a defendant, who is a nonresident, is found within the state, and service of process is there made upon him, jurisdiction will thereby be acquired."

The policy of the law here announced in this character of case is not only supported by authorities in other states, but by the decisions of the courts of this state. Mullen v. Sanborn, 79 Md. 364, 29 Atl. 522, 25 L. R. A. 721, 47 Am. St. Rep. 421; Mason v. Union Mills Co., 81 Md. 446, 32 Atl. 311, 29 L. R. A. 273, 48 Am. Rep. 524; Lanville v. Hadden & Co., 88 Md. 594, 41 Atl. 1097, 43 L. R. A. 222; Hodgson v. Bldg. Association, 91 Md. 439, 46 Atl. 971; McSherry v. McSherry, 113 Md. 400, 77 Atl. 653, 140 Am. St. Rep. 428; Hagerstown v. Gates, 117 Md. 348, 83 Atl. 570.

Finding no error in the rulings of the court below, the judgment will be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

(123 Md. 559)

BROWN et al. v. HOBBS, Sheriff, et al.
(No. 50.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)

1. DEEDS §126—CONDITIONAL FEE.

Language of deed "to have and to hold the above-described property unto him, * * * his heirs and assigns, forever in fee simple upon condition," etc., if condition was valid, held to convey property to grantee in fee simple subject to condition that upon conveyance contrary to terms grantors and their heirs would have right to re-enter and terminate estate.

2. DEEDS §149—CONDITION—RESTRAINT OF ALIENATION.

Where under terms of deed property might descend to heirs of grantee who do not bear his name, condition attempting to restrict right of grantee and his heirs to devise or convey to persons named Brown, not being limited in time and not being confined to grantee, was repugnant to fee conveyed to grantee and void.

3. DEEDS — 151—CONDITION—RESTRAINT OF ALIENATION—EFFECT OF INVALIDITY.

Where condition was repugnant to fee conveyed to grantee, grantee took absolute fee and property was subject to be sold under f. fa. in suit against him.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Howard County, in Equity; Wm. Henry Forsythe, Jr., Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Bill by William Howard Brown and another against James L. Hobbs, Sheriff of Howard County, and another. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTERSON, URMER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Isaac Lobe Straus, of Baltimore (Reuben D. Rogers, of Elllicott City, on the brief), for appellants. Richard S. Culbreth, of Baltimore (Joseph L. Donovan, of Elllicott City, on the brief), for appellees.

THOMAS, J. On the 18th of March, 1904, Henry G. Davis and Thomas B. Davis, of West Virginia, in consideration "of the sum of $1 and other good and valuable considerations," conveyed to William H. Brown, of Howard county, Md., a farm, in that county containing about 170 acres of land. The deed recites:

"Whereas, the farm and property hereinafter conveyed was the home place and residence of Sarah G. Brown, deceased, the grandmother of the grantors in this deed mentioned, and was by the said Sarah G. Brown conveyed to John R. Brown, deceased, the uncle of the said grantors, and has ever since been owned and occupied by a descendant of Sarah G. Brown;

"And whereas, it is the desire and purpose of the grantors herein mentioned that the said farm and property shall remain in the Brown name, within the line of consanguinity or blood relation to the said grantors.

"And whereas, William Howard Brown, the grantee herein mentioned, is a grandson of the said Sarah G. Brown, deceased."

The grant is to William H. Brown, and the habendum clause is as follows:

"To have and to hold the above-described property unto him, the said William H. Brown, his heirs and assigns, forever in fee simple, upon condition, however, that the said William H. Brown, his heirs and assigns, shall not devise or convey the said property to any one other than some person or persons by the name of Brown, within the line of consanguinity or blood relation to the said Henry G. Davis, or Thomas B. Davis, upon further condition and subject to the provision, that if the said William H. Brown, his heirs or assigns, shall undertake to convey or devise the said property to any person or persons other than someone by the name of Brown within the line of consanguinity or blood relationship to the said grantors, the said Henry G. Davis or Thomas B. Davis, their heirs or assigns, shall have the right to re-enter upon the said property, and the said property shall thereupon revert to the said Henry G. Davis and Thomas B. Davis, their heirs and assigns."

The deed also contains the following covenant:

"The said William H. Brown does hereby covenant and agree for himself, his heirs and assigns, that he will not devise or convey the aforesaid property to any one, other than some person or persons of his name within the line of consanguinity or blood relation to the said grantor."

On the 18th of May, 1917, William Howard Brown, the grantee in said deed, and John T. Davis, one of the heirs at law of Henry G. Davis, deceased, and also one of the heirs at law of Thomas B. Davis, deceased, filed a bill of complaint in the circuit court for Howard county against James L. Hobbs, the sheriff of Howard county, and the F. S. Royster Guano Company, a body corporate, in which they allege that by virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the circuit court for Howard county at the suit of F. S. Royster Guano Company "against the goods, chattels, lands, and tenements of William Howard Brown" James L. Hobbs, the sheriff of Howard county, had "seized and taken in execution all the estate, right, title, interest, property, claim, and demand in law and in equity" of the said William Howard Brown in and to the farm conveyed to him by the deed referred to, and had advertised said property for sale. The bill further alleges that a sale of the property by the sheriff under the writ mentioned would be in violation of the deed referred to, and prays for an injunction restraining such sale. A preliminary injunction was granted as prayed. Thereafter the F. S. Royster Guano Company appeared and filed a demurrer to the bill of complaint, and on the 26th of October, 1917, the court below passed the order from which this appeal was taken, sustaining the demurrer, dissolving the preliminary injunction, and dismissing the bill.

The lower court held that the deed conveyed a fee-simple estate, with a condition annexed "that the grantee shall not convey or devise the estate except to a particular class," and that the attempted restriction upon the power of the grantee to alienate the property was repugnant to the estate conveyed and void.

The contention of the appellants is that the language and provisions of the deed show that the grantors did not intend to convey an absolute fee-simple estate to the grantee, and that the effect of the conveyance was to vest in the grantee "only a qualified, determinable, or base fee." They rely upon cases like the cases of Reed v. Stouffer, 56 Md. 236, and Kelso v. Stigar, 75 Md. 376, 24 Atl. 18, where the property was conveyed to the grantees for the specific purposes mentioned in the deeds, and where the court held that, when it ceased to be used for such purposes, it reverted to the grantor and his heirs. While some writers speak of determinable fees as including fees upon condition, we think this argument of the appellants, strictly speaking, loses sight of the technical distinction between a "condition" and what is spoken of in the text-books as a "limitation." Mr. Venable, in his Syllabus (1st Ed.) p. 117, says:

"The term 'limitation' ordinarily means the conveyance of an estate, or the language which defines the character of the estate conveyed. * * * But in a less usual sense a 'limitation' is an estate which extends to some certain or uncertain event; e. g., an estate to A. until she marries; an estate to B. and his heirs so long as he, or they, continue to dwell on the premises. Limitations therefore include all estates for a term of years, their duration being fixed, determinable (base or qualified) fees, and that class of life estates which are to endure until the happening of some event, but may endure for a life; e. g., an estate during widowhood. A limitation marks the period of the estate's duration by some certain or uncertain event. It is created by such words as 'until,' 'as long as,' 'during,' 'whilst,' etc. In the case of a limitation the estate runs out its existence to a predetermined boundary. A condition designates some event which may cut short the estate before it reaches its termination. It is created by such words as 'on condition' 'provided,' 'so that,' etc. The happening of the event does not constitute the limit, or boundary, of the estate, but it is in derogation of the estate and terminates it before it reaches its regular expiration or predetermined end."

In 1 Preston on Estates, star page 442, the learned author, speaking of determinable fees, says:

"The grantee has an estate which may continue forever, though there is a contingency which, when it happens, will determine the estate. This contingency cannot with propriety be called a condition; it is a part of the limitation; and the estate may be termed a fee. Plowden uses the phrase, 'a fee simple determinable.'"

See, also, Arthur v. Cole, 56 Md. 100, 40 Am. Rep. 409; 2 Blackstone, star page 155; 4 Kent (14th Ed.) star page 126.

[1] The language of the deed in question is:

"To have and to hold the above-described property unto him, the said William H. Brown, his heirs and assigns, forever in fee simple, upon condition, however," etc.

If the condition is valid, the effect of this language would be to convey the property to the grantee in fee simple, upon condition that he and his heirs shall not convey or devise it except as therein provided, and upon a conveyance or devise of the property by the grantee or his heirs contrary to the terms of the deed the grantors and their heirs would have the right to re-enter and terminate the estate of the grantee. 2 Blackstone, supra; 4 Kent (14th Ed.) supra.

[2] The real question therefore in this case is: Is the attempted restriction upon the alienation of the property by the grantee and his heirs void? It is said in 1 Preston on Estates, star page 477:

"Although as a general proposition it be true that a tenant in fee has an unlimited power of alienation, and cannot be restrained by condition, yet every restriction of this power, annexed to the creation, or to the transfer of an estate in fee, would not be absolutely void."

And in 4 Kent, star page 181, it is said:

"Conditions are not sustained when they are repugnant to the nature of the estate granted, or infringe upon the essential enjoyment and independent rights of property, and tend manifestly to public inconvenience. A condition annexed to a conveyance in fee, or by devise, that the purchaser or devisee should not alien, is unlawful and void. The restraint is admitted in leases for life or years, but is incompatible with the absolute right appertaining to an estate in tail or in fee. * * * If, however, a restraint upon alienation be confined to an individual named, to whom the grant is not to be made, it is said by very high authority to be a valid condition. But this case falls within the general principle, and it may be very questionable whether such a condition would be good at this day."

In 2 Blackstone, star pages 156, 157, we find the statement:

"These express conditions, if they are impossible at the time of their creation, or afterwards become impossible by the act of God, or the act of the feoffor himself, or if they be contrary to law, or repugnant to the nature of the estate, are void. In many of which cases, if they be conditions subsequent, that is, to be performed after the estate is vested, the estate shall become absolute in the tenant. * * * For he hath by the grant the estate vested in him, which shall not be defeated afterwards by a condition either impossible, illegal, or repugnant."

The learned authors referred to cite cases in which slight restrictions upon the power to alienate fee-simple estates have been upheld. But the rule in this state forbidding such restrictions has been strictly applied. In the case of Clark v. Clark, 99 Md. 356, 58 Atl. 24, the provision of the will was as follows:

"It is my will and direction that my property hereby given to my said children shall not be sold for the purpose of division of proceeds of sale among them until the end of ten years from the time of my death, unless all of my said children agree that such sale and division shall be made between them before that time, and in case all of them do thus agree in writing to make such sale or division of my property before said period of ten years, then I do authorize them to make said sale or partition of my property, so that each one may receive his or her share, I express the wish that my children shall continue to live together as they now do, and use the income of my property for their support until the expiration of said ten years from my death."

In reference to this clause of the will the court said:

"This provision of the will, if effective, would practically amount to a restraint for ten years of all alienation by any child of its share of the estate. We have no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that this attempted interposition of restrictions upon the method of alienation and enjoyment of the absolute estate given to the testatrix's children was contrary to the policy of the law, and therefore inoperative and void. The authorities agree that conditions or limitations in restraint of alienation or essential enjoyment of an estate in fee cannot be validly annexed to the deed or devise by which the estate is created, because they are repugnant to the inherent nature and qualities of the estate granted and tend to public inconvenience."

In that case, and the late case of Gischell v. Ballman, reported in 181 Md. 260, 101 Atl.

686, the Maryland cases and many others upon the subject are cited.

Under the terms of the deed in question, the property may descend to heirs of the grantee who do not bear his name, while the condition attempts to restrict his right, and the right of his heirs, to devise or convey the property to persons named Brown who are "of blood relation to" the said grantors. As this restriction is not limited as to time, and is not confined to the grantee, it is apparent that it may result in limiting the power of his heir or heirs to sell or devise the property to a single person, or deprive them of that power altogether. Upon the authorities cited it is clear that the condition of the deed must therefore be held void because repugnant to the fee conveyed to the grantee, and it is not necessary in this case to refer to or discuss the numerous cases dealing with what should be regarded as reasonable and valid restrictions upon the power of alienation.

The case of In re Macleay, L. R. 20 Eq. 186, relied on by counsel for the appellants, is totally unlike the case at bar and the correctness of that decision has been seriously questioned in the later case of In re Rosher, L. R. 28 Ch. D. 801.

[3] The condition being void for the reasons stated, William Howard Brown, the grantee, took an absolute fee (Starr v. Starr M. P. Church, 112 Md. 171, 76 Atl. 595), and the property is subject to be sold under a fieri facias (Warner v. Rice, 68 Md. 440, 8 Atl. 84; Baker v. Kelser, 75 Md. 332, 23 Atl. 735).

In the view we have taken of the case, it is not necessary to discuss the further question presented by the brief of the appellees in regard to the jurisdiction of a court of equity to grant the relief.

Decree affirmed, with costs.

(132 Md. 502)

McGRAW v. UNION TRUST & DEPOSIT CO. et al. (No. 38.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 3, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT \Leftrightarrow 885 — ASSIGNMENT — SATISFACTION.

Where plaintiff judgment debtor permitted S., through whom judgment was paid with plaintiff's money, to have judgment assigned to use of S., plaintiff waived right to have judgment canceled as against defendant, to whom S. assigned it as additional collateral for an indebtedness; defendant having no knowledge of payment.

2. JUDGMENT \Leftrightarrow 841 — ASSIGNMENT — CONSIDERATION.

Existence of debt was sufficient consideration for assignment of judgment as additional collateral.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Garrett County; Robert R. Henderson, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Bill by John T. McGraw against the Union

Trust & Deposit Company and others. From an order dissolving an injunction, which had been previously granted, and dismissing the plaintiff's bill of complaint, with costs, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Renninger & Offutt, of Oakland, and W. H. Wolfe, of Parkersburg, Va., for appellant. Fred A. Thayer and Edward H. Sincell, both of Oakland, for appellees.

BRISCOE, J. This is an appeal from an order of the circuit court for Garrett county, dissolving an injunction which had been previously granted and dismissing the plaintiff's bill of complaint, with costs. The plaintiff is a nonresident of the state, and a resident of the state of West Virginia. The defendants the Union Trust & Deposit Company, a corporation, J. N. Camden, S. D. Camden, and Annie T. Spilman, trustees, under the last will of J. N. Camden, deceased, and Howard W. Showalter, are nonresidents of the state, and reside in the state of West Virginia. The First National Bank of Oakland and Bert O. Scott, the sheriff of Garrett county, the other defendants in the case, are residents of the state, and reside in Garrett county, Md.

The object of the proceeding, as will be seen by the prayer of the bill, is to restrain and enjoin the execution and collection of a judgment held by the First National Bank of Oakland against the plaintiff, John T. McGraw, and to strike out the judgment and the use to which the judgment had been entered, and to enter the judgment "Satisfied in full." The facts of the case, and the basis of the suit, appear to be these: On the 28th of May, 1914, a nonresident attachment was issued out of the circuit court for Garrett county upon the record of a judgment obtained by the Union Trust & Deposit Company and others against John T. McGraw, in the circuit court of Wood county, W. Va., and the sheriff attached certain property of the defendant in Garrett county. Subsequently a judgment in the short note case was obtained in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant for the sum of $6,110.32, and a judgment of condemnation for the property attached in the attachment case. On December 22, 1914, an execution was issued to enforce the collection of the judgment by a sale of the property, and the property was advertised for sale. On January 18, 1915, the sheriff made the following return upon the execution:

"After making the levy and advertising as per schedule hereto annexed, the within execution and costs were paid by Howard W. Showalter, and the same is hereby returned to be entered to his use by order of the plaintiff's attorney."

On February 9, 1915, the judgment was entered to the use of the First National Bank of Oakland by order of the attorney of Howard W. Showalter, and on the 13th of October, 1915, a writ of venditioni exponas was issued at the instance of the plaintiff, for whose use the judgment had been entered, commanding the sheriff to complete the execution, which he had begun, by the selling of the property, and it is this sale which the plaintiff seeks to restrain, and also to have the judgment entered satisfied.

The relief sought by the plaintiff's bill is based upon the contention that the judgment in question was paid by his money, and that it should have been entered "Satisfied" upon the records of the court, and not to the use, in the first instance of Howard W. Showalter, and subsequently by Showalter to the use of the First National Bank of Oakland.

The defendant the First National Bank of Oakland in its answer denies the material allegations of the bill, and in the third and fourth paragraphs of the answer, avers as follows:

"(3) This defendant denies that on or about the 6th day of November, 1915, the said McGraw, through his agent, Geo. A. Hechner, paid and satisfied said judgment and costs, or any part thereof, to this defendant, or to any person for the use of this defendant, it being the only party entitled to the payment thereof, and denies that said McGraw supposed, or ever had any reason to suppose, that said judgment had been fully paid and satisfied, and denies that said McGraw was, or ever has been, entitled to have said judgment entered "Satisfied" upon the docket of said court, and further answering said third paragraph, this defendant says that the said McGraw had full knowledge, and that Gilmore S. Hamill, his attorney, of record in said attachment proceedings, also had full knowledge that the said Howard W. Showalter had had said judgment entered to his own use on the 18th day of January, 1915, and that said McGraw and Gilmore S. Hamill, his attorney of record in said case, also had full knowledge that said judgment had been entered to the use of this defendant, the First National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, and this defendant charges and avers that it was not necessary to obtain the consent or authority of the said McGraw to so enter said judgment to the use of either the said Showalter or this defendant.

"(4) This defendant says that the said McGraw and his attorney of record in said case had full knowledge of each and every entry and transaction connected with said judgment and case, and have been fully cognizant of the course of said case ever since the rendition of said judgment and knew full well that the same was entered, first, to the use of the said Showalter, and, second, by his direction entered to the use of this defendant, and knew that this defendant was entitled to have and receive payment thereof; and, further answering said paragraph, this defendant denies that said judgment was fraudulently entered to the use of either the said Showalter or this defendant, but was entered, as hereinbefore shown, to its use, for value, and in good faith, and that it is the owner and holder thereof, and that the said McGraw is not entitled to any relief whatever at the hands of this court."

There can be no doubt as to the law applicable to this character of case, and the questions here involved, it will be seen, are largely those of fact. The court below held, upon a consideration of the testimony, that the plaintiff so acted with the judgment in question as to preclude now his obtaining the aid of a court of equity to prevent its collection from his property, and denied the relief sought by the bill.

We have examined and considered the testimony set out in the record, and concur in the conclusion reached by the court below. The opinion of Judge Henderson, who decided the case in the court below, fully covered every question of law and of fact involved in the controversy and presented by the record. It is as follows:

"There are two questions which must be decided in this case: (1) Whose money paid the judgment of the Union Trust & Deposit Company v. McGraw? (2) If it be found that John T. McGraw's money paid the judgment, has he so acted as to give the First National Bank of Oakland the right to claim payment of it a second time as against him?

"As to the first question, there seems now to be no doubt, except that which might be inferred from the uncertainty and confusion of both McGraw's and Showalter's testimony as to dates, places, and many of the circumstances surrounding the transactions. The record evidence supplements that of Mr. McGraw and Mr. Showalter, and from this and that together it appears that $5,000 of the $6,320.86 which it took to pay the Union Trust Company judgment and costs came from the discounting for McGraw of a note of Frank J. Garvan, loaned him by Garvan, which was afterwards paid by Garvan, and that $1,395.86 was charged by the First National Bank of Fairmont to McGraw's account, and that McGraw accepted a draft for $7,081.11 on January 16, 1915, at 80 days' sight, drawn upon him by the bank to cover this and other items set out in Exhibit J. T. M. No. 8. The cashier of the bank to a large extent corroborates this evidence, and there is no contradiction, except certain statements by Showalter and Hechner and McGraw, which, if taken at the strongest against them, might bear upon the question of fraud upon their part, but could not change the fact that McGraw's money paid the judgment, and that at the time of payment he could have required its release and satisfaction upon the dockets and records of the circuit court for Garrett county. But such was the state of accounts between McGraw and Showalter at the time that I do not believe either one of them could have been sure of the title to the money which was used in payment of the judgment.

"But, instead of the judgment being released, it was entered on January 18, 1915, to the use of H. W. Showalter, and by him on February 9, 1915, assigned to the use of the First National Bank of Oakland as additional collateral for Showalter's notes, which were then running at the bank. Let us examine closely the evidence as to how and why this was done, and what knowledge McGraw had of the matter. Mr. McGraw himself says he had no knowledge of this assignment until November, 1915. He was a man of very extensive and complicated business interests, owing a large number of debts, evidenced by judgments, notes, and mortgages, and open accounts. The details of these would be beyond the capacity of any memory to remember. This may explain the uncertainty as to dates and places in his testimony. It is shown to be a fact that Showalter authorized the entering of the Camden judgment to his use, and the subsequent assignment of it by his authority to the First National Bank of Oakland, as additional collateral to some notes of his discounted there. Showalter was the channel through which the judgment was paid, and it was quite natural that the attorney for the Union Trust Company would inquire if it was to be entered to his use. Showalter's explanation of this, that he supposed it had been entered to his use by Col. McGraw, for reasons of his own (page 15 of the first depositions), but that he was never authorized by McGraw to do this, is contradicted by the evidence of Mr. Sincell, who says that Showalter authorized the entry to his use to be made, and this seems very probable; but the question of Col. McGraw's knowledge and approval of the action is a very different one. The first evidence of this, outside of Col. McGraw, is that of Mr. Showalter (page 19 of the first commission), who says, in answer to the sixteenth interrogatory (page 19 of the evidence of April 25, 1916), that Hechmer knew of the Deer Park property against the creditors of McGraw. Hechmer denies promising in November, 1915, for Mr. McGraw, that the judgment would be paid if a postponement of the sale was granted; but he used language in his admitted conversation and in the letter of November 8, 1915, calculated to make one who was asking about the Camden judgment believe that Mr. McGraw would pay it, and Mr. Sincell and Mr. Sliger both are positive that he made this promise. Hechmer admits that he knew of the assignment to Showalter at the time it was made (page 23 of the first testimony, filed April 25, 1916), but denies knowledge of the subsequent assignment to the bank.

[1] "Now, the relations between these three persons, McGraw, Showalter, and Hechmer, were of such a nature that I think it is fair to assume that what was known to one about so important a matter was known to all. Hechmer says he said he would consult his principal, and doubtless he did. At that time it suited Col. McGraw to have the judgment stand in the name of Showalter. The latter was his close friend and financial backer, and his explanation of the transfer to him of the judgment—to keep the other creditors of McGraw from proceedings against the Deer Park property—seems in all respects probable. Showalter could hardly have invented that reason. Without an understanding with McGraw, he would not have so dealt with the judgment. The other inconsistencies and discrepancies in the testimony of those witnesses show the fallibility of their memory, and the circumstances of each (McGraw being in straits, and Showalter being amply solvent, and Hechmer the confidential and general agent of McGraw) make it extremely probable that the arrangement of the assignment was made for the convenience of McGraw and to save the Deer Park property from other judgment creditors, who would have been apt to proceed against it, if the Camden judgment had been entered satisfied. McGraw, having ample confidence in Showalter, and doubting nothing of his financial ability, was satisfied to let him have record title to the judgment. McGraw's transfer of the judgment was a waiver of his right to have it canceled. He deliberately paid the judgment, and yet kept it alive for his own purposes. Presently, however, Showalter has need of protection from attaching creditors, and, taking advantage of his possession of the indicia of title of the judgment, he assigns it to the bank as additional collateral for his indebtedness. It is not pretended that the bank, except through Sincell, knew that the judgment had been paid by McGraw's money, and he vigorously denies that he ever knew it. The other evidence, and the letter of Hechmer of November 8, 1915, bear out his denial.

[2] "Sliger and Thayer are not alleged to have known of the claim of McGraw. Under these circumstances the bank took the assignment from Showalter. McGraw, having put Showalter in the position where he could use the judgment for his own purposes, if he wished to do so, cannot complain if he actually did so use it. The existence of the debt from Showalter to the bank is amply sufficient consideration for the turning over of additional collateral. Besides, the threatened attachments against Showalter had somewhat alarmed the bank, and it was demanding cover. Showalter assigned the judgment, and the bank's anxieties seem to have been allayed. It took no proceedings to realize on its collateral or to secure itself by judgment. In the meantime Showalter came to financial grief, and when the bank came to realize on the judgment it was prevented by injunction. A consideration of all the testimony seems to make it reasonably clear that Col. McGraw so acted with the judgment as to preclude now his obtaining the aid of equity to prevent its collection from his property. He is a lawyer and a business man of large and extremely varied experience. It is no hardship upon him to hold that, if he voluntarily or carelessly allowed a third person to hold for many months record title to his property, and especially if that was done to keep his own creditors from getting at it, he cannot now ask a court of equity to extricate him from a position of more than doubtful propriety, into which he allowed his duly authorized agent to place him. There need be no citation of authorities to establish this position, if the facts are correctly found by the court.

"The bill will therefore be dismissed, and the injunction dissolved."

For the reasons we have stated, and upon the principles announced in the opinion of the court below we will affirm the order appealed from.

Order affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

(22 N. J. Law, 1)

McMAHON v. RIKER, County Collector, et al.
(No. 45.)

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. July 8, 1918.)

1. STATUTES \S 109—AMENDMENT—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

In determining whether amendment or supplement to statute violates the Constitution as to titles of acts, the amendment or supplement is not to be examined as independent, but to be considered as part of statute upon which it is ingrafted, and if amendment or supplement does not render statute in its altered form unconstitutional, it is valid.

2. STATUTES \S 109—TITLE AND OBJECT.

Purposes manifestly cognate to the object expressed in the title of a statute are not required to be expressly mentioned in the title.

3. STATUTES \S 125(6)—TITLE—SUBJECT—OFFICERS—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Act April 2, 1898 (P. L. p. 226), entitled "An act respecting the fees of surrogates, county clerks, and county registers of deeds and mortgages in counties of the first class, and providing salaries for such officers," as amended and supplemented by Acts March 29, 1917 (P. L. pp. 771, 772), to provide the salary shall not exceed the revenue of the particular office, etc., is not unconstitutional, as embracing more than one subject, not expressed in the title.

4. STATUTES \S 102(2)—GENERAL LAWS—PAYMENT OF OFFICERS.

It being settled that Act April 2, 1898 (P. L. p. 226), providing for payment of salaries of certain officers in counties of first class and employment of assistants and their payment, is general in character, Acts March 29, 1917 (P. L. pp. 771, 772), amending statute by placing limitation on expenditures and creating fund out of which they shall be paid, is also general, not a local or special law regulating internal affairs of county.

5. STATUTES \S 102(2)—SPECIAL OR LOCAL LEGISLATION—COMPENSATION OF OFFICERS.

Act April 2, 1898 (P. L. p. 226), providing salaries for surrogates, county clerks, and county registers of deeds and mortgages in counties of first class, as amended by Acts March 29, 1917 (P. L. pp. 771, 772), providing expense of office shall not exceed its revenue, is not violative of Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 11, as special or local law decreasing percentage or allowance of public officers during term.

6. COUNTIES \S 75(1)—OFFICERS—PAYMENT OF SALARY—STATUTE.

Under Act April 2, 1898 (P. L. p. 226), providing salaries for surrogates, county clerks, and county registers of deeds and mortgages in counties of first class, as amended by Acts March 29, 1917 (P. L. pp. 771, 772), if there are not sufficient moneys in any particular month in separate fund for payment of county register of deeds and mortgages, created by fees paid into his office, his full salary of $625 for the month cannot be presently paid.

Mandamus by John J. McMahon against Frederick Riker, County Collector, the Board of Freeholders of the County of Hudson, and others. On demurrer to the return to the alternative writ. Demurrer overruled, and judgment entered for defendants.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and KALISCH, J.

J. Emil Walscheld, of Union, for demurrant. Albert C. Wall, of Jersey City, amicus curiæ, in support of return.

GUMMERE, C. J. McMahon holds the office of register of deeds and mortgages in and for the county of Hudson, having been elected thereto in November, 1914. By force of an act entitled "An act respecting the fees of surrogates, county clerks and county registers of deeds and mortgages in counties of the first class, and providing salaries for such officers," approved April 2, 1898 (P. L. p. 226), this office carries with it an annual salary of $7,500, to be paid in equal monthly installments in full compensation for all services rendered by the incumbent and in lieu of all fees and other compensation whatsoever theretofore provided or allowed by law. The act also authorizes these officers to employ the necessary deputies and assistants, and directs that these employees shall receive such compensation as shall be approved by the board of freeholders, and shall be paid monthly by the proper disbursing officer of the county. These recited provisions appear in section 4 of the statute. Another provision of the statute requires the payment by the various officers affected by the act of all fees, costs, allowances, percentages, and other perquisites of whatever kind which should be received by them, into the county treasury for the sole use of the county. In 1917 section 4 was amended, by adding thereto the following provision:

"That the said salaries, together with the compensation of the aforesaid deputies and assistants for said offices respectively, shall not in any year exceed the revenue of said offices."

This amendment was approved March 29th. P. L. 771. On the same day a supplement to the original act was approved, which provided that:

The "moneys received by the county collector from the surrogates, county clerks and registers of deeds and mortgages, or by any assistant or other person in their office or employment, in counties of the first class in this state, pursuant to the act to which this act is a supplement, shall be placed in separate funds to the credit of the respective offices from which said moneys were received, and out of which said funds the salaries of the said surrogates, county clerks, and said registers of deeds and mortgages, and the compensation of the deputies and assistants for said offices shall be paid, and any surplus thereafter remaining shall be retained in said funds for the use of, and until disposed of by, the boards of chosen freeholders of the respective counties, according to law." P. L. p. 772.

On the 1st of December, 1917, there became due, under the provision of the act of 1898, to Mr. McMahon, as register of Hudson county, the installment of salary for the month of November, 1917, amounting to $625. Payment of this installment was demanded by him from the county collector and the board of chosen freeholders, but his demand was refused upon the ground that there were no funds in the special account with which to pay him. McMahon thereupon applied to this court for a mandamus compelling such payment. An alternative writ having been allowed, the defendants made return, setting up as a defense lack of funds in the special account created by the supplement of 1917 with which to pay the installment. The relator demurred, and the sole question submitted to us on the argument was whether such lack of funds in this account at the time the demand was made constituted a legal excuse for the refusal to pay the installment of salary.

Counsel for McMahon contends that both the amendment and the supplement to the act of 1898 are void, because in conflict with the Constitution of the state. He further argues that if this contention is not sound, the payment was improperly refused, "because no full year has yet expired since the said amendment and supplement went into effect, and it is therefore impossible to judge whether the limitations placed upon the register's salary by the enactment of 1917 will prevent the payment of the full salary to the register." The first attack made upon the constitutionality of these statutory provisions is that the original act is, by its title, confined to the fees of the designated officers and the salaries to be paid such officers, and that provisions in the amendment and supplement looking to the operation of these offices, the employment of the necessary assistants, and the compensation to be paid to them, as well as the specific funds out of which such payments are to be made, violate that provision of our state Constitution which provides that every statute shall embrace but one object, which object shall be expressed in the title.

[1] Counsel is clearly in error in asserting that power was granted to sheriffs, county clerks, and county registers, in counties of the first class, to employ deputies and assistants, by the amendment of 1917. That power was granted by the original act of 1898, as is shown by the recitals therefrom already set forth. So, too, the provision relating to the compensation of such employés is contained in the primary statute. This, however, seems not important, for, in determining whether an amendment or a supplement to an existing statute violates constitutional provisions, the amendment or supplement is not to be examined as an independent enactment, but is to be considered in connection with, and as a part of, the statute upon which it is ingrafted; and if the amendment, or the supplement, does not operate to render the statute, in its altered form, unconstitutional, it is valid legislation. Central R. R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 75 N. J. Law, 120, 67 Atl. 672.

Looking at the legislation now under consideration, in its present shape, the fundamental purpose exhibited therein is to compel the several incumbents of the enumerated offices to so conduct the business thereof that the expenses of operation shall not be larger than the receipts; in other words, that the compensation paid to the incumbent and his subordinates shall not exceed the fees and emoluments paid in to him. What the causes were which brought about the enactment we do not judicially know, although it seems quite probable that the Legislature was unable to perceive any good reason why the receipts of these designated offices, which, ever since the adoption of the Constitution of 1844, and up to 1898, had been ample to meet all expenditures, and to fully compensate the incumbents as well (for it is not publicly known that any of the incumbents during that period were unwillingly forced into offices which they did not desire to hold because of the lack of compensation), should suddenly, after the adoption of the act of 1898, become insufficient for the purpose. Certainly a change in the amount of the business does not explain it; for, as the volume of business increases, the amount of the receipts increases correspondingly, and, when the volume decreases, necessary expenses decrease in a like proportion.

[2] This is not a matter, however, with which we are concerned. The question before us is whether the legislative purpose is expressed in the title of the act, and whether it is single. The title has already been recited. It declares that the legislation relates to the fees of certain enumerated officers in first-class counties. The words in the last clause of the title, "and providing salaries for such officers," neither indicate an additional purpose, nor do they limit or expand that already expressed. The salary of the incumbent, and the compensation to be paid to his assistants, are not foreign to the object expressed in the words "an act respecting the fees of," etc, for it is expressly declared in the body of the act that these fees are to be paid into the county treasury, there to be kept in a separate fund, and to be applied from time to time (as may be necessary) to the payment of the specified expenses. On the contrary, they are manifestly cognate to it, and therefore were not required to be expressly mentioned in the title. Quigley v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 80 N. J. Law, 486, 492, 79 Atl. 458, and cases cited.

[3] It may be, as counsel contends, that the provision in the body of the act conferring upon the incumbents power to appoint deputies and assistants is not expressed in the title. But this is unimportant. The act merely affirms the existence of a power that had already been granted by earlier statutes, and its excision would still leave the legislation intact. Exception the respect just indicated the legislation, as it now stands, embraces a single object, and that object is expressed in the title. The relator, therefore, can take nothing by this particular attack upon its constitutionality.

[4] It is further argued that the amendment and the supplement of 1917 violate that provision of the Constitution which forbids the passing of any local or special law regulating the internal affairs of counties. We consider, however, that this question is not an open one. In the case of Board of Freeholders of Hudson County v. Clarke, 65 N. J. Law, p. 271, 47 Atl. 478, the Court of Errors and Appeals declared that the statute of 1896 properly classified counties having a population exceeding 150,000, viz., Hudson and Essex, for the purpose of regulating their internal affairs, and that the fact that the statute applied to these two counties only did not constitute it a local or special law. It being settled, then, that an act which provides for the payment of salaries of certain specified officers in counties of the first class, and the employment of the necessary assistants to transact the business of their offices, and the payment of such assistants for their services, is general in its character, it necessarily follows, we think, that legislation placing a limitation upon the expenditures to be incurred in the running of such offices, and creating a fund out of which those expenses shall be paid, is also general.

[5] It is further argued that the act violates the constitutional provision which prohibits the passing of special or local law decreasing the percentage or allowance of public officers during the term for which said public officers were elected or appointed. Article 4, § 7, par. 11, of the Constitution. What we have already said is dispositive of this contention, for the Constitution does not prohibit a decrease in the salary of a public officer during his term, but only the passing of a special or local law which has that effect. The present legislation being, as we have already declared, general, and not special, the constitutional provision relied on has not been disregarded thereby. We may add that we are not able to appreciate the contention that the effect of this legislation is to decrease the salary of Mr. McMahon. His salary remains intact. He is only required to so operate his office that the expenses incurred therefore shall be kept within the fund appropriated to meet them.

[6] The last contention made on behalf of the relator is that the defendants have no right to withhold the payment of the salary due on the 1st of December, 1917, "because they could not determine whether or not the salary of such register, together with the compensation of his deputies and assistants, would exceed the revenues of his office for a year." This proposition seems to us a conspicuous non sequitur. The sole fact to be ascertained by the fiscal officers of the county, when the demand for payment was made on December 1st, was whether there was then in the separate fund placed to the credit of the office of the register of deeds of the county sufficient money to make the payment. If there was not, then such payment could not be made without violating the supplement of 1917, which, by necessary implication, forbids the payment of the salary of the register out of any funds or moneys of the county, except the separate fund which is to be created by the reception of the fees and other emoluments paid into the register's office. If there are not sufficient moneys in the fund at the time when payment is demanded, then such payment cannot be presently made. Whether or not it can be made later will depend upon whether or not, at the end of the annual period for which the register is to be paid (or at any earlier date) there are sufficient moneys in the special fund to meet the demand of the register.

We conclude, for the reasons stated, that the demurrer should be overruled, and that judgment should be entered for the defendants.

(93 N. J. Law, 190)

OVERSEER OF POOR OF TOWN OF
MONTCLAIR et al. v. EASON.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BASTARDS ¶93—NEW TRIAL—ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

In a proceeding before a statutory tribunal, as in bastardy cases, when there is a trial de novo on appeal with jury before the court of common pleas or quarter sessions, and a verdict requiring the entry of an independent judgment by that court, its failure to enter such judgment will not work a reversal on certiorari, but the record will be remitted to it for the entry of such judgment as was required by law in accordance with the verdict.

2. BASTARDS ¶65—EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION.

In a bastardy case under our statute, it is not necessary, to a finding against the putative father, that the testimony of the mother of the bastard should be corroborated.

3. BASTARDS ¶19, 64—NATURE OF ACTION—BURDEN OF PROOF—CHARACTER EVIDENCE—"CIVIL PROCEEDING."

A bastardy case under our statute is not a criminal but a "civil proceeding." The burden of proof does not require proof of paternity beyond a reasonable doubt; and, while the incidental element of criminality involved in the paternity of an illegitimate child entitles the putative father to present evidence of good character, which the jury should consider in connection with the other evidence in the case, the defendant is not entitled to be absolved if the character evidence, either alone or in connection with the other evidence, raises no more than a reasonable doubt that he is the father of the bastard child.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Civil Proceedings.]

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Bastardy proceedings by the Overseer of the Poor of the Town of Montclair and others against Charles W. Eason. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William R. Wilson, of Elizabeth, for appellant. Hartshorne, Inley & Leake, of Jersey City, for appellees.

PARKER, J. This is a bastardy case. An order of filiation having been made by the recorder of Montclair, after the usual hearing and before birth of the child, there was an appeal to the Essex quarter sessions and a retrial with a jury. The child had then been born, and was exhibited to the jury; and, upon their finding that appellant was the father, the sessions gave judgment accordingly, and made an order providing, inter alia, that appellant enter into bond conditioned to obey the order of filiation made by the recorder. There was no new order of filiation in the sessions, and, the proceedings having been removed therefrom to the Supreme Court by certiorari, that court affirmed the judgment that appellant was the father, but held that it was the duty of the sessions to make its own order of filiation, and ordered the record remitted for that purpose. This action of the Supreme Court, and matters occurring at the trial in the sessions, are assigned for error.

[1] Taking up first the remission of the record by the Supreme Court, we think its action was clearly right. That a new order of filiation should be made in the sessions is settled. Hurff v. Overseer, etc., 38 N. J. Law, 287, and cases cited. In that case it was held that the matter must go back to the sessions for a retrial, but this was because there had been no jury in that court, and there was consequently no record of the facts found on which to base an order. 38 N. J. Law, 289. At the same time the practice, established in the earlier case of Doremus v. Howard, 23 N. J. Law, 390, of remitting a record which exhibited the verdict of a jury, for entry of a judgment in accordance therewith, was recognized in the Hurff case, and followed in the later decision of Mulcahy v. Traction Co., 57 N. J. Law, 345, 30 Atl. 472. The rule may therefore be considered as settled that when there is a trial de novo on appeal with jury in the court of common pleas or quarter sessions, and a verdict requiring the entry of an independent judgment by that court, its failure to enter such judgment will not work a reversal on certiorari, but the record will be remitted to it for the entry of such judgment as was required by law in accordance with the verdict.

[2] We proceed therefore to consider the alleged errors at the trial before the quarter sessions, as set forth in the appellant's brief—there was no oral argument. The first point made is that there was no corroboration of the testimony of the complaining witness, the mother of the bastard. There is some contrariety in the decisions of the various states on this point, due no doubt to variance in the respective statutes. The rule as stated in 7 C. J. 994, is that:

"In the absence of a statute requiring corroboration, the jury may find the defendant is the father of the child on the sole testimony of the mother, provided they believe it to be credible."

This seems to be the rule in Massachusetts (Noonan v. Brogan, 3 Allen [Mass.] 481), and Indiana (Evans v. State, 165 Ind. 369, 74 N. E. 244, 75 N. E. 651, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 619, 6 Ann. Cas. 813). The English statute was strict in requiring corroboration of the mother in some material particular (Reg. v. Read, 9 A. & E. 619), and consequently decisions thereunder are hardly relevant. Our own act contains no such requirement. C. S. 185, §§ 5, 6, and 187, § 14. The trial on appeal is conducted in the same manner as that before the magistrate, who, if no jury be demanded, shall "examine the mother of such bastard, or the woman so pregnant as aforesaid, on oath, in the presence of the person so charged, touching the father of such child, and shall hear any proofs that may be offered in relation thereto." Section 5. In jury cases the magistrate is to impanel and swear the jury, "and swear the witnesses produced to establish and rebut such accusation, and the said accusation shall thereupon be tried as in cases in courts of common law before such jury." Section 6. There is no intimation in our statute or decisions, pointed out by counsel or discovered by our examination, that the testimony of the mother, who is not merely a competent, but a required, witness, must not be evidential unless corroborated. We think the rule is otherwise.

But if the position taken by counsel were correct, it would not avail the appellant; for, apart from the fact that the point was not raised at the trial in any way, corroboration was supplied in the production of the child before the jury in the presence of appellant, with opportunity of inspection and a determination of resemblance. This was a proper means of proof. Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. Law, 490, 14 Atl. 600.

The next division of the brief, headed "Burden of Proof," points to no judicial action.

The third, fourth, and fifth points may be considered together. They amount to this: That no finding against appellant could be had unless he was shown to be the father beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the court refused to recognize this rule and charged counter to it; and that appellant was entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt engendered by evidence of good character given in his behalf. Four requests to charge were submitted and refused. The first is not now pressed; the last was covered in the charge. The other two are as follows:

"(2) That evidence of good character is not a mere make-weight thrown in to assist in the production of a result that would happen at all events, but is positive evidence, and may of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce an acquittal.

"(3) That evidence of good character may of itself produce a reasonable doubt where otherwise no reasonable doubt would exist."

[3] These requests are manifestly based on the theory that, unless appellant was shown beyond reasonable doubt to be the father of the bastard, no verdict of paternity should go against him. As has been stated, the court declined to recognize such a rule, and told the jury that they could find such a verdict if the town had sustained the burden of proving by a fair preponderance of the testimony that appellant was the father of the child. This instruction was correct. It may be conceded that bastardy proceedings are sometimes characterized as criminal or quasi criminal in character, but usually they are held to be in the nature of civil proceedings. The views in the various state jurisdictions, with authorities, will be found collected in 7 O. J. 906. In this state it seems to be settled that they are civil or at least quasi civil. In Hildreth v. Overseers, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 5, it was said by Chief Justice Ewing, that:

"An order of affiliation and maintenance is not for the punishment or prevention of crime, or for the reformation of morals, but to compel the * * * father to pay for the maintenance of his illegitimate offspring, and thus to protect the township from any charge for its support. The proceeding therefore is strictly of a civil nature."

The question under consideration was whether a commission to take testimony de bene esse could be issued in such a case, it being conceded that it could not, if the action were a criminal one. In the later case of Dally v. Overseers, 21 N. J. Law, 491, 494, the same court said it was in the nature of a civil action, but as it incidentally charged a criminal offense, the defendant was entitled to put in evidence of good moral character. Still later, in Leconey v. Overseer, 43 N. J. Law, 406, Mr. Justice (afterwards Chief Justice and Chancellor) Magie, said:

"The proceeding under the bastardy act, while of statutory character, intended to compel, in a summary way, the putative father to protect the public against the maintenance of his illegitimate children, is not a criminal, but a civil, action" (citing the foregoing cases).

In Schomp v. Tompkins, 46 N. J. Law, 608, Chief Justice Beasley speaking for this court, it was held that every intentment should be made in favor of the orders in bastardy proceedings, and that the judgment was to be treated as common-law judgment, to which the action "omnia præsumentur esse rite acta" is applicable.

The summary features of the procedure have been greatly mitigated by the Legislature, as will be seen from a comparison of the older and later acts. Elm. Dig. 39; R. S. 1847, p. 903; P. L. 1858, p. 467; Nix. Dig. 1868, 70-73; Rev. 1877, p. 70 et seq. In the present statute (section 6) it is provided that the jury is to be summoned as in a small cause court, which is a court of civil jurisdiction exclusively; that the same right of challenge to jurors shall exist as in civil cases at law; and in section 14 the act says that on appeal to the sessions the "burden of proof" shall be "upon the township as it was before the magistrate." These provisions are plainly consonant with the theory of a civil proceeding and that alone. If so, the doctrine of reasonable doubt does not apply, and the requests predicated thereon were properly refused.

The character evidence proffered by appellant was duly admitted, and the jury were properly charged to consider it with the other evidence in the case. Appellant was not entitled to more than that.

We find no error either in the Supreme Court or in the trial before the sessions, and the judgment brought up will accordingly be affirmed.

(39 N. J. Eq. 197)

TURNURE v. TURNURE.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

WILLS 684(10) — SPENDTHRIFT TRUST — DISCRETION OF TRUSTEE.

A testatrix gave certain lands to her executors, in trust to hold the same and pay the income to her son during his natural life, with remainder to his lawful issue, and in default to her daughter, the executrix of her will, subject to the condition that if her son should live to the age of 40 years, and at that time be not embarrassed with debt and competent to prudently manage his own affairs, of which her executor should be the sole judge, then she was authorized and empowered to convey the property to the son. When the son reached that age he applied for the conveyance and the executor, or trustee, refused upon the ground that he was not then competent to manage his own affairs. Held, that her determination of the question was final if the judgment exercised by her was sound and honest, and that, under the proofs submitted, the exercise of her discretion that the son had not become competent to prudently manage his own affairs, was not unsound, or exercised for selfish and improper motives.

Kalisch, Black, and Gardner, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Suit by H. Riker Turnure against Julia Turnure, individually and as executrix of the will of Mary J. Turnure, deceased. From a decree for complainant advised by the advisory master, defendant appeals. Reversed, and bill dismissed.

James S. Erwin, M. T. Rosenberg, and James F. Fielder, all of Jersey City, for appellant. David D. Ackerman, of Closter, for appellee.

BERGEN, J. The complainant filed this bill to compel Julia Turnure, Charles P. Buckley, and William W. Buckley, as executors of the will of Mary J. Turnure, and Julia Turnure individually, to execute a trust contained in the will of Mary J. Turnure. The testatrix devised, among other lands and personal estate, two parcels of land, sufficiently described for the purposes of this suit as the "Closter farm" and "Tenafly residence," to her executors, in trust to permit her son, the complainant, during his life, or so long as he chose to do so, to occupy the same, or, if he ceased to reside there, then to let the property and pay the rent to him during life, and thereafter to convey it to his descendants, or in default to Julia, or her heirs, if she be not living. The will further provided that if her son should live to be 40 years of age, "and at that time shall not be embarrassed with debt, and competent to prudently manage his own affairs, of which my executors or the survivors of them shall be the sole judges," then they were authorized to convey to the son these lands and other property, and the trust should be terminated. Julia Turnure was named as executrix, and Charles P. Buckley and William W. Buckley to succeed her as executors after her death. She proved the will, qualified as executrix, and is still alive; so that neither of the other nominees have been required or authorized to qualify.

The will further empowers the executors to sell the real estate during the lifetime of her son, or during the minority of any of his descendants, and to invest the proceeds of such sale, which are to be held under the same trust as the land, with the proviso that no sale thereof shall be made while the son resides on the farm without his written consent. The son, claiming to have attained the age of 40 years, not being embarrassed with debt, and competent to prudently manage his own affairs, applied to the executrix and trustee to convey to him the land in controversy, which she refused to do, and thereupon this bill was filed to compel the conveyance, and the advisory master, to whom the case was referred by the Chancellor for his advice, found that the defendant, in refusing to execute the deed to her brother, exercised a discretion confided in her, for selfish and improper motives and mala fide, and advised a decree that she make the conveyance, from which she has appealed.

The latest deliverance by this court on the legal aspect of the right of a court of equity to compel a trustee to exercise a discretion favorable to the cestui que trust, is to be found in O'Gorman v. Crowley, 81 N. J. Eq. 520, 86 Atl. 442, where the execution of the trust was authorized whenever, in the opinion of the executrix, the mental and physical condition of the legatee was such that he was competent to attend to his affairs, without the additional words, as in this case, "of which my executors or the survivors of them shall be the sole judges." In that case this court said:

"Whether the son's mental and physical condition should improve to the extent indicated was a matter which required an exercise of judgment on the part of some one. The testator, as he had a right to do, selected the executors named in his will as the persons who should exercise that judgment. Their determination of that question was final if the judgment exercised by them was a sound and honest one."

Therefore in the case under consideration the only question remaining is whether the advisory master properly determined the facts to which this rule of law should be applied.

At the time of the mother's death the defendant was living with her brother on the farm, and within a few months thereafter he married and brought his wife Ida Turnure, to the farm, and shortly thereafter the defendant left her brother's residence and since that time has resided elsewhere. The executrix settled her account in the orphans' court as executrix and also filed an intermediate account of the rent from the Tenafly house and of other property held in trust, and no dispute is raised as to the accounting.

The mother died November 24, 1901, and the will was dated October 4, 1898. In 1904, nearly three years after the mother's death, the complainant filed his petition with the orphans' court of Bergen county, praying the appointment of a suitable person, in the place of the defendant, Julia Turnure, "to execute the trust declared in the will," and on the 8th day of August, 1904, the orphans' court appointed William O. Herring in the place of Julia Turnure, she consenting thereto, to execute and complete the trust created and declared in the said will, which appointment was accepted by the appointee, who executed the trust until the 20th day of December, 1905, on which date the orphans' court discharged him from all further duties as trustee, and appointed Ida Turnure, the wife of the complainant, as trustee in his place. On the 9th day of December, 1916, Ida Turnure, "as substituted trustee," conveyed the lands in question to Ethel H. Cosgrove, the consideration stated being $25,000. The grantee was a stenographer in the office of the counsel of the complainant. She testified that she paid the consideration by a check on a bank, but that the money was given to her by the counsel who was making this transfer, from which it is quite apparent that the grantee paid nothing out of her own funds for the transfer to her, and her part in the transaction was that of a conduit to transfer the title, for on the same day she executed a deed for the same lands to the complainant and Ida, his wife.

Whether these conveyances passed the legal title to the complainant and his wife, in view of the fact that the power of sale contained in the will is given to the executrix, in the exercise of a special trust and confidence, the gift in the will being to them, or whether a substituted trustee, who was not appointed executor, could convey the legal title, it is not necessary to determine. What the parties have attempted to do is, not to transfer the title to the son as directed by the will, but to the son and his wife, so that if the conveyance be good the son's ultimate acquisition of the entire title to the property depends upon his surviving his wife. When this will was made the son was about 23 years of age, and it is quite apparent from the testimony, and the act of the testatrix in putting this land in trust for the use of her son, she did not then consider him a competent person to prudently manage his own affairs, and it was also apparent that, not having changed her will in the meantime, she continued of the same opinion until her death, and that it was her intention to provide a trust fund for the maintenance of her son during his life which he should not be able to dissipate.

It is not necessary in this opinion to repeat the testimony, but we are quite satisfied from it that the conduct of the son up to the time of his mother's death justified her apprehension that he was not then competent to manage his own affairs with prudence, and for that reason she intended to leave his share of her property in such a condition as to provide him a maintenance during life. What the son is undertaking to do, possibly under the influence of his wife, is immediately to put one-half of his property beyond his control, and perhaps deprive his children, if he should have any, of their reversionary right under the will, and, if he leave no children, to pass the estate out of the blood of the testatrix. There is not a particle of evidence in the case which would justify any inference that the habits or prudence of the complainant is any different from what it was when his mother died; on the contrary, an inference is permissible that his wife is the stronger character of the two, and that she has induced him to join in a scheme to presently deprive himself of one-half of the property, and possibly the whole.

We do not think that, with these conditions present, the defendant's exercise of her discretion not to convey, she being made sole judge whether she should or not, was unsound or dishonest; for, as was said in O'Gorman v. Crowley, supra:

"The fact that the judgment of others upon the question of the mental and physical condition of the son differed from that of the executors is quite immaterial, for it was not upon their judgment, but upon that of the executors, that the testator saw fit to rely."

In addition to the fact that, apparently, the ability of the son to act with prudence as to his property has not been altered since his mother's death, which would be a strong reason why the defendant should preserve the property for the use of the son as his mother intended, is the additional one that his present intention as to the disposition of the property, contrary to the manifest wish of the mother to protect him against just such acts, is a strong indication that he is not yet qualified "to prudently manage his own affairs." We do not think that the advisory master was justified by the proofs in the case in finding that the defendant refused to exercise her discretion, as committed to her by the will, "for selfish and improper motives and mala fide."

The fact that if, in case the complainant should die without issue, the defendant or her heirs will take the property, is not of itself sufficient to sustain a charge of unsound or dishonest motive, for the discretion was committed to her by the mother with full knowledge of all the circumstances. She trusted the defendant to see that the property was held for the benefit of her son, and to prevent its being taken from him unless she, the defendant, was satisfied that he had so improved as to manage it prudently. She had confidence in her daughter, and made her the sole judge, and that confidence ought not to be usurped by the court, unless the evidence preponderantly shows that it is being abused. This case is almost, if not entirely, a question of fact, and we conclude that under the testimony the daughter is acting in good faith and not mala fide.

The decree below will be reversed, and the bill dismissed, with costs.

KALISCH, BLACK, and GARDNER, JJ., dissent.

(39 N. J. Eq. 168)

In re ROEBLING'S ESTATE.

(Prerogative Court of New Jersey. June 21, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

TAXATION \S 895(7)—TRANSFER INHERITANCE TAXES—FEDERAL DUTIES—DEDUCTIONS.

The death duty imposed by War Revenue Act Sept. 8, 1916, is a tax upon decedents' estates, and in assessing the state transfer inheritance tax is to be deducted from the value of the estate, in ascertaining the clear market value of the property transferred.

Proceeding to assess the transfer inheritance tax on the estate of Ferdinand W. Roebling, deceased. Appeal from assessment of the Comptroller of the Treasury. Assessment reduced.

Scott Scammell, of Trenton, for appellants. Herbert W. Boggs, Asst. Atty. Gen., of Newark, for the State.

BAOKES, Vice Ordinary. The problem presented on this appeal is whether the death duty imposed by the War Revenue Act of Congress approved September 8, 1916 (39 Stat. 756, 777, c. 463), is to be deducted from the value of the estates of decedents, in assessing the transfer inheritance tax of 1909. P. L. 1909, p. 325, as amended in 1914 (P. L. 267). Ferdinand W. Roebling, a resident of Trenton, died March 16, 1917, testate, leaving an estate appraised, for taxing purposes, at $10,000,000 plus. The federal tax amounts to over $1,000,000, and the question is whether this sum should have been deducted from the appraisal, and the state tax levied on the transfer of the remaining $9,000,000. The Comptroller of the Treasury refused to grant the allowance, and this appeal is from his ruling.

The point does not involve the power of Congress to levy the tax, nor is the question one of precedence as between the two governments, nor yet whether a double tax is lawful; but the decision turns upon the nature of the tax levied by the national government, and the construction to be given to the state statute in respect of it. The power of Congress to levy death duties, and the constitutionality of such legislation, was settled by the United States Supreme Court in the cases of Scholey v. Rew, 90 U. S. 831, 23 L. Ed. 99, and Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969. In the elaborate opinion of Mr. Justice White in the last-named case, the history of death duties and their fundamental basis are interestingly and instructively discussed. There the learned present Chief Justice declared that, although different modes of assessing such duties prevail, nevertheless tax laws of this nature in all countries rest in their essence upon the principle that death is the generating source from which the particular taxing power takes its being, and that it is the power to transmit, or the transmission from the dead to the living, on which such taxes are more immediately rested; that all courts and all governments concede that the transmission of property, occasioned by death, is a usual subject of taxation; and that, while the transmission of property by death is exclusively subject to the regulating authority of the several states, the thing forming the universal subject of taxation, upon which inheritance and legacy taxes rest, is the transmission or receipt of property, occasioned by death, and not the right to regulate its devolution. In advertent to the view, commonly accepted, that the tax rests on the privilege enjoyed by states to regulate succession, he indicated that the doctrine of taxation upon the privileges, as adopted by the courts, is merely a qualification of the fundamental right to levy duties upon the power to transmit or the transmission or the receipt of property by death, and is in harmony with the principle he laid down, and subordinately affords a legitimate and defensible basis of taxation. That both state and nation have the right to levy, at the same time, the same class of death duties—double taxation—is also settled by Knowlton v. Moore, supra; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439; Hopper v. Edwards, 88 N. J. Law, 471, 96 Atl. 667.

This brings us, then, to inquire into the character of the tax levied under the federal statute. Section 201 of the act of Congress provides that:

"A tax (hereinafter in this title referred to as the tax), equal to the following percentages of the value of the net estate to be determined as provided in section two hundred and three, is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act, whether a resident or non-resident of the United States." U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 6336½b.

Then follows a graduated increase of percentage upon increased amounts of the net estate up to "ten per centum of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $5,000,000." The net estate is to be determined by deducting from the gross estate funeral and administration expenses, debts, certain losses incurred during the settlement of the estate, and such other charges against the estate as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction under which the estate is being administered, and a flat exemption of $50,000. The subtitle of the act, "Estate Tax," is significantly descriptive, and a persuasive indication, of the class of death duties Congress was dealing with, and upon looking into the 12 sections comprising the legislation all doubt vanishes regarding the particular transfer upon which the tax is imposed.

The value of the net estate is the unit of taxation. This includes the real estate devised or descending, as well as the personal property passing to the executor. A return, in duplicate, under oath, is to be made by the executor of the value of the gross estate, of the deductions, of the value of the net estate, and of the tax payable thereon. The tax is to be paid by him out of the personal estate before distribution, and a receipt for it entitled him to credit and allowance therefor upon the settlement of his account. There is no apportionment of it among the various transferees, nor is the real estate, devised or descending, liable to contribution. On the contrary, the collector may recover the tax by a sale of the land, and in that event the devisee, or heir at law, shall be reimbursed out of any part of the personal estate unadministered, or by an equitable contribution by those whose interest is subject to equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate. The concluding words of section 208 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 6336½i), "It being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution," are unmistakable in their purport that the death duty is imposed upon the estate and payable out of the residue. To be more precise, it is imposed upon the estate transferred by death, and not upon the succession resulting from death. The distinction is well defined and recognized in countries where both kinds of tax exist. The federal tax resembles the probate duty of act July 1, 1862, c. 119, 12 U. S. Stat. p. 483, which was payable by the executor out of the estate, while the legacy duty therein provided for (page 485) was payable by the beneficiaries. The tax occupies the same field of death duty as does the "estate tax" in England.

By the Finance Act of 1894 (P. L. p. 818) an estate duty is levied upon the principal value of all property real or personal, which passes on the death of a person, and is imposed upon the estate, and is payable by the executor as an administration expense. In addition to this tax, there is also a legacy tax, and a succession duty upon the realty, payable by the recipients. Speaking of the death duty, Mr. Hanson, in his opening chapter (Hanson's Death Duties, 6th Ed.), says:

"The new duty imposed by the Finance Act, 1894, and called estate duty, supersedes probate duty; but the key to the construction of the Finance Act, 1894, and the amending acts, lies in remembering that the new estate duty, although it is leviable on property which was left untouched by probate duty, such as real estate, yet is in substance of the same nature as the old probate duty. What it taxes is, not the interest to which some person succeeds on a death, but the property in respect of which an interest ceased by reason of the death. Unless this principle is clearly kept in view, the mind is constantly tempted by the wording of the act to revert to principles of succession duty, which have no real connection with the subject."

The specie of death duty of the federal tax determined, we come next to consider the character and scope of the Transfer Inheritance Tax Act and its application to situations like the present one. The part with which we are concerned reads:

"1. A tax shall be and is hereby imposed upon the transfer of any property, real or personal, of the value of five hundred dollars or over, or of any interest therein or income therefrom, in trust or otherwise, to persons or corporations, except as hereinafter provided, in the following cases: When the transfer is by will or by the intestate laws of this state from any person dying, seized or possessed of the property while a resident of the state. All taxes imposed by this act shall be at the rate of five per centum upon the clear market value of such property," except as hereinafter provided.

The tax, it will be observed, is not imposed upon the immediate transfer of property occasioned by death, but upon the transfer to any person or corporation, when the transfer is the subject of a legacy or devise, of distribution or descent. In other words, it is not on the transitory succession of the executor or administrator, but upon the separate successions of the transferees, whether the succession be of the whole of the estate—a universal succession—or of the singular succession of a legatee or devisee. It is not on the amount that goes into their pockets, but upon the clear market value of the estate transferred to them, at the decedent's death, by the instrumentalities enumerated in the act. The tax is not upon the aggregate value of the estate transferred, apportioned among the transferees, but is assessed upon the value of the several interests, and is levied upon kindred at varying rates, depending upon the relationship of the transferees to the decedent. Each transferee is liable for the tax upon his share of the estate, which is to be deducted from the legacies or distributive shares, by the executor, and for the payment of which he is personally liable.

The settled construction of the act is that it imposes a tax upon the right of succession to the property of the testator or intestate which vested in the successors severally and in their respective shares or proportions, and not upon the property or estate of the decedent. Matter of Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 327, 88 N. E. 311; Matter of Westurn, 152 N. Y. 93, 46 N. E. 315; Matter of Gihon, 160 N. Y. 443, 62 N. E. 561; In re Sherman Estate, 179 App. Div. 497, 166 N. Y. Supp. 19, affirmed 222 N. Y. 540, 118 N. E. 1078; Dixon v. Russell, 79 N. J. Law, 490, 78 Atl. 982; Carr v. Edwards, 84 N. J. Law, 667, 87 Atl. 132; Christie's Estate, 87 N. J. Eq. 303, 101 Atl. 64.

Conceiving, then, the state of the law to be that the federal tax is imposed upon the estate, and that the transfer inheritance tax is levied upon the succession, it becomes at once apparent that the clear market value of the property transferred from the dead to the living is the value of the estate after all lawful charges against it, including taxes, are satisfied. In the case in hand, the beneficiaries succeeded to $9,000,000, and upon this sum, as apportioned by the testator, the state tax should have been assessed. While the practical result is a financial loss to the state, it is not brought about by an assumed supremacy in the United States; nor is the exercise of the taxing power by the national government an interference with state rights, as some judges have intimated. The statutes do not clash, albeit the operation of the federal act effects a reduction of the state ratable. They function in entirely different taxing zones. Relief lies in appropriate legislation. It is undoubtedly within the power of the Legislature to impose an estate death duty, coextensive with the federal act, a tax on the power to transfer at death, for instance, and which may coexist with the Transfer Inheritance Tax Act, which, as we have seen, levies on the power to receive at death.

The highest courts in two of the states have recently decided the question, reaching opposite conclusions. The Minnesota Supreme Court held that the federal tax should be deducted. State v. Probate Court of Hennepin County (Minn.) 166 N. W. 125. The Court of Appeals of New York held to the contrary view. In re Sherman Estate, supra. The New York Supreme Court allows that its transfer tax is based upon the amounts passing to the respective transferees, but holds to the view that the conditions of transfer, as embodied in its Transfer Tax Act, comprehend the clear market value of the property at the time of the transfer, exclusive of federal tax, and expressed the opinion that if the federal government may impose an inheritance tax, which is entitled to be deducted from the estate prior to the assessment of the estate transfer tax, it has interfered with such conditions, and that the constitutionality of a federal act entitled to such a construction and effect might well be doubted. If the court had acknowledged the federal tax as levied upon the estate transferred, doubtless a different result would have been reached.

In the earlier case, Matter of Gihon, supra, the Court of Appeals had before it the question whether the federal legacy tax of 1898 should be allowed as a deduction, and it held, and I quote from the Sherman Case:

"Neither the amount of the state tax, nor the amount of the federal inheritance tax imposed under the War Revenue Act of 1898, was deductible, because each was a tax, not upon property, but upon succession—that is, a tax on a legatee for the privilege of succeeding to the property—and was payable out of his legacy, not out of the estate"

—a tacit evincement that if the federal tax had been upon the estate, and not upon the legacies, it would have been deductible from the assets of the estate before computing the state transfer tax. Previous to the decision in the Gihon Case, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in Hooper v. Shaw, 176 Mass. 190, 57 N. E. 361, decided that the legacy tax of the War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 448, should be deducted in ascertaining the state's succession tax. In view of the fact that both federal and state taxes were imposed upon the same successions and were payable by the beneficiaries, it is difficult to reconcile the deliverance in that case to the principles of the Gihon Case.

The appraisalment upon which the tax was assessed will be reduced by the sum of the federal tax.

P. S.—Since writing the above, my attention has been called to the case of Corbin v. Townshend, 103 Atl. 647, in which the Supreme Court of Connecticut decided that the federal tax is to be deducted from the appraisalment in computing the state's succession tax.

(30 N. J. Eq. 171)

In re PIERCE'S ESTATE

(Prerogative Court of New Jersey. June 21, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

TAXATION §900(1, 5)—INHERITANCE TAXES
—APPRAISEMENT—APPEAL.

On appeal from an assessment of inheritance tax, testimony will not be let in to revise the appraisalment. Motion for that purpose may be made to the comptroller, and from his refusal an appeal lies.

In the matter of the assessment of an inheritance tax against the estate of John P. Pierce, deceased. On appeal from assessment. Assessment corrected.

Gilbert Collins and J. Stanley Griffin, both of Jersey City, for appellants. Herbert W. Boggs, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BACKES, Vice Ordinary. This appeal is from an assessment of an inheritance tax upon the succession of a foreign decedent's estate, and in respect of so much as attacks the refusal of reduction in the appraisal to the extent of the federal war tax under Act Sept. 8, 1916, c. 463, § 201, 39 Stat. 777 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 6336½b) amended March 3, 1917 (39 Stat. 1002, c. 159), is controlled by Estate of Ferdinand W. Roebbling, 104 Atl. 295, and the deduction will be allowed.

An appeal was also taken from an appraisalment at $280 per share of 15,961 shares of the common capital stock of the American Radiator Company, on the ground that it was excessive. At the hearing on the appeal, testimony was offered of elements of value which had not been previously submitted to the Comptroller, and thereupon the assessment was remanded for further consideration by him. The additional factors moved the Comptroller to reduce the appraisalment to $260 per share and to revise the assessment accordingly, and by agreement the appeal stands against the assessment as revised.

It is not the duty nor the privilege of this court, on appeal, to weigh the evidence, or to substitute its judgment as to values for that of the Comptroller, and assessments will be upheld, if legal principles have been correctly applied and the appraisalment is supported by the evidence. The presumption is in favor of the correctness of the assessment, and the burden is upon the appellant to point out and establish wherein it is wrong, and as the valuation, fixed by the Comptroller, is amply sustained by the proofs, it is affirmed.

The practice which has grown up of introducing testimony, on appeal, on questions of values, is indefensible, and unfair to the Comptroller. Jurisdiction is broadly conferred upon the court "to hear and determine all questions in relation to any tax levied under the provisions of this act," but it certainly was not the intention of the Legislature to burden the court with the labor of appraising estates de novo. That function is committed to the Comptroller, and on appeal his judgment is to be reviewed in the light of the facts upon which it is founded. Hereafter appeals will be heard upon the record made before that official, and certified to the court. Applications to open and revise assessments, and for that purpose to let in additional testimony, will be made to the Comptroller, and from his refusal an appeal may be taken.

The assessment will be corrected as indicated.

(30 N. J. Eq. 170)

Appeal of TYLER

(Prerogative Court of New Jersey. June 21, 1918.)

TAXATION §895(7)—TRANSFER INHERITANCE TAXES—FEDERAL DUTIES—DEDUCTION—INTESTACY.

Proceeding to assess transfer inheritance tax on intestate estate is not distinguishable from proceeding in cases of testacy, on the ground that in intestacy the federal estate tax falls upon all the transferees uniformly, and not upon the residuary estate.

Proceeding to assess the transfer inheritance tax on the estate of Michael Allen, deceased. From the assessment of the Comptroller of the Treasury, Joseph Beck Tyler, administrator, appeals. Assessment reduced.

Joseph Beck Tyler, of Camden, in pro. per. Herbert W. Boggs, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BACKES, Vice Ordinary. Michael Allen, a resident of Woodstown, Salem county, died January 14, 1917, intestate, leaving a net estate for distribution of $300,000, in round figures, at which sum the Comptroller of the Treasury appraised the estate, and upon which he levied a transfer inheritance tax. The appellant, the administrator of the estate, claimed a reduction from the assessment to the amount of $5,217, paid by him to the United States government for "estate tax," which the Comptroller refused to allow, and from his ruling this appeal was taken.

The judgment is controlled by the decision in Estate of Ferdinand W. Roebbling, 104 Atl. 295. The case is not distinguishable, on the ground that in intestacy the federal estate tax falls upon all of the transferees uniformly, and not upon the residuary estate, as in cases of testacy. The same principles govern.

(21 N. J. Law, 58)

STATE v. AGNESI.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

1. HOMICIDE \S 112(1)—SELF-DEFENSE—NECESSITY.

The necessity for self-defense must not be of the slayer's own creation.

2. HOMICIDE \S 112(1)—SELF-DEFENSE—AGGRESSION.

While it is not the rule that an aggressor can never justify himself by acting in self-defense, prima facie it is his adversary who has that right.

3. HOMICIDE \S 110—SELF-DEFENSE—NATURE OF ATTACK—"DISORDERLY PERSON."

Where accused, living apart from his wife and knowing that she and decedent were occupying the same apartment, bought a revolver and at 1 o'clock at night quietly entered the apartment through a window, which he pried open, and roused deceased from sleep and shot him as he made a motion towards an axe, self-defense was not available to accused, since, under section 2 of the act concerning disorderly persons (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1947), he was such a person whom deceased had the right, under section 86 of the act (page 1987), to arrest without a warrant.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Disorderly Person.]

4. HOMICIDE \S 215(3) — DYING DECLARATIONS.

A signed declaration, made by a foreigner who spoke English imperfectly and taken down by a police magistrate, who was aided in understanding in part by an interpreter, was admissible, although subject to criticism as to its accuracy.

5. HOMICIDE \S 215(1)—DYING DECLARATIONS—IMPENDING DEATH.

That a dying declaration taken down by a police magistrate contained the magistrate's own statement tending to show declarant realized that death was impending did not vitiate the statement of declarant himself, although the remarks of the magistrate were no evidence of the fact.

6. CRIMINAL LAW \S 1158(4) — REVIEW — COURT FINDING—DYING DECLARATIONS.

Finding of trial judge as to dying declarant's realization of impending death is conclusive.

7. HOMICIDE \S 47—"MANSLAUGHTER"—SUDDEN PASSION.

The rule is not that homicide is always reduced to "manslaughter" when a husband kills the paramour of his wife in the act of adultery, but only when the circumstances are such that the husband may be supposed to have acted in a sudden transport of passion, or heat of blood upon a reasonable provocation, and without malice.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Manslaughter.]

8. HOMICIDE \S 40—"MANSLAUGHTER"—SUDDEN PASSION.

The provocation must be of such character and so close upon the act of killing that accused for the moment could be considered as not master of his own understanding, for, if such an interval of time elapses between the provocation and the act of killing as is reasonably sufficient for reason to resume its sway, the act is not mitigated to manslaughter.

9. HOMICIDE \S 213—DYING DECLARATIONS—RELIGIOUS BELIEF OF DECLARANT.

Dying declarations are not inadmissible without proof that declarant believed in a Supreme Being or in a future state of punishment and reward.

10. HOMICIDE \S 190(2) — EVIDENCE OF THREATS.

Evidence of deceased's threats was properly excluded, where accused armed himself and sought decedent notwithstanding his knowledge of the threats.

Salvatore Agnesi was convicted of crime, and appeals. Affirmed.

The prisoner was living in a state of separation from his wife under articles which provided that he would not sue, molest, disturb, or trouble any other person whomsoever for receiving, entertaining, or harboring her; that he would not without her consent visit her or knowingly enter any house or place where she should dwell, reside, or be, or send or cause to be sent any letter or message to her. The wife and the decedent, as the prisoner knew, were occupying the same apartments which had been rented by the wife. The prisoner says he was afraid of the decedent, who was known to him as a man of violence and had made threats to kill the prisoner. On a Saturday, the prisoner bought a revolver because, as he says, of the decedent's threats. The other essential facts are thus stated by the prisoner:

"Then on Monday night I again saw my wife. I used to see her almost every night, and then I thought that my wife wanted me, and I also wanted my wife back, because we were 22 years married and we have property together. I did not know myself what to do. Then on Tuesday I went to work again, always sick, I couldn't work. I couldn't rest, and I could not eat because I was always thinking about my wife and my son, and that me and my son did not have no home. On Tuesday I went to work again. On Tuesday night I came home at 6 o'clock. I couldn't eat when I got in the house, and then I went to a moving picture show, and I came home at 9 o'clock, and I sat on the stoop there smoking, and I had a watch and I looked at it, and it was 6 o'clock, and then after that I looked at the watch again, and I looked again. I laid down in the bed and could not get to sleep because I was always thinking of my wife and son. Then I got up again from the bed, and I started to smoke a pipe on the porch. Then I looked at the watch and it was 11 o'clock. Then I went back to bed and I couldn't sleep. I looked at the watch again and it was 12 o'clock. Then I laid down and couldn't get to sleep because I was always thinking about my wife and my son and I could not get to sleep. Then right away I thought what my son had told me, to go to his mother, and to talk to her and say to her that she should come back to me. I was afraid to go there that night because it was 12 o'clock and because I was afraid of Gallizio because he was always there in that house. Then I looked at the watch again and it was 1 o'clock in the morning. Then it came into my head again to go there, and I was afraid to go there; right away then it was 1 o'clock. I don't know. It must have been my Lord Jesus Christ or the Mother of the Lord that says to me, 'Go there, go there,' but I was afraid. It was raining very hard, and again it was in my head, 'Go, go.' All at once, I don't know if it was the devil or the Mother of God that said to me, 'Go, go,' and I took my coat and put it on and put on my shoes without lacing them, and I went. I had the revolver right here. I always carried a revolver because I was afraid of him, because he was going to kill me any place. As I got in the yard, because they lived in the rear, I took my shoes off. I then went into the yard in my stocking feet. Then I saw where the window was where they were living. Then I listened by the window to see if they were sleeping or not. And I took this putty knife and I went to the first window and tried to open it, and that was locked. Then I went to the second window and went this way with the putty knife. That window opened. The window opened, not much, but a little bit, a little bit at a time. Then I laid down this knife on the ground and I raised the window nice and easy a little bit at a time, and I had always had my ear to the window to listen, because if they were awake, why then they would have to cut my head off, see, because I cannot go in through the door, because the door was locked, and I went through the window. I went nice and easy. Then I put my foot into the house first, and then a hand, and I went in. It was dark. There was no light there. I saw a bed there. There was nobody in that bed, in the first room. * * * Then nice and easy I found my way out into the kitchen because the kitchen is near to this room, because I never was in that house. I never had been in there before, and I went nice and quietly looking for me way. Then I entered another room. I looked into the dark, and I saw a bed. I did not see anything. I looked and I did not see nothing, because it was dark in that room. Because I smoke and I carry matches in my pocket, I took out a match and lit a match. I lit a match and threw the light like this, and I held it up, and then I see Gaetano Galizio and my wife in bed. Gaetano Galizio in bed. He got up right away and he made a motion down this way to take a axe. As he raised the axe, of course I don't think, I don't think, I don't know what it is. I shoot, I don't know how many times, one, two, three, four, five times."

The trial judge charged that the defense of self-defense had no application to the facts of the case, and that the jury were not to consider it.

Argued February term, 1918, before SWAYZE, TRENOCHARD, and MINTURN, JJ.

Ward & McGinnis, of Paterson, for appellant. Michael Dunn, of Paterson, for the State.

SWAYZE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1-3] The principle on which the right of self-defense rests and the limitations of that right have been settled by the decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals in Brown v. State, 62 N. J. Law, 686, 702, 42 Atl. 811, 823. The court there said:

"The foundation of the right to take life by the way of self-defense is necessity. There must exist a necessity for resorting to violence for self-protection and necessity for using the means that were used to secure the defense of the person. An accused is justified in using force to defend his person only when force is necessary to accomplish that end. If the injury apprehended could be otherwise avoided, the prisoner was bound to avoid the danger without resorting to violence, and, even if the circumstances be such as to require the use of force to repel the assault, he will be inexcusable if he carried his defense beyond the bounds of necessity. The danger must be immediate, and must be actual or else apprehended on reasonable grounds, of which the jury is to judge."

Underlying this rule is the assumption that the necessity must not be of the defendant's own creation. It would be contrary to the fundamental principles of the law if a man could justify, what would otherwise subject him to legal liability, by his own act. The prisoner was under no necessity of breaking in the apartment occupied by Gallizio, and that in the dead of night, after assuring himself that Gallizio was asleep. Even if we assume in his favor that the apartment was rented by his wife, and that he had the right to break into that apartment at the hour he did notwithstanding his agreement not to enter any house or place where she should dwell, reside, or be, and if we assume further that he supposed Gallizio was there and might be caught in the act of adultery, he was under no necessity of breaking in as he did. He confessedly knew Gallizio's violent character and the threats made by Gallizio against his life, and the illicit relations with his wife. He must have known that his own appearance at that hour, armed with a revolver would provoke a combat. His entry at such a time, in such a manner, so armed, was in any aspect of the case an act of aggression. It would, of course, be too much to say that an aggressor can never justify himself by acting in self-defense, but prima facie it is his adversary who has that right. That is particularly so in a case like the present, where the situation was such that the decedent probably had the right to kill the prisoner. For it is well settled that a person under a reasonable apprehension of death or great bodily harm may kill his adversary in self-defense. This rule to which the prisoner himself appeals would have justified the decedent. A jury could hardly find otherwise than that the appearance of an armed man with whom he had had differences, in the bedroom of the deceased at that hour of the night and the rousing of the deceased from sleep, was a situation to cause a reasonable apprehension of death or great bodily harm and to justify him in slaying the prisoner. There were other circumstances which would have justified the deceased in arresting the prisoner. Section 2 of the act concerning disorderly persons enacts that any person who shall be apprehended having upon him or her any pick-lock, key, crow, jack, bit, or other implement with an intent to break and enter any building, shall be deemed and adjudged to be a disorderly person. The prisoner by his own evidence had a putty knife, adapted for prying up a window sash, and commonly used by glaziers for removing the putty that secures panes of glass in place. He had provided himself with it for the purpose of breaking in the apartments where the deceased was shot, and had actually used it for the purpose. He was clearly a "disorderly person" within the meaning of the act. Section 36 makes it the duty of police officers, and lawful for any other person, to apprehend without warrant or process any disorderly person, and take him before a magistrate. In Brown v. State, 62 N. J. Law, 686, at page 697, 42 Atl. 811, Justice Depue called attention to the importance of this statute, which the trial judge had excluded from the consideration of the jury, in order to say that it was not to be excluded. The court in that case was dealing with the justification of an officer, but under section 36 the right of any person is the same as the right of an officer; the difference between the two being that the officer is under a duty to make the arrest. The distinction between the right of an officer and the right of one not an officer to arrest in case of felony and misdemeanor, considered in the same case, has no application to the case of a disorderly person.

The situation then is this: The decedent had the right to slay in self-defense if in reasonable apprehension for his own life, as he must have been, and he had the right to arrest the prisoner as a disorderly person. Whatever he did by way of assaulting the prisoner would have been legal unless he used excessive force. The prisoner could not justify resistance to lawful force. In the Brown Case the court said:

"If the arrest was a lawful one, the officer had the right to use the force necessary to render the arrest effective, and if the prisoner, by his resistance to the arrest, brought violence upon himself, which put his body in danger, that cannot be made justification for killing the officer."

The basis of the rule is the lawfulness of the arrest, not the character of the person making it, and the same rule applies to a person other than an officer, when he has the lawful right to arrest. The only question then is whether there was any evidence that the decedent used excessive force. It would be superfluous to add anything on this subject, since the prisoner was armed with a deadly weapon effective at some distance, the decedent unarmed, except (if the prisoner is to be believed, as he must be for the present purpose) with an axe hastily seized as he woke from sleep. The prisoner neither said nor did anything to allay the apprehension which the decedent could not have avoided feeling, nor did he retreat as he might readily have done; he does not even say that the way by which he had entered was not open for retreat, and he had the advantage of a weapon which made it possible for him to "cover" his adversary. We think the trial judge was right in taking the question of self-defense from the jury. We have dealt with the question as presented by the charge rather than as presented by the rulings on evidence, for the reason that the remarks made by the judge on the original offer of evidence became harmless when the prisoner, the only possible witness, was subsequently permitted to tell his story in full without interruption.

[4-8] The judge allowed in evidence a dying declaration under circumstances that require some comment. The declaration was made by an Italian who spoke English imperfectly, and was taken down in narrative form by the police magistrate. The magistrate says:

"When I asked him questions he would say in English, some part of it I possibly did not understand, and I would have the same question repeated by De Luccia, who would explain to me in Italian what he said."

De Luccia was an interpreter, who was not produced as a witness at the trial. The statement as written out by the magistrate was signed by the deceased. A statement so taken is subject to criticism as to its accuracy, but we see no reason why it is not admissible. It is like any other signed statement when it is once established as a dying declaration. The fact that it also contained the magistrate's own statement tending to show that the declarant realized that death was impending does not vitiate the statement of the decedent himself. While these remarks of the magistrate were no evidence of the fact, that was established by proper evidence, and the finding of the trial judge on the point is conclusive. State v. Monich, 74 N. J. Law, 522, 64 Atl. 1016. Nor did the prisoner in fact suffer any manifest wrong or injury by the admission of the declaration. In material matters it agreed with the testimony of the prisoner, except in the statement that the prisoner's wife was in another room. This might have been harmful if the defendant was entitled to have the jury consider whether his offense was not reduced to manslaughter. But the rule is not that the offense is always reduced to manslaughter when a husband kills the paramour of his wife, in the act of adultery, but only when the circumstances are such that the husband may be supposed to have acted in a sudden transport of passion, or heat of blood upon a reasonable provocation, and without malice. The provocation must be of such a character and so close upon the act of killing that for the moment he could be considered as not master of his own understanding. If such an interval of time elapsed between the provocation and the act of killing as is reasonably sufficient for reason to resume its sway, the act is not mitigated to manslaughter. 1 Russell on Crimes, 786; Brown v. State, supra, 62 N. J. Law, at pages 710, 711, and 713, 42 Atl. 811. The rule is not applicable to a case like the present, where the husband kills the adulterer deliberately and upon revenge after the fact and sufficient cooling time. Russell, 724. In this case the defendant knew of the adulterous relations, as he says, between his wife and the decedent and, armed with a deadly weapon, was seeking him out in the hope and expectation of catching him in the act. Rules applicable to conduct due to a transport of passion cannot apply to so deliberate an act.

[9] The objection that there was no proof that the deceased believed in a Supreme Being or in a future state of punishment and reward is unsubstantial. The law is settled for us by what this court said in Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. Law, 601, 620.

[10] The evidence of threats, so far as it was excluded, was properly excluded; the prisoner sought the decedent notwithstanding his knowledge of the threats. In fact, he was allowed to testify to the threats himself.

The trial judge charged the jury that, if they took the prisoner's version of the case, they must find him guilty of manslaughter at least. This was favorable to the prisoner if self-defense was excluded. The prisoner's own claim was, either that he acted in self-defense, or in a transport of passion caused by finding the deceased in bed with the prisoner's wife. The first claim being inadmissible, the second only is to be considered, and that, on the prisoner's own claim, merely reduced the crime from murder to manslaughter. The judge might well have told the jury that under the circumstances of this case the grade of crime was not reduced to manslaughter.

Let the judgment be affirmed.

(21 N. J. Law, 481)

TRAPP v. BROWN.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 6, 1918.)

1. EXECUTION \Leftrightarrow 420 $\frac{1}{2}$, New, vol. 10 Key-No. Series—VACATING ORDER.

Where execution is returned unsatisfied and upon ex parte application of the judgment creditor one of the Justices of the Supreme Court makes an order, based on Act March 16, 1916 (P. L. p. 242), that execution shall issue against certain rents, due the judgment debtor, the order can be brought before the Supreme Court for review upon motion by judgment debtor to vacate it.

2. EXECUTION \Leftrightarrow 420 $\frac{1}{2}$, New, vol. 10 Key-No. Series—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Act March 16, 1916 (P. L. p. 242), authorizing issuing of execution by order of court or judge, when execution has been returned unsatisfied, upon application of judgment creditor without notice to judgment debtor, being in derogation of the procedure at common law, all proceedings thereunder must be in strict compliance with express statutory requirements, and no intendment will be made to enable the court or judge to assume jurisdiction, in the absence of jurisdictional facts properly evidenced.

3. EXECUTION \Leftrightarrow 420 $\frac{1}{2}$, New, vol. 10 Key-No. Series—PROCEEDINGS.

Under Act March 16, 1916 (P. L. p. 242), authorizing issuing of execution by order of court or judge, when execution has been returned unsatisfied against wages, debts, earnings, salary, income from trust funds, or profits due or owing to judgment debtor, a petition for an order for execution against certain rents is insufficient to authorize making of order, where petition does not show bona fide effort to collect by execution, or give reason why judgment cannot be satisfied by execution upon proper levy against building producing the rents.

4. EXECUTION \Leftrightarrow 359—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Act March 16, 1916 (P. L. p. 242), being an act pertaining to execution, will be construed in connection with other acts on subject of execution.

5. EXECUTION \Leftrightarrow 420 $\frac{1}{2}$, New, vol. 10 Key-No. Series—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Act March 16, 1916 (P. L. p. 242), authorizing issuing of execution "where wages, debts, earnings, salary, income from trust funds or profits are due and owing to the judgment debtor," does not authorize such order against rents.

Action by Susanna B. Trapp against Mildred J. Brown. Judgment for plaintiff, and upon the return of execution unsatisfied plaintiff petitioned for order that execution issue against certain rents. Order issued, and defendant moves to vacate the order. Vacated, and execution issued thereunder set aside.

Argued November term, 1917, before SWAYZE, TRENCHARD, and MINTURN, JJ.

Martin V. Bergen, of Camden, for plaintiff. Bourgeois & Coulomb, of Atlantic City, for defendant.

MINTURN, J. The plaintiff having obtained a judgment against defendant for $710 damages, besides costs, and having issued execution against the defendant, presented a petition to one of the Justices of this court, alleging the recovery of the judgment and the issuing of execution, which was returned unsatisfied. It further alleged that defendant is owner of a certain hotel property at Atlantic City, from which she receives at stated times the sum of $4,250 annually; that the installment of rent due June 15, 1917, has not been paid, and she prays for an order, directing the issuing of an execution against any sum in the hands of the agents collecting the rents due to defendant from the tenant in possession of the premises. The order was made that such an execution issue, and providing that it be levied against "the debts and rents now due or hereafter to become due" from the said property "to the full amount thereof, until the amount of said judgment, with costs of this motion to be taxed, are paid, and also against the debts, if any, due [by the real estate agents] to the defendant, to the full amount thereof until the amount of said judgment with costs are paid." Thereafter notice was given in behalf of defendant for a vacation of the order, which motion now presents the proceedings to this court.

[1] We think under Key v. Paul, 61 N. J. Law, 133, 38 Atl. 823, the matter is properly before us on this motion. The act which presents the basis for the proceeding is P. L. 1916, p. 242, c. 113, the title of which is anomalous. It provides (section 1) for the issuing of an execution, by order of a judge or court, upon an unsatisfied judgment, after the return of an execution unsatisfied, "where any wages, debts, earnings, salary, income from trust funds, or profits are due and owing to the judgment debtor," or "shall thereafter become due and owing to him to the amount of eighteen dollars or more per week."

[2] The act itself is in derogation of the procedure at common law, and takes from a debtor and his creditors, regardless of priorities, property in invitum, and without hearing or a notice thereof to creditors. The procedure therefore must be in strict compliance with the express requirements of the statute, and no intendment will be made to enable the court or a judge to assume jurisdiction, in the absence of the jurisdictional facts properly evidenced. Sinnickson v. Johnson, 17 N. J. Law, 129, 34 Am. Dec. 184; Eayre v. Earl, 8 N. J. Law, 359; Adler v. Turnbull Co., 57 N. J. Law, 62, 30 Atl. 319; Westfall v. Dunning, 50 N. J. Law, 459, 14 Atl. 486.

[3] It is doubtful, to say the least, whether the act in question was intended to apply to a situation such as is presented here. While the petition alleges the return of the execution unsatisfied, the inquiry nevertheless arises why, where the real estate from which this alleged revenue is derivable, is the property of the defendant, the writ of execution upon a proper levy should not produce the amount of the execution. No explanation of that jurisdictional fact is obtainable from the petition. So that upon its face the defendant is seised of real property which is subject to execution, and which, for some reason not explained by the record, is not subjected to a levy. The mere formality of issuing an execution and having it returned pro forma unsatisfied is not the jurisdictional fact which the statute requires as sine qua non to a resort to this exceptional method of procedure. There must appear from the petition, as a jurisdictional fact, that a bona fide effort to collect by execution had been made, and failed, before resort can be had to the provisions of this legislation. The petition in this instance leaves it inexplicable why a defendant, confessedly seised of a valuable parcel of real estate, at Atlantic City, from which an income of $4,250 annually is derived, should not, upon execution and levy thereunder, be forced to satisfy the judgment from the real estate.

[4] The act under consideration must, as an act dealing with a cognate subject, be construed in pari materia with other acts dealing with the subject of executions. Newark Bank v. Assessor, 30 N. J. Law, 13; Farrell v. State, 54 N. J. Law, 421, 24 Atl. 725. Therefore the proof required for the making of the order in question must, in the language of the act, be "satisfactory proof of such facts by affidavits or otherwise."

In Githens v. Mount, 64 N. J. Law, 166, 44 Atl. 851, this court held that to warrant the making of an order of this character, in proceedings supplementary to execution, the petition must be supported by legal evidence. The present Chief Justice, writing the opinion, says:

"The act requires proof of the facts upon which the application for the injunction is based, and 'proof,' when used in a legislative enactment, means legal evidence upon which judicial action may be rested."

The cogent force of this requirement becomes particularly apparent upon the meager facts presented by the petition, because while it becomes manifest that the defendant is the owner of property amply capable of satisfying an execution, for the amount involved, it is nowhere explained whether the property is incumbered, or what the equity of the defendant therein may be. Nor is it made apparent whether other and prior lienors to this judgment creditor may not be entitled to a preference over this plaintiff as to that particular fund. The result may be that upon a mere ex parte application of this nature, without notice or hearing to any party in interest, the vested rights of prior lienors may be eliminated and in effect subverted. In such a situation, a party whose interests would be injuriously affected might well insist that there was an absence of due process of law, and successfully invoke that provision of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution as a barrier to the deprivation of his rights. Coe v. Armour Fertilizer Works, 237 U. S. 413, 35 Sup. Ct. 625, 59 L. Ed. 1027. A proceeding in discovery in aid of execution in accordance with section 23 of the execution act (2 C. S. p. 2249) would obviate those contingencies and difficulties, and furnish the "satisfactory proofs" required by the act of 1916, as a basis for the order in question, in accordance with the determination in Githens v. Mount, supra.

[5] We think also that fundamentally the proceeding is not warranted by the provisions of the act of 1916. As has been observed, it specifies the character of income, an order may be issued to reach, as "wages, debts, earnings, salary, income from trust funds, or profits." This enumeration manifestly confines the assets-reachable by such process within a designation or classification which is limited to the personal earnings, trust funds, and profits of the debtor. In no part of the act does it refer to real estate of the debtor, or rents therefrom, which terms at all times have borne a distinctive legal status and characteristic, and have been subject to the application of different legal principles, from those rules applicable to personal property; for, notwithstanding judicial refinements and statutory innovations, the basic conceptions incident to jus in rem and jus in personam of the civil, feudal, and common law still subsist as the fundamental characteristics of jurisprudence. It will be presumed, therefore, that, where the Legislature in its enactment distinctly classifies one species of property, peculiarly personal to the debtor, and fails to enumerate another species, non ejusdem generis, and not distinctively personal to the debtor, its omission of the latter species was due to an intent to eliminate it from the purview of the act. Livermore v. Freeholders, 29 N. J. Law, 245.

A rule equally cogent since the days of Lord Hale, is that of "noscitur a sociis," which construes the specific language employed with reference to its subject associates, so that when a subject-matter of distinctive characteristics is specifically mentioned, to the exclusion of another species of equally well-defined characteristics, in the absence of some general provision sufficiently comprehensive to include it, the latter class will not be included in the generic designation. Hay v. Coventry, 8 T. R. 87; Corning v. McCullough, 1 N. Y. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 287.

For these reasons we have concluded that the petition is defective; that the rule granted must be vacated, and the execution issued thereunder be set aside, with costs.

(33 N. J. Law, 244)

MURPHY v. BOARD OF CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS OF HUDSON COUNTY.

(No. 61.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CERTIORARI \S 25—REMOVAL OF OFFICER.

A public officer in the occupation or possession of his office may maintain certiorari to remove from his way a proceeding, which he apprehends may be used unlawfully, to eject him or disturb him in the tenure of his office. Moore v. Borough of Bradley Beach, 87 N. J. Law, 391, 94 Atl. 816, followed and approved.

2. OFFICERS \S 69, 71—REMOVAL—AUTHORITY.

A county counsel, whose term of office is fixed by law, cannot be removed by a board of chosen freeholders in this state. There is no statute in New Jersey authorizing the board to make such a removal. A power of removal cannot be implied, as an incident to the power of appointment. No such power of removal exists, where the term of office is fixed by law, unless expressly given by the statute.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Certiorari by James J. Murphy against the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Hudson. From a dismissal of the writ (102 Atl. 896), the prosecutor appeals. Reversed.

Gilbert Collins, of Jersey City, for appellant. John J. Fallon, of Hoboken, for appellee.

BLACK, J. The board of chosen freeholders of Hudson county on the 7th day of January, 1918, by a resolution dismissed James J. Murphy, the prosecutor, as county counsel. The legality of this resolution is drawn in question by the certiorari issued out of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court dismissed the writ of certiorari. The prosecutor appeals to this court to review that judgment.

The resolution is in these words:

"Resolved that the services of James J. Murphy as county counsel be dispensed with from and after the passage of this resolution; and he is hereby relieved of further duties. Be it further resolved, that he be and he is hereby dismissed and deposed as such."

The record reveals these pertinent facts: Mr. Murphy was in the occupation or possession of the office of county counsel, under previous appointments, when on December 4, 1916, he was reappointed by the board, as then constituted, under the Act of P. L. 1900, p. 168, for the term prescribed by law, which under paragraph 11 was for a term of two years. He filed a bond as required by law. On January 7, 1918, at 11 o'clock in the morning of that day, he took, subscribed, and filed an official oath, as county counsel, as required by the act of Legislature, P. L. 1906, p. 13, c. 3. He did not file such oath before the commencement of his term of office, December 4, 1916. The resolution of dismissal was adopted some time after, but on the same day that the official oath was filed, without notice to or an opportunity by Mr. Murphy to be heard, and so far as the record discloses without cause, six members of the board who were in office when the prosecutor was appointed had retired, and six others, elected in their stead, participated in the meeting, at which the resolution of dismissal was adopted on January 7, 1918. There is no statute of this state authorizing a removal of an officer, whose term of office is fixed by law, by the board of chosen freeholders; although by the Act P. L. 1885, p. 185, 1 Comp. Sts. p. 504, par. 109, the board has power to remove from office any person who holds office, in subordination to or by appointment from such board, in all cases where the term of such office is not fixed by a statute of this state. But this statute is subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act, 3 Comp. Sts. of N. J. p. 3795, § 57, P. L. 1908, p. 235, which was adopted by the county of Hudson on November 7, 1911.

[1] At the outset a preliminary question is raised and argued, viz. whether a writ of certiorari is the proper remedy for the prosecutor to pursue. Our answer to this question is that it is the settled law and practice of the state to issue the writ of certiorari to review proceedings of this nature. In an opinion by Mr. Justice Parker, in the well-considered case of Moore v. Borough Bradley Beach, 87 N. J. Law, 291, 94 Atl. 316, following and approving Bradshaw v. City Counsel of Camden, 89 N. J. Law, 416, it was said that a public officer in possession of his office may maintain certiorari to remove from his way a proceeding, which he apprehends may be used unlawfully, to eject him or disturb him in the tenure of his office.

[2] This brings us to the meritorious question involved in this case, which is: Can a county counsel, whose term of office is fixed by law, be removed from office by a board of chosen freeholders in this state, in the absence of a statute authorizing such removal? Our answer to this question must be no, both on principle and authority. It is a well-established principle in the law of municipal corporations that they have only such powers of government as are expressly granted to them, or such as are necessary to carry into effect those that are granted. No powers can be implied, except such as are essential to the objects and purposes of the corporation, as created and established. Ottawa v. Carey 108 U. S. 121, 2 Sup. Ct. 361, 27 L. Ed. 669.

A power to remove officers having a fixed term is not incident to the power of appointment. People v. Healy, 231 Ill. 629, 83 N. E. 453. A power of removal is an incident to the power of appointment, only to those cases, where the officer is held at the pleasure of the appointing power. Collins v. Tracy, 38 Tex. 546. No such power of removal exists unless expressly given by the Legislature. Danforth v. Kuehn, 34 Wis. 229, 233. Removal of an officer of a municipal corporation appointed for a fixed term can be exercised legally only by virtue of express power. 2 McQuillan, Municp. Corp. par. 554, p. 1213. The Supreme Court of Michigan said: We have not found any case where an officer, who was appointed for a fixed term and when the power of removal was not expressly declared by law to be discretionary, has been held to be removed, except for cause, and, wherever cause must be assigned for the removal of the officer, he is entitled to notice and a chance to defend. Hallgren v. Campbell, 82 Mich. 255, 46 N. W. 381, 9 L. R. A. 408, 21 Am. St. Rep. 557.

This principle, as applied to the removal of public officers, has been discussed and recognized in a long line of cases; thus in our own courts: Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. Law, 69; State v. Pritchard, 36 N. J. Law, 101, 111; Haight v. Love, 39 N. J. Law, 14, 21, affirmed 39 N. J. Law, 476, 23 Am. Rep. 284. In other states: Townsend v. Kurtz, 83 Md. 331, 34 Atl. 1123; Fleld v. Malster, 88 Md. 691, 697, 41 Atl. 1087; State ex rel. Redfield v. Chatburn, 63 Iowa, 659, 19 N. W. 816, 50 Am. Rep. 760; Fleld v. Commonwealth, 32 Pa. 479; Page v. Hardin, 47 Ky. (8 B. Mon.) 648; Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 501, 4 S. E. 774 (in that case, however, it was said that the power to remove a corporate officer from his office is one of the common-law incidents of all corporations); Wright v. Gamble, 136 Ga. 376, 71 S. E. 795, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 372, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866, note; 11 Cyc. p. 428; 29 Cyc. p. 1409; Mechem. Pub. Officers, par. 454; 2 Dill on Municipal Corp. (5th Ed.) par. 473, p. 791.

Without extending this discussion, it may not be amiss to say that the resolution is particularly vicious in the present case, because it is based upon the assumed power of the board of chosen freeholders to dismiss a man from office who is apparently in the possession of it for a fixed term; and that without any charges laid against him, without any opportunity afforded to him to be heard, and without any suggestion of the basis upon which the action of the board was rested. As was said by Mr. Justice Van Syckel in the case of Clark v. Ennis, 45 N. J. Law, 69, 78:

"The necessity for the interposition of some tribunal to declare the default is inherent. * * * In the absence of statutory provision, the only mode in which an office can be deemed and taken to be vacant is by proceedings in the nature of quo warranto." Bumsted v. Blair, 73 N. J. Law, 378, 64 Atl. 691.

This renders a discussion of the other points argued unnecessary. The resolution of the 7th day of January, 1918, is set aside as null and void.

The judgment of the Supreme Court dismissing the writ of certiorari is reversed, with costs.

(92 N. J. Law, 135)

STATE v. SAMAHA.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. July 31, 1918.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES — 12 — ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—OWNERSHIP.

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, it is no defense that, as the pretenses as to value of a stone were made and acted upon, and the sale made on Sunday, title to the stone and to the money paid therefor did not pass, because the false pretense, and not the contract, is the basis of the prosecution, and actual ownership is immaterial.

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION §139 — MOTION—TIME.

Since the criminal procedure act requires motion directed against validity of the indictment to be made before the jury is sworn, such a motion, at the conclusion of prosecuting witness' testimony, is properly overruled.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §753(2)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT—VARIANCE.

Accused, if he desires to take advantage of a variance between the indictment and the proof, or of the insufficiency of the evidence, should do so by motion to direct verdict at the close of the state's case, or of the entire case.

4. FALSE PRETENSES §49(1) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of obtaining money by false pretenses.

5. CRIMINAL LAW §1056(1)—PRESERVATION OF EXCEPTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where no general exception nor exception to the portion of the charge complained of was taken, alleged error in the charge is not properly before the court on writ of error.

6. FALSE PRETENSES §52—INSTRUCTIONS.

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses in sale of "Kunzite" stone, aided by circular containing extracts from "Prof. Kuns's Book on Mineralogy," descriptive of the stone, where a witness testified that Prof. Kuns had written no such book, and accused's counsel admitted that the circular was not a copy, but a condensation, and accused's wife testified that she did not think the circular was copied from the book, accused was not entitled to instruction that there was no evidence on the subject of the circular.

7. CRIMINAL LAW §1173(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses in sale of "Kunzite" stone, aided by circular containing extracts from "Prof. Kuns's Book on Mineralogy," where a witness testified that Prof. Kuns had written no such book, and accused's counsel admitted that circular was not a copy, but a condensation, and accused's wife testified that she did not think the circular was copied from the book, accused was not harmed by refusal of instruction that "it was important for the state to show that the circular did not correspond with the book."

8. CRIMINAL LAW §1129(1) — ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

If accused desires to take advantage of the irregularity of the court's going to the jury room to instruct on reasonable doubt, he should make it the subject of an assignment of error.

9. CRIMINAL LAW §855(8) — CONDUCT OF COURT—GOING TO JURY ROOM.

It is highly improper and irregular for the judge, having omitted to charge upon reasonable doubt, to go into the jury room and give such a charge, notwithstanding it was favorable to defendant.

Error to Court of Quarter Sessions, Atlantic County.

Abraham Samaha was convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

John J. Orandall, of Atlantic City, for plaintiff in error. Charles S. Moore, of Atlantic City, for the State.

KALISCH, J. The judgment of the court below is before us on a strict writ of error and bills of exceptions. The defendant below was convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses upon an indictment based on section 186 of the Crimes Act (2 Comp. Stats. p. 1800), which statute provides as follows:

"Any person who, knowingly or designedly, by color of any false token, counterfeit letter or writing, or false pretense or pretenses, shall obtain from any person money, wares, merchandise goods or chattels, or other valuable thing with intent to cheat or defraud any person, body politic or corporate of the same shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

The transaction in which the alleged false pretense was made, by the defendant, occurred on a Sunday. The defendant kept posted a placard in the show window of his store, situate on the boardwalk, in Atlantic City, advertising the sale of Kunzite stones. According to the testimony a Kunzite is a natural stone, lilac in color, and is classed among the semiprecious stones. Its value varies in proportion to its brilliancy, ranging from $2 to $50 a carat. The prosecutor entered the defendant's store to make a purchase, and asked for a Kunzite stone. The defendant showed him a stone, and represented it to be a genuine Kunzite worth $2 a carat, and during the negotiations of sale handed the prosecutor a printed description of its qualities. The stone weighed one carat and a half, and the prosecutor relying upon the defendant's representations that it was genuine Kunzite and of the value of $2 a carat, bought it, and paid the defendant $3 therefore. The stone, subsequently, proved upon test, to be common glass, artificially made to represent Kunzite, and was worth only a few cents.

[1] First, it is argued that, the transaction between the parties having taken place on Sunday, "the defendant did not obtain title and proprietary right to the $3, and the complainant did not become the owner of the gem, and that, in order to constitute the offense of obtaining money or goods under false pretenses, it must appear that the complainant was induced to part with property, actual ownership," and that this does not appear. The fallacy of this proposition is manifest. "Actual ownership" of the money or goods by the person upon whom the cheat is practiced is not essential. It is sufficient if he had lawful possession and dominion of the same. If the cheat had occurred on Monday the legal title to the money or goods parted with would not have passed. The fact, therefore, of the cheat being perpetrated on Sunday adds no force to the situation.

The unsoundness of the position taken by counsel of plaintiff in error on the legal effect of the Sunday transaction upon the cheat which was the inducement to the sale is due, first, to the attempt to apply in a criminal prosecution legal rules, governing contracts made and completed on a Sunday, which are only applicable to civil actions inter partes; secondly, in assuming that the unlawful contract is the basis of the indictment, whereas the underlying foundation is the false pretense, with intent to cheat, and the carrying of that intent into execution which the Legislature has denounced as a misdemeanor, regardless of the day on which it takes place; thirdly, in utterly ignoring the prime fact that the offense committed is against the public, in the prosecution of which the state is the sole party in interest.

The second assignment of error is that the court ruled that the evidence of the complaining witness supported the indictment. The legal propriety of this ruling is assailed by counsel of defendant upon two grounds: (1) That the complaining witness did not testify that he relied on the statements of defendant that the stone was Kunzite; (2) that the witness did not testify that he relied upon the verity of the correspondence of the terms used in Exhibit S2, hereinafter referred to, with the language of any book whatever. An examination of the record shows that this assignment is not well founded. It appears from the record that, after the complaining witness had finished his testimony, counsel of defendant made the following statement:

"If your honor please, under the indictment, it shows that the thing that influenced him was the reason that the advertisement was not fulfilled; that the stone did not fulfill the description in the advertisement. Now the witness himself says that he was not influenced by it at all. (A colloquy then ensued between court and counsel, but it nowhere appears that any motion was pending before the court calling for a ruling.)

"The Court: I think, Mr. Crandall that the testimony so far is in accord with the indictment. I can't see that there is any difference.

"Mr. Crandall: But he don't say he was influenced by this at all, and the indictment says that was his sole influence. (Motion overruled.)"

[2, 3] To this an exception was sealed by the court. What the overruled motion was does not appear, except from the language used by the court that the objection to the indictment came too late. If it was the overruling of a motion directed against the validity of the indictment, the action of the trial judge in disposing of the motion was proper. The Criminal Procedure Act directs that such a motion must be made before the jury is sworn. If, on the other hand, the object of the motion was to take advantage of a variance between the proof and the allegations in the indictment, or because of the insufficiency of the proof to sustain the indictment, then the proper course to pursue was to move for a direction of a verdict for the defendant at the close of the state's or the entire case, upon the grounds specified. But, assuming that what was said by counsel during the colloquy with the court properly raised the question of the sufficiency and variance of the proof to sustain the indictment, and examination of the testimony shows that the motion was without merit, and hence was properly overruled.

[4] The indictment sets out three separate and distinct false pretenses, with intent to cheat, the proof of any one of which with the intent specified was sufficient to sustain the indictment and conviction thereon. The complaining witness testified that the defendant represented the stone to be Kunzite and of the value of $2 a carat, and tested the stone with acid in the presence of the witness, and, immediately after the test, made a remark to the witness to the effect that the stone showed the proper acid test, and when on cross-examination the witness was asked, "Well, then, the only thing that influenced you to part with your $8 was the representation that it was a Kunzite stone?" he replied, "Yes, and that—" In addition to the testimony of the complaining witness the state introduced ample testimony tending to establish a cheat perpetrated by the defendant.

[5] The third assignment of error challenges the legal propriety of a comment made by the trial judge in his charge to the jury, but, as there was no general exception taken to the charge, nor any exception taken to the portion of the charge complained of, as erroneous, the matter is not properly before us. We have, however, examined the portion of the charge complained of, and find no legal impropriety in what the court said regarding the interest the state had in prosecuting offenses of the kind alleged against the defendant.

The fourth assignment of error is based upon the refusal of the court to charge the following request:

"The court is asked to instruct the jury that it is important for the state to show that the bulletin in the indictment does not correspond with the text of the authority of the book that it was taken from. They have especially alleged that that is not like what the author authorized them to put in, and they have not introduced any evidence on that subject at all. Therefore I ask that the court will instruct the jury to that effect."

The bulletin referred to is the exhibit designated Exhibit S2, and was the circular handed to the complaining witness while purchasing the stone. This circular contained a caption, as follows: "Copied from Prof. Kunz's Book on Mineralogy." Then followed a florid description of the qualities of the Kunzite. A witness for the state testified that there was no work on mineralogy by Prof. Kunz. There appears to a work by Prof. Kunz on "Curious Lore of Precious Stones." Counsel for defendant claimed to have such a book in his possession at the trial, but when challenged by the prosecutor of the pleas to point out the page in the book from which the bulletin was copied, he conceded that the circular was not an exact copy, but was condensed and diluted. All this took place while the defendant's wife was on the witness stand, and she testified that she did not think the circular was copied from the book. It further appears that the court refused to receive the book in evidence upon two grounds: First, that it was not a work on mineralogy, and therefore not the book from which the circular alleges it was copied; and, second, because there is no such matter in the book as is contained in the circular. Although counsel of defendant took an exception to the ruling of the court, no error was assigned upon this exception.

[8-9] In this situation the defendant was not legally entitled to an instruction to the jury that there was no evidence at all before the court on the subject of the circular. Nor does it appear that the defendant sustained any harm from the refusal of the court to tell the jury "that it was important for the state to show that the bulletin in the indictment does not correspond with the text of the authority of the book it was taken from," in face of the admission of counsel that it did not correspond with the text of the book he had in his possession, and the testimony on part of the state that Prof. Kuns never wrote any book on mineralogy.

The fifth assignment of error has no exception to support it. There was no motion made to direct a verdict of acquittal upon the ground that the evidence did not tend to establish the offense charged in the indictment. The matter argued under this assignment, in the brief of counsel for defendant, relates to the following episode. After the jury retired from the bar, the court said:

"I have overlooked charging the jury on reasonable doubt. Shall I have the jury brought back or go to the jury room?"

"Mr. Orandall: You better go to the jury room, I guess."

Whereupon the judge went to the jury room, and charged the jury that the defendant was entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt. This irregularity is not properly before the court for review, under this assignment, as it is not embraced within the scope of the error alleged therein. If advantage of the irregularity complained of was intended to be taken, by counsel of defendant, it should have been made the subject of an assignment of error, which was not done. But since it appears on the face of the record that the judge did go into the jury room after the jury had retired thereto, to deliberate upon their verdict, it seems well for us to state here that the action of the court was highly improper and irregular, and is not palliated by the fact that what he said to the jury was favorable to the defendant; and were it not for the circumstance that the act of the court in going into the jury room was at the suggestion and with the consent of counsel of defendant, it might have resulted in vitiating the verdict of the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

(31 N. J. Law, 517)

BUCKALEW v. BOARD OF CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS OF MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COUNTIES \S 141 — PRIVATE ACTION AGAINST PUBLIC CORPORATION.

In the absence of a statute imposing liability, an action will not lie in behalf of an individual who has sustained a private injury by reason of the neglect of a public corporation to perform a public duty.

2. COUNTIES \S 141 — PRIVATE ACTION FOR PUBLIC WRONG—SPECIAL DAMAGE.

In the absence of a statute imposing liability, a public corporation, charged with the performance of a public duty, is not liable to an individual either for neglect to perform, or negligence in the performance of, such duty, whereby a public wrong has been done for which indictment will lie, although such individual has suffered special damage.

3. COUNTIES \S 141—LIABILITY FOR PRIVATE INJURY—NOTICE.

When a public corporation is not liable for private injury to an individual, previous notice to the municipal authorities of the condition which caused the injury will not operate to impose liability.

4. HIGHWAYS \S 187(1) — PERSONAL INJURIES—LIABILITY.

As the plaintiff's injury did not result from any active wrongdoing of the defendant, a public corporation, he cannot recover.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by John P. Buckalew against the board of Chosen Freeholders of Middlesex County. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edmund Hayes, of Atlantic City, and Russell E. Watson, of New Brunswick, for appellant. Frederick F. Richardson, of New Brunswick, for appellee.

WALKER, C. Plaintiff was injured on the night of February 1, 1915, as the result of an accident caused by an automobile, which he was driving, running into a hole in the road known as the Woodbridge and New Brunswick turnpike in Middlesex county, a county road.

The director of the board of chosen freeholders of Middlesex had been notified about a month before the accident of the condition of the highway at the point where it happened, and had received three notices of such condition during that month. Each rain caused a washout, and it was the practice of the board of freeholders to repair the holes thus made by filling them up with sand, which would be washed out by the next storm. The board of freeholders had been requested by a person living in the vicinity to erect a retaining wall to prevent these washouts. After the accident to the plaintiff, the highway, at the point of the accident, was cemented, after which the road remained firm, and there were no further washouts.

At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, the court directed a nonsuit, to which plaintiff excepted. The contention of the plaintiff is that the conduct of the board of freeholders in repairing this road in the manner in which it did, so that a washout occurred with each successive rain storm, and with knowledge that such washouts would occur, amounted to active wrongdoing. Unless the facts in the case at bar bring it within the authorities which hold municipal corporations liable for damages to those suffering injury from the active wrongdoing of their agents, the plaintiff cannot prevail, and the nonsuit was right.

[1] In Livermore v. Board of Freeholders of Camden, 81 N. J. Law, 507, Chief Justice Beasley, speaking for this court, said at page 508:

"That an action will not lie in behalf of an individual who has sustained special damage by reason of the neglect of a public corporation to perform a public duty I consider the settled law of this state. This was the doctrine approved of by the Supreme Court, after much research and a careful consideration of the authorities, in the case of Strader v. Board of Freeholders of Sussex, 3 Harr. 108, and the same principle was reaffirmed in the case of Cooley v. Freeholders of Essex, 3 Dutcher [27 N. J. Law] 415. These decisions, in my judgment, rest upon the solid foundations of ancient precedent and public policy."

This doctrine has been repeatedly reaffirmed.

[2] In Hart v. Freeholders of Union, 57 N. J. Law, 90, 29 Atl. 490, Mr. Justice Magie, afterwards Chief Justice and Chancellor, speaking for the Supreme Court, remarked that it has been uniformly held by our courts that in the absence of a statutory provision a municipal corporation charged with the performance of a public duty is not liable to an individual for neglect to perform it or negligence in the performance of such duty, whereby a public wrong has been done for which indictment will lie, although such individual has suffered special damage, and also said that Mr. Justice Garrison had collected all the cases in Waters v. Newark, 56 N. J. Law, 861, 28 Atl. 717, in which it was held:

"The neglect of a municipal corporation to perform, or its negligence in the performance of, a public duty imposed on it by law, is a public wrong, to be remedied by indictment, and cannot constitute the basis of a civil action by an individual who has suffered particular damage by reason of such neglect. In such a case the circumstance that an individual specially injured gave notice to the municipal authorities is of no avail, if the special injury was, in fact, part of an indictable offense."

And Mr. Justice Magie observed in Hart v. Freeholders, 57 N. J. Law, at page 92, 29 Atl. 490:

"The exemption of municipal corporations from liability to such actions has been put by our courts on the ground of ancient precedent and public policy. Livermore v. Freeholders, 5 Dutcher [29 N. J. Law] 245; a. c., 2 Vroom [81 N. J. Law] 507. That public interest is deemed to be conserved by this exemption from liability seems apparent from the fact that the Legislature may at any time impose such liability on municipal corporations, and has failed to do so except in a few instances. The legislation giving to boards of chosen freeholders the right to acquire and maintain public highways out of which the public duty charged in this count must arise, if at all, does not impose on such boards any liability to such actions."

In Jersey City v. Kiernan, 50 N. J. Law, 248, 18 Atl. 170, it was held that the rule that when a public sewer breaks from faulty construction, and private property is injured thereby, an action will not lie, but if the city be notified of such break it then owes a duty to the individual injured and for the breach of which an action will lie, but only when the break in the sewer occasions a private nuisance, for if a public nuisance be the result the only remedy is by indictment. In the case at bar the plaintiff suffered a private injury, but only as one of the public, for the nuisance was public, and as such was remediable by indictment.

The plaintiff appellant contends that the case at bar is within the doctrine of Hart v. Freeholders of Union, supra, Kehoe v. Rutherford, 74 N. J. Law, 659, 65 Atl. 1046, 122 Am. St. Rep. 411, and Bailey v. Osborn, 80 N. J. Law, 333, 78 Atl. 9, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 454, and that these cases sustain his contention and right to recover. The doctrine of Hart v. Freeholders of Union does not aid the plaintiff, but is an authority the other way, as above pointed out. Kehoe v. Rutherford, in this court, opinion by Mr. Justice Trenchard, is an authority of the same kind for there the exemption of a municipality from actions by individuals suffering special damage from its neglect to perform, or its negligence in performing, public duties, was expressly recognized and reaffirmed, while it was held, on the particular facts of that case, that an action lay for the diversion of surface water by a municipality from the course it would otherwise take, and casting it in a body large enough to do substantial injury on land, where, but for an artificial drain, it would not go. The lands and property damaged were those of the plaintiff, Kehoe; they were not public property in any sense, and the damage, consequently, was that suffered by the owner alone, dissociated from his membership in the general public.

In Bailey v. Osborn, after certain drainage work had been done by commissioners appointed under the statute, the defendants cleaned out a ditch that had been dug and threw the refuse upon the plaintiff's land. Mr. Justice Swayze, speaking for this court (80 N. J. Law at page 334, 78 Atl. 9, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 454), observed that there was nothing to show that the borough of Atlantic Highlands had in any way acquired a right to throw refuse from a ditch upon the plaintiff's land, that the parties committing the trespass must answer in damages, and that a municipal corporation is liable for such misconduct is settled in this state, citing Hart v. Freeholders of Union and Kehoe v. Rutherford, supra.

[3] The highway in question was a public road, the duty of constructing and maintaining which is imposed upon the board of chosen freeholders; but there is no statute imposing upon the board liability for damages incident to the road falling out of repair, and that is this case. Not only the plaintiff, but every one else using the highway, was liable to suffer the same injury at the same place by reason of the depression caused by the washout resulting from rain. It is true that a person living in the vicinity repeatedly notified the director of the board of freeholders of these washouts, and on at least one occasion requested that a retaining wall be placed there to prevent them. After the accident the road was actually repaired with cement in the wash-out area, and has not since given way; but those things do not operate to impose a liability, which can only be created by statute.

It is not suggested that the board of freeholders were required by law, statutory or otherwise, to repair the road with any particular kind of material; but even if the board were so required, and it were shown that other material was used, the plaintiff would have to go further and rest upon a statute which enacted that liability for damages would be visited upon the board for failure to repair with the given material, and, admittedly, there is no such statute. If the repairs were made with material which in and of itself would cause injury, a different question would doubtless be presented; but there is neither proof nor suggestion of anything of that kind in the case. Unless and until the Legislature interferes, if it ever sees fit to do so, liability in the class of cases in which that under consideration is one will not attach to public corporations for the result of accidents growing out of a want of repair of public highways.

[4] As the plaintiff's injury did not result from any active wrongdoing of the defendant corporation, he cannot recover. It follows that the nonsuit was right, and the judgment under review should therefore be affirmed, with costs.

(39 N. J. Eq. 121)

ATWATER v. BASKERVILLE et al.*
(No. 44/233.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. May 16, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT ¶826 — AMENDMENT NUNC PRO TUNC.

Where the court adjudicated a corporation insolvent, but by oversight such adjudication does not appear in its order appointing the receiver for the corporation, such order may be amended nunc pro tunc.

2. CORPORATIONS ¶684 — FOREIGN — RECEIVERS—JURISDICTION TO APPOINT.

Under Corporation Act (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1640) §§ 65 and 66, providing for adjudication of corporate insolvency and appointment of receivers, and section 96, providing that foreign corporations doing business in the state shall be subject to the act so far as it can be applied, a receiver may be appointed for the property in this state belonging to an insolvent foreign corporation.

3. CORPORATIONS ¶684 — FOREIGN CORPORATIONS — RECEIVERS — APPOINTMENT AT DOMICILE.

The jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of the property of an insolvent foreign corporation does not depend upon whether or not a receiver has been appointed in the state of the corporation's domicile nor its being there adjudicated insolvent.

4. CORPORATIONS ¶687 — JURISDICTION — PARTIES — PROPERTY — FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

Where the bill brought by the receiver of a foreign corporation is one which could have been brought by the corporation to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, and all defendants could be served in the state, and the property to be affected is all in this state, the jurisdiction lies here.

Suit by Edward S. Atwater, Jr., as receiver of a New York corporation, against the Jersey Co-operative Realty Company, Marwood R. Baskerville, and others. Order to show cause why, pending determination of the suit, a sale under mortgage foreclosure should not be stayed upon equitable terms. Order made absolute, and injunction continued to final hearing upon securing payment of mortgage judgment.

Foster M. Voorhees, of Elizabeth, for the motion. Clarke McK. Whittemore, of Elizabeth, and Abram H. Cornish, of Newark, opposed.

LANE, V. C. The suit is brought by the receiver of a New York corporation, appointed by this court on November 5, 1917, against the Jersey Co-operative Realty Company, Marwood R. Baskerville, William J. Shearer, Carrie M. Shearer, his wife, Elizabeth Heights Realty Company, Benjamin A. Vail, as trustee in bankruptcy of said William J. Shearer, and the sheriff of the county of Union. It charges that on December 11, 1915, the Jersey Co-operative Realty Company was the owner in fee of certain premises; that on such day the company was insolvent, and had suspended its ordinary business; that for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors and stockholders, and without consideration, defendant William J. Shearer, who was the president of the company and one of its directors, the other directors being William J. Shearer, Jr., and Armwell W. Lassell, caused the company to transfer the said premises to him; that on December 24, 1915, William J. Shearer and wife conveyed the premises to the Elizabeth Heights Realty Company, a corporation of New Jersey; that the Elizabeth Heights Realty Company was a mere

¶ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

* For supplemental opinion, see 104 Atl. 647.

dummy for William J. Shearer, the directors being William J. Shearer and William J. Shearer, Jr., William J. Shearer being president, and William J. Shearer, Jr., treasurer and secretary, William J. Shearer owning all of the issued and outstanding capital stock; that at the time of the transfer the Elizabeth Heights Realty Company had full knowledge of the insolvent condition of the Jersey Co-operative Realty Company; that the conveyance to the Elizabeth Heights Realty Company was made without consideration and with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the Jersey Co-operative Realty Company; that on March 7, 1916, the Elizabeth Heights Realty Company conveyed the lands and premises, without consideration, to William J. Shearer; that on March 7, 1916, William J. Shearer and wife executed a mortgage to the defendant, Marwood R. Baskerville, to secure the payment of the sum of $20,000 in five years, without interest; that Marwood R. Baskerville was a stockholder of the Jersey Co-operative Realty Company, and had full knowledge of its insolvency and of the fraudulent nature of the transaction; that on August 28, 1916, a mortgage theretofore held by the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for $3,000 was assigned to Marwood R. Baskerville; that on October 12, 1916, Baskerville instituted proceedings in this court to foreclose the last-mentioned mortgage, with the result that a final decree was obtained, a writ of fieri facias issued, and sale advertised for November 14, 1917; that William J. Shearer on October 19, 1916, was adjudicated a bankrupt in this district, and a trustee appointed; that the complainant recognizes the validity of the mortgage previously held by the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York; and that the creditors of the Jersey Co-operative Realty Company are able and willing to pay the amount due on the decree with all legal expenses, and will agree not to enforce the decree until the validity of the conveyances and the second mortgage shall have been determined. The bill challenges the validity of the conveyances and of the mortgage for $20,000, and seeks a decree setting them aside. The bill charges that, if defendant Baskerville is permitted to proceed with his sale pending determination as to the validity of the conveyances and mortgage, the property will be sacrificed, and the creditors and stockholders of the Jersey Co-operative Realty Company injured. Upon the filing of the bill an order to show cause was allowed requiring defendants to show cause why, pending the determination of the suit, the sale under the decree for foreclosure should not be stayed upon equitable terms. Upon the return of the order there was no appearance except by the defendant Baskerville. There was no answer upon the facts. The defendant contends: (1) That the order appointing the receiver contains no adjudication of insol-veny, and is therefore void upon its face; (2) that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a statutory receiver for the foreign corporation in the original proceedings; (3) that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, because it would result in an interference with the internal affairs of a foreign corporation.

[1] First. An examination of the order appointing the receiver discloses that there does not appear therein an adjudication of insolvency. The court did, in fact, adjudicate the corporation insolvent. The omission in the order was an oversight. It may be corrected by the entry of an order nunc pro tunc, amending the order appointing the receiver, by including therein an adjudication of insolvency.

[2] Second. Sections 65 and 66 of the act concerning corporations, Revision of 1896 (2 Comp. Stat. N. J. p. 1640), provides for the adjudication of corporations insolvent and the appointment of receivers. Section 96 provides that foreign corporations doing business in this state shall be subject to the provisions of the act so far as the same can be applied. 2 Comp. Stat. p. 1657.

Prior to the deliverance of the opinion of the Court of Errors and Appeals in the case of McDermott v. Woodhouse, 87 N. J. Eq. 615, 101 Atl. 875, it appears not to have been doubted but that this court had power to appoint a receiver of a foreign corporation under sections 65 and 66 upon a finding of insolvency, nor but that the procedure was substantially the same as upon an application for the appointment of a receiver of a domestic corporation.

In Albert v. Clarendon, etc., Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 623, 28 Atl. 8, the question was squarely presented. There the bill was filed against a corporation incorporated in England. The allegation was insolvency. A motion was made to dismiss. Van Fleet, Vice Chancellor, said:

"The defendant is a foreign corporation. Our statute concerning corporations declares that foreign corporations doing business in this state shall be subject to its provisions so far as the same can be applied to them. * * * The meaning of that section of the statute which I have quoted seems to me to be clear. It was enacted to give this court the same jurisdiction over foreign corporations doing business in this state, when they become insolvent and have property here, that it exercises over insolvent domestic corporations, so far, at least, as should be necessary for the sequestration of their property here, and converting the same into money. To authorize this court to appoint a receiver of an insolvent foreign corporation, it is not necessary that the corporation should be engaged in carrying on its business in this state on the very day when the bill or petition is filed, but this court may take jurisdiction in any case where it is made to appear that the corporation has done business here, and still has property here, although at the time when the bill or petition was filed its business here is entirely suspended. The obvious design of the statute is to give the creditors of any foreign corporation which, having done business in this state, becomes insolvent and has property here which should be administered for the benefit of its creditors, the same remedy against the corporation, in respect to its property here that it gives to the creditors of an insolvent domestic corporation. Any other construction would, as it seems to me, defeat the main object of the statute and render it worthless."

In National Trust Co. v. Miller, 33 N. J. Eq. 155, at page 159, the same learned judge had made practically the same pronouncement. He had said:

"The legislative design was, unquestionably, to confer upon this court the same powers, in respect to insolvent corporations, created by foreign jurisdictions, having property in this state, that it exercised over insolvent domestic corporations, so far, at least, as the exercise of such powers was necessary to the recovery of any assets, whether legal or equitable, which should go in discharge of debts."

In Irwin v. Granite State Provident Association, 56 N. J. Eq. 244, 38 Atl. 680, where it appeared that prior to the filing of the bill in this court there had been a receiver or an assignee appointed in the state of the domicile of the corporation, Vice Chancellor Reed pointed out that the receiver in this state was amenable to the direction of the Court of Chancery of this state, and not to the direction of the domiciliary receiver. In Minchin v. Second National Bank, 36 N. J. Eq. 436, the Chancellor, Runyon, after referring to the statutory provisions subjecting foreign corporations to the provisions of the act, so far as they could be applied, said:

"Obviously, there are provisions of the act which cannot be applied to such corporations; for example, this court cannot hinder such corporations from exercising their franchises, except as it may enjoin them from exercising them in this state. It can sequester their property here and administer it for the benefit of creditors and stockholders, but it can do but little more. * * * In the language of the New York Supreme Court, in De Bemer v. Drew, 57 Barb. [N. Y.] 438, this court cannot regulate the internal affairs of foreign corporations, nor enforce any remedy beyond the limits of this state; it cannot annul or forfeit their charters; but it can and ought to provide for the collection of debts against them, when they or their property are brought within the jurisdiction of the courts of this state. The foreign corporation doing business here is subject to the provisions of our statute, so far as its property in this state is concerned. The proceeding is, practically, merely a proceeding in rem, and as such must be subject to prior liens, created by prior proceedings in attachment, and the vigilant creditor who obtains such prior lien at law ought not to be, and cannot be, deprived of his advantage."

In that case the Chancellor did not doubt the power of the court to appoint a receiver of an insolvent foreign corporation under the statute.

In Low, Receiver, v. R. P. K. Pressed Metal Company, 91 Conn. 91, 99 Atl. 1, L. R. A. 1917D, 291, in an original proceeding, a receiver had been appointed of a New York corporation. Subsequently a receiver was appointed in the state of the domicile of the company. Application was then made for the appointment of an ancillary receiver. It was insisted that the court was without jurisdiction in the original proceeding to appoint a receiver. The court held that the original appointment was proper. The court said:

"When it appoints a receiver, the officer becomes its officer, and is completely amenable to its control, and it matters not whether he is called an ancillary receiver or merely a receiver. His title to the assets within the jurisdiction is derived from its decree, and does not depend upon comity. The assets are in its custody, and are to be disposed of as equity and the orderly administration of justice requires. Its judgments and decrees in respect to these assets must be accepted as conclusive by all other courts. Where a receiver, administrator, or other custodian of an estate is appointed by the courts of one state, the courts of that state reserve to themselves full and exclusive jurisdiction over the assets of the estate, within the limits of the state. Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 11 Sup. Ct. 778, 35 L. Ed. 464."

An illuminating note upon the power to appoint receivers for foreign corporations where no domiciliary receiver has been appointed follows in L. R. A. 1917D, at page 295. And see page 303, of L. R. A. 1917D, where the right to appoint under statutes similar to that of this state is considered. Also see Beale on Foreign Corporations, § 791.

It is an established practice now for federal District Courts to appoint receivers of corporations foreign to the district and the state in which the district is situated at the suit of a nonresident creditor, where the corporation can be served and does not object to the jurisdiction, or where it consents. In such suits all of the assets of the corporation are liquidated, and the proceeds distributed. If necessary, suits ancillary to the first are brought in other districts. The receivers are permitted to assert any right of the corporation or its creditors. The authority of a state court to appoint a receiver for a foreign corporation which has entered into business in the state under a statute providing, "Such corporation shall be deemed and taken to be corporations of the state," was not questioned in the case of Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432.

[3] The law seems to be well settled that a court of equity has jurisdiction under its inherent power, and where statutes exist similar to that in this state, then under such statutes to appoint a receiver of a foreign corporation upon the ground of insolvency or upon any other ground which would warrant the appointment of a receiver, to conserve and gather in the assets, either legal or equitable, within the state, and to enforce the rights of the corporation, either legal or equitable, which may be enforced against those over whom jurisdiction can be obtained, within the case of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565. The jurisdiction of the court does not depend upon whether or not a receiver has been appointed in the state of the domicile of the corporation nor upon whether it has been there adjudicated insolvent. The question is one not of jurisdiction but of discretion in the exercise of jurisdiction. It is insisted, however, that this is not now, if it ever was, the law in this state since the opinion of the Court of Errors and Appeals in McDermott v. Woodhouse, supra. In that case a bill had been brought by a receiver of a New York corporation appointed by this court to hold stockholders for liability for stock issued for property purchased, as was said, at a gross overvaluation. The suit was brought to enforce liability arising under the provisions of the New York statute. McDermott v. Woodhouse, 87 N. J. Eq. 124, 99 Atl. 108. The Court of Errors and Appeals held that such a suit could not be brought either at law or in equity until the amount of the assessment had been determined, and that the only forum in which such a determination could be had was that of the domicile of the corporation. This is as far (for the purposes of the present case) as the case can be said to have any binding authority. In the opinion the court used this language:

"There is nothing to show that a receiver has ever been appointed in New York, the domicile of the corporation. Nothing is averred in the bill which would justify our courts in appointing a receiver in insolvency of a New York corporation. The draftsman seems to have conceived the notion that under our statute a receiver in insolvency can be appointed for a foreign corporation by the same procedure that is authorized in the case of a New Jersey corporation. We mention these difficulties because they are of so fundamental a character that we ought not to pass them unnoticed, and thereby appear to justify what seems by the averments of the bill to have been an unwarranted interference by our courts in the internal affairs of a foreign corporation. Probably the proceedings for a receiver were ex parte, and the attention of the court was never called to the fact that the corporation was not a New Jersey corporation. The matter is important. The bill seeks to do what can only be done by a receiver in case he possesses all the powers of a statutory receiver in insolvency, and shows on its face that the utmost powers he could have would be those of a mere ancillary receiver to gather in the assets in this state."

It will be at once observed that the language used indicates merely an expression of the refusal of the court to approve the practice pursued in the appointment of a receiver of a foreign corporation. If it had been intended to definitely overthrow the doctrine of the case of Albert v. Clarendon, etc., supra, that case and others which I have referred to would undoubtedly have been mentioned, nor do I think that the use of the words "ancillary" implied that the court deemed that it was a necessary prerequisite to the appointment of a receiver in this jurisdiction that a receiver should have been appointed in the jurisdiction of the domicile of the corporation. Rather the term "ancillary" is employed in the sense used by Vice Chancellor Reed in Irwin v. Granite State Provident Association, supra. To hold that a necessary prerequisite to the appointment of a receiver is the appointment of a receiver in the state of the domicile would, in a great many instances, where all of the business of the corporation is conducted in this state, all of its property is in this state, all of its creditors or a majority of them, in this state, deprive residents of this state of any remedy or force them to proceed to a foreign jurisdiction which would have control of nothing but the corporate entity. Summit Silk Co. v. Kingston Spinning Co., 154 N. C. 421, 70 S. E. 820, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 897. In that case the court, reiterating its remarks in Holshouser v. Copper Co., 188 N. C. at page 248, 50 S. E. 650, 70 L. R. A. 183, on appeal of the state of New Jersey, held that the courts of North Carolina had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of a New Jersey corporation on the ground of insolvency under a statute giving the court power to appoint receivers of corporations generally.

In 12 Ruling Case Law, § 85, the rule is stated:

"It is well settled that the courts of one state may, at the instance of resident or domestic creditors, or even at the instance of a nonresident creditor, appoint a receiver for a foreign corporation doing business therein and having property there, notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver at the domicile of the corporation where the general requisites for a receivership are shown, as in other cases"—citing cases from many jurisdictions including the Supreme Court of the United States; the case of Albert v. Clarendon, etc., cited with approval.

I conclude, therefore, that the appointment of the receiver was properly made.

[4] Third. The last contention made by the defendants is that the relief sought by the receiver is such an interference with the internal affairs of the corporation as that relief cannot be obtained within this state. And again reliance is placed upon McDermott v. Woodhouse, supra. I do not think that the principle of that case applies to this. The property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred is within this state. The alleged fraud-doer is here in bankruptcy. The defendant Baskerville has appeared. The Elizabeth Heights Realty Company is a New Jersey corporation. It is fair to assume that the wife of Shearer is a resident of this state. The Jersey Co-operative Realty Company is made a party defendant, and may be served here. The bill is one which might have been brought by the corporation, or a stockholder in its right if the directors refused to proceed, and if a receivership had not intervened, to set aside a conveyance alleged to have been fraudulently made by its directors for their own use and benefit, without consideration. If such suit were brought by the corporation, or by any one in its behalf it would necessarily have to be brought in a state where jurisdiction could be acquired over the persons of the defendants or over the property. Relief could not be obtained in the jurisdiction of the domicile of the corporation unless the parties defendant voluntarily appeared. The New York courts have no control over the property, nor over the foreclosure proceedings pending in this court. No relief could be granted which would maintain the status until final hearing unless personal service could be made upon the defendants.

A case directly in point is that of the National Trust Company v. Miller, supra. There had been a receiver appointed in the jurisdiction of the domicile of the corporation. Subsequently, upon a petition by certain of its creditors representing that all of its property was located in this state, that it had suspended its business and become insolvent, and that a receiver had been duly appointed in New York for the purpose of winding up and making equal distribution, a receiver of the corporation was appointed in this state. A foreclosure suit had been started against the company before the receiver was appointed. The receiver was let in as party defendant and attacked the validity of the mortgage. The nature of the defense is illustrated by the following excerpts from the opinion of Vice Chancellor Van Fleet:

"The validity of this mortgage is indefensible except on the theory that it was within the scope of the powers of the paper company to donate the half or the whole of its property to the railroad company, regardless of the rights of its creditors or the public. It is clear it possessed no such power, and if it had attempted to do so, by open and direct means, its act would have been so conspicuously ultra vires as to strip it of the least appearance of validity. * * * There is another important principle which I think it is my duty to enforce in deciding this case. Equity regards the property of a corporation as a fund held in trust for the payment of its debts, and if others than bona fide creditors of the corporation, or purchasers, possess themselves of it, they take it charged with this trust, which a court of equity will enforce against them."

The result was that the mortgage was set aside. If what was attempted to be accomplished in National Trust Company v. Miller did not involve an interference with the internal affairs of the corporation, then it would seem that what is attempted to be accomplished in the case sub judice certainly does not. The Vice Chancellor held that the defense could be set up by the receiver appointed by this court, and said:

"There can be no doubt, under the rule established by this adjudication (referring to Miller v. Mackenzie, 29 N. J. Eq. [2 Stew. Eq.] 291), that it would be competent for the receiver in this case, in his official character, to bring a suit in equity to nullify the mortgage in question. He holds the title to the mortgaged premises; he alone has a right to their possession, and he alone can sell and convey them. Adopting an argument very forcibly put in the case just cited, we may say it cannot be pretended, if the mortgagees were in possession, that this receiver could not maintain an action of ejectment against them, and if he established the fact that the mortgage was a fraud upon creditors, that he would not be entitled to recover. Why, if this be so, is he to be confined to such action, and to be excluded from taking his case before a tribunal that is competent not only to adjudge with regard to his right to the property, but also to remove from it a fraudulent and pretended claim, which, so long as it exists, renders it unsalable in his hands? His right of action and his right of defense are, in this instance, in my apprehension, reciprocal, and if he has produced sufficient evidence of the invalidity of the mortgage to entitle him, if he were complainant, to a decree so adjudging, he is, upon the same evidence, entitled to a decree of dismissal. * * * In my judgment, the receiver stands before the court invested with the rights and equities of the creditors of the paper company, and has therefore a right to ask judgment against this mortgage, if he has shown that it was executed in fraud of their rights."

If I am right that a receiver of a foreign corporation can be appointed under the statute without a receiver having first been appointed in the jurisdiction of the domicile of the corporation, I think the fact that such a receiver has been appointed is immaterial with respect to the powers of the receiver appointed here. The case of National Trust Company v. Miller is cited with approval in Beale on Foreign Corporations, § 791, and in many cases in this jurisdiction.

In Summit Silk Co. v. Kingston Spinning Co., 154 N. O. 421, 70 S. E. 820, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 897, the court said:

"The property of the Spinning Company is in this state, and the laws of New Jersey should not be permitted to effect its status or prejudice the rights of creditors of the corporation in respect of it. They must all come into this jurisdiction in order to have its assets administered for their benefit, and cannot get relief in the courts of New Jersey because the property is situated here. If we should deny the remedies of our laws to them for the reason assigned by the defendant, the assets in this state would be practically exempt from the claims of creditors."

In Minchin v. Second National Bank, 36 N. J. Eq. 486, a receiver had been appointed of a foreign corporation, under the statute. There had not been an appointment in the jurisdiction of the domicile of the company. It appeared that certain attachments had been levied upon the property of the corporation pending the hearing on the order to show cause. The party applying for the appointment of the receiver attacked the attachments. It was held by the Chancellor that the proper party to make the attack was the receiver.

Without attempting to enumerate all of the powers possessed by a receiver of a foreign corporation, it seems to me to be clear that he has the power to institute such actions as may be necessary to recover, for the creditors and stockholders, assets, legal or equitable, within this state, and to enforce such obligations of persons over whom jurisdiction can be obtained in this state which the corporation or its creditors might have enforced. I do not think that the suit will affect the internal management of the affairs of the corporation within the sense used by the Court of Errors and Appeals in McDermott v. Woodhouse, supra, or in Jackson v. Hopper, 76 N. J. Eq. 604, 75 Atl. 568, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658.

It is extremely difficult, and I think almost impossible, to formulate a test as to what constitutes an interference with the internal affairs of the corporation which can be applied in every case. The Court of Errors and Appeals in Jackson v. Hopper, supra, while approving the definition contained in the case of the North State Mining Company v. Field, 64 Md. 151, 20 Atl. 1039, confined it to the class of cases of which that then before the court was one.

The subject is treated in 12 Ruling Case Law, title "Foreign Corporations," §§ 20, 21, and 22. It is there stated that the test: "Where the act complained of affects the complainant solely in his capacity as a member of the corporation, whether it be as corporator, stockholder, director, president, or other officer, and is the act of the corporation, whether acting in stockholders' meeting or through its agents, the board of directors, then such action is the management of the internal affairs of the corporation, and in the case of a foreign corporation courts of another state will not take jurisdiction even though the visible tangible property of the foreign corporation is situate therein. Where, however, the act of the foreign corporation complained of affects the complainant's individual rights only, then a domestic court will take jurisdiction"—has been adopted by courts of several jurisdictions; yet it appears that it has not been by any means uniformly approved. It has been held that there are cases where, although the rights of a party grow out of his membership in the corporation, yet, as the matter affects only his individual rights, under the contract by which the stock was issued, therefore an enforcement of those rights will not be an interference with the internal management of the corporate affairs within the meaning of the rule. The author says that the difference between the two tests is as follows:

"Those courts which apply the first-mentioned test, in determining whether they will take jurisdiction of an action against a foreign corporation, inquire whether the right sought to be enforced accrues to the plaintiff as an individual, independent of his relationship to the corporation, while with those which have adopted the latter the question is: Does the right, though growing out of his status as a stockholder, belong to the plaintiff individually, and not as one of a class? Irrespective of the question as to the proper test to be applied in determining what are the internal affairs of a corporation, the view has been expressed by some courts that in the case of corporations which are nonresident only in that they were created in another state, the officers, agents, stockholders, business, and property all being within the jurisdiction of the court, they will not deny relief in a proper case on the ground that the 'internal affairs' of the corporation will be affected."

It has been held (Babcock v. Farwell, 245 Ill. 14, 91 N. E. 688, 187 Am. St. Rep. 284, 19 Ann. Cas. 74, and note, a well-reasoned case) that, where minority stockholders in a foreign corporation seek by suit in equity to have restored to the corporation property fraudulently appropriated to their own use by directors who, together with the corporation itself, are personally subject to the jurisdiction of the court, the court should exercise its jurisdiction for the determination of the controversy. And in Kidd v. New Hampshire Traction Co., 72 N. H. 273, 56 Atl. 486, 66 L. R. A. 574, it was held that a fraudulent transfer of the personality of a foreign corporation situate within the state would be set aside and this notwithstanding that the corporation could not be served with process. These latter cases are direct authorities in the case at bar.

If it had not been for the strenuous insistence on the part of the defendant that the opinion of the Court of Errors and Appeals in McDermott v. Woodhouse required a determination directly contrary to which I have arrived, I would have contented myself in disposing of this case with a mere reference to Albert v. Clarendon, Trust Company v. Miller, Minchin v. Second National Bank, and Irwin v. Granite State Provident Association.

Whether the objections sought to be raised by the defendant as to the validity of the order appointing the receiver and the jurisdiction of the court to appoint a receiver can be raised by him in this suit I have not considered and express no opinion thereon.

The result is that the order to show cause will be made absolute, and the injunction will be continued to final hearing upon condition that the defendants secure, or cause to be secured, the payment of the amount due upon the decree of the defendant Baskerville. Other equitable provisions may also be made in favor of other defendants if they appear. Before the signing of any order, an order amending the order appointing receiver should be taken as indicated in the fore part of this opinion.

Settle order on two days' notice.

(89 N. J. Eq. 139)

KSIAZEK v. KSIAZEK. (No. 42/133.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 12, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NE EXEAT §=14—BOND—EXONERATION OF SURETIES.

Sureties on a bond given to secure release from arrest on a writ of ne exeat may not surrender their principal and thus secure exoneration.

2. NE EXEAT §=14—BOND—DISCHARGE—FINAL DECREE—CUSTODY OF DEFENDANT.

A bond in ne exeat, conditioned that defendant will not depart the state without leave, is not discharged by the entry of final decree, nor by the fact that the defendant is in custody for failure to comply with final decree.

3. NE EXEAT §=14—BOND—DISCHARGE—COMPLIANCE WITH FINAL DECREE.

A bond in ne exeat, with condition that defendant will not depart the state without leave, is not discharged after final decree, providing for the payment of alimony, by the fact that the defendant has complied with the final decree to date of application for discharge.

4. NE EXEAT §—9, 14 — New Writ — DISCHARGE OF SURETIES.

The court may, in its discretion, after final decree and while the defendant is in custody for failure to comply with final decree, discharge the sureties on a bond given to secure release from arrest by virtue of a writ of ne exeat upon terms, and may, while the defendant be so in custody, direct the issuance of a new or alias writ of ne exeat upon a showing that there is danger if the defendant be released of his departing the jurisdiction.

Suit by Sophie Kslazek against Alexander Kslazek, pending which a writ of ne exeat issued, and defendant gave bond with sureties and the sureties' application for leave to surrender him after final decree was denied, and defendant was thereafter adjudged guilty of contempt and imprisoned, and the sureties apply for their discharge. Order discharging the sureties advised on terms.

Frey & Vanecek, of Newark (John Q. Frey, of Newark, of counsel), for the motion. Pomerehne & Laible, of Newark, opposed.

LANE, V. C. Pending the suit a writ of ne exeat issued. Defendant gave bond with sureties, the condition of which was in the old form that he would not depart the jurisdiction without leave. Subsequent to final decree, an application was made by his sureties for leave to surrender him. This application was denied. Thereafter an application was made to punish him for contempt; he was adjudged guilty and incarcerated.

[1] The sureties now apply for their discharge. That the sureties cannot surrender their principal is the law of this state. Schreiber v. Schreiber, 85 N. J. Eq. 303, 96 Atl. 85. Vice Chancellor, at page 306, affirmed without criticism. 86 N. J. Eq. 437, 99 Atl. 117. See, also, In re Griswold, Petitioner, 18 R. I. 125.

The statement in Tothill, reported in 21 English Reprint, 110, that bail in chancery is discharged upon bringing in the principal, as at common law, does not express our law. It was this statement upon which the Vice Chancellor acted who accepted a surrender of the principal in Marino v. Marino, hereafter noted.

[2-4] The question is whether the principal being in custody for contempt for failure to obey the final decree, the sureties are entitled to their discharge.

In Le Clea v. Trot. Prec. in Chanc. C. & H. 230 (1704) 24 English Reprint, 112, the Lord Keeper held that the sureties should not be discharged after answer put in by the defendant, nor even after decree against him, and commitment for £19,000 decreed against him. In Debazin v. Debazin, 21 English Reprint, 204 (1743), it appeared that, a writ of ne exeat sued out, the defendant entered into a bond with two sureties, for his not departing the kingdom. The cause was afterwards heard, and there was a decree against the defendant for the same matter for which the ne exeat issued. The defendant being in contempt and in custody for not performing the decree, the sureties applied and obtained an order that they should be discharged, and the bond as to them canceled. In Stapylton v. Peill, 19 Ves. Jun. 615, 34 English Reprint, 644 (1816), application was made to discharge the sureties prior to final decree, where the defendant was in custody for contempt for failure to put in an answer, and Lord Chancellor Eldon refused to make the order, observing that he did not recollect such a motion except once, and then it was refused, and the editor contributes the following note:

"See Beames on Ne Ex. Reg. 56, In Le Clea v. Trot, Pra. Ch. 230, where this application was refused, and in Debazin v. Debazin, 1 Dick. 95, where it was granted, the commitment was for not obeying the decree to pay the money, for which the writ was granted."

Upon the authority of Debazin v. Debazin, the Court of Appeals of Maryland in Johnson v. Clendenin, 5 Gill & J. 463, affirmed an order discharging the sureties in a case where the defendant had been committed to jail for not complying with the final decree and afterwards had escaped from custody. The arguments of counsel in this case are very instructive.

In Wauters v. Van Vorst, 28 N. J. Eq. 103, the Chancellor approved Debazin v. Debazin. That case cannot be considered an authority, however, that the court must discharge the bail; the Chancellor merely holding that it has the power. In Elliott v. Elliott, 36 Atl. 951, Vice Chancellor Reed held, where the condition of the bond was in the form provided for by the rules, that after final decree, and even after a bond given to comply with the final decree, the bond on ne exeat was not superseded, and suit might be brought upon it. Vice Chancellor Howell, in Marino v. Marino, in an unreported memorandum, which case, by the way, was the one in which there was the irregular surrender of the principal referred to by Vice Chancellor Stevenson in Schreiber v. Schreiber, says:

"Prior to 1871 it was the practice in this state for the defendant so arrested to give bond in what was known as the common form, viz. that he would not depart from or leave this state without the permission of the court. This was considered to be practically a bond for appearance, although not so in terms, and if the defendant remained within the state until final decree, the condition of the bond was held to be satisfied."

He cites no authority for the dictum. It seems to be opposed to the English cases. In Le Clea v. Trot, application was made by the sureties after final decree. So in Debazin v. Debazin. It would seem as if, had it been considered that the exigency of the writ had been satisfied by the final decree, the applications would have been based upon that ground. The condition of the bond in the common form is broken if the defendant without leave of court at any time leaves the state. Upon a breach of the condition the money may be directed to be brought into court. The court may, however, if the defendant leave the state, without permission, and thereafter return and subject himself to the jurisdiction of the court, remit the forfeiture. In re Appel, 163 Fed. 1002, 90 C. C. A. 172, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 76.

The condition of the bond is "that the defendant shall not depart from or leave this state without permission of the said Court of Chancery." It is unlimited as to time. The bond which may be given under the 216th rule is conditioned that the defendant shall cause his appearance to be entered in the suit, continue his appearance, and render himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, and to such process as shall be issued to compel the performance of the final decree and to appear before the court when required. The purpose of the rule was to permit the giving of a bond which would not be as rigorous in its condition as the bond in the common form. If the bond be in the common form, a single departure from the state will breach its condition. The defendant may still insist upon giving a bond in the common form. I think that if he does, he and his sureties assume all of the obligations which he would be under if he gave a bond under the 216th rule plus the additional obligation of continuously remaining within the state. The cases dealing with the effect of a bond given under the 216th rule are therefore direct authority with respect to the effect of a bond given in the common form.

The Vice Chancellor in Marino v. Marino after final decree refused to vacate a bond with condition as provided for by the rule, although the defendant was within the state and was complying with the final decree, and I think the same result would have been reached had the bond been in the common form. He further held that, notwithstanding the surrender and the fact that the defendant had been rearrested on an alias writ, and a new bond given, the old bond was still outstanding, and reduced the amount of the new bond so as to make the aggregate bail $5,000.

The writ is not discharged by the entry of judgment, but continues until security is given, or the judgment is satisfied. McNamara v. Dwyer, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 239, 32 Am. Dec. 627; Mitchell v. Bunch, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 606, 22 Am. Dec. 639; Lewis v. Shainwald (C. C.) 48 Fed. 492. Incarceration for contempt is not in any sense a satisfaction of the judgment or compliance with the decree.

The cases of Debazin v. Debazin and Le Clea v. Trot are not in conflict. The utmost effect of Debazin v. Debazin is, as stated by the Chancellor in Wauters v. Van Vorst, that the court may, where the defendant is in custody for failure to comply with the final decree, discharge the sureties, but it is not obliged to. An entirely different question arises as to whether or not the court ought, in the exercise of its discretion, the defendant being in custody, release the sureties. The fact that the final decree has been entered and that the defendant is in custody does not vitiate the writ of ne exeat, nor does it prevent the issuance of an alias or new writ. So long as the defendant is in custody for a contempt for his failure to pay certain arrears of alimony he cannot depart the state, and the complainant is not injured, but he may satisfy the amount of arrears to date, and then depart the state and the complainant be left remediless.

I will advise an order discharging the sureties, provided the defendant give bond to perform the final decree, or if, within a time to be fixed, the complainant does not apply for an alias or new writ upon proper moving papers, indicating that if the defendant be released he may depart the state.

The reasons which induce me to grant the relief which I have above indicated are that the defendant is now incarcerated within the state, and may be held within the jurisdiction unless he shall give a new bond on the writ of ne exeat, and the sureties represent that the bond has been recorded in the county of Essex among bonds to sheriffs, and that a title company refused to guarantee title to property owned by them which they desire to transfer. Whether a bond so recorded constitutes an incumbrance upon their land, I cannot determine in this proceeding and can give them relief only in the manner above indicated.

Settle order on two days' notice.

(91 N. J. Law, 491)

Appeal of VERDON.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 7, 1918.)

1. CONTEMPT §60(3)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to sustain an order adjudging defendant guilty of criminal contempt.

2. CONTEMPT §66(7) — REVIEW — TRIAL DE NOVO.

Inferences below arising from failure of one adjudged guilty of contempt to testify have no weight on appeal in the Supreme Court where the case is tried de novo, at which time the defendant testifies fully.

3. CONTEMPT §60(1) — PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.

One accused of criminal contempt is entitled to the presumption of innocence, which remains throughout the trial as in any criminal prosecution.

4. CONTEMPT §60(3) — DEGREE OF PROOF — PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.

One accused of criminal contempt must be proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt as in any criminal prosecution.

William P. Verdon was adjudged guilty of criminal contempt in the county court of quarter sessions, and defendant appealed to Supreme Court (89 N. J. Law, 16, 97 Atl. 783), which reversed conviction, whereupon writ of error was sued out of Court of Errors and Appeals (90 N. J. Law, 494, 102 Atl. 66), which reversed judgment of Supreme Court and remitted record to that court for trial de novo. Defendant found not guilty, and judgment below reversed.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

George T. Vickers, of Jersey City, and Robert H. McCarter, of Newark, for the State. Arthur B. Archibald and Alexander Simpson, both of Jersey City, for defendant.

KALISCH, J. William P. Verdon was found guilty of contempt of the court of quarter sessions of the county of Hudson, and that court upon such conviction sentenced him to pay a fine of $250 and to be committed to the county jail for 30 days. From that judgment an appeal was taken, under the Act of 1884 (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1736), to the Supreme Court, where it was held that the procedure adopted by the court below to punish Verdon for contempt was unauthorized in law, and without rehearing the matter of contempt of which he stood convicted, upon the law and upon the facts, the Supreme Court reversed the conviction. In re Verdon, 89 N. J. Law, 16, 97 Atl. 783. Thereupon the Attorney General sued out a writ of error in the Court of Errors and Appeals, which tribunal reversed the judgment of the Supreme Court and remitted the record to that court in order that it may rehear the matter of contempt upon which the conviction was founded, both upon the law and upon the facts, in the manner directed by the statute. Attorney General v. Verdon, 90 N. J. Law, 494, 496, 102 Atl. 66, 157.

From the history of the proceedings against Verdon, as revealed by the record before us, it appears that his conviction of contempt in the court below necessarily and solely rested upon testimony introduced by the prosecution, as a result of an attack made by Verdon upon the validity of the procedure taken against him, and in consequence of which he remained mute and offered no testimony in exculpation of the charge laid against him. The Court of Errors and Appeals declared, in Attorney General v. Verdon, supra, that the legal effect of the statute of 1884 is to afford a person convicted of contempt in the court of first instance, upon an appeal to this court, a trial de novo. In this posture the appeal has been heard and considered by us. Leave was given to either side to take depositions to be used upon the rehearing. By stipulation of counsel the testimony, taken in the court below, in the original proceedings, was made part of the record to be used upon the rehearing. The only additional testimony taken by the prosecution was that of Mr. Ivins, editor of the Hudson Dispatch.

For the alleged contemner testimony was introduced, for the first time, on this hearing. His defense was a denial that he gave the information contained in the article upon which the proceeding for contempt against him was founded; and he furthermore insists that he neither inspired the article nor participated in its publication. The article was published in the Hudson Dispatch, on Monday, January 17, 1916, and was made the basis of the rule to show cause issued by the court below why Verdon should not be adjudged guilty as of contempt of the court of general quarter sessions of the county of Hudson. It appears that one Byrne, a newspaper reporter, testified that he had written the article in question, and that he obtained the information therein contained from Verdon, on Saturday, January 15, 1916, either in the afternoon or evening, at the latter's residence, in the presence of a man by the name of Taylor.

Verdon, testifying in his own behalf, while admitting that Byrne called and sought an interview with him relating to the case of one Smith, then pending in the court below, and which case became and was the subject-matter of the contumelious article, states with positiveness that he told Byrne that he had no interview to give out and that he had nothing to say. Verdon further testified that, during the time that Byrne remained, the latter talked about his work for various newspapers in Hudson county.

James Taylor, the person referred to by Byrne as being present when Verdon gave the information contained in the article in question, was called as a witness by the defendant, and testified that he was present when Byrne called at Verdon's residence for an interview, and remained until Byrne went away, the witness accompanying him; that Byrne remained about 20 minutes; that at no time during the presence of the witness did Verdon give an interview to Byrne pertaining to a proposed impeachment of Judge Tennant, in connection with the case of Samuel Smith; that the witness heard Byrne say, "I came to get an interview on the impeachment," and Verdon's reply, "I have nothing at all to say, absolutely nothing at all to say;" that Byrne asked Verdon whether he was going to Trenton on Monday, and the latter replied that he had nothing at all to say.

Byrne was dead when the rehearing was ordered, but his testimony taken in the original proceedings in the court below was read into the present record. Byrne testified that his interview with Verdon lasted for more than two hours. It further appears from his testimony that he attended the Smith trial and gathered impressions from what was said and occurred there. It does not appear that he took any notes in writing of the interview, and the inference to be gathered from his testimony is that he relied upon his memory of what had been said when he wrote the article; for, when he was asked by counsel of the state to point out any part of the article which he identified as emanating from him and not from Verdon, he said:

"I say it is a very difficult thing to do, because I go there and put questions to the man and he answers me, and I gather my impressions from that. Wherein I quote him directly, with quotation marks, it is to be assumed, of course, that he said everything that is said there. But in the other part of the article to say that every idea, every thought contained in this article, was obtained from Mr. Verdon—it is impossible to say that, because something might be retained in my mind from the Smith trial. It does not purport to quote Mr. Verdon from beginning to end."

This witness further testified that the article, however, represented truthfully the substance of the interview.

In this posture of the evidence, we are called upon to determine whether the state has sustained the burden of proof which the law casts upon it.

The sole object of the proceeding instituted against the defendant is to punish him for having inspired and participated in the publication of an article, in a newspaper, reflecting upon the dignity of the court below, and tending to obstruct the proper administration of law.

In Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 108, 21 Atl. 188, Vice Chancellor Pitney said:

"Proceedings in contempt are of two classes, namely, first, those instituted solely for the purpose of vindicating the dignity and preserving the power of the court. These are criminal and punitive in their nature, and are usually instituted by the court in the interest of the general public and not of any particular individual or suitor."

The learned Vice Chancellor cites in support of this legal proposition Dodd v. Una, 40 N. J. Eq. at page 714, 5 Atl. 155, per Depue, J.; People v. Oyer & Terminer, 101 N. Y. 245, 4 N. E. 259, 54 Am. Rep. 691; Rap. Contempt, 21.

The present proceeding being in its very nature a criminal one, it must be governed by the legal rules applicable to the trial of criminal causes.

In Barnett Foundry Co. v. Crowe, 80 N. J. Eq. 100, on pages 110, 111, 74 Atl. 964, which was a proceeding for contempt for the violation of an injunction order, Vice Chancellor Howell, in discussing the nature of the proceeding and the legal rules controlling the same, stated them to be as follows:

"It is a well-known principle in contempt proceedings that a respondent shall not be adjudged guilty of contempt if there is a reasonable doubt on the facts and on the law as to his guilt. The proceeding is quasi criminal, and, in so far as it is so, it must carry with it the usual and ordinary presumptions that would affect the proceeding if it were being conducted in the criminal court."

And even in cases where the proceedings were inter partes and resorted to for remedial purposes, it was held that, the proceedings being quasi criminal in character, the proof must clearly establish the delinquency charged. Magennis v. Parkhurst, 4 N. J. Eq. 428; McClure v. Gulick, 17 N. J. Law, 343.

In Staley v. South Jersey Realty Co., 83 N. J. Eq. 300, 307, 90 Atl. 1042, L. R. A. 1917B, 113, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 955, Mr. Justice Garrison, speaking for the Court of Errors and Appeals, in an instructive and illuminating opinion, discusses civil and criminal contempts and their essential characteristics and differences, and in commenting upon the case of Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, 31 Sup. Ct. 492, 55 L. Ed. 797, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874, and quoting therefrom, says:

"There are some differences," said the court in that case, "between the two classes of proceedings which involve substantial rights and constitutional privileges. Without deciding what may be the rule in civil contempts, it is certain that in proceedings for criminal contempt the defendant is presumed to be innocent, he must be proved to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt and cannot be compelled to testify against himself—citing a large number of cases. It is hardly necessary to add that among these substantial rights is that the defendant's guilt must be proved by judicial evidence, i. e., by testimony to which the ordinary rules of evidence are applied."

[1, 2] Subjecting the evidence before us to the test of these legal rules, we are forced to the conclusion that the state failed to establish the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt. We have not reached this result without having carefully and duly considered all the matters urged by the state as establishing clear proof of the defendant's guilt. First, it is argued by counsel for the state that since it appears that in the original proceeding in the court below Verdon was present when Byrne testified that he received the information contained in the published article from the former, and because Verdon did not take the witness stand to deny the statement, but remained silent, it was such conduct on Verdon's part as to give rise to the inference that what Byrne said as to the former's connection with the article was true. While the law recognizes such a salutary rule of circumstantial evidence, and under ordinary circumstances it would have lent great force to the contention made, in so far as the action of the court below was concerned, it loses its cogency here, for two reasons, namely: First, because it appears that the cause of the defendant's silence in the court below arose from the fact that he challenged the validity of the proceedings which involved the jurisdiction of that court; and, secondly, because the proceedings here being de novo and the defendant having under oath, in this court, made a complete denial of his connection with the origin and publication of the article, it becomes the duty of the court to consider and decide the case upon the law and upon the facts as presented to us on this appeal.

Secondly, for the state it is further argued that Byrne's testimony is corroborated by Mr. Ivings, the editor of the Dispatch, in that the latter testified that he directed Byrne to interview the defendant in regard to the subject-matter of the article; and is further corroborated, in that the interview did take place on Saturday, and that the article published on the succeeding Monday contained a statement that the defendant was going to Trenton on Monday and have certain court officials impeached, and that the defendant did go to Trenton on that Monday and made some effort to start proceedings for impeachment against certain public officials, and that he instigated a resolution to be offered to that effect in the Legislature, and that these facts could not possibly have been known to Byrne, unless communicated to him by Verdon. Giving full force and effect to this contention, nevertheless, in contemplation of law, the evidence relied on fails to satisfy the burden cast upon the state to establish the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, since it appears that Verdon, on oath, denied that he made the contumacious statements attributed to him, and in this denial he is fully corroborated by Taylor, a disinterested witness, who was present during the entire time of the interview between Byrne and Verdon. It is also to be observed that the credibility of neither of these witnesses was impeached.

[3, 4] To sum up, it must be borne in mind that this is a criminal or quasi criminal proceeding, in which the presumption of innocence remains with the defendant throughout the entire case, and that the burden of establishing his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt rests upon the state. In this respect we think the state has failed, and for this reason must find, upon the law and upon the facts as developed before us, the defendant not guilty, and order that the judgment below be reversed and for nothing holden.

(33 N. J. Law, 28)

STATE v. RUDNER. (No. 3.)

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. July 9, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §149 — LIMITATIONS — TAMPERING WITH WATER METER.

The offense of tampering with a water meter with intent to defraud, under 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1794, § 164, is complete when the tampering is done, though water be afterward stolen, and prosecution therefor is barred after two years from the act of tampering, by 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1870, § 152.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §878(1)—VERDICT.

Where indictment in separate counts charged misdemeanor, under 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1794, § 164, of tampering with water meter with intent to defraud, and the offense made a high misdemeanor by 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1798, § 158, of grand larceny by stealing water of the value of $576, a verdict of "guilty of the misdemeanor" was not general, but specific to the lesser offense, which was barred by the statute of limitation and without force.

Error to Court of Quarter Sessions, Mercer County.

Morris Rudner was convicted of unlawfully tampering with a water meter and stealing water, and he brings error. Reversed.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

Aaron V. Dawes, of Hightstown (John A. Montgomery, of Trenton, on the brief), for plaintiff in error. Martin P. Devlin, Prosecutor of Pleas, of Trenton, for the State.

GUMMERE, C. J. The indictment in the present case contained four counts. The averment of the first count was that Rudner, the plaintiff in error, together with one Charles H. Speck, did unlawfully tamper with a water meter which had been installed by the water department of the city of Trenton in the premises of Rudner, for the purpose of measuring and registering the amount of water used therein, and that this was done with the intent to defraud the municipality by causing the meter to register much less than the actual flow of water through it. The second count charged that Rudner unlawfully aided, assisted, and abetted Speck in tampering with this meter, for the purpose of causing it to register much less than the actual flow of the water through it. The third and fourth counts charged the defendants, Rudner and Speck, with unlawfully and feloniously stealing, taking, and carrying away 640,400 cubic feet of stored filtered water of the value of $576.86 of the goods and chattels of the city of Trenton. The trial of the indictment proceeded against Rudner alone, and the jury returned the following verdict against him:

"The said Morris Rudner is guilty of the misdemeanor aforesaid of him above charged in the form aforesaid, and as by the indictment aforesaid is above supposed against him."

Rudner thereupon sued out the present writ of error to review the judgment entered upon that verdict.

[1] The first assignment of error challenges the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in error on the first and second counts of the indictment, upon the ground that the offense alleged in each of these counts, if committed at all, had been committed more than two years before the finding of the indictment, and was therefore outlawed. The motion to direct was based upon section 152 of our Criminal Procedure Act (Comp. Stat. p. 1870), which declares that no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense not punishable with death, unless the indictment shall be found within two years from the time of committing the offense. The record shows that the indictment was presented at the January term, A. D. 1917. The proof on the part of the state was that the illegal tampering with the water meter installed in Rudner's premises occurred some time during the year 1914, and there was no evidence that it occurred at any subsequent date. The question, therefore, whether the refusal of the motion to direct a verdict upon the first and second counts of the indictment was proper, or not, depends upon the true construction of the statutory provision upon which these two counts were based. That provision is contained in section 164 of our Crimes Act (Comp. Stat. p. 1794), and, so far as pertinent to the present case, is as follows:

"Any person who shall without permission * * * connect or disconnect the meters * * * of any * * * water company, or in any other manner, without such permission, tamper or interfere with such meters * * * for the * * * purpose of obtaining * * * water with intent to defraud such company, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

The contention on the part of the plaintiff in error is that the crime declared in the statute is a specific one, and becomes complete when the work of tampering or interfering with the meter is entirely finished; while, on the other hand, it is argued by the state that the crime is not complete unless the purpose which was sought to be accomplished by the tampering with the meter has, in fact, been consummated, that is unless water has been actually abstracted in excess of the quantity registered and that therefore so long as the water continues to be unlawfully abstracted, the crime remains a continuing one. It is conceded that the abstraction of the water was persisted in until a period well within the two-year limitation, and so we are called upon to determine the soundness of the one contention or the other.

A careful reading of the statute leads us to the conclusion that the purpose of the Legislature as expressed therein is so plain as not to call for judicial interpretation. It declares that any person who shall without permission tamper or interfere with the meter of any water company, for the purpose of fraudulently obtaining water from such company, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. There is nothing in the statute to suggest the idea that a person who has been guilty of such tampering, and whose intent was to defraud the water company, should escape punishment, if his intent is prevented from being carried into execution by a prompt discovery of what he has done, or in any other way. The object of the Legislature was, not the punishment of one who feloniously abstracts water which is the property of one of these companies—for that crime, like any other felonious taking, is dealt with in other provisions of the statute—but the protection of these companies against the fraudulent abstraction of water by methods so insidious and secret as not to be readily discoverable. And in order to effect that object the Legislature created an entirely separate and distinct offense, which it made punishable without regard to whether the larcenous purpose which led to the tampering with the meter was accomplished, or not.

We have not overlooked the contention of counsel for the state that the situation here presented is quite similar, in its legal essence, to the criminal offense of obtaining moneys by false pretenses, and that the decisions upon that branch of the law should control us in the present case. We fail, however, to perceive the similarity. The wrong which is made criminal by the statute in the class of cases appealed to is not the making of the false pretense, but the wrongful obtaining of money by reason thereof. State v. Crowley, 39 N. J. Law, 264. Determining, as we do, that the crime struck at by the 164th section is complete when the work of tampering with the meter has been finished, we conclude that the motion to direct a verdict of acquittal on the first and second counts should have been granted, and that its refusal was error.

[2] It is insisted on behalf of the state that this error should not result in a reversal of the conviction, for the reason that the verdict returned by the jury was a general one; and it is said to be the settled law of this state that where there are several counts in an indictment, each charging a distinct crime, a general verdict of guilty amounts to a conviction of each separate offense, and, even if the verdict cannot be supported as to one or more of the crimes charged, it will be upheld as to the offense described in a single good count. That this is the law of the state is not disputed. It was so declared by the Court of Errors and Appeals in the case of State v. Huggins, 84 N. J. Law, 254, 87 Atl. 630. And so, if each of the several counts in the present indictment had charged a simple misdemeanor, the verdict rendered by the jury, "guilty of the misdemeanor aforesaid," etc., would include all the counts, and the rule in the Huggins case would be applicable. Upon examination, however, the contrary is clearly shown to be the fact. The first count charges a violation of the 164th section, and that section makes a person who shall be convicted under it "guilty of a misdemeanor." The second count, in its legal effect, charges the same offense. It charges Rudner with aiding and abetting Speck in his tampering with the meter, and since the decision of Engeman v. State, 54 N. J. Law, 247, 23 Atl. 676, it has been considered to be settled that in misdemeanors all who aid, abet, or participate are principals, and all equally guilty. State v. Hess, 65 N. J. Law, 544, 47 Atl. 806; State v. Wilson, 80 N. J. Law, 467, 78 Atl. 144; State v. Spence, 81 N. J. Law, 265, 79 Atl. 1029. The third and fourth counts, however, each of them, charge the plaintiff in error with the crime of grand larceny, and this crime, by the 158th section of the Crimes Act (Comp. Stat. 1793), is made a high misdemeanor. The great difference between the two grades of criminality is demonstrated by the punishment which each carries with it. A misdemeanor is punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or both, while a high misdemeanor is punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,000, and by imprisonment not exceeding seven years, or both. See Crimes Act, §§ 217, 218; Comp. Stat. p. 1812.

The verdict in the present case, therefore, is a specific and not a general one. It has declared the plaintiff in error to be guilty of the misdemeanor charged in the indictment, that is, of the crime set out in the first and second counts of that pleading, and carries with it a liability to the punishment declared against misdemeanors by the statute, viz., a fine, not exceeding $1,000, and imprisonment, not exceeding three years, either or both. To transmute the finding of the jury into a declaration that plaintiff in error was guilty of the high misdemeanor charged in the indictment would be to impose upon him a liability to a fine not exceeding $2,000 and to imprisonment not exceeding seven years. The rule in the Huggins Case, as we read the opinion, was not intended to, and does not, produce so unfortunate a result.

Looking at the whole case, therefore, the situation disclosed is this: The plaintiff in error having been charged in the same indictment with the commission of an ordinary misdemeanor, and also with the commission of a high misdemeanor, the jury convicted him of the lesser offense. That offense was outlawed at the time the indictment was presented, and, consequently, the verdict is without force. The jury, although the question was submitted to it, failed to pass upon his guilt or innocence of the crime charged in the third and fourth counts of the indictment. In this situation the trial court was without legal power to pass sentence upon the plaintiff in error, and consequently the judgment under review must be reversed.

(82 N. J. Law, 181)

STATE v. SAMUELS.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. July 31, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — 785(16)—INSTRUCTIONS — "FALSE STATEMENT" — "UNTRUE STATEMENT."

It is error to instruct that, if the jury believes any witness has made a false statement as to material fact bearing on the issues, it may disregard all or the false part of his testimony; the words "false statement" and "untrue statement" being synonymous, and neither implying willfulness.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, False Statement.]

2. WITNESSES — 817(2) — CREDIBILITY — FALSUS IN UNO.

The rule, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," is applicable only when there is willful falsehood.

Error to Court of Quarter Sessions, Atlantic County.

Jesse Samuels was convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses, and he brings error. Reversed, and venire de novo awarded.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

Bourgeois & Coulomb, of Atlantic City, for plaintiff in error. Charles S. Moore, of Atlantic City, for the State.

KALISCH, J. The plaintiff in error was convicted in the Atlantic county quarter sessions upon an indictment charging him with having obtained money under false pretenses. From the judgment on this conviction he has appealed to this court. The case is before us on assignments of errors, and under section 136 of the Criminal Procedure Act (Act June 14, 1898 [P. L. p. 915]).

[1] This judgment must be reversed for an error in the judge's charge prejudicial to the defendant. The fifth assignment of error is founded on an exception taken, by counsel of defendant, to that portion of the charge wherein the judge instructed the jury, as follows:

"If you believe that any witness has made a false statement with respect to any material fact bearing on the issue involved in this case, you may disregard all of the testimony of such witness, or you may disregard such portion of the testimony as you believe to be untrue, and accept as truthful that which remains."

This was clearly an erroneous and harmful declaration of the rule, and was condemned by this court in State v. Dugan, 84 N. J. Law, 606, 607, 89 Atl. 691, affirmed by Court of Errors and Appeals, 85 N. J. Law, 730, 89 Atl. 1135.

Counsel of the state attempts to defend the legal accuracy of this instruction by insisting that the present case is to be distinguished from the Dugan Case, supra, in that, in the case at bar, the court did not use the word "untrue," which was the term used in the Dugan Case, but used the term "false statement." This latter declaration is but partially accurate. While it is true that the trial judge used the term "false statement," he defined what he meant thereby when in immediate connection therewith he told the jury:

"You may disregard all of the testimony of such witness, or you may disregard such portion of the testimony as you believe to be untrue and accept as truthful that which remains."

For the state it is further insisted that the term "false statement" is entirely different in meaning from the words "untrue statement"; that the word "false" as here used generally imports willfulness. No reason is advanced for this assertion. We find no such distinction recognized by lexicographers. "False" and "untrue," as adjectives, are stated by them to be synonymous terms. The standard dictionaries give to these words, as adjectives, the same signification. Whether or not in common usage of the term "false statement" or "untrue statement" connotes "willfully and knowingly" is unimportant. If there is such an implication there can be no substantial differentiation arising from the terms used, because it requires the same conjunction of will to make a conscious untrue statement as it does a conscious false statement. In either case, however, willfulness is not inherent, but a condition or state of mind preceding the making of the conscious false or untrue statement. It is therefore of the utmost importance when using the term "false statement" in a legal proceeding not to permit the phrase to bear the import of willfully false, because whether or not it was willfully false becomes a question of fact for the jury to decide in passing upon the credibility of the witness regarding his entire testimony.

[2] Prof. Wigmore, in discussing the maxim, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," in volume 2, par. 1013, of his excellent treatise on the Law of Evidence, says:

"The notion behind the maxim is that though a person may err in memory or observation or skill upon one point, and yet be competent upon others, yet a person who once deliberately misstates, one who goes contrary to his own knowledge or belief, is equally likely to do the same thing repeatedly, and is not to be reckoned with at all; hence it is essential to the application of the maxim that there should have been a conscious falsehood."

On this same subject the text in 40 Cyc. 2588, 2589, reads as follows:

"The fact that a witness has sworn falsely to a material fact does not authorize the disregarding of the rest of his testimony where the falsehood is due to mistake and not to willfulness. The mere falsity of the statement does not warrant an imputation of willful perjury, where it might reasonably have been the result of a mistake."

The cases seem to be in harmony on the point that the application of the rule, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," can only be properly invoked when the false testimony or statement is willfully or knowingly or intentionally given or made, concerning a material fact in the case, and that an instruction to a jury that, if a witness has made a false statement or testified falsely, without qualifying it by willfully, knowingly, or unintentionally relating to a material fact in the case, the jury may reject all or any portion of the testimony given by such witness is erroneous. Ducharme v. Holyoke St. Ry. Co., 203 Mass. 384, 89 N. E. 561; Chicago & S. L. R. Co. v. Kline, 220 Ill. 334, 77 N. E. 229; Prater v. State, 85 N. Y. 373; Panton v. People, 114 Ill. 505, 2 N. E. 411; Childs v. State, 78 Ala. 93; Prater v. State, 107 Ala. 26, 18 South. 238; Smith v. State (Ala. App.) 75 South. 627.

The case of State v. Martin, 77 N. J. Law, p. 658, 73 Atl. 548, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 507, 134 Am. St. Rep. 814, 18 Ann. Cas. 986, Court of Errors and Appeals, relied on by counsel of the state, as supporting his contention, does not lay down a rule contrary to that which is expressed in the text-books and cases above cited. An examination of the case last referred to shows that the question here discussed was not raised, and that, when Mr. Chief Justice Gummere, in speaking for the court, in the course of his opinion said that, the jury having found "they had testified falsely, upon this material part of the case, it was justified in disbelieving their statement that Clara H. Woodward was the person whose money was loaned," he was giving a simple description of what the jury found upon the evidence, and not attempting to formulate any rule for the guidance of a jury. Besides, the expression used does not exclude the notion that the jury, in finding that the witnesses testified falsely, was controlled by the fact that the witnesses did so consciously.

The California cases, to which allusion has been made as holding the contrary view to that adopted here, by us, are, in the first place controlled by a statute peculiar to the state of California; and, secondly, the construction placed upon the word "false" by the courts of that state, when applying the rule of the statute, appears to us to be against the decided weight of the judicial opinion of the courts of this country. But we need pursue this subject no farther. We have already sufficiently pointed out that, even if the term "false statement" connotes "willfully false," the same cannot be said of the term "untrue," yet, nevertheless, the trial judge, in plain words, instructed the jury that it could disregard such portion of the testimony as it believed to be untrue, and accept as truthful that which remains. Having reached the result that the judgment under review must be reversed for the error in the judge's charge, we find it unnecessary to express any opinion upon the other matters, assigned as errors.

The judgment is reversed, and a venire de novo awarded.

(22 N. J. Law, 22)

CRUCIBLE STEEL CO. OF AMERICA v.
POLACK TYRE & RUBBER CO.
(No. 46.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §300 — LIVERY STABLE AND GARAGE KEEPERS §2—RE-PAIRS TO MOTOR VEHICLES — LIEN—DUE PROCESS.

Act April 14, 1915 (P. L. p. 556) §§ 1, 2, Comp. St. Supp. p. 898, §§ 7, 8, providing that a garage keeper has a lien on a motor vehicle for storage, repairs, etc., even after it has left his possession and that he can retake it at any time, do not contravene the due process clause of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, § 1.

2. LIVERY STABLE AND GARAGE KEEPERS §
8(3)—REPAIRS FOR MOTOR VEHICLES—LIENS.

Act April 14, 1915 (P. L. p. 556) §§ 1, 2, Comp. St. Supp. p. 898, §§ 7, 8, clearly authorizes a garage keeper to retake a motor vehicle which he has allowed to go out of his possession under his lien.

3. BAILEMENT §18(3)—REPAIRS ON CHATELNS —LIEN—POSSESSION.

At common law one who made repairs on chattels lost his right of lien if he permitted the property to go out of his possession.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §300—LIENS—DUE PROCESS—REPAIRS TO MOTOR VEHICLES.

Act April 14, 1915 (P. L. p. 557) § 2, Comp. St. Supp. p. 898, § 8, does not deprive the owner of a motor vehicle of property without due process of law in violation of Const. U. S. art. 14, § 1, in that it does not provide the time within which one having a lien for repairs, etc., shall sell.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §300—LIENS—DUE PROCESS—MOTOR VEHICLE.

Act April 14, 1915 (P. L. p. 557) § 3, Comp. St. Supp. p. 898, § 9, providing for the sale of a motor vehicle by one having a lien for repairs, etc., does not deprive the owner of property without due process of law in that it does not provide when lienor shall sell.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §161—LIENS—IM-PAIRING OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT—MOTOR VEHICLES.

Act April 14, 1915 (P. L. p. 556), Comp. St. Supp. p. 898, §§ 7-9, giving lien to one making repairs on or storing motor vehicles, etc., even after they have left his possession, was intended to operate prospectively and does not violate Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, par. 1, and Const. N. J. art. 4, § 7, par. 3, as impairing the obligation of contracts.

7. STATUTES §268—CONSTRUCTION.

In the absence of any words expressing a contrary intention, a statute will be construed to operate prospectively.

8. STATUTES §115(1) — TITLE — OBJECT — LIENS.

Act April 14, 1915 (P. L. p. 556) Comp. St. Supp. p. 898, §§ 7-9, entitled "An act for the better protection of garage keepers and automobile repairmen," does not violate Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 4, declaring that every law shall embrace but one object and that shall be expressed in the title.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by the Crucible Steel Company of America against the Polack Tyre & Rubber Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William K. Flanagan, of Newark, for appellant. Kessler & Kessler, of Newark, for appellee.

KALISCH, J. This appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court challenges the constitutionality of an act entitled "An act for the better protection of garage keepers and automobile repairmen" (P. L. 1915, p. 556, §§ 1, 2, 3; Comp. St. Supp. pp. 898, 899, §§ 7-9), which provides as follows:

"1. All persons or corporations engaged in the business of keeping a garage or place for the storage, maintenance, keeping or repair of motor vehicles and in connection therewith stores, maintains, keeps or repairs any motor vehicle or furnishes gasoline, accessories or other supplies therefor at the request or with the consent of the owner or his representative, whether such owner be a conditional vendee or a mortgagor remaining in possession or otherwise, has a lien upon such motor vehicle or any part thereof for the sum due for such storing, maintaining, keeping or repairing of such motor vehicle or for furnishing gasoline, accessories or other supplies therefor, and may without process of law detain such motor vehicle at any time it is lawfully in his possession until such sum is paid.

"2. Any person or corporation acquiring a lien under the provision of section one of this act shall not lose such lien by reason of allowing the motor vehicle or part or parts of the motor vehicle to be removed from the control of the person or corporation having such a lien, and in case a motor vehicle or part or parts are so removed the person or corporation having the said lien may, without further process of law, seize the motor vehicle or part or parts thereof wherever the same is or are found within the state of New Jersey.

"3. All such property so held by any such garage keeper or automobile repairmen shall, after the expiration of thirty days from the date of such detention, be sold at public auction, upon notice of said sale being first published for the space of two weeks in some newspaper circulating in the city, borough, town, township or other municipality, in which said garage keeper or automobile repair shop is situated, also after five days' notice of said sale set up in five of the most public places in said city or township, and the proceeds of said sale shall be applied to the payment of such lien and the expenses of such sale; and the balance, if any remaining, shall be paid to the owner of such property or his representatives; and if the said balance is not claimed by said owner within sixty days after said sale, then the balance to be paid over to the overseer of the poor of the said city or township for the support of the poor.

"4. This act shall take effect immediately. Approved April 14, 1915."

The facts which present the question as to the constitutionality of the act for decision are as follows: The appellant who was the plaintiff below, on January 10, 1916, was the owner of an automobile truck which, among several other trucks, he sold to one George A. Felt by a bill of conditional sale, which instrument provides for weekly payments on account of the purchase price, stipulates that the title and ownership of the truck shall remain in the plaintiff until the whole of the purchase price, or any judgment obtained therefor, shall be fully paid, and covenants that, upon default in the performance of any of the obligations by the vendee, the whole purchase price shall become due and payable, and that the vendor, if it shall elect to do so may take possession of the truck; and the vendee therein authorizes and empowers the vendor to repossess itself of the truck in case he defaults. This bill of conditional sale was recorded in the office of the register of Hudson county on January 13, 1916, and also in the office of the register of Essex county, on April 3, 1916. On May 11, 1916, and at the request of Felt, the conditional vendee defendant, applied four tires to the truck of the value of $427.88. These tires were affixed to the double rear wheels. The wheels themselves to which the tires were applied were delivered to the defendant by the conditional vendee, but the truck itself seems never to have been in the defendant's possession, prior to its being seized by the defendant on August 25, 1916. The vendee, Felt, defaulted in the payment of the installments of the purchase price, and thereupon and on May 18, 1916, the vendor demanded possession of the truck of the vendee, who refused to deliver the same. On the same day the vendor caused the truck to be replevied, and on May 25, 1916, the vendee gave a bill of sale for the truck to the vendor. The replevin action, however, instituted by the vendor was continued, and on July 16, 1916, judgment final was entered in favor of the vendor. On August 25, 1916, the plaintiff being in possession of the truck, to the wheels of which the defendant supplied the tires and made repairs, the defendant seized the same under and by virtue of the provisions of the statute above set forth. On September 13, 1916, the plaintiff brought its action of replevin, and as a defense thereto defendant set up and claimed a lien on the truck by virtue of the provisions of the statute, supra, and filed a counterclaim of $427.88, for the tires supplied and repairs made. The case came on for trial before Speer, J., sitting with a jury, and the facts being uncontroverted, the court, by consent of counsel for the respective parties discharged the jury from a further consideration of the case, reserving the legal question as to the constitutionality of the court for future determination. The learned trial judge subsequently held the act to be constitutional, and gave judgment for defendant against the plaintiff, on the counterclaim.

At the outset for the sake of clarity it is essential to note that the facts of the present case invoked, solely, the application of the first two sections of the statute impugned as unconstitutional, owing to the fact that the plaintiff replevied the truck from the defendant a few days after its seizure by the latter, thereby raising the single issue of the validity of the lien, authorized by these sections.

The third section of the act provides a method of procedure to be pursued by the lienor, in case he detains the property for the enforcement of his lien. It is plain from a fair reading of the second section of the statute that when the owner or representative of such owner fails to pay for the repairs or supplies and demands his property and the lienor refuses to surrender it, unless the charges for the repairs thereon or supplies thereto are first paid, that a detention within the meaning of the statute takes place. Or if the lienor seizes such property after it has been out of his possession and holds it for the purpose of enforcing his lien thereon, it likewise is a detention within the meaning of the second section of the statute.

In the present case, the defendant seized the property on which it had acquired a lien, but which it had let go out of its possession; and, before the time had arrived for the foreclosure of the lien in the manner provided by the third section of the act, the plaintiff, owner of the property, caused it to be replevied. Thus, it is obvious that we are not concerned with the validity of the third section of the act, unless the first and second sections thereof are so interwoven with and dependent on the third that the latter cannot be exercised without defeating the main purpose and general intent of the Legislature in enacting the statute. The rule in this regard is well stated by Chief Justice Gummers, in State Bd. of Health v. Schwarz Bros. Co., 86 N. J. Law, 170, 90 Atl. 1061, speaking for this court, and in discussing the constitutionality of the act drawn into question in that case, on page 172 of 86 N. J. Law, on page 1061 of 90 Atl., says:

"An act is not necessarily void because it contains an unconstitutional feature. Where the main object intended to be effected by it is constitutional, and the objectionable feature can be rescinded without at all affecting that object, it is entirely settled that the statute is operative for all purposes except that in which it comes in conflict with the fundamental law. This rule has been so frequently declared and acted upon by the courts of this state as to be entirely familiar to every practitioner."

With this rule of statutory construction in mind, we now approach the consideration of the various grounds of appeal upon which counsel of appellant makes his attack upon the constitutionality of the statute.

[1] In support of the broad contention that the statute is unconstitutional, counsel adds a general assertion that the act permits the deprivation of property without due process of law in contravention of section 1, art. 14, of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The gist of the argument to support this claim is that the statute in permitting a person, who has acquired a lien upon a chattel and lets it go out of his possession, to retake the same wherever he may find it in this state, might prejudicially affect the rights of a third party who, ignorant of the existing lien, had in good faith and for a valuable consideration acquired a property interest therein. But no such case is before us for decision. We cannot indulge the presumption that a court will place a construction upon the statute so that it will operate to deprive a person of his property without due process of law. There is nothing in the language of the act itself from which any such legislative declaration or intent may be properly inferred.

Counsel of appellant seems to have taken it for granted that the failure of the statute to make any provision for registration of the transaction in some official book of record, where a chattel to which a lien has been attached is permitted by the lienor to go out of his possession, invalidates the statute and renders it unconstitutional. This is clearly not so. The cases cited in the appellant's brief support no such proposition, and are not in point. The case of Fishell v. Morris, 57 Conn. 547, 18 Atl. 717, 6 L. R. A. 82, rather tends to support the validity of the statute than otherwise. In 57 Conn. on page 552, 18 Atl. on page 718, Andrews, C. J., discussing the statute there under review, says:

"It says that the animals, naming the kind, 'shall be subject to a lien for the price of such keeping in favor of the person keeping the same until such debt is paid.' This is the exact idea of the common law—the right of a creditor to detain the property of his debtor in his possession till the debt is paid."

[2] Reading sections 1 and 2 of the act under consideration together, it is clear from their language that the authority conferred upon the lienor to retain "such motor vehicle at any time it is lawfully in his possession until such sum is paid" includes a motor vehicle which the lienor has allowed to go out of his possession and subsequently retakes to enforce his lien. It is to be observed that the statute is in some respects declaratory of the common-law right of lien. It extends this right of lien to other conditions in business life than those that existed at common law. Thus, for example, it gives the garage keeper a lien for the storing and maintaining of motor vehicles, a present popular means of conveyance unknown to the common law, and which has in a great measure supplanted the horse and wagon and revolutionized the mode of transportation; it gives a right of lien for furnishing gasoline, accessories or other supplies for motor vehicles, for which no right of lien could have properly existed at common law. The innovation which the statute makes in the common law is neither startling nor novel in so far as it enlarges and extends the right of lien to conditions not included at common law, but is in line with the natural progress of the law to meet necessities arising from new business conditions; and the wisdom of this species of legislation is not a court question, but is peculiarly within the province of the lawmaking power to determine.

In White v. Smith, 44 N. J. Law, 105, on page 106 (43 Am. Rep. 347), Depue, J., says: "The effort to subject common-law liens to uniform rules must necessarily be unsuccessful. Derived from the civil law, and founded on considerations of equity and justice, the rules by which they are governed vary with the grounds on which such rights are given."

The only radical change from the common law effected by the statute under consideration is that, in the cases mentioned in the statute, the lienor does not lose his right of lien by permitting the property to which his lien has attached to go out of his possession, but he may retake the same and enforce his lien.

[3] At common law the lienor lost his right of lien if he permitted the property to go out of his possession.

What vested right of a person having a property interest in a motor vehicle is violated, by subjecting such vehicle to the right of lien, irrespective of the fact whether the lienor retains possession of the vehicle, has not been made so clear to us? The prime object of the legislation we are considering is to secure the payment of a debt incurred, by the owner or his representative, for the benefit of his property and the use to which it is put. It is therefore bordering upon the absurd to contend that this legislation invades property rights or authorizes the taking of property without due process of law. The fact that a third party, ignorant of the lien upon the property, might in good faith and for a valuable consideration acquire interest therein, while such property was out of the possession of the lienor and in the possession of the owner or his representative, cannot, as has already been observed, affect the validity of the statute, as this was a matter falling purely within the exercise of the wisdom and judgment of the Legislature when the law was enacted.

What was expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Provident Institution, etc., v. Mayor, etc., of Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506, on page 516, 5 Sup. Ct. 612, on page 615, 28 L. Ed. 1102, speaking through Bradley, J., is apposite to the question under consideration. The learned justice said:

"Even if the water rents in question cannot be regarded as taxes, nor as special assessments for benefits arising from a public improvement, it is still by no means clear that the giving to them a priority of lien over all other incumbrances upon the property served with the water would be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. The law which gives to the last maritime liens priority over earlier liens in point of time is based on principles of acknowledged justice. That which is given for the preservation or betterment of the common pledge is in natural equity fairly entitled to the first rank in the tableau of claims. Mechanics' lien laws stand on the same basis of natural justice. We are not prepared to say that a legislative act, giving preference to such liens even over those already created by mortgage, judgment, or attachment, would be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States."

[4] It is further urged that, since the second section of the statute declares that the property shall be subject to a lien until the charges on the property are paid, it therefore virtually deprives the owner of his property, as there is no obstacle in the way of the lienor to prevent him from retaining the property for an indefinite time. But this reasoning has not the merit even of being specious. The owner is not deprived of his property, except by his own act. He has the privilege of paying the charges on the property and thus discharge the lien. He may, if he sees fit, contest the validity of the lien by bringing an action of replevin or trover, as was done in this case.

The legal situation does not differ from that existing at common law.

In the absence of any statute or agreement between the parties conferring the power upon the lienor to sell the chattel under the lien, the chattel cannot be lawfully sold, as no power of sale is implied from the transaction itself. Doane v. Russell, 3 Gray (Mass.) 382; opinion per Shaw, C. J., Briggs v. Boston & L. R. Co., 6 Allen (Mass.) 246, 83 Am. Dec. 626; Aldine Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 118 Mich. 162, 76 N. W. 371, 42 L. R. A. 581, 74 Am. St. Rep. 380. In this last-cited case, Hooker, J., on page 534 of 42 L. R. A., after quoting from leading English and American cases on the subject, says:

"While the doctrine of these cases—i. e., that the creditor cannot sell the property—is indisputable, there was no impediment to the recovery of judgment and sale of the property, as well as any other property of the debtor on execution."

[8] Keeping in view that the object sought by the statute is for the better protection of garage keepers and automobile repairmen, it is manifest that sections 1 and 2 can fully accomplish this purpose, and that the statute is complete and workable without the aid of section 3. Therefore, from what has been said, it is apparent that we are not required to pass upon the legal efficacy of the third section of the act; but, nevertheless, it may prove useful to say in this connection that the ground of attack made upon it, by appellant, that it is unconstitutional because it leaves the time indefinite when the lienor is required to sell the property held or seized, is not sustained by a plain and fair interpretation of this section. The section expressly provides that such property shall "after the expiration of thirty days from the date of such detention," that is, from the time the owner refuses to pay the lien charges or from the time such property is seized (as the case may be), after being out of the lienor's possession, be sold at public auction, upon notice, etc. It does not require personal notice to be given to the owner, but provides for notice by publication, etc.

There is no material difference in this respect from the provision of section 6 of the act concerning distress for rent, which has been on our statute books, almost in its original form, since 1796. Pat. Law, p. 173; Nix Dig. p. 240; Revision of 1877, p. 309; 2 Comp. Stats. p. 1940.

Evidently the 80 days required of the lienor to hold the chattel after the detention of it has actually taken place is for the purpose of affording the owner an opportunity to pay the lien charges, or if he intends to dispute the same to resort to a writ of replevin. In the distress act 10 days is given to the tenant or owner of the goods to replevy the same. After the expiration of the 10 days, the landlord may take steps to sell the property distrained upon; but the statute is silent, as here, how soon after the expiration of the 10 days such steps shall be taken. In either case a fair construction for the purpose of carrying into effect the legislative intent would be that the requirements of the section must be performed with due diligence and within a reasonable time.

[9, 7] It is next asserted that the statute is unconstitutional in that it is a law impairing the obligation of contracts contrary to article 1, sec. 10, par. 1, of the Constitution of the United States, as well as to article 4, sec. 7, par. 3, of the Constitution of New Jersey.

This objection is without merit. The transaction, under consideration, occurred after the passage of the statute. In the absence of any words expressing a contrary intention, a statute will be construed to operate prospectively.

In Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 9 Sup. Ct. 134, 32 L. Ed. 491, it was held:

"1. State statutes, limiting the right of a creditor to enforce his claims against the property of his debtor, which are in existence at the time a contract is made, are not void as impairing the obligation of the contract.

"2. The inhibition of the Constitution against impairing the obligation of contracts is wholly prospective; the states may legislate, as to contracts thereafter made, as they see fit. It is only those in existence when the hostile law is passed that are protected from its effect.

"3. The established construction of the Constitution of the United States against the impairing the obligation of contracts requires that statutes of this class shall be construed to be part of all contracts made when they are in existence, and therefore cannot be held to impair their obligation."

The same court, in Cross Lake, etc., Club v. Louisiana, 224 U. S. 632, at page 638, 32 Sup. Ct. 577, 56 L. Ed. 924, at page 928, said that the clause in the federal Constitution providing that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts as its terms disclose is not directed against all impairment of contract obligations, but only such as result from a subsequent exertion of the legislative power of the state.

[8] Lastly, counsel of appellant attacks the constitutionality of the act upon the ground that it violates article 4, sec. 7, par. 4, of the state Constitution, which declares that every law shall embrace but one object and that shall be expressed in the title.

This contention is plainly without merit. The title of the act sets out fully its general object. No more than this is required. In State Board of Health v. Phillipsburg, 83 N. J. Eq. 408, 91 Atl. 901, Walker, Chancellor, held:

"While the Constitution, art. 4, § 7, pl. 4, provides that 'every law shall embrace but one object and that shall be expressed in the title,' the meaning is that the leading subject of a statute should be fairly expressed in a statute; but the means or instruments by which the general purpose to be attained, or matters merely incidental to it are not a necessary part of the title, the words 'subject' and 'object' with regard to this constitutional provision having come to be regarded as synonymous."

This case was affirmed, especially upon this point, by this court, in 85 N. J. Eq. 161, 96 Atl. 62.

As a result of the views expressed herein on the constitutionality of the act assailed by the appellant, the judgment entered in the court below in favor of the defendant below against the plaintiff below, on the counterclaim, is affirmed, with costs.

(92 N. J. Law, 149)

JAMES v. DELAWARE, L. & W. R. CO. et al.
(No. 59.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRESPASSERS ON RAILROADS—CROSSING ACCIDENTS.

Whether, when a person who enters upon a railroad company's right of way as a trespasser and proceeds along that right of way until he reaches a public highway over the railroad, which he intends to cross, he then ceases to be a trespasser and becomes a traveler on the highway when crossing the railroad tracks thereon, quere.

2. RAILROADS §307(5)—CROSSING ACCIDENTS—TRESPASSERS.

The Highway Crossing Act of 1909, Act March 31, 1909 (P. L. p. 54), 3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 4238, § 36a, is intended for the safety and protection of travelers upon the public highway intending to cross over the railroad company's right of way and tracks, and not for the benefit of those who have gotten upon the right of way and within the safety gates without approaching them on the highway.

3. RAILROADS §307(5)—CROSSING ACCIDENT—TRESPASSERS.

The Highway Crossing Act of 1909, Act April 14, 1909 (P. L. p. 137), 3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 4238, § 36b, so far as the safety gates feature thereof is concerned, is intended for the safety and protection of travelers upon the public highway intending to cross over the railroad company's right of way and tracks, and not for the benefit of those who have gotten upon the right of way and within the safety gates without approaching them on the highway.

4. RAILROADS §307(4)—CROSSING ACCIDENT—SAFETY GATES.

The Highway Crossing Act of 1910, Act April 12, 1910 (P. L. p. 490), 3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 4238, § 36c, does not apply in the case of an accident happening upon a railroad crossing where safety gates are installed.

5. RAILROADS §327(3)—CROSSING ACCIDENTS—DUE CARE—LOOKING AND LISTENING.

Where a person enters upon a railroad company's right of way as a trespasser and proceeds along that right of way until he reaches a highway crossing and then attempts to cross the railroad tracks on the highway and is injured, he is subject to the common-law duty of looking and listening, and, if guilty of contributory negligence, is not entitled to recover damages.

6. NEGLIGENCE §65—"CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE"—ELEMENTS.

"Contributory negligence" is present in a given case when the injured person by his own negligence has contributed to the injury in such a way that, but for his negligence, he would have received no injury from the negligence of the other party.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contributory Negligence.]

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by Daisy B. James against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Alexander Simpson and George S. Hobart, both of Jersey City, for appellant. Maximilian M. Stallman, of Newark, for appellees.

WALKER, Ch. The plaintiff-appellant sued the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company, the Morris & Essex Railroad Company, James F. Moore, and Joseph I. Case for damages to herself, resulting from being run down by a train of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company, lessee of the Morris & Essex Railroad Company, which train was operated by the defendant-respondent James F. Moore, locomotive engineer; the allegation being that the defendant-respondent Joseph I. Case, who was flagman at the crossing where the injury occurred, neglected to close the safety gates at the highway known as Greenwood avenue in East Orange, N. J., before the plaintiff was in a position of danger. The action was tried before Judge Speer and a jury at the Hudson circuit. At the close of the plaintiff's case the court directed a nonsuit in favor of the Morris & Essex Railroad Company, and at the close of the whole case directed a verdict in favor of the remaining defendants. From the judgment thereupon entered the plaintiff has appealed to this court.

In the statement of the case, with which the brief for the plaintiff-appellant is prefaced, it is asserted, and may be conceded, that there was evidence from which the jury might have found the following facts:

At the point where the railroad crosses Greenwood avenue there are two tracks, one known as the east-bound track, on which trains run to New York; the other known as the west-bound track, on which trains run from New York. The highway crosses the tracks at right angles. About 300 feet to the west of the westerly line of Greenwood avenue is located what is known as the "east-bound station," where passengers board trains for New York. This station is located on the southerly side of the railroad tracks. There are crossing gates at the highway, one located on the northerly, the other on the southerly, side thereof, extending all the way across the highway, including the sidewalks on either side thereof. At the time of the accident a flagman was on duty in charge of the gates. Plaintiff had a return ticket on the line of the defendant railroad, and on the day of the accident had been visiting at East Orange and was intending to return to New York. For that purpose she was on her way to the east-bound station when the accident happened. On her way to the station plaintiff crossed a vacant lot located on the northerly side of, and adjacent to, the northerly right of way line, about 400 feet east of Greenwood avenue. After crossing this lot, she turned to the west and walked along a path on the right of way, which ran parallel with the tracks and 5 or 10 feet distant therefrom. She continued along this path in a westerly direction until she reached the public highway known as Greenwood avenue. When she reached the highway the crossing gates were up. She walked a short distance to a point almost in the center of the highway and then turned to her left for the purpose of crossing the tracks and proceeded west to the east-bound station. Just as the plaintiff turned to pass over the tracks, she saw an east-bound train coming into the station, and, thinking that this was the train which she was to take to New York, she started to hurry over the crossing. While her attention was attracted to this train, a west-bound train approached from the opposite direction, moving very slowly, towards and over the crossing. This west-bound train gave no signal or warning of its approach until it was about 30 or 40 feet away, at which time a sharp blast of the whistle was sounded. Plaintiff was struck by this west-bound train while she was in the center of the crossing. This train was moving not faster than 8 miles an hour and could have been stopped within about 20 feet. As a result of the accident plaintiff received very serious personal injuries.

The defendant Moore, was, as stated, the engineer who was operating the locomotive by which the train was drawn. It was alleged that he was negligent in that he failed to give any signal of the approach of the train as required by the statute of this state, and did not keep a proper lookout. The defendant Case was employed by the railroad company as a flagman at the crossing, and it was alleged that he was negligent in that he did not close the gates or warn the plaintiff of the approach of the train.

It ought, perhaps, to be stated that plaintiff was the only one of several witnesses who testified the gates were up; the others said they were down. There was evidence also that the bell on the engine which struck the plaintiff was rung, as required by the statute; but this was disputed, largely by negative evidence. And there was evidence showing that the train was running about 20 miles an hour. These, under our decisions, were jury questions; but the plaintiff was not entitled to go to the jury, as will hereafter appear.

The nonsuit as to the Morris & Essex

Railroad Company is not before us for consideration. Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant concedes that at the trial there was no proof that that defendant had anything to do with the operation of the train which ran the plaintiff down.

The principal reliance of the plaintiff-appellant for a reversal of the judgment in this case is the contention that the railroad crossing statutes of 1909, chapters 35 and 96, apply, and that they required the trial judge to submit the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence to the jury. This the trial judge refused to do, holding that neither statute was applicable, and that the plaintiff crossed the railroad tracks subject to the common-law duty of looking and listening and doing those things which would make looking and listening reasonably effective, observing that it was manifest that the plaintiff had not performed, or attempted to perform, that duty, because if she had looked in the slightest degree she must have seen the train which struck her, unless some temporary obstruction interfered, in which event she should have delayed crossing until an opportunity was afforded to make the required observation. In this court plaintiff-appellant argues also that the crossing act of 1910, chapter 278, applies; that under that act also the case was required to be submitted to the jury. This point appears not to have been made in the trial court.

The grounds of appeal are: (1) That the trial judge should have submitted the issues, so far as they related to the defendants the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company, James F. Moore, and Joseph I. Case, to the jury; and (2) that whether the last-named defendants were negligent, and whether their negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and whether such injury was caused by contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, should have been submitted to the jury.

The points made on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant in the argument before us were: (1) That there was evidence to go to the jury on the question as to whether the engineer was negligent; (2) there was evidence to go to the jury on the question as to whether the crossing gateman was negligent; (3) under the crossing statutes of 1909 it was the duty of the trial judge to submit to the jury the question of whether the plaintiff was chargeable with contributory negligence, and under this head it was argued that the grade crossing act of 1910 applies; and (4) plaintiff was not a trespasser at the time of the accident. These contentions will be considered in their inverse order.

[1] Before proceeding to this, however, it is pertinent to remark that the question presented on this record, namely, a claim of liability of a railroad company for an injury at a grade crossing where safety gates are installed, to one who got onto the crossing, not over the highway past the gates when up, but by getting onto the crossing inside of the company's right of way by coming down alongside of the tracks from a point beyond the highway, is one of novel impression; and therefore the cases in our courts in which the effect of the crossing acts were considered in relation to accidents are not helpful in its solution, because none of them involved any such question. See Tischman v. Erie R. Co., 81 N. J. Law, 268, 81 Atl. 114; Petit v. W. J. & S. R. Co., 86 N. J. Law, 298, 90 Atl. 1100; Fernetti v. W. J. & S. R. Co., 87 N. J. Law, 268, 93 Atl. 576; Brown v. Erie R. Co., 87 N. J. Law, 487, 91 Atl. 1023, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 496; Waibel v. W. J. & S. R. Co., 87 N. J. Law, 578, 94 Atl. 951; Hatch v. Erie R. Co., 88 N. J. Law, 545, 97 Atl. 38; Schnackenberg v. D. L. & W. R. Co., 89 N. J. Law, 311, 98 Atl. 266; Kratz v. D. L. & W. R. Co., 90 N. J. Law, 210, 100 Atl. 208.

There are, however, cases in other jurisdictions bearing upon the question at issue here, notably Matthews v. P. & R. R. Co., 161 Pa. 28, 28 Atl. 936, and C. R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Eininger, 114 Ill. 79, 29 N. E. 196.

In Matthews v. P. & R. R. Co. it is stated that for a long time the railroad company had maintained safety gates on each side of the crossing where the accident occurred, and the court said in its opinion, at page 81 of 161 Pa., at page 937 of 28 Atl.:

"If the gates were up inviting him to cross, and no warning was given by the watchman, notwithstanding the difficulties of seeing and hearing, it would have been for the jury to determine whether he exercised care according to the circumstances. But if a trespasser reached the middle of that crossing from the ties either up or down the railroad, he is in no sense of the word a traveler from the street approaching danger, and about to exercise a right common to the public, that of crossing the railroad. The watchman will not be on the lookout to warn him, nor will the gates be lowered to stop him. These safeguards are to keep people from going on the crossing on the approach of trains, not to warn them to get off. The deceased was bound to know the purpose of the gates and the watchman, and that they were not there to guard against danger to those using the crossing from the direction of outgoing and incoming trains."

In O. R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Eininger, the question was with reference to a flagman, not as to gates, at a street crossing over a railroad. But it is not perceived that there is any difference in principle between the two; both flagmen and gates are for the purpose of warning the traveling public as to the danger of, and preventing them from, crossing over a railroad where it intersects a public highway. The court said in its opinion, at page 81 of 114 Ill., at page 197 of 29 N. E.:

"Flagmen are for the protection of persons crossing railroad tracks, and are not for the benefit of persons walking along a railroad track, employing it as a footpath."

While the plaintiff's injury in the Eininger Case occurred at a street crossing, it does not appear that the injured person was attempting to cross the street where the accident occurred, but was going along the railroad company's right of way. While this circumstance was more unfavorable to the plaintiff in that case than the situation in the Matthews Case, where the injured person was attempting to cross the highway, having gotten upon it from within and along the railroad right of way some distance from the highway where the accident occurred, still it has a distinct bearing upon the question as to whether a railroad company owes the duty of warning or protection, at a highway crossing, to a person who goes deliberately upon the right of way without approaching it on the highway where the safety device, whatever it may be, is maintained. The facts in the Matthews Case make its doctrine particularly apposite in the case at bar, for there, as here, the injured person went upon the highway from within the company's right of way upon which he trespassed at a point beyond the highway crossing.

1. As to whether plaintiff was a trespasser at the time of the accident: Counsel for defendants-respondents argues that the plaintiff was a trespasser upon the tracks by reasons of the provisions of section 55 of the General Railroad Act, Comp. Stat. p. 4245, which provides:

"It shall not be lawful for any person other than those connected with or employed upon the railroad to walk along the tracks of any railroad except when the same shall be laid upon a public highway; if any person shall be injured by an engine or car while walking, standing or playing on any railroad, or by jumping on or off a car while in motion, such person shall be deemed to have contributed to the injury sustained, and shall not recover therefor any damages from the company owning or operating said railroad: Provided, that this section shall not apply to the crossing of a railroad by any person at any lawful public or private crossing."

Counsel for plaintiff-appellant argue that she was not a trespasser because she was within the proviso of the statute which is that the section shall not apply to the crossing of a railroad by any person at any lawful public crossing, and that there is no dispute but that at the time of the accident and for an appreciable period prior thereto the plaintiff was in the position of a highway traveler about to pass over the railroad crossing.

Assuming, although the plaintiff entered upon the defendant railroad company's right of way as a trespasser and had proceeded along that right of way until she reached the highway crossing, that then she ceased to be a trespasser and became a traveler on the public highway, still that fact would not entitle her to recover if neither of the grade crossing statutes of 1906 applied, for, assuming her right to be upon the crossing at the time she was injured, she was guilty of contributory negligence and may not escape the consequences thereof, unless that question was required to be submitted to the jury by the operation of the legislative acts mentioned. Their applicability or nonapplicability to the case sub judice will now be considered.

[2] 2. As to whether the crossing statutes of 1909 applied: The first, chapter 35, Comp. Stat. p. 4238, § 36a, is as follows:

"Whenever any railroad company shall have assumed to establish and maintain what are known as safety gates at any railroad crossing in this state, and a person is killed or injured at any such crossing by being struck by a locomotive or train when attempting to cross the tracks at a time when such gates are not down, as required by any statute giving the railroad the right to run through an incorporated city at any rate of speed they see fit, upon compliance with the provisions of such statute, that in all such cases the question whether the person so killed or injured, upon attempting to cross such railroad crossing, at a time when the safety gates at such crossing are not down, was or was not guilty of contributory negligence shall be a question to be determined by the jury, in all actions brought to recover damages for such loss of life or personal injury."

Now, the first provision is that whenever any railroad shall have established and maintained safety gates at a railroad crossing. Here is manifested an intention to provide safety by the gates themselves, and the only rational safety thus sought to be established, as we view it, is to prevent persons going by—that is, past—the gates when down and getting onto the tracks in a situation of danger. The gates were, in other words, installed so that, when down, persons would be prevented from going onto the tracks until they were raised and the way thus demonstrated to be clear and free from danger. We think it would be doing violence to the legislative intent, clearly manifested, to hold that the operation of these gates was intended as well for the benefit of those already within them, and who therefore could not be stopped by them, as for those approaching outside of them and who could be effectively warned by their being lowered. The further provision that, in all cases where persons are killed or injured at any such crossing by being struck by a locomotive or train when attempting to cross the tracks when such gates are not down, the question of contributory negligence shall be determined by the jury, clearly contemplates a case where the person crossing is a traveler on the highway, and who, on the highway, has reached the side line of the company's right of way for the purpose of crossing over its tracks and who would certainly be warned of his danger and prevented from going upon the tracks by means of the lowered gates. It cannot be said that the operation of gates behind a person already on the railroad right of way and in the act of crossing the tracks could afford him any protection. In this situation the person on the right of way could see approaching trains as well, if not better than, the gateman whose duty it is to lower the gates upon the approach of trains.

The title of the statute is "an act relative to accidents at railroad crossings." Thus in the title, as well as in the enacting clause, the word "crossing" is prominent and illuminating. It contemplates crossings all the way over the railroad company's right of way and tracks upon the highway and not some part of them inside the outside lines of the right of way. And the act was not intended to benefit a person, who, through a trespass upon defendant's right of way, or otherwise, has gotten onto the highway crossing within the outside lines of the gates which were installed for the protection of travelers on the highway and are not intended as signals to those who have gotten within them without approaching them on the highway.

[3] The second, chapter 96, Comp. Stat. p. 4236, § 36b, is as follows:

"Whenever any railroad whose right of way crosses any public street or highway, has or shall install any safety gates, bell or other device designed to protect the traveling public at any crossing or has placed at such crossing a flagman, any person or persons approaching any such crossing so protected as aforesaid, shall, during such hours as posted notice at such crossing shall specify, be entitled to assume that such safety gate or other warning appliances are in good and proper order, and will be duly and properly operated unless a written notice bearing the inscription 'out of order' be posted in a conspicuous place at such crossing, or that the said flagman will guard said crossing with sufficient care whereby such traveler or travelers will be warned of any danger in passing over said crossing, and in any action, brought for injuries to person or property, or for death caused at any crossing protected as aforesaid, no plaintiff shall be barred of the action because of his (the) failure of the person injured or killed to stop, look and listen before passing over said crossing."

What has been said above with reference to chapter 35 is generally applicable to chapter 96. Here again the manifest legislative intent was to protect the traveling public at any crossing; that is, to prevent a member of the public from continuing traveling beyond a safety gate extending over the highway crossing along the edge of a railroad company's right of way, when down, which would give warning of danger and actually prevent a person from going onto the tracks and getting into a place of danger, except by the most deliberate acts on his part. The title of this act is "an act with reference to the degree of care necessary to be used by travelers over railroad crossings protected by flagmen or safety appliances or both." The clear legislative intent in this title is to provide protection for travelers upon the public streets and highways, and it could not have been in the contemplation of the lawmaking body that the act they were passing was one which would put a premium upon the recklessness or carelessness of persons who gain access to a railroad's right of way on a highway crossing without having, as a traveler on the highway, gotten onto the railroad by walking or driving on the highway up to it. Further, as to this statute: During such hours as posted notice "at such crossing" shall specify, the traveling public, unless a written notice "out of order" be posted at a conspicuous place at such crossing, shall be entitled to assume that the gates are in good and proper order and will be duly and properly operated. Where is this notice to be posted to carry out the legislative intent? Manifestly not inside the gates, but outside of them facing down the highway so that those approaching on the street and intending to cross the right of way and tracks may see and look out for their safety accordingly. The warning about the gates being out of order is intended for the protection of such persons as approach them and not for those who have ignored their presence by going onto the tracks without regarding them.

The accident to the plaintiff-appellant which is the subject of this suit was first made a cause for action in the District Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey, where, after trial, the plaintiff had judgment, which was reversed in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. In the case on appeal, D. L. & W. R. Co. v. James, 241 Fed. 344, 154 C. C. A. 224, the court said:

"Some 400 feet east of the crossing, Miss James had entered on the railroad's right of way and walked westwardly alongside of the track. In so walking along the track, she was, by the New Jersey statute quoted in the margin (Comp. Stat. p. 4245, § 55), a trespasser. But while this was her then status, it is clear that, when she left the side path and entered on the street crossing and attempted to cross, she ceased to be a trespasser. Nevertheless, the fact of her prior trespass is not to be overlooked, for by such precedent trespass she was enabled to reach the crossing inside the gates, which she would have had to pass had she come up by a proper approach on Greenwood avenue. It follows therefore that by her violation of the statute of New Jersey she brought herself into a position where she had deprived herself of the protection which another statute of New Jersey, also quoted in the margin (Comp. Stat. p. 4238, § 36b), was designed to give to those traveling on Greenwood avenue as they approached such crossing. Indeed, it is evident that it was the plaintiff's own trespass, and not the alleged non-closure of the gates, that brought her inside the gate line."

Quotation is made from this opinion to show that the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, with reference to this very accident and upon what must have been substantially the same state of facts in evidence as appears from observations in the opinion, also held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of the New Jersey statute, and we may say statutes for the protection of persons crossing over highways over railroads, because of her getting onto the right of way not over the highway but as a trespasser, in the first place at least, by going onto the railroad's right of way and following it down to the crossing. And we agree with that court that, even if she were not a trespasser because upon the highway crossing at the time the accident occurred, still, as her precedent trespass enabled her to reach the crossing inside the gates, it is not to be overlooked. As to whether when she reached the crossing she ceased to be a trespasser, we find it unnecessary to decide.

The rationale of this subject can perhaps be best expressed in the language of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in the Matthews Case:

"These safeguards (railroad crossing gates) are to keep people from going on the crossing on the approach of trains, not to warn them to get off."

It is true that this court held, in Brown v. Erie R. Co., 87 N. J. Law, 487, 91 Atl. 1023, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 496, that both of these statutes of 1909 (chapters 85 and 96) applied to every railroad crossing in the state which is protected by safety gates, but there is nothing in the Brown Case which makes for the contentions of the plaintiff-appellant in the case at bar. In the Brown Case the decedent approached and passed onto the railroad right of way on the highway where safety gates were installed, which were up at the time, and he was killed. While it is not stated in terms in the opinion that he approached the right of way and walked onto the tracks from outside of them, such appears to be the fact by the clearest inference from all that was said therein; and there is nothing whatever in that case to suggest that the deceased gained access to the tracks in any irregular manner. An examination of the paper book in that case, which was before the judges and which is preserved in the state library, will show the fact to be that deceased approached and went onto the railroad right of way over and along the highway at the point where it joined and crossed over the railroad tracks.

[4] Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant asserts in addition that the grade crossing act of 1910, chapter 278, Comp. Stat. p. 4238, § 36c, applies, and argues that under it a trial judge must, in the first instance, submit the question of contributory negligence to the jury. But that that statute has no application to the case at bar is apparent from its title, which is, "An act concerning the liability of railroads for injury to persons or property caused by running cars across public streets and highways at which crossings no safety gates, bell or other device to give warning to the traveling public, have been installed." This title very clearly expresses the object of the enactment (Walbel v. W. J. & S. R. Co., 87 N. J. Law, 573, 94 Atl. 951), and, as safety gates were installed and existed at the crossing where the accident happened at the time of its occurrence, this statute, by its very terms, excludes its applicability to the case at bar.

As none of these grade crossing acts of 1909 and 1910 apply, the plaintiff-appellant's right to recover must be tested by the common-law rule of contributory negligence. That rule was thus stated by Depue, J., speaking for the Court of Errors and Appeals, in N. J. Express Co. v. Nichols, 83 N. J. Law, 434, 439 (97 Am. Dec. 722):

"To conclude him (plaintiff) from maintaining his action, his conduct must have been negligent, and his negligence must have contributed to the injury in such a way that, if he had not been negligent, he would have received no injury from the negligence of the defendant."

[5] The facts concerning the accident from the plaintiff's own lips upon the witness stand were as follows:

"Q. Just describe what you did. A. I went through the lot at Eaton Place onto a path that runs parallel with the tracks, and I walked up the track—up the path—alongside of the tracks. Q. And where were you going? A. To Grove Street Station. * * * Q. What was your intention in going in that direction? Where were you going to? A. New York. Q. To take a train? A. Yes. Q. When you saw this train coming into the Grove Street Station, where were you? I mean the train going to New York. Where were you with reference to the crossing? A. I was walking up towards it. * * * Q. Then what did you do with reference to the crossing? A. I wanted to get—I thought that was my train and tried to get it. Q. Well, did you get on the crossing? A. I walked up on the crossing, and when I— Q. And when you got on the crossing, how did you get on the crossing; I mean, did you walk on the cobblestones or go in between the rails, or how did you get on the crossing? A. I went right in between the rail—between the gate and the track. Q. The first rail? A. Yes. Q. What is there between the gate and the first rail? A. A path. Q. Aren't the cobblestones there between the gate and the first rail? (No answer.) Q. Well, you walked on—if you do not know—you walked on between the gate and the first rail, and did you keep on going west? A. Yes, sir. Q. How far west did you go before you started to cross the crossing? A. Well, as I remember, I was standing there near the center of it when I saw the train—the east-bound train pass. Q. And did you hear any bell or whistle from the west-bound train? A. No. Q. Then what was the next thing you knew? A. Well, the east-bound train passed by me, and then that is all I know. Q. You do not remember the west-bound train hitting you at all? A. No. Q. Where were you when you came to? A. In the Orange Memorial Hospital."

It is apparent from this statement of the plaintiff that what she did was this: Being on the crossing and near to a passing train, there being, however, a track between her and the passing train, on which near track a train was approaching her, which she must have seen had she looked, she waited for the passing of the train on the farther track, intending to cross over both tracks, when, just after the passing train got by her, she was struck by the approaching train on the near track. She appears not to have looked along the near track in the direction from which the train thereon was approaching, as prudence for her own safety required her to do, for had she done so she might have drawn back and avoided the accident which resulted from her carelessness. If that which she did was not negligence contributing to her injury in such a way that had she not been so negligent she would have received no injury no matter how negligent the defendants, or any of them, were, it is hard to conceive of a case of that sort. It appears that she was utterly reckless and took no precaution whatever for her own safety.

[6] It is plain that upon the undisputed facts the plaintiff-appellant was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; and this required the trial judge to direct a verdict for the defendants-respondents, as he did, if not to nonsuit the plaintiff when her case was rested, which he refused.

3 and 4. As none of the three grade crossing acts apply, it is unnecessary to consider and decide whether the plaintiff was a trespasser on the railroad at the time she was injured, or whether the engineer or the gate-man was negligent, for, as matter of law, as already shown, her own contributory negligence bars her from any right of recovery.

The judgment under review must be affirmed.

(89 N. J. Eq. 8)

BARTLEY v. LINDABURY. (No. 42/187.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey.
June 13, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS \S 121(1) — STATEMENT AS TO STOCK ISSUED FOR PROPERTY.

In suit for specific performance of contract to buy corporate stock, it was not a defense that the statement in writing called for by supplement to the Corporations Act (Act Feb. 19, 1913 [P. L. p. 29]) was not filed when the stock was issued, at least where such statement was filed after suit was brought.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE \S 16 — HARDSHIP TO DEFENDANT.

Because of hardship to defendant, specific performance of a contract to buy stock was not granted against buyer, a farmer, who, being unfamiliar with business methods, had waited until after making contract before applying for a loan on the stock to enable him to make cash payment, and had been unable to secure it; part of the consideration being the buyer's farm, his only means of livelihood and stock having greatly depreciated in value since the date of the contract.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE \S 25 — RIGHT TO REMEDY.

Courts of equity will often refuse to enforce specific performance of an agreement that they would not, on the evidence, set aside.

Suit by William A. Bartley against J. Wilson Lindabury. Decree for defendant.

Elmer King, of Morristown, for complainant. Nathaniel C. Toms and Charles A. Rathbun, both of Morristown, for defendant.

STEVENS, V. C. The bill is filed to enforce the specific performance of the following agreement:

"This agreement made and entered into this 19th day of January, 1916, between Wm. A. Bartley of Bartley, N. J., party of the first part, and J. Wilson Lindabury of Mt. Olive, N. J., party of the second part.

"Party of the first part agrees to sell to party of the second part $9,900.00 of the stock held by him in the corporation of Wm. Bartley & Sons, in consideration of which the party of the second part does hereby pay unto the party of the first part the sum of $5.00 as a binder to this agreement, the receipt of which amount the party of the first part hereby acknowledges. The balance to be paid as follows: $1,000.00 on or before January 24, 1916, and the remaining $4,900.00 of the cash payment to be paid on or before April 1, 1916. The remaining $4,000.00 to be paid by the transfer of a guaranteed deed for the farm owned and occupied by the party of the second part, consisting of 115 acres and buildings situated thereon, located in the township of Mt. Olive, county of Morris, state of New Jersey, said deed to be transferred on or before April 1, 1916.

"It is further mutually understood and agreed that in the event that the farm is sold for more than $4,000.00 the party of the second part is to receive one-half of the increased price over and above the commission paid for selling.

"In witness whereof the parties hereto have this day and year set their hands and seals first above written.

Wm. A. Bartley.

"J. Wilson Lindabury.

"Witness: Mrs. Jennie L. Lindabury.

"Witness: Mrs. Jennie L. Lindabury."

The complainant was, at the time the agreement was made, a stockholder of Wm. Bartley & Sons, a corporation doing business in the village of Bartley, whose capital stock was $24,000. Of this, complainant owned 101 shares. The defendant was a farmer. His family lived opposite the factory, and his farm was in Mt. Olive, two miles distant.

The complainant had had some difference with the other factory owners, and wanted to sell his stock. A week or ten days before the agreement was executed, he went to Mt. Olive and asked defendant to buy it. He spoke of the company's condition, and suggested that he (defendant) talk with the company's officers, which he did. The agreement was drawn by complainant himself, and was executed in defendant's house in the presence of his wife. After signing, the defendant sought to borrow money on the stock to enable him to pay the $5,900, which the agreement called for. He could not get it, and within 24 hours notified complainant over the telephone that the agreement was off. In May following, the machine shop was partially destroyed by fire, and, the insurance being inadequate, there was a net loss estimated at from $8,000 to $10,000. At the time the agreement was made the stock seems to have been worth about par.

[1] There is no merit in the defendant's contention that the agreement was nothing but an option. One has only to read it to see that it was, in form at least, a contract binding on both sides. And there is no proof of fraudulent representation. Furthermore the defendant's contention that he is not bound by the contract for the reason that the statement in writing, called for by the supplement to the Corporations Act (P. L. 1913, p. 28), was not filed at the time the stock was issued is untenable. The act does not say when the directors are to file the statement which it prescribes. While its language is a little ambiguous, it is apparent that what is called for is a statement of the completed transaction. The company, if it purchase property, must pay "what the same is reasonably worth in money, at a fair, bona fide valuation," and may "issue therefor stock to the amount of the value thereof, in payment." After this is done the directors are to make and file a true statement of the transaction. This was done in the present case, but not until after suit brought. Whether or not it should have been done before, I find nothing in the terms of the act which would invalidate complainant's stock and make it unmarketable.

[2] I come now to the only defense which seems to me to possess any merit, and that is that the court ought not to enforce the equitable remedy of specific performance because it would be harsh and oppressive. With considerable hesitation, I have adopted this view. In his work on Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 8, p. 449, Pomeroy says:

"Oppression or hardship may result from unconscionable provisions of the contract itself, or it may result from the situation of the parties, unconnected with the terms of the contract or with the circumstance of its negotiation and execution; that is from external facts or events or circumstances which control or affect the situation of the defendant."

To the same effect, is Crane v. De Camp, 21 N. J. Eq. 414.

Looking first at the external circumstances, it appears that defendant, a farmer, was unfamiliar with business methods. Had he been otherwise, he would have applied for a loan before signing the contract. It also appears that the fire loss must have considerably diminished the value of the stock. While a vendee ordinarily takes the risk of depreciation, it is still true that the defendant is here placed in a position of peculiar hardship. He agreed to give for the stock, not only $5,900 in cash, but also his farm, his only means of livelihood. The result of decreeing performance would probably be this: He would lose his farm, and would be decreed to pay $5,900 in money. Failing to pay, the stock decreed to be transferred would be subject to levy and sale. In its depreciated condition it is more than likely that there would be but little demand for it, and that, bidders failing, complainant would buy it in and so become the owner of both farm and stock.

Looking at the agreement itself, it is not entirely clear what is meant by the stipulation, "party of the first part agrees to sell to party of the second part $9,900 of the stock held by him in the corporation." Does it call for stock whose par value is $9,900, or does it call for as many shares as would, taken at their market value, make up that amount? The agreement calls for a "guaranteed" deed. Does it mean a deed containing covenants of seisin, quiet enjoyment and warranty, or does it mean a deed for land, title to which is guaranteed by a title or trust company? Complainant's bill prays for a warranty deed. These obscurities might not of themselves prevent specific performance, but there is another provision which seems to me to be oppressive, particularly in view of what has happened. That provision is "that in the event that the farm is sold for more than $4,000, the party of the second part (defendant) is to receive one-half of the increased price over and above the commission paid for selling." The agreement, drawn by complainant himself, does not compel him to sell. He may retain indefinitely. The undisputed evidence is that the farm is worth $7,000. For this and the cash payment of $5,900, the defendant is to receive stock, whose market value did not exceed, and may not have equaled $9,900 at the time of the making of the agreement, and which is now, unquestionably, worth less. The clause in question was not the subject of discussion, and is plainly one-sided.

[3] The law is well settled that courts of equity will often refuse to enforce the specific performance of an agreement that they would not, on the evidence, set aside. Woollam v. Hearn, Leading Cases in Eq. vol. 2, p. 695 (3 Amer. Ed.); Stoutenburgh v. Tompkins, 9 N. J. Eq. 332; Bowker v. Cunningham, 78 N. J. Eq. 458, 79 Atl. 608. There is no rule more clearly established, says Chancellor Zabriskie in Crane v. De Camp, 21 N. J. Eq. 418, than "that upon an application for a specific performance of a contract the court must be satisfied that the claim is fair, reasonable, and just, and the contract equal in all its parts. If these points are not established by complainant, he will be left to his remedy at law."

It seems to me that as a matter of judicial discretion, looking at all the circumstances, to decree specific performance would be harsh and oppressive within the meaning of the cases, and that the equities of the case would be better subserved by leaving the parties to their legal remedy of damages.

(92 N. J. Law, 332)

WEST SHORE R. CO. v. STATE BOARD OF TAXES AND ASSESSMENT et al.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. June 17, 1918.)

1. HIGHWAYS §126 — TAX — PROPERTY LIABLE — RAILROADS.

In view of Act March 29, 1917 (P. L. p. 785), the state board, upon receiving its total of local municipal aggregates for the purpose of computing the average rate of taxation, under 4 Comp. St. 1910, p. 5280, to determine tax upon first and fourth class railroad properties, cannot ignore the additional one mill added to the local levy by Road Tax Act March 13, 1917 (P. L. p. 41), notwithstanding the provision of the Railroad and Canal Act that the tax imposed shall be in lieu of all other taxation upon the property within the act.

2. STATUTES §225 — CONSTRUCTION — ONE SUBJECT-MATTER.

Where divers laws are made relating to one subject-matter, the whole must be considered as constituting one system, and mutually connected one with another.

3. STATUTES §212 — CONSTRUCTION — PRESUMPTIONS.

The Legislature, in passing a law, is presumed to be conscious of the legal effect and operation of existing laws.

4. STATUTES §190 — AMBIGUITY.

In case of doubt or ambiguity, such a construction should be adopted as will make all the provisions of the statute consistent with each other and with the pre-existing body of the law.

5. COMMERCE §73 — TAXATION — RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Pullman equipment, used by a railroad entirely in interstate traffic, is not taxable in the state.

Certiorari to State Board of Taxes and Assessment.

Certiorari by the West Shore Railroad Company, by the United New Jersey Railroad & Canal Company, by the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad Company, by the Raritan River Railroad Company, by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company and others, by the Erie Railroad Company, and by the Long Dock Company to review proceedings of State Board of Taxes and Assessment and others. Tax in part set aside, and in other respects affirmed.

Argued November term, 1917, before SWAYZE, TRENOHARD, and MINTURN, JJ.

Collins & Corbin, Robert J. Bain, George Holmes, Edwards & Smith, and Albert O. Wall, all of Jersey City, for prosecutors. John W. Wescott, Atty. Gen., of Camden, and Herbert Boggs, of Newark, for defendants.

MINTURN, J. [1] The writs of certiorari in these cases were allowed for the purpose of bringing up the records of the state board of taxes and assessment, in the cases of the Erie Railroad Company and six kindred companies, and involve the question whether under the General Railroad Act (4 Comp. St. 1910, p. 5280 et seq.) first and fourth class railroad properties are affected by the provisions of chapter 16 of the Laws of 1917, commonly known as the Road Tax Act in so far as that act imposes a state tax of one mill on the dollar for state purposes, for the year 1917, upon those classes of property. The act in question provides for the levying and collecting in all the municipalities of the state of a tax of one mill on the dollar of all real and personal property, which, when collected in due course, shall be paid to the state treasurer, to be placed by him in the state road fund. The insistence of the various prosecutors is that, in so far as this return by the municipalities to the state treasurer involves an increasing of the state tax imposed upon them, it is illegal and void.

This contention is based upon the various railroad enactments, which under the settled policy of the state have resulted in segregating certain classes of railroad property from the general ratables of the state, and subjecting them to a state tax in lieu of the local tax imposed by the various taxing districts in which such properties are located. State Board v. Central R. R. Co., 48 N. J. Law, 146, 4 Atl. 578. The effect of these enactments was to segregate, for taxing purposes by the state, what are known as first and fourth class railroad properties, the tax upon which under the provisions of the supplement of 1906, to the General Railroad Tax Act (C. S. p. 5280) shall be computed by the state board of taxes and assessment at the "average rate of taxation." The third section of the act defines the manner in which such average rate shall be struck, viz.:

"The average rate of taxation shall be computed and determined by the said board by dividing the aggregate taxes by the aggregate value of the general property in the state, which said rate, so arrived at and determined, shall be entered upon the records of the board, and shall constitute the average rate of taxation for the year." P. L. 1906, p. 122.

The Railroad and Canal Act (4 Comp. St. 1910, p. 5260, § 445) provides that the tax so imposed shall be in lieu of all other taxation upon the property within its provisions. In this situation the Legislature passed what is known as the Road Tax Act (chapter 16, Laws of 1917), which imposes a tax of "one mill on each dollar of the value of all the real and personal property" in every municipality, "to be assessed, levied and collected in the same manner and at the same time as other taxes upon real and personal property are now assessed, levied and collected." This tax, when collected, is to be eventually paid to the state treasurer, who is directed to place the same in the state road fund.

The insistence of the prosecutor in effect is that, while this additional tax is to be collected from all the taxable real and personal property in the state, it cannot legally be exacted from them because of the particular status they occupy under the legislation, peculiarly affecting them, and to which we have adverted. The contention thus made is not without some color of support, in view of the adjudication of this court in Gillen v. Essex County Board of Taxation (Johnson v. City of Passaic and Borden v. Jersey City) 102 Atl. 676. The effect of these decisions, however, was simply to determine that the act of 1917 does not ex proprio vigore impliedly or expressly comprehend a tax upon first and fourth class railroad property. That determination, however, does not reach the inquiry contained in the present issue, which is whether, when the state board has received its total of local municipal aggregates for the purpose of computing the state tax rate, it can ignore the additional one mill added to the local levy, and make up the state tax rate, minus that added factor; or, reduced to the concrete legal inquiry presented here, did the Legislature by the act of 1917 evince an intent to impose the additional one mill of taxation upon the segregated railroad property retained by the state for the purposes of taxation, as well as upon the general ratables of the state assessed locally? Obviously a negative answer to this inquiry would result in attributing to the legislative body an intent to impose what must be conceded to be a state tax for a state purpose, by a process of elimination which would in its application produce neither uniformity nor equality, and thus run counter to the constitutional inhibition.

[2] The inquiry, therefore, obviously resolves itself into one of legislative intent, and to define the legislative purpose we must consider, not only the act sub judice, imposing the tax, but all kindred legislation; for the rule of construction is fundamental that, when divers laws are made relating to one subject-matter, the whole must be considered as constituting one system, and mutually connected one with another. N. J. Insurance Co. v. Meeker, 37 N. J. Law, 304. The act of 1906 (chapter 82), which is the supplement to the act for the taxation of railroad and canal property, leaves the state board no discretion in establishing the average rate of taxation for the state ratables, so far as the local returns from the various taxing districts are concerned. The state board is required by the provisions of that act to accept them at their face value, and make the state computation of the average rate upon the basis of the figures so returned. The act of 1917 is mandatory, in terms, and requires the addition of the road tax to the local rate, thus necessarily increasing the average rate of taxation when the local returns are made the basis of the computation of the state board, in accordance with the requirements of the supplement of 1906. That such must have been the legislative purpose is manifest, unless we are prepared to attribute to the lawmaking body an intent to effectuate, by an inequality of taxation, the raising of revenue for a general state purpose, or an absence of consideration for the modus operandi of existing laws upon the same general subject.

[3] It is rather to be presumed that the Legislature, conscious of the legal effect and operation of existing laws, passed the act sub judice, for the purpose of effectuating the end that its language (taken in connection with legislation, which had established a familiar and well-understood policy of dealing with the subject of taxation, both state and municipal) must necessarily effectuate, unless the present equilibrium, established as a state policy of equality, in the distribution of the public burdens is to be seriously impaired and disturbed.

[4] Consonant with this view, the rule of construction has been held to be that the mind of the Legislature is presumed to be consistent, and, in case of a doubtful or ambiguous expression of its will, such a construction should be adopted as will make all the provisions of the statute consistent with each other, and with the pre-existing body of the law. Shaw v. Macon, 21 Ga. 280; Fouke v. Fleming, 13 Md. 392; Black, Interpretation of Laws, 98. If a doubt as to the legislative purpose were to be indulged in this regard, it is obviously dissipated by the provisions of chapter 230 of the Laws of 1917, an act passed at the same session, and entitled:

"An act to appropriate and to provide for the payment of a portion of the state tax levied and assessed upon railroad and canal property in this state to the state road fund, to be used for state road purposes."

The preamble of the act clarifies the legislative intent expressed in the earlier act by reciting the legislative purpose in levying the tax as follows:

"Whereas, the tax now levied and assessed upon railroad and canal property, under and by virtue of the provisions of the act [of 1884 and 1888] and of the supplements and amendments thereto, will be increased in the rate of one mill on the dollar" by reason of the passage of the act sub judice, "and it is the legislative intent to effect such increase of taxation upon railroad and canal property, and to appropriate and apply such increase to the state road fund, for state road purposes."

And the act accordingly makes the appropriation. The imposition of the road tax is superadded to the local burdens by practically the same legislative modus operandi as is the state school tax, the inclusion of which has never been questioned, as a legitimate factor in the computation of the average rate of taxation by the state board. These considerations make it manifest that the action of the state board in including the additional one mill on the dollar, as returned by the local assessors, was in accordance with the letter and spirit of the legislation providing for it, and that the proceedings of that board in that regard should be affirmed.

[5] The action of the board, however, in the case of the Erie Railroad, comprehended an assessment and tax on the tangible personal property of that company, which included an assessment and tax on certain Pullman equipment, which it is conceded by the Attorney General has no situs in this state for the purposes of taxation, being used entirely in interstate traffic. That situation manifestly exempts the Pullman equipment from taxation here. Central R. R. Co. et al. v. State Board, 49 N. J. Law, 1, 7 Atl. 306.

The tax to that extent will be set aside, and in other respects affirmed.

(32 Vt. 336)

McDONALD v. McNEIL.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Washington.
May 16, 1918.)

1. FRAUD §26—PERSONS LIABLE FOR REPRESENTATIONS.

A person, inducing another by false representations as to land to buy for both and extend him credit for his part of purchase money, is liable for the fraud.

2. FRAUD §59(2)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The measure of damages for fraudulent representations as to land, inducing plaintiff to buy it with defendant, is the difference between the value of plaintiff's share as it was and as it would be if it was as represented.

3. FRAUD §64(1)—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Evidence as to fraudulent representations being made, inducing purchase, held sufficient to go to jury.

4. TRIAL §140(2) — QUESTION FOR JURY — CONFLICT IN PARTY'S TESTIMONY.

Plaintiff's testimony is not neutralized by it being somewhat contradictory, but it is for the jury to say which of such statements they will accept.

5. FRAUD §54—ACTION—DECLARATION—INTENT—"FALSELY AND FRAUDULENTLY."

The words "falsely and fraudulently," applied by the declaration in a tort action to defendant's representations, inducing plaintiff to act to his injury, necessarily imply deliberate intent to deceive, so express averment of such intent is unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, False; Fraudulent.]

6. NEW TRIAL §6—SETTING ASIDE VERDICT—DISCRETION.

Motion to set aside the verdict is addressed to the court's discretion.

Exceptions from Washington County Court; Fred. M. Butler, Judge.

Action on the case by D. H. McDonald against Frederick McNeil. Plea the general issue. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant excepted. Affirmed.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HAS-ELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

John W. Gordon, of Barre, for plaintiff.
F. L. Laird, of Montpelier, for defendant.

POWERS, J. This is a tort action for false representations, whereby the plaintiff was induced to purchase a certain piece of real estate. There was evidence tending to show that the defendant, who owned a piece of land on the shore of Cold Stream Lake, in Penobscot county, Me., by falsely and fraudulently representing to the plaintiff that a 90-acre lot contiguous to the one above mentioned had growing upon it 800 large hemlock trees, 153 large pine trees, a certain large number of cords of bobbin stock white birch, and other valuable wood and timber, and that there were 25 valuable cottage lots on that part of the lot bordering on the lake, induced the plaintiff to furnish the money and buy said 90-acre lot and to take the title thereto to said parties jointly, and to give the defendant credit for his half of the investment; that it turned out that the number of pine and hemlock trees was grossly overstated; that the quantity of wood and lumber was greatly exaggerated; that the shore land was too wet to be available for cottage lots; and that the value of the land bought was much less than represented. The trial below was by jury, and the verdict was for the plaintiff. By special verdicts, the jury found that the defendant induced the plaintiff to furnish the money and buy the land by false statements and representations, knowingly made with intent to deceive, that the plaintiff relied upon them, believing them to be true; that the property in question was worth $1,900; and that it would have been worth $800 more, if it had been as represented.

[1] The case, then, presents the record feature of one held for a tort by which he himself lost as much as the other party. This feature does not prevent a recovery. Ordinarily, the parties to actions of this character stand in the relation of vendor and vendee, or as parties to an exchange of property. But such relations are not essential to the right of recovery. Liability grows out of the fact that the plaintiff has been misled to his prejudice, and not that the defendant has profited by his wrong. An actual motive to do injury to the plaintiff is not essential, but if a false representation is made with knowledge of its falsity, the intent to deceive is presumed. 12 R. C. L. 349; note to Cottrell v. Krum, 18 Am. St. Rep. 561. It is not necessary to show that the defendant acted from motives of personal advantage (Whiting v. Price, 169 Mass. 576, 48 N. E. 772, 61 Am. St. Rep. 307), and the fact that he actually gains nothing by the deception is not controlling (Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 51, 2 Smith L. C. 1300, and note; James v. Crosthwait, 97 Ga. 673, 25 S. E. 754, 36 L. R. A. 631; Endsley v. Johns, 120 Ill. 469, 12 N. E. 247, 60 Am. Rep. 572; Medbury v. Watson, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 246, 39 Am. Dec. 726; Chellis v. Cole, 116 Me. 283, 101 Atl. 444). In Ewins v. Calhoun, 7 Vt. 79, the defendant gained nothing by his fraud, yet he was held liable, and in Paddock v. Fletcher, 42 Vt. 389, it was said that the defendants were liable for their deception whether its fruits went into their own pockets or not. With these rules in mind and the special verdicts before us, we find little difficulty in disposing of the question of liability. Though the defendant lost equally with the plaintiff by the purchase, he knowingly misrepresented material matters, and did this in circumstances rendering him liable to the plaintiff for his share of the loss.

[2] In actions for deceit in the sale or exchange of real estate, two different rules for the assessment of damages have grown up, each recognized by courts of the highest authority. One is that the damages are to be measured by the difference between the property as it is and as it would be if it was as represented. The other is that the damages are to be measured by the difference between the value of the property and the price paid. Our rule is the one first above stated. It applies as well to personal as to real property, to sales and exchanges, and is too firmly established to be questioned. Bowman v. Parker, 40 Vt. 410; Shanks v. Whitney, 66 Vt. 405, 29 Atl. 367; Belka v. Allen, 82 Vt. 456, 74 Atl. 91; Howton v. Strout Farm Agency, 90 Vt. 50, 96 Atl. 330; Maidment v. Frazier, 90 Vt. 520, 98 Atl. 987; Turner v. Howard, 91 Vt. 49, 99 Atl. 236.

This was the rule applied to the case before us, the plaintiff being allowed to recover one-half the difference between the value as it was and as it was represented. The defendant excepted, and insists that the second rule above specified should have been applied. So it remains to consider whether the facts that the defendant gained nothing by the transaction and was to become a partner in the enterprise affect the question.

It is to be noted that it is not the case of one partner deceiving another. The deception preceded the partnership. It was the deception that resulted in forming the partnership. So the fact that the defendant became a part owner as one of the results of his misrepresentation does not affect the quality of his conduct or the results flowing from it. He stands no differently than one wholly disinterested. The plaintiff's situation is affected by this relation only to the extent that he is relieved of one-half of the loss he would otherwise have sustained.

We see no logical reason why the damages here should not be assessed under our usual rule. We find no case wherein any such distinction as the defendant insists upon has been discussed, though the rule we adopt appears to have been applied in several cases. Medbury et al. v. Watson, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 246, 39 Am. Dec. 726, was an action brought against a third person for fraudulent representations regarding the cost and value of a certain tannery. One of the plaintiffs sold out his interest in the property for just what he paid for it, and it was urged in behalf of the defendant that as one of the plaintiffs had suffered no loss, there could be no recovery. But the court held otherwise, saying, in effect, that if through fraud he paid a higher price than the estate was worth, he was entitled to damages, without regard to what disposition he afterwards made of the property.

In Shaw v. Gilber, 111 Wis. 165, 86 N. W. 188, a manufacturer was induced by the defendant's false and fraudulent representations to sell his goods on credit to an insolvent corporation, and was allowed to recover their full value, though this included his usual profit.

In Lee v. Tarplin, 183 Mass. 52, 66 N. E. 431, one induced by the false and fraudulent representations of a third party to accept a mortgage in part payment for property was allowed to recover the difference between the value of the mortgaged property and what it would have been if as represented.

Page v. Wells, 37 Mich. 415, was a case not wholly unlike the one in hand. There the defendant, under an arrangement which the court construed as a contract of employment, was to ascertain and report to the plaintiff the facts affecting the quality, quantity, and value of certain pine lands. A report having been made pursuant to the arrangement, the plaintiff bought the lands in reliance thereon. The event showed that the lands were misrepresented in the reports, and suit was brought for damages. In disposing of the question of damages, Judge Cooley said:

"If the plaintiff was induced to purchase lands on representations which proved to be untrue, the measure of his loss, as it seems to us, would be perfectly plain, and would be reached by an answer to the following question: 'How much less is the land worth as it is, than it would have been if its condition and quality had been as represented?'"

That was an action of assumpsit; we see no reason why the language of the court is not equally applicable to an action of tort. Then, too, in that case, the defendant was paid a specific price for making the examination and report, while here the advantage which the defendant expected to gain was to come through being taken in on credit as an equal owner. This difference does not, however distinguish the cases, so far as applicable legal rules are concerned. The plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of his bargain. The defendant should make it good to him. Courts holding to the other rule say that a plaintiff should not be allowed to speculate out of the defendant's wrongs; to that we reply, Nor should a defendant be allowed to gamble on it. And under their rule, the temptation to interfere in the affairs of others, in order to help a friend or punish an enemy, would be greatly enlarged. If active fraud is to carry no greater penalty than to make price and value agree, honesty will not be much encouraged.

[3] There was no error in overruling the defendant's motion for a verdict. The defendant's claim that there was no evidence tending to show fraud or misrepresentation is not supported by the transcript, which is referred to. The defendant knew that the plaintiff was wholly unacquainted with this land, and was relying entirely on what he said about it. He admitted that he made most of the representations complained of, but claimed that he merely quoted what Mr. Appleby, the owner, said about it. But the plaintiff and his wife, who was present, testified that the defendant did not quote Appleby, but made the statements of his own knowledge, and that he claimed that he had actually counted the hemlock trees. As to the cottage lots and what was said about them, the defendant insisted on the stand that his statements were true.

[4] It is true, as claimed by the defendant, that in some particulars the plaintiff's testimony was somewhat contradictory. But the result is not what is claimed for it; it was for the jury to say which of such statements they would accept. Pocket v. Almon, 90 Vt. 10, 98 Atl. 421.

[5] An express averment of an intention to deceive was unnecessary. It is alleged

